Stern Doesn't Mean Mad

However, let's address something that sometimes gets lost in the shuffle in modern teaching. God is not always lovey-dovey to us! When He has to be stern, He is. Jesus was plenty stern with the churches in Revelation that were getting out of line. He even said that He had things against them! But that's different from saying, "I'm MAD at you. I'm holding your sins against you and I'm out to get you!"

As a parent, there are times when you have to be stern with your children. Is it because you don't forgive them, or because you're mad at them? Now you aren't God, so you do have flesh, and maybe you DO get mad and have to repent for things that you did in anger rather than in love. In other words, you might dish out punishment out of anger for "what they made you look like" in public rather than out of genuine concern for their social well-being. But God isn't like that. He doesn't discipline you because you made Him mad – He disciplines you because He loves you enough to do it.

Scripture is clear that God disciplines believers when they get out of line – Hebrews 12:5-13 talks about the chastening of the Lord. Scripture is clear that He does not always act lovey-dovey toward you when He corrects you. After all, the passage in Hebrews says that discipline is grievous! So it's not something you will enjoy, though you'll be glad that He did it in the long run. But there's a difference between not being lovey-dovey and being full of wrath. The catchphrase "God is good all the time" is Biblically correct, but you have to understand that "good all the time" does not mean "sweet and lovey-dovey all the time." If you err by thinking the latter, you will end up rebuking the Lord when He deals with you because you'll assume that it must be Satan talking to you because the voice is not coming across as lovey-dovey.

Also, God made what really is a precious promise to you that if you get wrongly-minded, God will reveal that to you (Philippians 3:15). So this does away with extreme ideas that God isn't aware of your sins or that God won't deal with you about sin. He certainly dealt with the churches in Asia about sin in Revelation, and Jesus wasn't at all lovey-dovey when He did it!

Even under grace, there are some things that will still provoke God to come down on you hard, but even then He has your best interest in mind. Even in the case where God took out some Corinthians in judgment over their irreverent celebration of the Lord's Supper, He did it so that the people involved would die saved rather than continue in their error and end up unsaved (1 Corinthians 11:27-32). You can read more about this topic (and examples of the other cases) in Sickness as Chastening and Judgment in the New Testament.

Is it impossible to get God mad at you or to even be in a bad mood with you as a Christian? I guess that depends on your definition of "mad" and "in a bad mood." I don't know that I would characterize Jesus' threat to puke the Laodicean church out of His mouth as being made "in a good mood." But even in speaking to the Laodiceans, Jesus affirmed His love for them by telling them, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten" (Revelation 3:19).

Jesus' threats to kill a church member's children and make her and her lovers sick sounds pretty "mad" – it's hard to smile and say soothingly, "Stop doing that or I'll kill your kids!" But even then, you could debate whether Jesus was angry or just being extremely stern.

One thing is for sure though – God does not "have it out for you." We know that because He is FOR you, not AGAINST you (Romans 8:31). So there is no possibility that God is mad in the sense that He has turned against you. Even when He has to correct you sternly, He still loves you and He is still FOR your success. He is not trying to beat you down and preclude your success in anger.

It is certainly possible to exasperate Jesus – He got upset when His disciples didn't do things that they should have done. But while He rebuked them, you could debate whether that constituted being mad at them. I would not characterize His reaction as anger in such cases.

So while God is not mad at you as a Christian, it doesn't mean that He won't rebuke you sternly if you get out of line. But when He does it, it's for your good, as Hebrews 12:5-13 shows you.

So no, you are not sick because God is mad at you!

Am I Sick because I Left a Door Open to the Devil?

Probably not.

Plenty of sicknesses have NOTHING to do with opening a door to the devil. The sicknesses are around because we live in a fallen world. You can't assume that you have a stuffy nose because you left a door open to the devil so that he could put it on you.

We don't see Jesus lecturing people about leaving doors open to the devil when He healed the multitudes.

However, it is possible under the New Covenant to open a door to the devil. This is proved by Ephesians 4:27, where you are commanded to give no place (or opportunity) to the devil. Thus, it must be possible to NOT "let the devil in," but it must also be possible to "let the devil in," depending upon your actions.

The most blatant case is sexual sin. The Bible warns that your flesh can be consumed if you commit adultery (Proverbs 5:8-11). Homosexual activity also leads to bodily trouble (Romans 1:26-27). So sexual sin certainly opens a door so that you can get one of Satan's sicknesses.

Alcoholism and drug abuse also open the door to physical problems, and you can probably think of some other sins that will lead to physical trouble.

It makes sense that if you ALLOW the devil a place, he will take it. That is why YOU have to actively resist him (James 4:7, 1 Peter 5:8-9) rather than passively allowing him to stay and bring his baggage.

One interesting angle here is that Paul warned that if you sow to the flesh, you will reap FROM THE FLESH (not the DEVIL!) corruption (Galatians 6:8). Sin carries built-in consequences without any direct involvement from the devil. You're still forgiven for whatever the sin is, but that doesn't mean that there will be no consequences in this life. The only way to avoid the consequences is to avoid the sin.

You should expect that God will show you any areas where you are not operating in the proper mindset (Philippians 3:15). When He shows you such an area, repent! That will close the door to whatever consequences your improper mindset might bring on. The good news is that if you have left a door open to the devil, you can close it and keep it shut from now on!

And there's even more good news. You can receive healing for something even if you got it by opening a door to the devil! Don't you suppose that there were people in the crowds who had opened the door to the devil, but Jesus healed them anyway? You can be healed even if you opened a door, but if you're wise, you'll close that door so that you won't get sick again. Jesus healed a man who had sinned, but He told him to sin no more so that he would not get even sicker in the future (John 5:14). God is so merciful that He is willing to heal FOOLS who got themselves sick through their sin (Psalm 107:17-20).

The important thing is to let the Lord reveal you where you are "off" (if anywhere). Otherwise, you can go on an introspective "witch hunt" for where you left a door open to the devil and have it turn out that you actually didn't leave ANY door open – you just got something that is part of fallen creation.

I Thought I Was Healed. Why Did the Symptoms Just Start to Return?

This can happen for various reasons.

First, the fact that you believe that you have received your healing does not mean that there will be no more symptoms from that point on. If you go by “symptoms,” the fig tree had the symptoms of being alive after Jesus cursed it! Jesus did not panic and say, “Oh no, My faith didn’t work! The tree is still showing symptoms of being alive. I thought I was in faith but I guess I wasn’t!” Jesus was simply not moved by the fact that the tree still looked alive immediately after He cursed it. He knew that He had declared something in the spirit realm that would surely happen. Likewise, you need to stand firm in what you believe and not be moved by apparent circumstances to the contrary. If you could never have symptoms after praying in faith, all it would take to receive healing would be faith. However, the Bible teaches that you need faith and patience to receive God’s promises (Hebrews 6:12).

Second, whether you have realized it yet or not, there is a personal devil out there who is out to steal from you, kill you and destroy you. One of his tricks is to put symptoms of things on people so that they accept the illness by saying out of their mouths that they have it. He loves to try to get you to accept a sickness back after you’ve already been healed of it. Chances are, the symptoms are accompanied by some depressing thought such as: “See, you didn’t really get healed after all” or “It’s back and you won’t get healed this time.” If you will resist it just as you would resist the devil and command it to leave your body in the name of Jesus, it will go. You may even be surprised how suddenly you get healed – probably about as suddenly as you felt sick again.

We tend to think of sickness as something that just happens to us without Satan’s direct involvement. While that is often true, Satan could try to harass you with lying symptoms to get you to accept them, given that he is the author of sickness in the first place. If there is a sickness (or symptoms), Satan is the ultimate source. Whether it’s direct or indirect, sickness is still “the oppression of the devil” (Acts 10:38). This is proved in the topic, Who or What Causes Sickness?.

Third, you may have been around the anointing and experienced relief without actually receiving your healing. Once you get out of the anointing, you feel crummy again. See the discussion, The Difference between “the Anointing” and “Your Healing” for a further discussion of this matter.

Fourth (you might not like this one), you may not have believed that you received your healing at all. You might have just experienced some temporary relief for entirely natural reasons. If you prayed and took aspirin, maybe the relief you felt was from the aspirin!

One thing that should help you when symptoms return is to realize that you are perpetually, legally healed by the stripes of Jesus. You always have the right to declare yourself healed. You are always agreeing with God when you do so. No matter how often or how long symptoms return, you always have the right to say that you are healed and that the sickness is no longer yours. In fact, you should keep saying this continually until every symptom is gone. (I don't mean that you should be unable to function at your job because you have to keep saying you're healed. Say it to yourself if you're in public; don't make a scene or make your boss think you're a weirdo.) You do NOT have to pray "the prayer of faith" again to re-receive your healing!

You are not a sick person being lorded over by Satan. You are a healed person defending your legal right to be and stay healed. You have a right to demand that sickness leave your body and stay out in the name of Jesus.

Is It a Sin to Go to the Doctor or Take Medicine?

NO!

Just because God declares Himself to be The Lord Your Physician (Exodus 15:26) does not mean that it is a sin to seek human help. Sadly, some so-called faith people (who were not really in faith) have died before their time because they would not seek medical assistance when they needed it.

Some people have attempted to use 2 Chronicles 16:12 as proof that God is against doctors. (“And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceedingly great: yet in his disease he sought not to the LORD, but to the physicians.”) This verse does not say that God is against doctors. Asa was already failing to trust in God, looking to the Syrians for military help. The issue is not that Asa saw a doctor but that he did not seek the Lord to heal him, which he obviously could have done in the light of Exodus 15:26 and other Scriptures. God’s general complaint with Asa was failure to seek him, as the context of this verse makes clear. The doctors per se were not the issue. (It has been suggested that the doctors may have been Egyptian sorcerers, but we have no proof of that.)

Luke was a doctor (Colossians 4:14) and no one told him that his calling was sinful. On the contrary, Paul called him the beloved physician. If being a physician were wrong, Paul would never have said that. Would he have ever sent greetings from Gary the beloved gangster, Patrick the beloved pimp, Archie the beloved assassin or Doug the beloved drug dealer?

Jesus said that the sick need a physician (Matthew 9:12, Mark 2:17, Luke 5:31). Doctors and medicine are not wrong. They are on God’s side and He is on theirs. God wants you to get well, and the doctor wants you to get well. There is agreement there.

It is not doctors but ignorant religious Christians who will fight you on healing. No doctor in his right mind would sit there and tell you that your illness was the will of God for some reason, yet there are preachers who would tell you that! While the doctor is trying to heal you, the ignorant preacher will pray that you have “patience to endure the suffering which God has seen fit to have you endure” instead of laying hands on you for your recovery. If you are sick, you would be well advised to avoid anyone who calls himself a minister of the gospel who does not believe that it is the will of God to heal you.

We can see another proof that God is OK with doctors in Exodus 21:19: “If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.” Now this is not the New Testament where the person could lay hands on the other one in the name of Jesus and cause him to be thoroughly healed! A man under the Law could not possibly force another person to be healed of an illness through prayer. So how could God demand that? I think it is clear that this verse is talking about paying the man’s doctor bills, as it is hard to see what else Moses could possibly have been talking about. If God ordered someone to pay someone’s doctor bills, He could not be against doctors!

The woman with the issue of blood had received medical care in vain for 12 years before she encountered Jesus. Jesus never even hinted that she needed to repent for seeking medical care.

Some people suppose that they are putting God on the spot, or somehow honoring Him, by not going to a doctor or taking medicine. Neither is true. God is under no obligation to honor anything but faith. Just because you shun medical assistance or medicine does not mean that you are in faith. It may simply mean that you are being an idiot. This kind of thing brings a reproach on the teaching of divine healing in general, because scoffers love to point out cases of people who shun medical help and die. If you've believed that you've received your healing, and are so sure that you will stake anything on it, great. If you have any doubts, you had better get whatever natural help is available to you. Don't gamble with your life.

If you are in faith, your use of medicine will not prevent that healing from manifesting. You have not turned your back on God or stopped trusting Him just because you take a pill or get a treatment. Don't get all bound up over that. Just make sure that you maintain your stand of faith.

I'm well aware that a well-known healing preacher many years ago wrote that it was a sin to go to the doctor. I have a large anthology of his writings myself, and I'm not sorry that I read the whole book. But we need to go with what the Word says, not what a famous preacher said. Over time, we learn things as a body and we learn to throw away some old traditions that weren't quite right.

Also, there can be some time between the time at which you believe that you receive your healing and the manifestation of that healing. During this time, it is not "anti-faith" to take medicine to relieve the symptoms. If anything, it will make your stand of faith easier. Having your body screaming at you in pain because you won't take a pill for it may seem like "macho faith" (and go ahead, if that's what you want to do), but you may find that it's nicer not to suffer unnecessarily in the meantime.

Your use of medicine or doctors does not dishonor God in the least. If you really believe that you received your healing, that healing will manifest in your body anyway, and God will still get the glory for your healing. After all, in most cases, medicines cannot cure your condition anyway. They can simply relieve some of the suffering associated with it until your healing manifests itself.

So if you don't want to be the object of the next anti-healing discussion on an anti-Christian media outlet (which seems to be most of them at this writing), it would be wise for you to get medical help if you need it. It isn't a sin.

Should I Throw Away My Medicine Because I Believe I Am Healed?

NO!!!!

When the healing you believe for has manifested itself in your body and your doctor confirms that you don't need your medicine anymore, feel free to throw it out. Until then, keep taking it.

Consider what happened to one man I knew. He wanted to "prove to God" that he believed that his eyes were healed and that he didn't need glasses anymore. To "act his faith," he took his road test for a driver's license without his glasses, "believing" that his healing would manifest during his demonstration of raw faith and that he would pass. He failed! Moral of the story: After your body and your doctor confirm to you that you're healed, you can stomp on your glasses or flush your pills down the toilet or whatever. Until then, don't, unless you want to endanger and/or embarrass yourself and the Body of Christ.

Whether or not you take medicine has nothing to do with whether or not you believe that you have received your healing. God honors faith, which has nothing to do with whether you threw out your pills or stomped on your glasses. You can do those things and still not be in faith, and you'll just regret that you did them, especially when you have the embarrassment of having to go buy new glasses or getting a replacement prescription filled. You can also be in faith and keep taking medicine. Why suffer unnecessarily while waiting for the full manifestation of your healing? If anything, it's easier to pray and read God's Word and stay built up when your body is not screaming in pain, and this can actually help you stay in faith. Of course, you must not confuse medicinal relief with real divine healing from God. You would not want to say, "Oh, my healing has manifested; I'm not in pain" when you just took two aspirins (or your favorite pain reliever) to get rid of the pain. You'll find out if you've really received your healing after the pills wear off!

Despite the scare stories that circulate about people dying without medicine while "believing" for their healing, I have yet to meet a present-day minister who preaches healing who says that you should throw away your medicine. Yes, there are cases (some well-publicized) of people who did not take medicine and died who claimed to be "believing" for their healing. They were zealous but unwise. They were not following generally accepted teaching among those who preach healing today.

People make a big deal about medicine vs. faith, but both are on the same team, so to speak. They both promote healing. One famous healing evangelist took a lot of flak for opening a hospital, and he had to keep explaining to people that he was using faith and medicine to help the sick, and that this was not a contradiction. He was right. It isn't a contradiction.

If we were all perfect in our faith walks, we would not need medicine and we would receive healing by faith every time sickness tried to get on us. I don't know about you, but I'm not there yet. That's our goal, and if we only get healed 80% of the time, that beats staying sick 100% of the time, doesn't it?

If God Wants People Healed, Why Doesn't He Heal Them?

In His mind, He did. He declares that you were healed by the stripes of Jesus (1 Peter 2:24). Anyone can receive healing just as anyone can be saved from his sins. God has made provision for everyone's healing.

This question is in the same category as:

"If God wants people saved, why doesn't He save them?"

A legal reason that God doesn't just heal people is that He gave the earth to man to operate even though He is still the legal owner of the earth. God cannot simply barge in on the scene and do things. He legally must wait until some person on the earth prays, at which point He can legally move in answer to that prayer.

God treats healing the same way He treats salvation from sins. Anyone can have it, but you only get it when you believe you receive when you ask. If you ask not, you'll have not (James 4:2). God doesn't force anything on anyone – He always gives people a choice, though He'll let them know which choice will produce the superior outcome!

This is one reason that it is so important to follow Jesus' commission to teach men all that He taught, and not stop at the "salvation from sin" aspect of the gospel. If anyone is properly instructed concerning God's New Testament healing covenant, he can be healed. In the same way, anyone who is taught about forgiveness of sins through Jesus Christ can be born again. It's God's will, but people must hear and respond in faith to the gospel. The same pattern applies for both forgiveness and healing.

If God Is So Loving, Why Doesn't He Do Something about People's Suffering?

This is a typical question you hear on the street when you're evangelizing. Most people know someone who suffers horribly from some condition, and it's only natural to wonder why a supposedly loving God doesn't do something about it.

But the fact is, He DID something about it when He sent Jesus. Jesus took our sicknesses so that we could receive healing on a 100% grace basis.

What the vast majority of people were never taught in church – but should have been – is that it is not up to God to do ANYTHING about people's suffering – it is up to US, the Body of Christ!

If you are suffering from something, you have the privilege of believing that you receive the healing that Jesus provided when you pray. But that is something YOU must do. God will not just “zap” you with healing irrespective of your faith. (Even in meetings where manifestations of the Spirit occur, you'd still have to put forth the effort to get to that meeting.) God literally has done everything that He will ever need to do about your suffering, in the same way that He has done everything that He will ever need to do about saving you from eternal suffering in hell. If anyone goes to hell, it isn't because a loving God didn't do something about averting his eternal suffering; it is because he failed to appropriate what Jesus did for him.

If you know someone who is suffering from something, you have to realize that Christ's Body has authority on the earth over that condition. God is not just going to “zap” it from heaven without His Body's involvement. It is up to US whether we will take God at His Word and lay hands on the sick believing that they will recover. It is up to US whether we use the authority that Jesus has vested in us to command sickness to leave in His name.

If no one believes and receives, and no one does any laying on of hands or any speaking to diseases, the suffering will continue, but that is not God's fault. He has given us the tools we need; it is up to US, not HIM, if the suffering will continue. That's a sobering thought.

It's not that heaven “allows” sickness; the problem is that WE allow it. Jesus said that whatever we loose on earth will be loosed in heaven, and whatever we bind on earth will be bound in heaven (Matthew 16:19). We have been given the keys to the kingdom of heaven. It is up to US to do something about sickness.

How Much Faith Does It Take to Heal a Serious Illness?

Let's see how much faith it takes to do some other things.

If you have really small faith – the size of a mustard seed – you can speak to a mountain and command it to be thrown into the sea (Matthew 17:20) and you can speak to a tree to be uprooted and thrown into the sea (Luke 17:6).

Peter walked on water during a storm based solely on Jesus' command to come. He got his focus off Jesus' command and onto the wind and waves. He began to sink. Jesus rescued him and called him "thou of little faith" (Matthew 14:28-31). That actually excites me! Sure, Peter didn't make it all the way to Jesus, but his "little faith" got him out of the boat and on top of the water at least for a while. Can you imagine yourself doing that rather than being the other 11 disciples who stayed safely in the boat? All you would need to do that is a little faith, based on what Jesus said!

When the disciples asked Jesus for more faith, Jesus didn't say, "Sure, here's some more faith!" Instead He told them what would happen if they'd USE just a little bitty bit of faith (Luke 17:5-6).

I can tell you on the authority of these verses that you do not need whopping big humungo-faith to get rid of a serious illness. You can terminate terminal illnesses with really small faith – if you will USE it.

The devil may tell you that you don't have enough faith to do anything. He will be satisfied with the outcome if you determine that you need 27.4 believons (an arbitrary unit of faith) to get rid of stage 4 cancer, but your faith can only operate at the level of 12.1 believons. But seriously, how hard can it be? Multitudes of unsaved people in the gospels came and received healing for EVERY kind of sickness! God didn't even live in them. They were not new creatures in Christ with born-again spirits created in God's likeness in righteousness and true holiness (Ephesians 4:24). They hadn't been to New Testament Bible training centers or faith campmeetings and they didn't have libraries of books about faith and healing. They didn't have Scripture CD's to listen to at home. They didn't even have the New Testament yet! So getting a serious illness healed can't be as hard as we've made it out to be!

Not one of the disciples was a born-again believer during Jesus' earthly healing ministry, yet they did all kinds of miracles while their spirits were still unregenerate. So how much of a faith giant do you think you need to be to do miracles? Jesus taught that some wicked people who never knew Him would do many wonderful works in His name (Matthew 7:22-23)! How "spiritual" do you think those people are? So you don't have to be a faith giant or even a believer to get results when you minister with faith in the name of Jesus.

Even a carnal Christian whose love walk is a train wreck could still have mountain-moving faith (1 Corinthians 13:2). So just how "spiritual" do you have to be in order to have faith that could get rid of cancer? I think you'd agree that healing cancer is a lesser feat than relocating a mountain with your words, which requires only teeny-tiny faith. You do not have to be perfect or even a mature believer to exercise mountain-moving faith!

A man in Lystra got faith to be healed just by listening to Paul preach the real gospel. He then received healing for a lifelong disability. (See Acts 14:7-10.) He had a VERY serious birth defect, but he got healed in short order.

So it CAN'T be true that you need years of "faith-building" before you're ready to cancel cancer. We have sometimes majored on the size of our faith when that isn't really the main issue. The larger issue for most of us is that although we have faith, we also allow contrary thoughts to deter us. An unrenewed mind and unmortified flesh are our main problems, because they lead us to act based on unbelief rather than faith. The issue certainly isn't one of power if you're baptized with the Holy Spirit! You have enough power to wipe out every cancer case in your city if you can get people to cooperate with you and with God.

When the disciples failed to cast out a demon, Jesus basically said that they'd only get His results if they fasted and prayed. Doing those will keep your flesh in check. Your flesh naturally wants to eat and doesn't want to pray because it is unspiritual. When you keep your flesh under, you eliminate a major source of resistance to operating in faith. You rise above walking based on sense knowledge. It is your flesh's nature to walk in unbelief, but it is your born-again spirit's nature to walk in faith. That's why God calls you a BELIEVER!

So the answer to the question, "How much faith does it take to heal a serious illness?" is "Not much, if you'll just USE the faith you have!"

Healing serious illnesses in the name of Jesus is not something only for veteran Christians. If you're a Christian, the right to lay hands on the sick – including the seriously sick – is yours to exercise right now (Mark 16:18)! Rather than focusing inwardly and wondering how much faith you have, why not just believe what God says and act like the entire Bible is true. It's not about struggling to believe – just ACT on what you know God has already said – whether it "looks like" it will work or not – and you WILL get the results that He promises!

You Have Faith

Can I Believe and Receive a Healing for Someone Else?

Not in the sense that you can believe and receive your own healing in Mark 11:24.

The only exceptions found in Scripture are for members of your household, generally young children. God does not expect an infant to believe and implement Mark 11:24. In such a case, you can pray in faith and God will heal your child.

Also, you can lay hands on a sick person and expect him to recover if you have preached the gospel to that person. (Remember that signs and wonders follow the preaching of the Word.) You do not have to preach the whole New Testament to the person, but you need to explain what you are doing so that he can consent to it. God will honor your faith in this case even if the other person is not completely sure about it. You will find that this works better with unbelievers than with fellow Christians who know the Bible and should believe for their own healings. God expects more from believers.

You cannot attribute anyone's death to a lack of faith on someone else's part. Ultimately, your faith only works for you; the other person's faith needs to work for him.

Receiving a Healing for Someone Else in a Prayer Line

With the exception above, you cannot "believe and receive" for someone else. Many well-meaning people come up in healing lines and ask if they can receive a healing for a loved one. Some even use a charismatic cliché: "I want to stand in proxy for someone." Barring a manifestation of the gift of faith (1 Corinthians 12:9) for that particular circumstance, this does not work. In a service where there is a tangible healing anointing, the person receiving the healing must be brought into physical contact with that anointing. Often being in the service is sufficient, but if the person needing healing is not present, there is one Scriptural way to get the anointing to the person. In Acts 19:11-12, people had Paul wear cloth items that were then taken to the sick. The tangible anointing on Paul went into those items and went into the person who needed healing or deliverance when that person received the cloth.

The use of "prayer cloths" is thus justified, if there is a tangible healing anointing in manifestation. This practice was not done all the time, and you would not just do it "in faith" when no healing anointing is present. (I suppose that one exception would be if you were sure that God wanted you to lay hands on a cloth at that particular moment, even though nothing seemed to be happening at the time. The anointing to do this would manifest as you obeyed Him.)

Why You Generally Can't Believe You Receive Something for Someone Else

Mark 11:24

Jesus said to believe that YOU receive what YOU ask when YOU pray, not to believe that SOMEONE ELSE receives what YOU ask when YOU pray.

You cannot override someone else's will, even if his will is contrary to God's will. If you could, you could "believe you receive" everyone else's salvation and the whole world would get saved. But it is clear from Scripture that not all men will receive salvation. In fact, those who find the "narrow way" to salvation will be fewer than those who don't.

With the exception already noted, there is no Scriptural precedent for believing something and receiving it for someone else.

Some people might point to Acts 16:31 ("And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house") as an example of your faith forcing other people to receive something, but this is not justified by the context. In this case, the jailer's house believed after they were all preached to (Acts 16:32-34). The jailer's faith did not save the others in his family; their individual faith did.

Further proof that Acts 16:31 is not a blanket promise for "household salvation" may be found in 1 Corinthians 7:15-16: "But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?"

If Acts 16:31 meant what it is commonly thought to mean (a guarantee of household salvation), 1 Corinthians 7:15-16 would have to be rewritten to say, "Wife (or husband), you know that your faith guarantees the salvation of your spouse. Believe your spouse into the kingdom and your spouse will have to get saved!" But that is not what Paul said. You cannot make someone else get saved, even your spouse, just by "believing for his salvation," much as you might like to do that.

In fact, the catch phrase that we should "stop using our faith for health and money and start using it for souls" is mistaken because you cannot receive someone else's salvation the way you can receive health and money for yourself. You could instead use your faith that God would send laborers to the person and that the Holy Spirit would convict the person of his need for Jesus. You cannot force the person to make the right decision by using your faith. Please know that I am in no way de-emphasizing soulwinning. Jesus came primarily to save lost humanity and church people need to remember their mission to GO reach the lost! I am simply saying that "faith" as shown in Mark 11:24 does not apply in the case of someone else whose will is involved.

I don't want to throw cold water on the hopes of anyone who is praying for a loved one. There are MANY Scriptures (beyond the scope of this book) detailing blessings that apply to your direct descendants. With the advantage of those promises, it will be very hard for one of your descendants to stay away from Jesus. However, his free will is still honored. In some cases a believer is put under unnecessary condemnation by those who feel that if he "just believed hard enough," the problems with the family member would disappear, and this is not the case. Of course, I am not justifying acting like a jerk around the family member and turning him off to the gospel, either.

Jesus' Teaching: Get Your Own Faith

Jesus taught that everyone has to get his own faith. You cannot transfer your faith to someone else, and you can't use someone else's faith. This is clear from this parable:

Matthew 25:1-13:

Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.

But the wise answered, Not so; lest there not be enough for us and you: but go ye rather unto them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.

Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.

Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Intercession

Please understand that I am not minimizing the role of BIBLE-BASED intercession. It is a good thing to have people interceding for the sick, specifically that God would show them any hindrances to their healing and that God would give them a revelation of His Word concerning healing. Intercession is a good addition to sharing God's healing covenant with the sick person, but it is not a substitute for it. Faith comes by hearing God's Word, not by being prayed for.

Can I Believe God for a Partial Healing?

Sure. You can believe God for anything that you are willing to stand in faith for.

In most cases you are believing for a partial healing anyway! You believe that a certain condition must cease, but you may have other conditions that are not as drastic that you are not standing in faith against right now.

What about one certain condition? Can you believe God for improvement of that one condition as opposed to total healing?

I realize, and so should you, that Peter and Isaiah agree that you were healed by the stripes of Jesus, not partially healed. So it might seem that you cannot believe for a partial healing, because you would not be standing on the Word.

However, in most cases, I would not take that view. It is a fact that Jesus paid for your total healing. But you can have as much or as little of it as you want, or none at all. You can still exercise faith for some portion of your healing. You can also believe for a speedier-than-humanly-possible recovery after human medical intervention. It all depends on where your faith is. Find out what you can believe and have people agree with that. Even if others are pressuring you to believe for total healing of everything, if you aren't ready to stand for it in spite of any circumstances that might arise, you should not "agree" with them, since you would not truly be in agreement. You would just be trying to do the right thing as a "faith person" but not be acting on what is real to you in your heart.

In fact, you are making a mistake attempting to "believe God" for something that is beyond your heart knowledge of the Word. Even if you know some things in your head, you really can't believe past what has become real to your heart. This takes time in meditation on the Word. If you have never heard about healing before and you want to be healed of deafness and quadriplegia, it may take you a while to get to the point where the Word is more real to you than the conditions that constantly confront your five senses. It isn't technically necessary to wait for any particular amount of time because healing for both conditions has already been paid for, but in practice it can take a while if you're not used to believing and receiving. You can do yourself a disservice by attempting to extend your faith beyond what it is capable of receiving now. You will get so frustrated that you may just give up. At worst, you'll be the next chapter in one of those ubiquitous "I tried that faith stuff, and it didn't work" books.

I have seen some VERY serious problems healed over a period of time as the people got around the Word more and more. An instant miracle would be more fun, but eventually getting a full-blown miracle beats keeping a serious problem for the rest of your life.

It is far better to believe and receive some specific phase of your healing than to give up and not pray at all because you don't feel ready to receive total healing. Some people have found that as their faith grows, they get colds for fewer and fewer days until they can run them off immediately. Your faith walk has to grow just as your love walk does. You don't start out being an expert overnight. I can play the piano practically in my sleep now, but I have been at it for over five decades at this writing. I did not perform with a symphony orchestra the first year I started lessons. (I have soloed twice with a symphony orchestra, but I had to practice a lot to get to that point!)

So maybe you can start by just believing God for a good night's sleep. (See Condition: Insomnia for some good Scriptures to stand on for that.) Then work your way up. Nothing is wrong with this. It is actually a wise way to work your faith.

It works the same way with finances. I once heard a woman state that she was believing for one billion dollars and she got lots of amens and encouragement, but not from me. If you've been sowing five dollar bills, you won't reap one billion dollars. If you hardly even know how to believe God to pay your rent (as it was in her case), I don't think you're ready to believe for a billion dollars.

Likewise, if you've never used your authority to make a headache or some other non-life-threatening condition go away, you are probably not in a condition to run two-weeks-to-live cancer off by faith yet. Even David killed a lion and a bear before killing Goliath; he wasn't a total novice at believing God when he took out his sling.

So if you're unable to believe for hair to grow back when you've lost it, you could at least start by believing that no more hair is going to fall out and that whatever is causing that problem must cease operation in your body. Then you could get to believing for the hair to grow back at a later time, citing God's promise to renew your youth (Psalm 103:5).

I have believed to keep a tooth that cracked so that it didn't have to be extracted, and believed for pain and discomfort to stop so that I could still use that tooth. However, that tooth is not "good as new" to this day. But it beats having to have it pulled.

In the first version of this book that I published online 22 years before this version came out, I shared how I believed God to not lose my eyesight in my left eye due to a growth around the optic nerve that was threatening my livelihood. However, I still had to wear glasses to function normally. So I had believed for a partial healing for that eye. Since then, I got to the place where I didn't need the glasses anymore, and when people asked if I got contacts, I replied, "No, I MADE contact!" So even if you believe for a partial healing, at least keep as your goal believing for a total healing. Once you get rid of the "I can't live with this" condition, determine to get rid of the "I can live with this" condition. God hasn't limited the health that we can enjoy right now thanks to Jesus.

In the Bible, a king could realize that calamity was coming upon Israel, but decide that he was okay with that as long as it would come after he died. That wasn't a total solution to the problem; it was a partial solution. Many of the kings abolished certain abominable practices while permitting others to remain. That was better than nothing, but those were also partial solutions. One king could have believed for a total rout of his enemies but settled for a partial victory. In many other cases in Israel, most of the enemies were wiped out, but some remained, resulting in only a partial victory. It wasn't God's best, though it was better than having no victory at all. So it is possible to believe for and achieve a partial victory. Always remember, though, that total victory is God's perfect will for you.

Having said all this, there is a certain type of "partial healing" that I wouldn't agree for. I've been asked if I could pray for enough healing so that someone's pain would go away but not so much healing that the person would lose his disability check. If you minister to the sick long enough, you will at some point encounter such a case yourself. I refused to pray for the person and would refuse any similar request today. I told him to come back when he was really serious about healing. I won't waste my time with people who aren't serious. There's just a certain dishonesty that I find annoying about wanting to stay sick so that you can collect money from the government. If people don't know about divine healing (most don't), that's one thing; it's another to know that you can be completely healed and deliberately want to stay sick enough to live off other people's money rather than working – and say so!

I thank God for a woman I know who was on disability and almost helpless for close to 30 years. After she was dramatically healed in one of our meetings, she went to the disability office and let them know she didn't need disability payments anymore because she wasn't disabled anymore! She went out and worked. On the other hand, if you're going to be a cheat and keep receiving disability payments when you don't need them anymore, you risk losing your healing because your public "confession" before the government is that you're still disabled! You can ask Ananias and Sapphira if they think lying is a good idea. In fact, you might even ask them in person sooner than you'd like!

Can I Believe God for a Gradual Healing?

It is easier to believe for a gradual healing than for an instant healing, and it is far better than not believing to be healed at all. However, God's best is to be healed all at once. In practice, we see more gradual healings because they're easier to believe for.

Most Bible miracles were instantaneous healings; the "began to amend," "as they went," type miracles were the exception and the healing was very rapid even then. Being able to believe for an instantaneous healing is God's best and it should be our goal. But what if you're unable to walk at all and you don't feel ready to just spring up by faith and run around the church? (Some people have done this, but it is still comparatively rare in the church world at this writing.) I'd rather that we agree for you to be able to walk with a walker than for you to stay in a wheelchair unable to walk at all. If you're able to use a walker, I'd rather believe for you to be able to use a cane than for you to stay dependent on a walker forever. If you're using a cane, I'd rather believe for you to walk without it than for you to need your cane forever. If you're able to walk and not run, perhaps we'd be ready to agree that you could run again.

I'd be more inclined to believe for the whole thing, and even if the improvement were gradual after that, I would continue to confess that I am completely healed by the stripes of Jesus and I'd end up with the full manifestation. But if you want to believe for a gradual (or partial) healing, I'd agree with you. Your healing, regardless of how long it takes to fully manifest, has been fully paid for in advance by the Lord Jesus.

Can I Get Healed of Injuries from Accidents as Well as Diseases?

Definitely!

Matthew 15:30-31 shows that Jesus healed the maimed. He is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), so He still heals the maimed today. In Luke 22:50-51, Jesus restored an ear that Peter cut off with a sword. This was certainly unrelated to any sickness. Sickness itself can maim people, but people can be maimed without sickness being involved. Healing belongs to those people as well.

Jesus took not only your sicknesses, but also your pains (Isaiah 53:4). God is the Lord your Physician (Exodus 15:26), regardless of the cause of your bodily trouble. Any physician will treat both sicknesses and injuries! Peter declares that you were physically healed in 1 Peter 2:24. That is a blanket statement that healing is yours, regardless of the cause of the need for it.

A woman we know had collapsed arches due to a mishap; after we laid hands on her in the name of Jesus, she was able to run for the first time in 20 years or so. Another woman had to have a disc in her back surgically removed because it was crushed in an accident. After we laid hands on her in the name of Jesus, Jesus put a new disc in her back and she later got the X-rays to prove it, much to the shock of her chiropractor! A friend of ours saw a titanium rod disappear that the surgeons had implanted in someone. Jesus definitely heals the maimed today!

Can I “Believe Away” the Side Effects of the Drugs Being Used to Treat Me?

If you’re undergoing chemotherapy, can you believe that you won’t lose your hair or feel nauseous? If you’re taking painkillers that list dizziness as a side effect, can you believe not to be dizzy?

Because I’m trying to answer everything from a Bible perspective, I’ll have to say that I can’t find any Scripture where believing away side effects of drugs is mentioned explicitly. No one went to Jesus for relief from side effects of drugs being used to treat an illness; people went to Him and received healing for the actual illnesses! Of course, when they were healed, they didn’t need any drugs or treatments anymore, which solved the “side effects” problem in a much better way.

The woman with the issue of blood in Mark 5:25-34 had suffered many things from many physicians, so whatever treatments they were doing must have had some painful effects on her body. Despite her treatments and suffering, not only wasn’t she any better; she actually got worse. However, she did not touch the hem of Jesus’ garment to be set free from the suffering caused by the treatments; she touched Jesus’ clothing by faith and received healing for her condition, at which point she no longer needed the treatments.

Certain chemicals do certain things to your body. I knew someone who chain-smoked 4 packs a day and ended up with cancer. She got all kinds of treatments and wanted people to believe with her that she was healed. However, she continued to smoke 4 packs a day! (I’m sure that this was inconsistent with her doctor’s instructions!) So while trying to “believe away” cancer, she kept giving herself cancer. She died young, despite being a “faith” person in a good “faith” church.

Being a Christian does not cancel all natural laws. Different foods and different drugs have different effects on your body. If your daily diet for years has been Twinkies and pepperoni pizza washed down with Jolt Cola, you may have a hard time “believing away” the issues you develop in your body that are “side effects” of your diet. If you take certain drugs, your liver can suffer after a while, and the doctors and pharmaceutical companies are quite up-front about it.

Having said that, I knew a 2-pack-a-day smoker who was instantly set free of her habit in a service. I know former alcoholics who were instantly set free from their addiction to alcohol. So Jesus CAN eliminate physical conditions and addictions brought on by chemicals. He is willing to break addictions in people’s lives because those addictions are “works of the devil” that He came to destroy (1 John 3:8). The difference is that the people set free in this way stop putting the chemicals into their bodies rather than believing that they can continue ingesting those chemicals without harmful effects.

What if you’ve been taking habit-forming pills for pain and now you’re “hooked?” There are many such “unintentional junkies” in society today. Once the underlying issue causing the pain is solved and you don’t need the painkillers, I would have no problem standing in agreement with you for freedom from your drug dependency. If the Son makes you “free indeed” (John 8:36), I don’t see why you’d have to live a life that isn’t free because you need certain pills to avoid falling apart.

Overall, my take on this question is that it would require extraordinary faith to “believe away” side effects of drugs, and if your faith is developed to that degree, it would probably be just as easy for you to believe that you receive your healing so that you don’t need the drugs with their side effects anymore. That is a far better outcome, and one that you have plenty of Scripture (as opposed to no Scripture) to back.

How Can I Hasten the Manifestation of My Healing after I Believe I Receive It?

No Scripture directly supports the idea that you can speed up the manifestation of your healing. Once you believe that you receive, the matter is out of your hands. You are at rest about the matter because you know that you have your healing. To some degree, it does not matter to you how long it takes the manifestation to come because you would be willing to hold on forever. You know that you have received something even though you can't see it yet, and nothing will shake you from that.

It is possible, however, to delay or negate your healing completely by wrong words and wrong actions. You can ensure that it never manifests by giving in to the sin of worry about it or speaking words of doubt. Don't think that the devil won't try you on this! You will have opportunities to give up when it looks as if nothing is happening. You can undo the effects of your prayer of faith if you give up. You need patience as well as faith to inherit the promises of God (Hebrews 6:12).

When Jesus spoke to the fig tree, something invisible happened immediately, but the disciples could not see the difference immediately. Jesus did not keep speaking to the tree repeatedly to "speed up the manifestation." In fact, He didn't do anything! He believed that it would be as He had spoken. He said nothing more to the fig tree. If He had spoken again, it would only have shown that He was not really in faith the first time. If you're very concerned about when your healing will manifest, perhaps you are not in as much faith as you thought you were.

Jesus said that if you believe you receive something, it shall be yours. He did not say when it would manifest in the natural, and He did not say that it would manifest immediately in every case. You have it immediately in the spirit realm after you pray, but it does not necessarily manifest on the outside right away.

What could Abraham or Moses or Joseph have done to "speed up the manifestation" of God's promises in their lives? They waited years and years, but God was faithful and He did what He said He would do. Your faith is what impacts the spirit realm. Beyond that, there is really nothing extra you can do to make things physically appear faster. But like Abraham and Moses, you can take God at His word and walk in His blessings.

“They Shall Recover” – How Long Should It Take?

You can go into a ditch on either side of the road on this one.

Obviously from the context (these signs shall follow them that believe), your recovery should be obviously supernatural. You should not be sick as long as an unbeliever would be sick. If you were, what kind of a sign would that be? It would be a sign that Jesus has no healing power and that you are no better off with Him than you would be without Him. If you would have just recovered the same way anyway, why should anyone listen to anything you say about Jesus? From their perspective, what good is He? Therefore, your recovery should be notably faster than it could have been by natural means.

On the other hand, many people throw away their faith when they do not see an immediate sign of recovery after being prayed over. Although instantaneous miracles tend to get more publicity, you will lose out on your healing most of the time if you confine God to working instantly in your body. You inherit God’s promises by faith and patience (Hebrews 6:12). If all miracles were instantaneous, you would never need patience; you would only need faith.

Some of the best testimonies of healing come from people whose improvement was rather gradual (but no less supernatural). Being healed of a terminal illness slowly surely beats dying. You may not consider it a blessing at the time, but this practice learning to stay in faith despite adverse circumstances is one of the most important lessons you can ever learn as a Christian. It will not only help you receive healing – this same principle will help you in every other area of your life.

How Long Should I Expect to Have to Pray for Healing?

The same amount of time it took for you to pray to get saved! In other words, a very, very short time!

When you decided that you wanted Jesus to be the Lord of your life, how long did your prayer have to be to receive Him? Did you have to keep beseeching the Lord for days to save you from your sins? No! You believed that something was available to you, you prayed, and you received what was available. That was the end of it.

Healing is supposed to work the same way. You believe that you receive healing when you pray, just as you believed that you received the new birth when you prayed. So how long you pray is mostly a matter of how quickly you get a few words out of your mouth!

Now that you're saved, do you keep asking the Lord to save you every day? No! You don't have to do that because you only need to receive the new birth once. Once you're received it, it's yours. Healing works the same way. You believe that you receive it when you pray, and it's yours. You don't keep on asking the Lord to heal you at that point any more than you would keep asking the Lord to save you.

"Yes," you might add, "but I still don't feel as if I've received my healing." Feelings have nothing to do with whether or not you have taken something in the spiritual realm. Do you feel saved all the time? You don't go by feelings to determine whether you've received the new birth, do you? So why go by feelings about anything else?

"Well I still have symptoms as if I hadn't received anything." Do you ever snap at someone else and regret it later? That is a symptom of being a sinner, but yet you are not really a sinner on the inside anymore if you are born again. Acting like a sinner at times doesn't negate the fact that you've received the new birth. Likewise, having pain in your body does not negate having received your healing.

You may need to STAND for your healing after you believe that you receive it, but you only PRAY to receive healing for something ONCE. Any subsequent prayer to receive healing would negate the first prayer and admit that you prayed in unbelief the previous time. Now if you DID pray in unbelief, go ahead and pray in FAITH this time, believing that you receive when you pray, as Jesus taught. Then make any subsequent praying about the matter be prayers of thanksgiving that Jesus provided the healing that you've already received.

I've Stood for a LONG Time and Nothing Has Changed. Now What?

Keep standing! It's way better than the alternative – quitting and never having any chance to receive anything.

It's great when a healing manifests instantly, but I have seen cases where parents have stood for YEARS for their children who had severe mental and physical issues. But at the end of those YEARS, the children were completely healed! It was a long stand of faith for them, but it was well worth it! Through faith and patience we inherit the promises (Hebrews 6:12). Just understand that patience is not passive resignation, but rather a tenacious holding on to something despite all appearances.

My advice to you would be as follows:

1. Make Sure that You Understand How Healing Really Works.

Reading this book can help you identify whether there are any areas in which you think you're standing in faith when you really aren't. I have talked with people who said they were standing for a long time, but they were actually lying down for a long time! They had resigned themselves to "waiting for God to do something" rather than continuing in active faith. There's a difference!

2. Make Sure that You Are in Faith, Not in Resignation.

Real faith does not throw up its hands and say, "OK, God, whenever you're ready, this is your issue now! I did all I could." Real faith continues to affirm and act on the truth that you or your child were legally healed by the stripes of Jesus.

3. Encourage Yourself in the Lord and Resist the Temptation to Quit.

At Ziklag, David had no one else to offer encouragement. In fact, his team of mighty men wanted to kill him, which definitely did not constitute encouragement. So David "encouraged himself in the Lord" in a situation where everything had been lost – all goods, all family members. He recovered ALL of them! He resisted the temptation to quit in a situation where probably few people would have blamed him for quitting. You should likewise resist the temptation to quit. Keep building yourself up in the Word.

4. Follow in Abraham's Footsteps.

It was MANY, MANY years between God's promise of a son and the birth of Isaac! Abraham, after some stumbles, finally got to the point where he believed that God was able to perform what he promised. He started giving glory to God instead of questioning His promise. He didn't receive the promise right away, but when he did, it changed the history of the world! That was well worth the wait! Keep giving glory to God because He keeps His Word. Let praise, not discouragement, come out of your mouth.

5. Pray in the Holy Spirit.

When you just don't know what to do, the Holy Spirit does, and He will never pray through you in unbelief when you yield your tongue to Him! You can't let the Holy Spirit do all your praying through you, though – you should follow the Word and pray both with the understanding and with the Spirit (1 Corinthians 14:15).

6. Remember that God is For You, Not Against You or Upset with You.

Satan would love for you to believe that God sees you as a spiritual flunkie because you haven't seen any results yet. He'd like it even better if you think that God is mad at you for not believing His Word. He isn't! God always wants to encourage you, not beat you up. The voice of beating up and condemnation is from the devil, not God. God is FOR you (Romans 8:31) and He wants to help you! Believe that if there are any issues, God will reveal them to you. (He promised that if you are not "minded" the way you should be, pressing toward the prize, forgetting that which is behind, etc., He would reveal that to you – Philippians 3:15.) Remember, the Holy Spirit is your Helper! He wants to help you receive what Jesus paid for you to have!

7. Don't Use Circumstances to Question whether Divine Healing is Yours – Stay with the Word!

When you've stood for a while, it might even be tempting to surf the Internet and visit some "Why divine healing doesn't really work" websites that are full of objections like the ones answered in this book. (That's where a lot of them came from!) You might look for a reason that you've been believing wrong all this time. But when you believe the WORD you are NEVER believing wrong. If your faith was in the fact that someone else, such as your pastor, your favorite TV teacher, or even the author of your favorite healing book, says that healing is yours, you are on shaky ground to begin with. The job of any Bible teacher is to show you from the WORD that healing is part of your divine benefit package in Christ. If you can't say "I KNOW it because the WORD says it right here..." you are like the sons of Sceva who tried to cast out a demon by "Jesus whom Paul preached." But when you know it because the WORD says it, no one will be able to shake you. We walk by faith, not by sight (2 Corinthians 5:7), so we must NEVER let circumstances – especially our own – determine our doctrine. Only the WORD determines doctrine! Always act and speak in accordance with God's Word in spite of any contrary circumstances. When you're really in faith, it doesn't matter how long something takes because you know that what you've received is yours and it has to manifest. You keep thanking God for that.

8. Find Other Believers Who Will Stand with You.

You are part of a BODY – you are never alone. When you're struggling, get around other believers who will encourage you, not discourage you. There is no shame in admitting to someone else that you're struggling; just make sure that the person will help you and agree with your stand of faith rather than just commiserating with you.

Do I Have to Wait for a Healing Service to Receive a Healing?

No. You can receive your healing at any time by believing that you receive it from God when you pray (Mark 11:24). God has already provided it for you. It's always available. It is just like the new birth. You don't have to wait for an evangelistic service to get saved, and you don't have to wait for a healing service to get healed.

I was saved alone in my dormitory room in college because someone had told me how to get saved. I didn't have to wait for a "salvation service." Likewise, once you know how to get your healing, you can receive it at any time rather than waiting for a healing service. Wouldn't it be a bummer if you had a headache right now and you had to wait until there was a healing service to get rid of it? You don't have to wait another minute. You can receive your healing from God right now.

It is sometimes easier, especially with major conditions, to receive your healing in a healing service because there is a special anointing to lay hands on the sick. "Gifts of healings" are often in manifestation. Many times God will "meet you halfway" if you are not fully in faith yet at such meetings if you will make the effort to get out to the meeting.

Never be ashamed of going forward at a healing service if you are sick. I say that especially for any ministers who are reading this! Don't be caught up with what other people think of you. Don't let the devil cheat you out of a blessing by lying to you about how people will think you're not really a faith person (even though you preach faith) because you went up in a healing line. Isn't that better than staying sick so that we'll all know you weren't in faith anyway? I preach healing but I have been in plenty of healing lines myself. It's just easier to receive in such an environment, and if you have the opportunity, take advantage of it!

The only sense in which you could answer that you have to wait for a healing meeting is if your faith is not developed enough yet to receive healing on your own.

I have found in my experience that some unbelievers and baby Christians who don't know much of anything yet about divine healing can receive healing in a healing service if they will at least "get in neutral" and give you permission to lay hands on them and command disease to leave their bodies by faith. God honors your faith in such cases. I have seen people healed of many drastic and life-threatening illnesses when I was sure that they weren't in any position to receive based on their own faith. However, these people were unbelievers, people who just got saved, or people who were still baby Christians. As you grow in your walk with the Lord, God expects more of you and you should learn not to have to depend on others' faith when you get sick. Frankly, it's fun to do a healing service somewhere where people don't know much about the Lord, even how to be saved. If people will at least be willing to let you lay hands on them, God can show them His goodness by healing them. Just before writing this, I saw cases where unbelievers allowed us to lay hands on them and they got healed – and then decided that they wanted this Jesus who had just healed them!

Can I “Stand in Proxy” for Someone Else in a Healing Line?

If the idea is to be a conduit for the tangible anointing to go into the other person, no.

There is no Bible precedent for standing and having hands laid on you on behalf of someone else. The healing anointing is not transmitted that way. Actually, this disrupts the flow of the anointing in a service because the power will not flow into you, and the minister will notice a “break” in the flow of the anointing, which can be distracting and make it harder for the next people to receive.

Part of the problem is that you cannot “believe you receive” a healing on behalf of someone else. (See Can I Believe and Receive a Healing for Someone Else?)

Now if “standing in proxy” is simply a means for praying the “prayer of agreement” according to Matthew 18:18-20, you can get results on that basis. The prayer of agreement is the issue, not standing in line. There is no Bible record of the anointing jumping to another person because someone was the “lightning rod” for it in a prayer line. If you do pray in agreement, please understand that the person to be healed needs to be one of the people in agreement with your prayer if you expect to see results. There are cases where people have been prayed for without their knowledge and God has indeed moved on their behalf, but this is not something that you can claim with certainty the way you could claim your own healing in agreement with someone.

There are at least three Biblical alternatives. You should suggest these if you are the one laying hands on the sick if you can afford the time to explain them:

Have Someone Minister the Word and Laying on of Hands in Person

The best way to minister to the sick is to have a believer share the Word with them concerning healing and lay hands on them in person. Any believer is authorized to do so; no ministerial credentials are required! (See Mark 16:18.)

Anoint a Cloth and Have It Taken to the Person

This has Biblical precedent (Acts 19:11-12), but it was not the norm. You would only want to do this if there is a tangible anointing present. You would not do this if you are simply laying hands on the sick in faith according to Mark 16:18. It was not a general practice in anyone’s New Testament ministry to do this all the time.

My wife and I have had unusual success with this method, but even the passage above calls such things unusual miracles. I won’t preach something as doctrine just because of my own experience. God can and does use different people different ways.

I prefer not to use this method if the person could reasonably drive to the meeting. If he is able-bodied and just unmotivated or unbelieving, a cloth that's been prayed over won't be of much help. Some people look for the easy way out of things, but in Jesus' ministry, if you didn't go to where He was, you didn't get healed unless you encountered one of His disciples. Someone willing to put forth the effort to attend a healing service is more likely to receive healing.

I have found that small cloths will do quite nicely so that you can have a lot of them. I preached on a certain Caribbean island where people were bringing up beach towels for me to lay hands on. I suppose that they reasoned, "If a cloth is good, a beach towel is better because it's bigger so it can hold more anointing." I don't think it really works that way, but I can tell you that a lot of people down there were getting healed from anointed beach towels (which they referred to as "prayer rags.") If people are willing to release their faith when they put an anointed item (even a beach towel) on themselves, they can be healed.

Again, this doesn't mean that we do away with normal means of healing and establish a new Beach Towel Doctrine and try to make lots of money selling high-markup DVD's with this "new revelation." (Or worse yet, make even more money selling anointed beach towels. Can't you picture that? "This beach towel could sell for $99.99, but you won't have to pay $59.99 or even $39.99 – this amazing towel is only $19.99 (plus $10 shipping and handling)! And you can get a bigger bargain if you act RIGHT NOW, because we'll send you a SECOND anointed beach towel FREE – you only pay shipping. But wait, there's more! Mention this TV offer and code SUCKER2 to receive a free 3-ounce airplane-compliant tube of suntan lotion to use with your towels at the beach after you get healed!")

I heard a story of a lady in the Midwest who received the Holy Spirit while her head was in her oven. (I guess she was cleaning it.) She got excited and told her neighbor, and her neighbor came over and stuck her head in that same oven and received the Holy Spirit too! That doesn't mean that they should go out and sell "Get Filled with the Holy Spirit by Sticking Your Head in the Oven" books. (These days, they might get rich, and they'd almost certainly get an appearance on some Christian TV show that would hype the living daylights out of them and their new revelation, but we're talking about what should happen.) What really happened is that the second lady decided that the time at which she stuck her head in that oven was the definite point at which she would release her faith. (Note: If you decide to try this just because it was mentioned in this book, please make sure that the oven is turned off first.)

Pray the Prayer of Agreement on the Spot – IF the Sick Person Knows about It and Consents to It

You can pray the “prayer of agreement” for the person’s healing if the person who needs it is in agreement with that! You will find that attempting to pray the prayer of agreement for Aunt Glarda in Montana is generally insufficient unless Aunt Glarda agrees to it and knows what’s going on. In my experience, many people come for prayer looking for the minister to wave a magic wand and get Aunt Glarda healed when Aunt Glarda has never even heard the gospel. (Aunt Glarda is such a mean old grouch that no one wants to talk to her anyway; she just needs to get healed because the care facility’s bills are sapping the family’s finances.) In this case, Aunt Glarda needs one of the first two options above. Although God sometimes does respond to such prayers in His mercy, the problem is that Aunt Glarda won’t recognize or cooperate with the healing anointing even if it does hit her, and even if she gets healed, she’ll have no idea how to keep her healing if she wakes up feeling crummy the next day.

Given the number of people who request such “long distance” prayers, it is noteworthy that there is not one single case in the New Testament of believers praying in agreement for healings long-distance for people outside the immediate household. You cannot rule out the “gift of faith” in such cases, and someone may get healed if the minister senses the anointing to pray for a particular case. But that is not the Scriptural norm.

The Bible pattern is not, “They shall stand in proxy for the sick” or “They shall minister to the sick from another place 2,000 miles away,” but rather, “They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover” (Mark 16:18). This is how Jesus and His apostles ministered as a rule, so it should be our rule as well.

You do not see a case where someone went to Jesus with a long-distance “ICBM missile” prayer request for Uncle Aristarchus in Damascus. Jesus did not often make “house calls” on the sick. As a believer, you can certainly make a “house call” to visit the sick, but you can’t usually call up the local healing evangelist and ask him to come pray for Aunt Nancy. The clear pattern is that the sick were brought to Jesus. If you want a healing evangelist to minister to Aunt Nancy, you should take Aunt Nancy to one of his meetings.

Can I Lay Hands on Myself for My Own Healing?

Sure. Jesus said that you would lay hands on the sick in His name and they would recover. If you are sick, you can lay hands on yourself and expect yourself to recover. This is not a standard practice (we don't know of anyone in the Bible who really did this), but there is nothing wrong with it. You can use this as a way of believing that you receive your healing according to Mark 11:24 at a certain place and time.

You have authority over sickness in other people's bodies when they allow you to lay hands on them in the name of Jesus. It would be silly to think that you could get everyone else healed but not yourself. Not only do you have authority over sickness in your body, but you also have complete control over your faith. You won't have to worry that you're not in agreement with yourself or that you're resisting the anointing!

Lest this sound as if you are setting up some kind of feedback loop in your body that will produce some kind of spiritual short-circuit and fry you, it is important to understand that the rivers of living water Jesus spoke of come out of your spirit, not out of your body. If you lay hands on yourself, the power of God will go through your spirit and into your body. There is no "loop."

Since healing belongs to you anyway under the New Covenant, there is nothing wrong with receiving it this way. Of course, you could receive it equally well without laying hands on yourself by following Mark 11:24. It's really nice that God has made different effective healing methods available to us.

Are We Redeemed from Mental as Well as Physical Illness?

Absolutely, positively, definitely yes!

Some of the afflictions in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 were mental illnesses. Of course, any illness of any kind is covered by verse 61 of that chapter, so you would know that you are redeemed from mental illness on that basis alone. But look at some of the parts of the curse from which you are redeemed: Vexation, madness, astonishment of heart, groping at noonday as the blind gropeth in darkness (this isn't normal behavior, is it?), your eyes failing with longing, having no might in your hand, being oppressed, crushed, and mad for the sight of your eyes, a trembling heart, failing of eyes, sorrow of mind, your life hanging in doubt before you, fearing night and day, having no assurance of your life, always wishing it were later because of fear. Yes, the curse from which you are redeemed includes mental illness!

The behavior described in the similar curse in Leviticus 26:14-39 is also that of mentally ill people: Having a faint heart, falling on each other when no one is pursuing, and running from the sound of a shaken leaf. These all demonstrate a fear that is totally out of control. You are redeemed from this!

Another giveaway is the fact that Jesus healed the mentally ill as well as the physically ill. Some of the ill people He ministered to had no known physical problem.

God has given you the spirit of sound mind (2 Timothy 1:7). This actually means self-control or sober-mindedness in the Greek. If you have a mental problem that involves lack of self-control, this verse is for you! Given that "sound mind" does not literally mean "a mind free from mental illness," I will not cite this as a proof-text for healing from mental illness, and neither should you. Nor will I attempt to stretch the Scripture about having the mind of Christ (1 Corinthians 2:16) to say that you have perfect mental functions. 1 Corinthians 2:16 in context in fact says something very different, that you have the mind of Christ and not just a natural mind that can understand natural things. You are able to think the way Jesus thinks. But there is enough Scripture already to prove the point; you don't need to drag out 1 Corinthians 2:16 and try to make it say something it doesn't say. It is possible to use the wrong verses to make a correct point, and I try to avoid that.

Many in our day have been set free from mental illness. I know a preacher who laid hands on a young woman who had the mind of a two-year-old. Instantly she was able to speak two languages and use college-level words. Not all mental healing miracles are that instantaneous, but they are still miraculous even if they unfold over time. We had one young person in our church who was discharged from mental health care that he been receiving all his life. Another man in are church was totally mute for some time; he had been in every mental institution in the state and was still schizophrenic. After we laid hands on him, there was some improvement – he spoke, but he would just repeat everything you said like a parrot. If you asked, “How are you?” he’d reply “How are you?” If you asked, “Are you going to repeat everything I say?” (I did ask that), he’d reply, “Are you going to repeat everything I say?” I sought the Lord about what to do with him, and He told me. I said to him, “I am healed by the stripes of Jesus,” and he replied, “I’m healed by the stripes of Jesus.” I said, “God heals ALL my diseases,” and he replied, “God heals ALL my diseases.” You get the idea. I kept doing that. Today that man works a normal job and converses just like everyone else. The Word worked mightily in him!

Would God Heal an Unbeliever?

Under the New Covenant, He already DID heal all unbelievers from a legal perspective! Healing as well as the new birth and many other benefits are there for the taking for everyone, so the issue is finding out what God has provided and receiving it, not trying to get God to be willing to heal. His will is already established. He wants to heal ALL unbelievers!

The idea that God will insist that you become born again BEFORE He will heal you is not found in Scripture. Consider that no one whom Jesus healed in the gospels was born again! No one who got healed in the entire Old Testament was born again, either! God healed them when they were unbelievers (by New Testament standards), and God's mercy to the unsaved has surely not diminished under our better covenant today.

Thus an unbeliever can exercise faith for healing, and even "great faith" as Scripture shows (Matthew 8:5-13).

The primary reason that God uses gifts of healings, working of miracles and special faith (see 1 Corinthians 12:8-11) is to demonstrate His goodness and power to unbelievers and confirm the resurrection of Jesus! A believer can receive healing through faith and does not technically need any of these gifts to be in operation, although God will sometimes move through these gifts to heal believers, too. God will sometimes heal an ornery unbeliever through these manifestations of the Spirit – don't get jealous! God is showing His goodness and mercy to him. (Remember, you can get healed by faith, so God hasn't left you out or preferred the unbeliever over you.)

You can share Jesus with unbelievers and lay hands on them for healing, expecting this sign to follow and confirm the Word that you shared (see Mark 16:20). They may or may not get saved, but they will have a good reason to when they see the "goodness of God that leads men to repentance" (Romans 2:4). This is surely a more effective method of evangelism than threatening people with stories about 666 and the mark of the beast and how if they don't get saved, they'll be left behind when the Church is caught up with Jesus in the clouds. It is quite natural to want to follow Jesus after He just healed you of some horrible disease.

Check out the nobleman in John 4:46-53. He did not "believe" in the sense of accepting who Jesus was until AFTER he believed for a miracle for his son!

So it is possible for an unbeliever to receive healing by faith without accepting Christ! (I wouldn't recommend this to anyone, obviously, given the eternal consequences of rejecting Him.)

Can an Unbeliever Exercise Faith?

Definitely!

If an unbeliever could not exercise faith, he could never become a believer, and everyone would go to hell!

All the people in the four gospels who got healed by “their faith” were unbelievers, as no one could be born again yet at that time!

All the Old Testament examples in the Hebrews 11 Faith Hall of Fame were unbelievers.

Jesus said that WHOSOEVER speaks to a mountain or tree and commands it to move and believes in his heart that what he says will come to pass, he will have whatever he says. This is not limited to believers, nor is it limited to good things! Death and life are in the power of the tongue (Proverbs 18:21) for both believers and unbelievers – that verse wasn’t taken from a New Testament epistle to the church, so it also applied to unregenerate people under the Old Covenant. The tongue can set the course of nature on fire even for a believer (James 3:6)!

It is quite typical for an unbeliever to believe and say that he is going to die young of cancer like some relative(s) did, and his misplaced faith (in the devil’s ability rather than God’s ability) will see him to an early grave.

God has given EVERY man, not just believers, the measure of faith (Romans 12:3). Therefore EVERYONE can believe.

Does Mark 11:23 Work for Unbelievers?

Jesus said that whosoever could speak to a mountain to be removed into the sea and it would happen if the person believes that he says in his heart. He did not say that it was for “those who believe” as in Mark 16:17-18. A quick study of the word whosoever shows that it means, well, whosoever – anyone! That would have to include unbelievers.

Unfortunately, the idea of believing and speaking wrong things works all too well for unbelievers. They say that they’re going to die of the same thing that killed other family members, and then they do. You could say that their WORDS are literally killing them – after all, death and life are in the power of the tongue (Proverbs 18:21). That statement has to be true for unbelievers because there were no New Testament saints around when Proverbs was written! James talked about how destructive the tongue can be, that it can set the very course of nature on fire and defile the whole body (James 3:2-6). So you can speak death with your tongue and reap it – but you can also speak life.

How does this square with the context where Mark 11:22 tells us to have faith in God? When we speak things according to the Word, we expect God to back our words as we use our God-given authority on the earth. We aren’t running around doing our own thing, speaking whatever “we” want to have happen without consideration for God. Jesus did not do that. He ALWAYS did what pleased the Father; He did not try to please Himself.

As explained elsewhere at length, Jesus was not commanding you to have faith, or even God’s faith or the God-kind of faith. He couldn’t have meant just to “have faith” because everyone has faith in the general sense of the ability to believe (Romans 12:3). If an unbeliever did not have faith, he could not be saved, because we are saved by grace through faith (Ephesians 2:8)! Instead, Jesus told you where to direct your faith – have faith in God! Because He commanded you to have faith in God, it must be possible to have faith in something or someone other than God. Most people have more faith in a doctor when he presents a bad report than they do in God, who can undo that negative report. They use their faith against themselves, speaking the negative reports that they believe in their hearts.

For example, say that you get a very bad doctor’s report that cancer has spread through your lymph nodes even though you weren’t aware that anything was seriously wrong. He tells you that you need to plan your funeral and your hospice care preferences. You can either have faith in the doctor, the doctor’s report, the cancer, or God, who says that He is your Healer who heals all your diseases, including terminal cancer. The fact is, you’re going to believe something – but it is up to you what you choose to believe. You can choose to use your faith to trust God, or you can misplace your faith by using it to believe the bad doctor’s report. If you believe that you’re going to die sick, you are still using your faith to believe something – you’re just using your faith in the wrong direction.

You see, there is no footnote in Mark 11:23 that you will have whatever you believe and say as long as it’s the will of God. Your faith is like electricity – you can use it to run a heat pump to warm your house or you can use it to kill yourself.

When we believe something CONTRARY to the Word and speak it out of our mouths, something happens that we aren't aware of. (If we knew what would really happen, we'd keep our mouths shut about the matter until we were ready to speak the Word!) You see, God gave MAN authority on this earth (Psalm 115:16). God is NOT in control. (That might rattle your cage if you didn't know that, but if you're rattled, see the related article about the objection that God is in control of everything!) MAN is in control. That's why things are in such a mess! YOU have more authority on the earth than you probably realize. The problem is, the devil knows all about the authority you have, so his goal is to try to get you to believe and speak the wrong things so that you use your authority against yourself. What you allow on earth is allowed in heaven and what you forbid on earth is forbidden in heaven. When you speak contrary to the Word, you authorize the devil and his demons to afflict you. If you speak that "your cancer" is killing you, he has the right to kill you with it. You allowed it. But if you FORBID it to kill you and you believe and speak the Word, heaven will forbid that cancer from killing you.

So it is possible for you to put your faith in the ability of "your cancer" to kill you, but it is also possible to put your faith in God's faithfulness to uphold His Word that declares you to be healed by Jesus' stripes (1 Peter 2:24), and deny the devil's cancer the right to kill you.

So when Jesus said to have faith in God, He didn't mean that Mark 11:23 would only work if you believe in God. On the contrary, He warned that Mark 11:23 would work for you no matter what (it works for whosoever), so you need to make sure that your trust is in God and not in anything else. Your faith is not in your faith's ability; it's in God's ability and His faithfulness to back His Word 100% of the time when He can find someone who dares to believe and speak it!

I think that the primary emphasis in Mark 11:23 is positive – showing the believer the extent of what is possible when you believe. However, the fact that you "have whatever you say" that you believe in your heart makes it all the more imperative that your faith is in God and His Word and not in disease, bad doctors' reports or anything else.

Doesn't 1 John 3:22 Prove that Our Ability to Receive Depends on How Well We Keep God's Commandments?

You need to read the previous verse along with this verse to get the total picture of what God says in this verse.

1 John 3:21-22

The subject here is your conscience and how it affects your confidence to approach God.

If you know that you are doing something wrong and you refuse to stop doing it, your conscience will bother you. When your conscience bothers you, it saps you of confidence to approach God. Deliberately violating your conscience makes you feel condemned, even though it's your own conscience and not God doing the condemning (Romans 8:1). When you feel condemned, it's hard to receive from God. Besides, I like to say that trying to receive healing while refusing to stop doing something that you know is wrong is like trying to open the door of your home to the Lord while slamming it in His face. It's hard to receive from God while also resisting His correction. God won't condemn you (Romans 8:1), but He WILL correct you (Hebrews 12:5-13). He promised you that if you're "off" in your attitude, He will reveal that to you (Philippians 3:13-15). That is for your GOOD because He LOVES you!

Now let me tell you what God ISN'T saying here. He is NOT saying that your ability to get healed is based on your merits. He is NOT saying that you will get healed or not get healed (or receive any other blessing or fail to receive any other blessing) based on how many commandments you follow or break! If that is the case, Jesus went to the cross for nothing and you will just have to live under the Law to earn God's blessings by keeping His commandments! Healing is still legally yours by grace – God is greater than your heart and He knows that. The issue for you is that your heart (conscience in this context) will bother you when you're knowingly sinning and not repenting.

Your conscience should not bother you as long as you are not deliberately planning to engage in things that you know are wrong. That is not the same thing as letting an "unedifying" word slip out of your mouth by accident when someone cuts you off on the highway without a turn signal. You immediately realize that you shouldn't have used that word. That would be a slip, not something premeditated. In such a case, you acknowledge that you were in the wrong, but because you now agree with God instead of agreeing with sin, your conscience should not bother you. In fact, ANY past sin – as long as you are not deliberately planning to continue in it – should not be "on your conscience." That is why Paul, who back when he was Saul persecuted Jesus and His Church, could tell the council in Jerusalem that he had lived in all good conscience before God until that day (Acts 23:1)! (In that case, the High Priest illegally ordered that Paul be struck in the mouth, and Paul slipped and had some words for that guy! Then Paul repented of those words. So once again, Paul was in a position to have a clean conscience, so that he could later tell Timothy, "I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;" (2 Timothy 1:3).

He was “sprinkled from an evil conscience” (Hebrews 10:22). An evil conscience reminds you of your past sins from which you’re forgiven. Jesus’ purging of your sins was done so that you would have no more conscience (consciousness) of sins (Hebrews 10:2). Now that does NOT mean, as some teach in error, that as a believer you no longer even know or care if you’re sinning because you’re in the state of innocence that Adam was in before he ate from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil! (Adam didn’t even have the ability to have a guilty conscience before he fell because he literally didn’t know right from wrong. You do!)

So in the context here, the reason that we “receive of Him because we keep His commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in His sight” is NOT because we have earned the right to receive God’s blessings by faithful commandment-keeping. Rather, we receive because we are keeping our consciences pure so that our hearts do not condemn us, which would sap us of confidence in prayer.

Must I Engage in Spiritual Warfare to See the Manifestation of My Healing?

Possibly, but not the kind of “spiritual warfare” that is most commonly – and mistakenly – talked about in the church world.

Real spiritual warfare involves thoughts in your own head. Satan and his local representatives will try to stuff unbiblical and discouraging thoughts into your head, such as:

- It’s been too long and you’ve still seen no improvement. Give up and accept your illness!
- Healing isn’t REALLY for everyone today. Look at all the sickness that God allows!
- You don’t have any faith, so you can’t get healed!
- You aren’t living a perfect life, so your sin disqualifies you from receiving divine healing!

You need to know the Word so that you can give him the “It is written” treatment:

- Through faith and patience I DO inherit the promises!
- Jesus bore all OUR sicknesses and pains, which means EVERYBODY’S, including mine!
- Even faith the size of a mustard seed could move a mountain, and God has given me the measure of faith!
- Jesus bought my forgiveness for ALL my sins with His blood, so I am righteous, justified, and completely qualified to receive divine healing!

So yes, if you want to see the manifestation of your healing, you will have to stand your ground and “fight the good fight of faith” (1 Timothy 6:12) by replacing Satan’s lies in your head with God’s truth.

However, you do NOT have to fight spirits miles up in the sky over your city to get them to “release” your healing to you and stop “keeping it from you.” We know this because the Bible makes it clear that every spiritual blessing (that would include healing) is already yours (Ephesians 1:3). Satan has come too late to the party. God says you that already HAVE healing and every other blessing as your CURRENT possession. Satan can’t keep it from you because it already belongs to you legally. You just have to keep acting on that fact whether you have seen the manifestation yet or not. Trying to directly engage “principalities and powers” in the air over your area is unbiblical anyway. Jesus didn’t do it. The apostles didn’t do it. They never told anyone else to do it. You should not do it. You definitely do NOT have to engage in that kind of so-called spiritual warfare to be healed! Those entities are already defeated. They are unable to keep anything away from you anyway. They want you to think that they have all this power that they haven’t had ever since the day Jesus stripped them of their power and defeated them openly in front of the whole universe (Colossians 2:15).

Think of it this way – if you confess Jesus as Lord, do you have to engage in “spiritual warfare” against principalities and powers so that they have to stop blocking your new birth so that you can have it? Of course not, that’s ridiculous. It’s equally ridiculous to think that these defeated principalities and powers can keep healing, which is part of your salvation package that you’re already received away from you without your vocal consent. What if you don’t immediately turn into the sweetest, gentlest, most loving person in town the very second you receive Jesus? Do you assume that because you don’t see the full OUTWARD MANIFESTATION of your new birth that you don’t have it, so some local principality in the sky must be withholding it from you? I hope not. If you have enough sense with that when it comes to the new birth, you should have that much sense when it comes to healing, too! We walk by faith, not by sight (2 Corinthians 5:7)!

What you do need to realize is that seed can take time to grow. God’s Word is seed. Do you dig up your vegetables three minutes after you planted the seeds if you don’t see a harvest yet? No. So why should you abandon your healing after three minutes if you don’t see anything yet? Having done all, stand your ground (Ephesians 6:13) and don’t let Satan get YOU to give up your healing with your MOUTH by repeating his lies instead of God’s Word.

Do you engage in “spiritual warfare” with principalities because you don’t see your vegetables spring up immediately when you plant seed? No. So don’t do it with your healing either when you don’t see an immediate manifestation. Believe that God’s Word will produce what He sent it to do – heal you!

I Lost My Healing – Now What?

Well, the first thing NOT to do is give up on your healing, thinking, “I guess I can’t keep my healing. Why bother trying anymore?” That’s exactly what the devil wants you to do.

Most of us have been in that position where we experienced relief and thanked God for our healing, but then the old sick feelings started to come back. Through either lack of knowledge or feeling weary of making a stand, we thought, “Oh, rats, I guess I’ll be stuck with the sickness after all! I’ll just have to suffer it out. I lost my healing.”

Let me start by saying that the devil may lie to you that you have “lost your healing” when you really haven’t. Just because you have some disagreeable twinge in your body doesn’t mean that you have forfeited your healing – you have to do that with your mouth. For example, you’d have to SAY, “NUTS – I thought I was healed but I guess I’m not!” or something to that effect. You have what you believe in your heart and SAY (Mark 11:23). If Satan can’t get you to SAY that you’ve lost your healing after you believed that you received it, you still have it, no matter what you feel like.

Also, Satan loves to hammer people with this one: “You just had a thought of doubt! Hah! You doubted, so now you aren’t in faith anymore! You just lost your healing!” But Jesus said you had to not doubt in your heart. If a thought of doubt goes through your head (Satan will try to see to that), you can still not doubt in your heart unless you receive that thought and make it your own. The only sure way to make it your own is to SAY IT. Then you’ve activated a spiritual law that both Jesus and Satan are well aware of – and that you need to be more aware of.

So consider whether you’ve really given up or if Satan is just trying to badger you. If you haven’t given up on the inside, stand your ground and keep speaking the Word.

On the other hand, if you just know in your heart that you believe that you have the condition back, and thus you’ve lost your healing, Satan now wants you to just throw in the towel about ever being healed. He’ll likely tell you, “See, you aren’t able to receive healing. Give it up; it won’t work for you! Just SUFFER!”

But instead of beating yourself up like he wants you to do, consider this – you believed and did receive supernatural healing for a while. If you did it once, you can do it twice! Believe that you receive again and be determined not to let it go no matter what your body says this time. Determine that you will say – to yourself, God, the devil, other people – only what God says. Healing belongs to you as a Christian. Declare that you are redeemed from the CURSE of sickness (Galatians 3:13), no matter what you feel like. Walk by faith, not by sight (2 Corinthians 5:7).

I think it will be helpful to you to remember that healing ALWAYS belongs to you because of what Jesus did. Thus, it is NEVER wrong to believe that you are healed. If you've wavered, healing is still LEGALLY yours and you can believe that you receive it again. God certainly will not withhold healing from you the second time around just because you wavered the first time! It's still your inheritance in Christ. Don't condemn yourself – just get back on track and believe!

Another important thing – going to the doctor or the hospital or taking medicine does not prove that you've lost your healing or that you are not trusting God! You can do what you can to get natural relief while you're standing in faith. Don't let the devil tell you that taking an aspirin means that you can't be healed of a headache. Let's face it – it's easier to stand for things when your body isn't screaming in pain. But it's not an either/or thing. God isn't against doctors or medicine; He wouldn't have set up the earth so that there are natural ways to get relief if He were against getting natural help.

Just don't do what too many Christians do – going to the Emergency Room and immediately giving up on any prospect of God's supernatural healing manifesting. What are you going to do if they say there is no hope in the E.R.? You'll have to believe God anyway. The issue for more Christians is when the doctor tells you that there IS hope and if you just do thus-and-such and take thus-and-such, you'll get better. Christians tend to get completely in the flesh at that point and reason that the doctors have it all under control, so there must be no more need to trust God at all. If you want the same results that a rank sinner can get, that's what to do. But there is better available to you through the same Jesus who was moved with compassion and "healed them all" in the Bible. At least believe for a faster recovery than man says is possible!

Also, realize that God is not upset with you if you get natural assistance. I realize that many faith preachers in years gone by tended to say that it was a sin to go to the doctor or take medicine. This would include one who is still hailed as a great man of faith whose writings are still popular, although he has been gone for a long time. I don't think he was right on this issue, though I appreciate his bold faith and teaching in most areas. You should never feel guilty about getting help when you know you need it. It's less shameful to get help when you need it than to die because you're too proud to admit that you need natural help with something you are trying to "believe God" to be rid of without man's help.

Even if you need man's help to get through something, determine that you will continue to meditate on God's Word so that next time things will be different. God is patient with you; He understands that no one becomes a faith giant overnight.

Can We Believe for a Dead Person to be Raised?

A dead person was brought back to life on quite a few occasions in Scripture. Thus, it is natural to wonder about this. After all, there is that command that Jesus gave to His disciples to “raise the dead” and because we’re promised long life, it might seem logical that a dead person should come back to live it out.

We can expect in general that there will be dead people raised today. However, you cannot say in any specific case that God has an obligation to resurrect a certain dead person. In other words, there are no Bible promises you can “claim” that obligate God to bring a certain dead person back to life.

A lot more Christians have made fools of themselves trying to bring back dead people than have ever raised someone from the dead. Probably emotion has a lot to do with this. If someone has suddenly lost a loved one, surely that person wants the loved one to be raised from the dead and hopes for a miracle. But the prayer is one of desperation, not one of faith, since there is no particular Scripture that guarantees the right to do that.

However, raising the dead would fall under the category of (special) “faith” as found in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11. It requires the gifts of the Spirit in operation to call back someone’s spirit into his body. This kind of faith is not the general faith that you can use as a believer, but a special faith for something that is otherwise impossible to believe for. There will probably have to be a simultaneous working of a miracle and/or healing. Otherwise, the person would just drop dead again after being raised! The gifts of the Spirit move as God wills, not as we will. It is up to God when and where He wants to raise a dead person.

Even then, there is another problem. Your faith cannot override someone else’s will. If the person to be raised from the dead does not want to live, the person will just die again and you won’t be able to do anything about it. I know someone whose wife was raised from the dead but she didn’t want to stay here after having seen heaven.

When he dies, a Christian goes immediately into the presence of the Lord (2 Corinthians 5:8). Once people get a glimpse of what heaven is like, they can lose their motivation to continue living on the earth in a hurry! You can’t do anything if they realize that departing and being with Christ is far better and they decide that they don’t want to come back here. Even Paul had trouble deciding what he wanted to do at one point. Philippians 1:22-24: “But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I should choose I wot [know] not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.”

One consistent pattern is that the dead people who were raised in Scripture were not aged folks who had lived out their lives. A Christian who had run his race would not be motivated to come back. A younger person might have more motivation if he realizes that God had more plans for him that are yet unfulfilled.

Now what about the command to raise the dead in Matthew 10:8? It is certain that Jesus was not telling them to go to the local cemetery and “raise up” a congregation. The raising of certain dead people was to be a sign to people that Jesus was who He said He was. The Great Commission includes a blanket statement about healing the sick but it does not include one about raising the dead. In other occasions when Jesus sent people out, He did not include a command to raise the dead, although there was always a command to heal the sick. The authority given to them in Matthew 10:1 did not include the raising of the dead, but it did include the healing of the sick.

Therefore, we can lay hands on the sick in faith, with or without feeling any urge to do so. We cannot lay hands on the dead in faith without a special directive from the Holy Spirit. You might reason that there is no downside risk because the person won’t get any deader if you lay hands on him and nothing happens. However, you risk potential embarrassment in front of others. Also, you don’t want to practice being in presumption beyond what the Word allows you to do in faith.

I know several people who have raised a dead person. I’m married to one of them. We were caring for a certain person in the church that we were pastoring and that person just “went” in front of us. My wife went over and said firmly, “Not on my watch!” and commanded her to come back to life, and she did. In this case, as is the case sometimes, the “gift of faith” rose up immediately. Unless you know the Lord is in it, though, you need to pray and find out if He wants you to raise the person. If He does, He’ll let you know. If He doesn’t, don’t try it without Him out of desperation or pressure from the family. I know someone else who raised her own blue stillborn child back to life, and someone else who raised someone who died in the middle of his service. I know someone else who has raised several dead people during his ministry. So this DOES happen today, but it’s the exception, not the rule. The local funeral homes need not worry that the local Christians will put them out of business.

As for God’s promise of long life, two things apply. First, the person may have been engaging in practices that can lead to premature death, both in the natural and in the spiritual realm. No one who died from his own foolishness was ever raised from the dead in the Bible. Second, it was the person’s responsibility to believe for long life. You can’t “believe you receive” on behalf of another person. Therefore, claiming Psalm 91 and similar Scriptures on the dead person’s behalf is futile.

Because the gifts of the Spirit are for today, there will be dead people raised in our day. These gifts operate as the Spirit wills, not as we will, so we cannot “make” the Holy Spirit raise a particular individual from the dead. If He does move on someone to raise the dead person, thank God!

However, if we could all believe for any dead person to be raised, you could live on the earth forever because we’ll just raise you from the dead when you die. When you later die again, we’ll just raise you again, and so on. We clearly do not have the right to live on the earth in this body forever, so there cannot be a blanket promise in Scripture that says that you can always raise the dead!

How Many Years Should We Expect to Live?

The most common, but incorrect, answer is that we should expect to live 70 years, and 80 years if our strength holds (Psalm 90:10). This cannot be true in context, because Moses, who wrote Psalm 90, lived to be 120. So we know that Moses was not making a statement about the maximum lifespan allowed by God!

Many sinners live past 90 or even 100. Obviously, this verse does not say that you can only expect to live a maximum of 80 years. If that were true, God would be saying that the godly should live shorter lives than sinners, which would contradict a large number of other promises.

Read the context of this verse, and you'll discover what it is really saying:

Psalm 90:5-11:

Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth up.

In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath we are troubled.

Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

For all our days are passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years as a tale that is told.

The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

This psalm is not a statement by God of the maximum allotted lifespan of his people! It is a lament over the sorry state of Israel in the wilderness and the wrath of God that had been poured out on the people. Moses was lamenting that people were only living 70 to 80 years. Since this is a lament, the implication is that the godly should live longer than the backslidden Israelites, who lived only 70-80 years because of their poor spiritual health.

Read the context again. Moses was lamenting that our lives were like grass that grows up and dies quickly. So he was saying that living only 70-80 years is to die prematurely. We can see how a man who lived to be 120 without losing his eyesight or his strength (Deuteronomy 34:7) would state this!

So don't ever repeat the worn-out lie that once you hit 70 or 80, you're living on borrowed time. You don't have to borrow those years from God. How would you pay Him back? You can't borrow time anyway. If you could, some bank would be making a lot of money on time loans. If you needed more time to pay back your loan, you'd have to borrow even more time and enrich the bank even more.

So the question remains, what is the proper lifespan for the believer? We know that it must be more than 80 years based on the evidence above.

Here is the next verse that would come to mind:

Genesis 6:3:

And the LORD said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

At first, this would appear to put an absolute 120-year limit on man's life. However, that interpretation would make Scripture contradict itself, which it cannot do. Abraham was born after God made this statement and he lived to be 175 (Genesis 25:7). We know that others lived more than 120 years after God made this statement, including Ishmael (137 – Genesis 25:17), Isaac (180 – Genesis 35:28), Jacob (147 – Genesis 47:28), Kohath (133 – Exodus 6:18), Amram (137 – Exodus 6:20), Aaron (123 – Numbers 33:39), Jehoiada (130 – 2 Chronicles 24:15) and Job (140 years after his trials – Job 42:16). So Genesis 6:3 cannot be taken to absolutely limit man's lifespan to 120 years!

One famous Bible commentator concluded that man in Genesis 6:3 is literally the man or Adam, and that this was a statement to Adam and not to man in general. In other words, Adam was being given 120 more years. Let's do some math from Genesis 5 and see if this makes sense. Adam lived a total of 939 years. He begat Seth when he was 130. Seth was 105 when he begat Enos, who was 90 when he begat Cainan. Cainan was 70 when he begat Mahaleleel, who was 65 when he begat Jared. (I hope I'm not boring you too badly; we need to do some math to prove a point.) Jared was 162 when he begat Enoch, who was 65 when he begat Methuselah. Methuselah was 187 when he begat Lamech, and Lamech was 182 when he begat Noah. So Noah was born when Adam would have been 130+105+90+70+65+162+65+187+182 years old. As you can verify with your calculator (or calculator app), that comes out to 1056 years old, which proves that Adam was already dead before Noah was born. Since Noah was born at the end of Genesis 5 and is talked about in Genesis 6, this statement by God was apparently made during Noah's lifetime (Genesis 6:8: "But Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD"). If so, it could not possibly have been made to Adam himself, because Adam was not on the earth at that point.

Now note that Noah, who walked with God, lived to be 950 years old (Genesis 7:6 with Genesis 9:28). So this statement did not even limit Noah's life. Noah was already 500 years old at the end of Genesis 5 (Genesis 5:32), and he was 600 when he went into the ark. If anything, Genesis 6:3 is another curse because "the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Genesis 6:5). So if there was a 120-year limit, it was for the wicked, not for God's covenant people! Even if you take it as an average, that's a lot longer than people today are living, so it would be a vast improvement!

Another explanation that is accepted in some circles is that the 120-year limit referred to a one-time span of how long mankind would continue to live before the flood wiped out humanity except for the 8 people on the ark. Let's see if this is plausible. Noah was 500 years old at the end of Genesis (Genesis 5:32) before God made the statement above in Genesis 6:3. When the rain started falling, Noah was 599 (in his 600th year). So this would only work if Noah's age of 500 were an approximation instead of an exact age, which to some extent it must be, seeing that he could not have had all 3 children at the exact age of 500. However, a 20-year discrepancy seems a little much to me, though some other people obviously don't think so.

The only alternative I see left is that the 120-year limit was for the wicked, but there are certainly stories of people who are probably not Christians living longer than that in some parts of the world, so the “hard-limit” idea is hard to support. But I don’t think that this was intended as a literal hard limit so that someone has to die the very second he turns 120. I would see it more as a general number, similar to the general number of 500 years for Noah’s age when he had 3 children, that would apply only to those operating outside of God’s blessing. We’ve already seen that people who had God’s blessing did live longer.

I wouldn’t consider it worth getting into an argument with anyone who reaches a different conclusion than I do on this particular topic. My main concern is that you understand that 120 years cannot be the upper limit for a person operating under God’s blessing, as there were people who exceeded that after the statement in Genesis 6:3.

So what should we take away from all this? There is no stated age at which you must die. God does say, “With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation” (Psalm 91:16). What is long life? I don’t know, but God says that you will be satisfied with it, which is really all that matters. In other words, God will let the man who serves Him live as long as He wants to. When you are satisfied, you can go on to glory. You can stay here until you are satisfied. If you’re not satisfied that you have fully completed your course on the earth that God has given you, stay here until you have. Don’t let sickness evict you from your body before you finish your work on earth! At some point, you will be able to say, like Paul, that you have accomplished everything that God wanted you to accomplish. You won’t have anything left on any kind of to-do list. At that point, there wouldn’t be much point in hanging around here.

Is There an Appointed Time for Each Person to Die?

No.

When and how you die is more up to you than it is up to God. The only definite thing is that you will die unless Jesus returns before you get old enough to die.

Of course, God, being omniscient, has foreknowledge of exactly when you will die, but that is not the same thing as God determining exactly when you die. Most of us know people who just wanted to die and died quickly, and we know others who wanted to hang on longer and did. Sometimes dying people stick it out long enough to say goodbye to all the family members to whom they want to say goodbye. Then suddenly they're ready to go, and the next thing you know, they're gone.

I have amassed a parade of Scriptures that prove that it is mainly up to you. You can do things that will shorten your life on the earth and you can do things that will lengthen your stay here. You obviously cannot stay here forever, but you can decide when you're ready to go. You do not have a Pre-Assigned Death Date from a Heavenly Death Panel that decides when your number is up.

This topic is dedicated to all those who have been fed the lie that when God decides it's time for you to die, that's just it and there's nothing you can do. This lie is usually brought forth by preachers doing the funeral of someone who is dead before his time. "Well, the Lord saw fit to call him home." (Baloney.) This often leads to even more stupid statements, such as, "Obviously his work on earth was finished." Aside from the fact that the person's actual work on earth is by definition finished, a person's death does not indicate that the person even started the work that God had intended for him, much less finished it. (Failure to even start what God wanted may even be why he died so young!)

Then there is the classic idiocy, "God wanted another little angel to sing in his choir" as may be suggested at a child's funeral. God does not use Satan as His personal employment headhunter to fill positions in heaven. God isn't short-staffed, and people don't become angels when they die anyway – they become as the angels (Matthew 22:30, Mark 12:25).

You've probably heard it said, "When your number's up, that's it!" But God is not pulling balls out of a lottery machine in heaven and calling out some kind of Death Bingo numbers.

The confusion probably starts with a misunderstanding of Hebrews 9:27: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:". This verse does not state that there is a specific appointed day and hour when you are supposed to die. It only states that it is appointed for you once to die and then face judgment. (The idea of reincarnation is totally at odds with Scripture. No one has any "past life" and everything to do with "revelations" of past lives is demonic.)

The apostle Paul had a choice of whether he wanted to stay on the earth to help the Church or die and be with the Lord (Philippians 1:22-24): “But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.” Paul was deciding what he should choose. He had a choice.

You should definitely not die before you are 70 to 80 years old, and that is definitely not an upper limit. Consider Psalm 90:10: “The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.” The context of this verse is the wrath poured upon the Israelites because of their sins! Moses was bemoaning the short lives people were having. (Moses himself lived to be 120.) You should surely live at least as long as the disobedient Israelites!

To the man who makes God his refuge and habitation, God says, “With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation” (Psalm 91:16). This promise is not made to anyone who does not meet this requirement. It is instructive to read all of Psalm 91 and see all the life-shortening tragedies from which God has promised to deliver you.

God repeatedly states that hearing His words prolongs your life, and scorning them shortens it. Here’s proof, and this is by no means a comprehensive list of verses:

Keeping the Lord’s commandments prolongs your days – Deuteronomy 5:33, Deuteronomy 6:2, Deuteronomy 11:8-9, 1 Kings 3:14

Laying up God’s Word in your heart multiplies your days – Deuteronomy 11:18-21

God’s law adds length of days to you – Proverbs 3:1-2

Length of days in is wisdom’s right hand – Proverbs 3:16

Receive God’s saying and the years of your life will be many – Proverbs 4:10

The fear of the Lord makes you live longer – Proverbs 9:11

But wickedness shortens your life – Proverbs 10:27

Not keeping God’s commandments can lead to death – Proverbs 19:16

Honoring your father and mother lengthens your life – Exodus 20:12, Deuteronomy 5:16, Ephesians 6:1-3

Speaking evil with your tongue keeps you from living a long life, but avoiding evil with your tongue gives you long life – Psalm 34:11-14, 1 Peter 3:10-11

Wickedness and foolishness make you die before your time – Ecclesiastes 7:17

Psalm 55:23:

But thou, O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction: bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days; but I will trust in thee.

If it is possible to lengthen your days or shorten your days, there is no set time at which you must die. It is you, not God, who lengthens or shortens your days based on the decisions you make about God and His Word.

Yes, there are sinners who live to a great age, but we can assume that they would have lived even longer if they did the things that “multiply your days.”

The fact that Ecclesiastes 3:2 says that there is a time to die does not mean that you cannot move when your time to die is!

If You Are Sick, Does that Mean There is Sin in Your Life?

Sorry if this bursts your bubble, but unless you are the first person since Jesus to live in sinless perfection, there is sin in your life. God will progressively deal with you in different areas so that you will get sin out of your life, but He won't deal with you about all of them at once. Given that there is sin in your life, the question is really, "Is your sickness a result of the sin in your life?"

Possibly, but not necessarily.

But doesn't Acts 10:38 tell us that the devil is the source of sickness? Yes, the devil does cause sickness, but sinning on purpose opens yourself up to the devil. Also, it is hard to receive a healing from God if you refuse to receive something else (correction) from God at the same time.

If you are walking uprightly before God and you are not aware of any area where you are resisting the Holy Spirit, it is safe to assume that your sickness was not caused by sin. Of course, in a general sense, sickness is in the world because of sin. You should not go on a "witch hunt" to discover some secret sin just because you are sick. Do not let anyone condemn you into thinking something is wrong with you spiritually just because you have a cold. Many things are just part of the mess that sin made of the earth and have nothing to do with you personally. Death (and thus anything that causes death, such as sickness) came by sin (Romans 5:12). In other words, Adam's sin, not necessarily your sin, brought it about.

However, it may be useful to examine yourself if your walk with God has not been what it ought to be. The Bible definitely does teach that sin can make you sick, and you can't blame the devil in such cases.

Jesus attributed the condition of the man at the pool of Bethesda to sin. The man had been there for 38 years. After healing him, Jesus said, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee" (John 5:14). So Jesus warned him that sin could lead to sickness.

On the other hand, the disciples asked whose sin caused the man in John 9:1-7 to be born blind, and Jesus made it clear that it wasn't anyone's sin in particular. The man's blindness was just part of the fallen condition of the earth; it was not related to any particular sin that the man or his parents committed.

Foolishness

Psalm 107:17-20 – Here we are told that fools are afflicted because of their transgressions and iniquities.

There are obviously a number of ways that modern-day fools can make themselves sick. Drugs and alcohol can lead to physical afflictions for which you have only yourself to thank. Not dressing properly in cold weather or staying in the hot sun too long are other examples of foolishness that can lead to physical ailments. Praise God for His mercy, because He is still willing to heal you (Psalm 107:20). But note that this is AFTER you decide to cry out to the Lord.

Sexual Sins

It should be self-evident that sexual sins can lead to disease.

Romans 1:27: “And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet [just or due].” The fact is that homosexuality is unnatural, and there is a natural price to pay for this sin.

Proverbs 5:8-11 tells you the end of getting involved in adultery (a more Biblical term than “indiscretion” or “affair”): “And thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed.”

The devil invented AIDS and other venereal diseases, but you can give him an obvious open door by engaging in sexual sin. These diseases are still part of the curse from which you are redeemed, but you should repent before asking God to heal you. Sometimes, He will heal you first in His mercy, but you do not have the right to ask God to heal you while clinging deliberately to what you know to be sin, especially sin that God already told you leads to sickness.

Failure to Have a Proper Regard for the Body of Christ

1 Corinthians 11:27-32 warns those with improper attitudes that they will be judged with sickness or even death if they refuse to judge themselves. This judgment comes from God Himself, not the devil. (God has not subcontracted judgment to the devil, as is proved elsewhere in this book.) There can come a point where God will afflict you or even kill you to avoid having you be eternally lost. This “chastening” (verse 32) is not God’s normal method of dealing with Christians. It is reserved only for those who harden their hearts. No believer who hasn’t hardened his heart will be “chastened” in this manner.

Summary

Sickness can be the result of sin in your life, but it can also be part of fallen creation getting on you for no particular fault of your own. Do not assume that just because you are sick, you are in sin. If you are in sin, the real you – your spirit man – knows it anyway if you’re born again. If you don’t know of anything you’re doing wrong, you may assume that your sickness is unrelated to any specific sin. Don’t go on a “witch hunt” for secret sins if your conscience is clear.

Is There a Difference between Having a Disease and “Just Having Its Symptoms?”

Yes, but the difference is subtle.

If you start having a scratchy throat and it looks like you’re coming down with a cold, you have the symptoms of a cold. But if you do not believe that you RECEIVE that cold, you have only symptoms, not the cold, and the symptoms must leave as you command that cold to leave your body. Symptoms of a disease are like temptations to sin. You haven’t ACCEPTED or RECEIVED a disease just because you have a symptom any more than you have SINNED because you are being TEMPTED to sin.

If you’ve gone ahead and said, “Rats! I caught that thing that’s going around church!” than you HAVE received the cold, so you have the cold as well as its symptoms.

However, you can still “believe that you receive” your healing when you pray. Once you do this, you may have symptoms, but you no longer “have” the illness from a spiritual perspective. This fact ensures that the symptoms will leave as your body lines up with what you have already received in your spirit. It is no longer “your” cold or “your” depression or “your” high blood pressure or “your” diabetes, and you would never refer to it as such. (If you do, you have not really believed that you have received your healing!)

So from that perspective, we can make a Biblical distinction between having symptoms and having an illness.

The Bible does not make an explicit distinction between just having symptoms of a disease and actually having a disease in any accounts of illnesses that were healed. There is no explicit teaching about dealing with symptoms of an illness as opposed to an actual illness. Jesus didn’t say that we would lay hands on people who only have symptoms as well as those who are actually sick. He said to heal the sick, not to remove symptoms from those who only have symptoms but to heal those who are actually sick. Jesus carried our diseases; there is no distinction made about Him carrying “symptoms” of diseases. However, when He took our diseases, He had to take the symptoms.

If you have symptoms, an illness is attacking you. However, once you believe that you receive healing (if you think you already came down with something) or you speak to the condition in faith (if you haven’t accepted it as yours), there is a sense in which you don’t “have” the illness because you no longer acknowledge its right to continue in your body, even though its symptoms may remain for a while. The healing you received on the inside is working its way out, just as the curse on the fig tree started invisibly and then started to manifest on the outside. The tree was as good as dead when Jesus cursed it, but it took some time for the “symptoms” of life to disappear.

As far as your public life is concerned, there is little to be gained by trying to theologize to the unsaved: “I don’t have a cold. I just have the symptoms of a cold.” You will get a cold reaction from them. They will think that you’re weird.

Sometimes if you clear your throat even once, some well-meaning person may say, “Oh, you poor thing, you’re coming down with that new flu strain that has been making the rounds!” NEVER agree with such a statement unless you really want the illness. You may have to be socially awkward to avoid agreeing that you’re coming down with something, but actually getting the flu is even more socially awkward because it will make everyone want to avoid contact with you. You can tell people that you are trusting Jesus to keep you free from the latest flu strain. They may think you’re unusual, but I’d rather have them think I’m unusual and think I’m staying well, too! Don’t accept sickness just to be polite!

There is another angle to cover here, too. After you receive your healing and it manifests in your body, there may be a time when the devil attempts to get you to take your sickness back. You may feel a twinge and say, “Oh, no, I guess I was never really healed after all!” That is just what the devil wants you to say, since it authorizes him to put the disease back on you again. Instead, stand against it and refuse to take it back. You have authority over it. This may happen a few times, but if you will continue resisting the devil, he will have to quit. At this point, you can legitimately see yourself as “having” symptoms but not “having” the disease anymore.

Regardless of whether you consider something a “symptom” or the real thing, the sooner you hop on it in faith to get rid of it, the better.

Which is Harder to Heal – Cancer or a Cold?

ALL possible answers are right – depending on your perspective!

From your flesh's perspective (which I don't recommend that you go along with), cancer is harder to heal because it's scarier and possibly fatal, which would almost never be the case with a cold. The Flesh Freakout Factor is potentially greater. Your unregenerate flesh will never see things from God's perspective. Nor will your mind until you renew it with God's Word. You could reason that you will have to muster up more power to drive out cancer than a cold. That would demonstrate the danger of using reason instead of Scripture! YOUR PART is to lay hands on a sick person. GOD'S PART is to make that person recover. The power flows THROUGH you but it does not ORIGINATE with you. You use your delegated authority and GOD'S POWER drives out the disease whether it be a cold or a cancer. You do not have to "muster up power!" You only need to let God's power flow through you.

From God's perspective, colds and cancers are identically easy to heal. What percentage of INFINITE power is left when God heals a cold? 100%. What percentage of INFINITE power is left when God heals a cancer? 100%. Neither healing causes a brownout in heaven.

We should take God's perspective that arthritis is no harder to heal than a pimple, diabetes is no harder to heal than a hangnail and AIDS is no harder to heal than a scratch on your finger. The name of Jesus makes EVERY knee bow, which means the knee of cancer just as much as the knee of a cold. When you invoke Jesus' name, it brings Him onto the scene with all His omnipotence! The sicknesses bow at HIS name, not YOURS, so it's not up to you to "make" sickness leave or "generate" the power to make it happen. Have confidence in your authority to use the name of Jesus. Cancers and colds will bow equally quickly.

From a practical perspective, cancer is MUCH easier to heal than a cold. Stage 4 (terminal) cancer is MUCH easier to heal than cancer at any other stage. This has been my experience over 4 decades as a Christian. I have lost count of stage 4 cancer cases that I have seen healed, but other than in my own body, I have very rarely seen colds and flus leave. The reason is quite simple. Let someone, even a Christian, get a cold, and he will run to the medicine cabinet and down some Multisymptom Elixir to get rid of the symptoms – until they return in a few hours, at which point he will down some more Multisymptom Elixir. He doesn't even stop and consider that the name of Jesus could make that cold leave for good. Meanwhile, he doesn't feel well and so he doesn't go to church where fellow believers could drive that thing out in the name of Jesus, assuming that they aren't all home with it themselves. But let that person get a report that he has a hopeless cancer case and that the best he can hope for is a less painful exit if his head can be fogged up with enough morphine, and suddenly that person will get VERY serious about obtaining healing from the Lord.

It's a LOT harder to get a person to be serious about looking to Jesus for healing for a cold that will be inconvenient but not fatal. So in practice, any "I can live with it" disease won't be healed as often as an "I can die with it" disease.

I've seen the same concept in different countries, some of which have good medical care and some of which have rotten medical care. It's MUCH easier to get people to come to a healing service where no natural alternative is available or affordable! In more developed countries, where people know that they can just go to the Emergency Room, Jesus can be at most an afterthought after people pursue natural help. When you operate in the flesh, looking to man to operate on your flesh is easier on your flesh, which isn't able to trust God and His Word. That's why it's so important to walk in the Spirit instead of walking in the flesh.

While the disciples found it harder to cast out one particular demon than other demons they had cast out, there are NO cases where they failed to heal a particular disease because that disease was harder to heal than another one.

It SHOULD be our experience that colds and cancers get healed equally well, as that is the only position consistent with God's perspective instead of our flesh's perspective or our experience's perspective. We should always strive to elevate our experience to line up with God's Word rather than watering down God's Word to match our experience.

Why are So Few People Healed of the Common Cold and the Flu?

It seems strange that while the common cold and flu are almost universal ailments, so few Christians seem to walk in victory over them. It seems that there are many more testimonies of people getting healed of drastic illnesses than getting healed of sore throats, coughs, fevers, and so on.

Part of this may be that people wouldn't get excited to read a headline that says, "Man Healed of Runny Nose in Healing Crusade!" so the more "sensational" (but not more supernatural) healings get the headlines: "Deaf, Dumb and Blind Man Healed – Plays Pinball to Prove It!" So part of it may be a publicity problem. But part of it isn't – many Christians, even ones healed of more dire troubles, seem to fall victim to these little annoyance tools of the devil.

This is unnecessary. All illnesses were included in the curse for breaking the Law (Deuteronomy 28:61) and Jesus bore that curse in our place (Galatians 3:13), redeeming us from having to suffer any part of it. No Christian ever needs to get as much as a headache. You are redeemed from that cold that all your relatives have. You are redeemed from this year's strain of the flu that is in that person in the elevator who just sneezed on you. It is just as much God's will to heal you of these "minor ailments" as it is His will to heal quadriplegics of theirs.

The problem is not that the sick person does not desire to be well, but that the relatively small annoyance of putting up with the symptoms may seem to outweigh the effort required to stand in faith. In other words, we don't want to be healed badly enough! We live in the flesh too much.

If you were told you had two weeks to live because you had terminal cancer, you would surely do everything in your power to hear God's promises and receive your healing. However, our attitude with a cold is often "I can live with it." Yes, you can live with it, but you can also live without it if you will act on the good news that Jesus was made sick in your place and He purchased your healing from ALL sickness. The Lord your Physician is longing for you to receive the health that is rightfully yours.

Because people have a stronger desire to be healed of bigger illnesses, the result can be that they get healed of the bigger ones and then fall victim to the smaller ones.

There is no special secret healing method just for colds and the flu. You get healed of these in exactly the same way that you get healed of any other illness. Faith works just the same for all of them. Just make sure you're serious (not playing around) when you pray! "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (James 5:16). Stop letting the devil rip off your time with these nuisances and believe God for your healing now!

Can I Receive Healing for a Problem that I Brought on Myself?

Yes, of course, but you should repent of the underlying cause first. Psalm 107:17-20 speaks of fools who get sick because of their own wrongdoings. What is God's attitude? In His mercy, "He sent His word and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions."

However, this doesn't give you a license to run around outdoors in the winter with no coat on, overeat, eat junk food all day, overwork yourself, get too little sleep, stay mad at people, and then "claim" healing. Epaphroditus almost died because he overworked himself in the ministry (Philippians 2:25-30). You have to take care of your body. Failure to do so will get you in trouble, and it won't be the devil's fault. As the saying goes, if you don't rest your body, your body will rest you.

You won't have much success if you continue to do the things mentioned above and keep coming for healing. Even though God heals you in His mercy, if you keep making yourself sick, you will keep looping around to the same place. But if you will repent of the things you are doing to yourself, you can stay healed. Just realize that if you continue living wrong on purpose, you invite more trouble. As Jesus told the man at Bethesda, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee" (John 5:14).

Of course, one class of problem doesn't involve sin, such as slamming the car door on your foot by accident. Yes, God will heal you of that; He is the Lord Your Physician, and any physician will treat problems even if you brought them on yourself.

God's willingness to heal problems that are your fault includes the healing of sexually transmitted diseases. There is reason to suspect that David himself has such a disease, repented and got healed, based on some of the verses in Psalms. Consider Psalm 38:5-7: "My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness. I am troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long. For my loins are filled with a loathsome [burning] disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh." Remember that God "forgives all your sins and heals all your diseases" (see Psalm 103:1-5). Whom God forgives, God is willing to heal, and forgiveness for whatever sexual sins you have committed is already yours because of the shed blood of Jesus Christ.

Unless you truly repent, though, you are in no position to receive healing and stay healed. You tempt Christ when you say you want to be healed of AIDS, but you still plan to sleep around or go to gay bars or use illicit intravenous drugs. God does heal things that you bring on yourself, but if you keep bringing them on, you will be a sick person.

I knew a 4-pack-a-day chain smoker who never stopped smoking while believing God for healing from cancer. She died of cancer. She could have been healed, but she kept pumping carcinogens into her body, negating her faith to undo the effects of those carcinogens.

How Can I Get Rid of Unbelief?

The “traditional” answer would be that you need to hear more of the Word to drive out unbelief, but the problem with that is that when you look at how the word unbelief is used in Scripture, it denotes having heard the Word but failing to agree with it and act on it. (See What Is the Difference between Unbelief and Doubt?) You actually don’t qualify for unbelief until you’ve heard the Word; otherwise you don’t have anything to unbelieve. (Not even knowing what the Word says is ignorance, not unbelief, and hearing the Word IS the antidote for ignorance.)

So if you’re already in a position where you unbelieve the Word, hearing more of the Word will just give you more Word to unbelieve. Unbelief is more a matter of the will than of knowledge. Will you take God seriously?

I believe that this is part of why Jesus made this simple statement before He talked about moving mountains:

Mark 11:22:

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.

(I realize that this is taken by some to mean “Have the faith OF God;” see What Mark 11:22 Really Means for an exposition on this matter.)

You won’t get very far if you don’t trust God. Consider that God has never been wrong when He gave people prophecies in the Old Testament. He will never be proven wrong about anything He says. He is the most trustworthy being in the universe. He has exalted His Word above His name (Psalm 138:2). His Word is forever settled in heaven (Psalm 119:89). He hastens His Word to perform it (Jeremiah 1:12). He cannot alter the Word that has gone forth from His lips (Psalm 89:34). You can trust God even more than you can trust yourself, and that’s part of the key right there. Are you going to trust what YOU see and what YOU think when they disagree with what GOD says? The issue comes down to which you decide to trust more – a situation that makes it look like God is wrong, or GOD, who is never wrong.

You Can’t Beat the Unbelief out of Yourself

You will not beat unbelief by beating yourself up, calling yourself Me of Little Faith, and criticizing yourself for your unbelief. All you will do if you harangue yourself for not believing is reinforce the image that you walk in unbelief, which is certainly not an image that you want to have of yourself. You don’t beat any bad habit by condemning yourself for it. Condemning yourself is never appropriate because there is no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus (Romans 8:1).

How Jesus Taught His Disciples to Beat Unbelief

It would make sense to find out whether Jesus ever taught people to beat unbelief. We find out that He did in Matthew 17:14-21. The disciples were in unbelief when they tried to cast out a certain demon. We know that unbelief was the issue because they asked Jesus why they could not cast it out, and Jesus replied clearly, “Because of your unbelief.”

Then He exhorted them that even a minute amount of faith could hurl a tree into the ocean, and He closed with the statement that “this kind” comes out only by prayer and fasting.

One can now debate whether Jesus meant “this kind” of demon or “this kind” of unbelief. (The other options don’t hold water, as shown in Must We Fast and Pray to Make Certain Demons Leave?). Either option is tenable though I prefer the former for reasons stated in the answer to the question in the previous sentence. According to Jesus, some demons ARE more wicked than others (Matthew 12:45 and Luke 11:26). Whichever way you take it, it gets you to the same place that there will be certain situations where you will operate in unbelief if you haven’t fasted and prayed. Thus, fasting and prayer is Jesus’ cure for unbelief.

Why would fasting help get rid of unbelief? (Your flesh hates the fact that I just brought up the subject of fasting!) Fasting helps you keep your flesh under. Your flesh will side against the Word because your flesh isn’t spiritual and the Word is spiritual. Your spirit was born again when you got saved, but your flesh did not change one iota. It is as unspiritual as it ever was. Fasting allows your spirit man to dominate your flesh. It tells your flesh who the real boss is – the real you, who was created after God in righteousness and true holiness (Ephesians 4:24).

If you are in unbelief, you’re choosing to believe something else other than what God said. Your flesh will always look at natural evidence, not at God’s promises. The Israelites’ failure to take the Promised Land did not occur due to lack of knowledge of what God said. They knew full well what He said! But their flesh told them that they couldn’t do it, because that’s what sense knowledge would have told anyone. Their unbelief consisted of taking the flesh’s word for things over God’s word.

Why would prayer help get rid of unbelief? When you talk to God and let Him talk to you, you won’t be treating God like He’s a zillion miles away in heaven somewhere instead of IN you. You’ll be more conscious of His presence. That should give you more confidence that He is right there to make His Word good in your life.

Jesus is the Author and the Finisher of your faith (Hebrews 12:2). What kind of faith do you think He gave you – defective faith that doesn’t work in real life? No, He gave you faith that you could use to move mountains. Your problem is being moved by the flesh to agree with the opposite of what your faith tells you. Thus, the issue is more one of keeping your flesh under than it is of developing huge faith. Your flesh doesn’t want to pray and your flesh doesn’t want to fast, but your spirit man – the real you – does! If you’ll do these things, you won’t be as prone to falling into unbelief.

If God is Really No Respector of Persons, Why Do Only Some Get Healed by the Gifts of the Spirit in Services?

The gifts of the Spirit manifest as the Spirit wills. It is up to Him to heal as He sees fit through these gifts. Healing is available to everyone through faith, but only some will receive miraculous healings through the gifts of the Spirit. The truth is, we will never know this side of heaven why God heals some and not others in this way. However, it is still God's will to heal the ones who are not healed by the gifts of the Spirit in a particular service. Everyone in the service could be healed by faith in God's statements regarding healing. God would not "respect persons" when it comes to that. Healing is universally available because Christ paid for everyone to have it.

This question gets into a whole area that includes dreams, trances, visions of the Lord, angelic visitations, and so on. I have yet to see the Lord but I've seen angels a few times. (In one case, several of us in one of our services saw someone who seemed to be an Orthodox Jew walk toward the back of the room, but we figured out that he was really an angel when he disappeared into thin air, which was highly unorthodox.) How could God give Paul so many special experiences and not give me the same if He is no respecter of persons? I don't know why He does these things for some people and not others. Why did He appear to Paul but not to notorious modern persecutors? I suppose we can ask such questions when we get to heaven.

God is no respecter of persons as far as covenant rights go. Everyone gets the same. Everyone can be healed. Everyone can get provision from heaven to pay bills. Everyone can enjoy peace and joy that the world cannot take away. Everyone can reign in this life through Jesus Christ. Everyone can speak to a mountain or a tree and have it obey. Everyone can believe and receive through prayer. Anything God promised in the New Testament is for all Christians today. God is no respecter of persons in that He will not withhold a blessing that Christ paid for from one and bestow it on another.

The point that people miss is that God has already healed you as far as He is concerned. 1 Peter 2:24 puts healing in the past tense for the Christian. People sometimes mistake God's healing of some in services as proof that it is only His will to heal some. Since you were healed already in God's eyes, it cannot possibly be His will for you to stay sick.

If everyone could always get healed through manifestations of the Spirit, there would be no reason to teach faith! Jesus taught faith. It is essential to teach personal faith to be healed so that the people who are not healed through the gifts of the Spirit can still get healed.

Here is a practical hint for you. Your faith can "pull" the anointing out of a healing evangelist (if that evangelist is flowing in the anointing), even if the gifts of the Spirit are not operating at the moment. The woman with the issue of blood made a demand on the anointing that she knew was on Jesus, even though Jesus was not ministering healing to anyone at the time. If you will make a demand on the anointing at services where healing is going on, you can take advantage of the anointing in that service and pull it into your own body, just as the woman with the issue of blood did.

Can I “Turn On” Gifts of the Spirit at Will?

No.

Attempting to do so is dangerous and can even lead to you ministering by familiar spirits because you’re trolling around in the spirit realm looking for some word to give out when God isn’t giving you anything.

Men of old prophesied when they were moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Peter 1:21), and you would be wise to make sure that the Holy Spirit is moving you to prophesy before you just start trying to do it “by faith.” I’ve heard the argument that if you open your mouth, God will fill it, but I’ve seen firsthand too many cases of people who were better at opening their mouths than having God fill their mouths.

I once had a guest speaker in who was prodigiously “reading people’s mail” in a sometimes jaw-dropping way. The way he flowed in that was amazing and it was definitely the Holy Spirit’s doing. But this speaker had a problem. When the Holy Spirit wasn’t moving in prophecy, I guess he figured that he could move the Spirit instead of waiting for the Spirit to move him (2 Peter 1:21). I think he sensed the public pressure to perform prophetically because of the previous nights’ successes and the fact that people were saying that if you want your mail read, go to his services. But when the Spirit wasn’t moving him, I could definitely tell. His words were inaccurate and confusing, and this left the more discerning people wondering how he could be so “on” one night and so “off” another night. I tried to exhort him about this to no avail. (I never invited him back, even though we had a LOT of real miracles in his services.) Rather than just being a blessing, he left people puzzled when he gave out gobbledygook to them. I got to clean up the mess as the pastor. That was fair, because I’m the one who invited him in based on someone else’s recommendation. I learned a lesson about having someone in mainly because someone else recommended him. After that I always sought God’s mind on it for myself, which was a valuable lesson.

There has been much teaching in recent times that because we have the anointing (which we DO), we can “activate” it to flow in any gift of the Spirit at will. Do I ever wish that were true! I would activate the “power” gifts in every service if I could really do that. Then we wouldn’t have to be old-fashioned like Jesus and have people usually get healed by their own faith. If I could activate these gifts at will, no one would EVER have to be healed by his own faith in our meetings – their unbelief wouldn’t be a problem. If Jesus had followed this modern teaching, He could have gotten all the people at Nazareth healed in spite of their unbelief by just choosing to “activate” the power gifts and bypass their unbelief. No, wait, do you really think Jesus COULD NOT do mighty works at Nazareth just because He didn’t have a modern book or CD series that told Him that He could activate the gifts of the Spirit at will? Something is fishy here.

What Does Scripture Say?

The Bible is so clear on this matter that I wonder how anyone can miss it.

Let's look at 1 Corinthians 12:8-11: "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

God says that these manifestations are distributed as HE wills, not as WE will.

Also notice Paul's repeated use of the words "to another" above. In other words, the people being used are NOT all the same person! If we could activate gifts at will, Paul would have had to revise this passage to say, "For to ALL is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom, to ALL the word of knowledge by the same spirit; to ALL faith by the same Spirit; to ALL the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to ALL the working of miracles; to ALL prophecy; to ALL discerning of spirits; to ALL divers kinds of tongues, to ALL the interpretation of tongues: But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, giving everyone all these gifts that we can all flow in as WE will." Rather than saying to one who wants to give a message in tongues, "But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God" (1 Corinthians 14:28), Paul would have had to say, "If no one else interprets your message in tongues, do it yourself for crying out loud because we know that YOU can activate the gift of interpretation as YOU will. So just do it!" I can't agree with such a departure from actual Scripture.

Hebrews 2:4 would not fit the modern mold either: "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" The last phrase would have to be replaced with "according to the will of the ones doing the preaching." The modern teachers would probably counter that having everyone able to flow in these things was according to his own will, but I don't think an unbiased reader could interpret Hebrews 2:4 that way.

It would have been nice if the disciples could have just turned on the gift of faith to cast the demon out in Matthew 17:14-21, but they were limited by their unbelief.

You are commanded to "covet" (earnestly desire) gifts of the Spirit, especially prophecy (1 Corinthians 12:31, 1 Corinthians 14:1, 1 Corinthians 14:39). Paul did not say, "Start operating in all these gifts now, because you already 'have' all the gifts because you have the anointing." God would not command you to desire something that He already gave you! Instead, He'd just point out to you what you already have. So it is clear that neither you nor anyone else "has" all the gifts of the Spirit to use at will.

Even more explicit is 1 Corinthians 12:29-30: "Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?" If you can activate gifts of the Spirit on demand, Paul would have continued, "Yes, ALL can work miracles, ALL can flow in gifts of healings, ALL can give public utterances in tongues and ALL can interpret tongues – all of this at will!" But Paul's questions are clearly rhetorical. NOT everyone can flow in these different gifts, much less just decide to do it as an act of their own wills.

A Challenge

If you are REALLY convinced that you can turn on the gifts of the Spirit at YOUR will, just go to the local hospital, activate the power gifts at YOUR will and empty out the place. Faith will not be needed when the gifts are operating like that, so you can just get them ALL healed through the gifts that YOU activate.

Then go empty the local morgue. You see, raising the dead has to be done by special manifestations of the Spirit because there is no blanket promise that we can always raise the dead. But if you have the ability to turn on these manifestations at will, you can turn on “the gift of faith” at will and whatever “gifts of healings” are also needed to prevent the people who undie from re-dying immediately. So let’s see you do it. And if you can’t, I will have to conclude that you are not really the one in control of the type and timing of the gifts of the Spirit after all.

Should I Believe that I Receive Healing or Command Sickness to Leave?

Either method works. The first is based on Mark 11:24 and the second is based on Mark 11:23. In fact, there are many other ways to get healed, too! Take your pick!

If you are ministering to someone ELSE, you would command sickness to leave, because you can't do someone else's "believing he receives when he prays" for him. However, you can encourage the other person to believe that he receives when you lay hands on him. Technically, you could just lay hands on the person in obedience to Mark 16:18 without speaking to the sickness, as laying hands in faith is all that is required to fulfill your end of the bargain in that verse. However, you would want that person to give you permission to do that and to have some understanding of what you are doing.

Can I Command a Sickness to Leave over the Telephone?

Yes.

Jesus spoke WORDS and a demon left the Syrophenician woman's daughter who was not with Jesus at the time (Mark 7:25-30). He spoke WORDS and a nobleman's son, who was some distance away, recovered (John 4:46-53). So there is no reason to think that we cannot speak WORDS and command miracles to happen somewhere else today!

A friend, my wife and I COMMANDED stage 4 cancer to leave a man in another country over the telephone using only faith-filled WORDS backed by our authority in Christ. Within days he returned to the doctor and the doctor could not find a trace of cancer, while a previous X-ray showed that his whole head was full of cancer and the doctor had given up hope for him.

More recently, I commanded a dog to be healed that had swallowed human medicine and was close to death. I did this over the telephone. The dog recovered; the person even sent a picture of the dog afterward.

Just to expand your thinking a little, consider this event involving a man who preached some special services at the church we pastored. He had been asked to pray for someone who was dying in the hospital. He felt led to send a text message that said, "GET UP!" So he did. He didn't call the person or visit him in person. However, it turned out that the man died roughly an hour before the text message was sent. However, when the text message "GET UP!" came through, the man snapped back to life! (At this writing that is the only account I know of someone being TEXTED back to life.) We do not have the generic authority to raise the dead that we have to heal the sick, but this at least illustrates the power of words that have the Holy Spirit's backing.

Having said all this, let me give you some practical advice. You want to make sure that the person on the other end is in agreement (or is the parent of a sick child where the parent is the one in agreement). If you just randomly command people to be healed and the people have no idea what you're doing, they could be in the same position as the legalists in Luke 5:17-26 where the power of the Lord was present to heal them, yet they did not receive anything. We can make the power available, but if the person on the other end has no idea that he should be receiving healing while we speak, or has no idea what is going on, that power could just bounce off the person so to speak without any result. The passage just cited proves that the power can be present to heal without the people being healed.

This is not an issue with animals, who are not expected to exercise faith – the owner needs to do that on the animal's behalf. I've seen animals healed in the name of Jesus and frankly, it can be easier to get animals healed because I've yet to hear of one protesting that healing and miracles passed away, or that maybe they needed to have a thorn in the flesh or get sick so that the Lord could call them home or teach them patience or work some other good in them, etc., etc., ad nauseam.

I Believe that I Have Received My Healing But I Do Not Feel Any Better. Should I Go Do Some Strenuous Activity that I Had Planned?

That's between you and God. There are certainly cases where people have believed that they were healed and not felt any better, but went ahead and climbed a mountain or worked a very physical job, and the healing manifested as they did so. On the other hand, I would not advise this as a general practice because there are too many people who say they believe that they have received but are not really in faith. It could be dangerous for them to push themselves hard when their bodies are weak. It is not unbelief to go easy on yourself until the symptoms leave.

Please remember that engaging in the activity itself does not obligate God to heal you. This is similar to the question about throwing away your medicine. You receive healing by believing God. Whether or not the healing occurs in your body will be based solely on whether or not you're believing God, not based on what activities you force yourself to do.

I'm Aching All Over because I Overexerted Myself While out of Shape. Can I Claim Healing?

You are not sick. You're sore because you violated natural laws by pushing your body too far. Jesus did not bear your overexertion for you. God gave you a mortal body and you are expected to use wisdom in how you take care of it. If you sit on your couch all day and then suddenly decide to enter a marathon for the fun of it, you will hurt big time when you get done (if you even finish). The devil did not put these hurts on you, nor did you get them through the "curse of the Law."

I don't want to minimize God's mercy; you can still ask God for mercy in such a situation. However, that is what it is – mercy! Thank God, His mercies are new every morning, mercy follows you all the days of your life, and God crowns you with tender mercies. His mercy endures forever.

However, you should realize that there is no Biblical case of someone overexerting himself and receiving an instant healing that made everything okay all of a sudden. There IS a Biblical case of someone who overexerted himself and stayed sick for a while – Epaphroditus! See Philippians 2:25-30. Fortunately, God in His mercy did heal Epaphroditus, and Paul called it mercy. However, the just should live by faith, not by mercy.

Don't overwork yourself and claim healing scriptures while so doing, thinking that it will spare you any physical trouble. It won't. If you get three hours of sleep a night for a week, you will pay for it physically, healing scriptures or no healing scriptures. It is no different from deliberately jumping off your roof, quoting healing scriptures all the way down. Thank God, Jesus did not jump off the temple when the devil tempted Him to "believe" Psalm 91 and do so. Remember Jesus' answer – you shall not tempt the Lord your God (by putting Him to a foolish test).

I've observed that Christians who are actively seeking God's kingdom seem to fare much better than they "should" sometimes given their care (or neglect) of their bodies. Epaphroditus was an example. However, that doesn't mean we should keep presuming on God's grace if we're doing things we know better than to do.

Over the long term, all other things being equal, fat people TEND to have a lot more heart attacks, clogged arteries, bypass surgery, and so on. Smokers tend to get more cancer. Heavy drinkers have more liver trouble. That's just how physical laws operate. You cannot pig out for years and then claim healing from every problem (shortness of breath, lethargy, or whatever) that is a direct result of overeating. God will still heal you even if you "did it to yourself," but if you want to stop needing healing, consider losing weight! It is amazing that people literally kill themselves in various ways, even while quoting healing scriptures! That is like asking God to bail out your boat while you are busy drilling new holes in the bottom of it.

We can't get legalistic and state what Body Mass Index a Christian should have; after all, Jesus never corrected anyone's diet. I'm just saying that our choices can result in more or fewer needs for healing.

As I say, I am for and not against doctors. Your doctor may be able to give you valuable advice on how you can lengthen your life through natural means. God will preserve your life from things you can't control, which would include a large number of diseases, as you trust Him to honor His Word. However, it is presumption to continue to knowingly make unwise choices and keep coming for healing. If you have been unwise, repent of what you're doing to yourself and trust God for the strength to make wiser choices.

This would be a good time to read the related topic below.

I'm Sick Because I'm Fat! Can I Claim Healing?

God is merciful. I'm quite sure that there were some people in the crowds who were sick because they were overweight, yet Jesus healed them all. He healed every manner of sickness, which would include any sicknesses caused by being overweight. There is no question that healing belongs to everyone, including overweight people, because Jesus paid for it. The issue is to not keep making yourself sick by overeating! But don't fall into the trap of thinking, "I did this to myself, so God is not willing to cure this physical problem I now have. It's just what I deserve." Jesus and His merciful compassion are not interested in seeing you get what you deserve. He gives us better than we deserve, thank God.

Actually, if you admit that you're sick because you're fat, you're halfway to solving the problem because you've identified it. If you are willing to repent of overeating (gluttony), you open the door for physical healing. If you are going to pig out anyway, you're just asking for more problems from which you'll need to be healed. The same holds true for other sins such as drunkenness and fornication, which can also lead to disease. The Bible plan is to repent and then "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee" (John 5:14).

If you're fat, you may need to ask yourself why you overeat, as many people overeat to compensate for emotional needs or even spiritual hunger. Spend more time communing with God and reading His Word and see if you don't start getting more control over your appetite. When you're satisfied on the inside, you won't be looking to your refrigerator to experience satisfaction.

Fasting would be a good idea too; it is Biblical and it will help you keep your flesh under. I was returning from a round of golf one day and for some reason my body kept screaming, "I want a Big Mac and I want it NOW!" I realized that my flesh was getting out of control, and I told my body, "You're not getting a Big Mac – we're fasting for the next day! And if you scream for a Big Mac at this time tomorrow, we'll fast another day!" Those Big Mac cravings went away after less than a day of fasting.

If you are fat because of a chemical problem in your body, you can believe for healing from that. A woman who had a thyroid condition visited the church we pastored. Nothing her doctor tried seemed to help her lose weight. She was prayed over and lost 6 pounds that week. The doctor asked her what she did, and she replied, "I went to church!" The doctor actually told her, "Well, if I were you, I'd go back to that church!" On the other hand, if it's not a chemical issue, you'll just have to eat less and/or exercise more and put your flesh under like the rest of us.

I've dealt with weight issues and I don't know of any "fad diet" (or even "Christian fad diet") that has the answer. Avoiding weight gain while traveling and eating out is a particular challenge. The only thing that works for me is to eat less and/or eat lower-calorie meals and exercise more. Drinking water instead of other beverages has helped me save a lot of calories. I don't know what will work for you, and I'm not here to give you medical advice. Everyone is different; you have to go with what works for you. I personally won't do diet pills or other "weight-loss aids;" even 100% natural ones. Just because something is 100% natural doesn't mean it's good for you. Poison ivy and arsenic are 100% natural, after all. I don't believe that we have to go on an Old Testament diet, either, despite the regular appearance of new "Christian" (Jewish might be a better description) back-to-the-Law diet books.

To keep making yourself fat and keep claiming healing for weight-related problems is no different from smoking four packs a day while believing for healing from lung cancer or drinking a six-pack every other night while believing that God will heal your liver. It just doesn't make sense. God is merciful, but He didn't redeem you from natural laws. You may "get away with" more as a Christian, but our goal should not be to see how much we can get away with before we suffer ill effects. Through the Spirit we can put to death the deeds of the flesh (Galatians 5:16).

Ultimately, everyone has to make his own choice about healthy lifestyles. Is it worth spending 3 years' worth of your waking hours in a gym if doing so will lengthen your life by an average of 6 months? If you knew that you could add 5 years to your life if you determined that you would never again eat chocolate or ice cream, and that instead you would unwaveringly follow some new life-lengthening Unflavored Gelatin Diet, would you choose the 5 years or the chocolate and ice cream? Different people will make different decisions, and Scripture doesn't draw a firm line on how much of certain foods is too much. (I suppose that if you're gaining weight, whatever you're eating is "too much.")

I'm not saying that you need to spend all your time on the latest fitness device between meals of tofu and kale over brown rice. I've met Christians who are more eager to "evangelize" people to the health food message than they are to win people to Christ, and that is a wrong priority. It can also be quite annoying.

If you make a reasonable effort to take care of yourself, the Word will cover anything that comes up. If you're letting your flesh run away, put its deeds to death by the Spirit and make a reasonable effort to take care of yourself, which will put you in the first case.

Some time ago some silly people promoted "casting out calories" from their food. I hope that people have gotten some more common sense since then, because the practice never worked and never will work.

Finally, keep the whole weight issue in perspective. Paul told Timothy that bodily exercise profits a little, but godliness is far more profitable (1 Timothy 4:7-8). I would have to conclude from that verse that keeping yourself full of the Word and fellowshiping with God is far more important than diet as far as your health goes.

Can I Believe for “Supernatural Weight Loss?”

The answer to this question depends on what you have in mind.

If you want to live on pizza and French fries with the idea of at some point claiming “supernatural weight loss,” you are in the same presumptuous category as the people decades ago who actually believed they could “cast out calories” before they ate. (True events are sometimes more bizarre than anything you would think up yourself!) Of course, their calorie-casting didn’t work and it probably didn’t take too long to figure that out.

If you are overweight because you have a large, heavy tumor, you have every right to believe for supernatural weight loss caused by that tumor’s disappearance. I know someone who ministered to a woman who had a tumor the size of a basketball. The tumor instantly disappeared, and the woman lost 100 pounds in the blink of an eye. That was certainly supernatural weight loss, especially because the tumor didn’t ooze out of her body onto the floor; it just vanished without a trace. I wasn’t in that service, but I believe the account because I’ve been in some of his services on the platform and seen legs grow out and other rather jarring demonstrations of the Spirit right in front of my eyes. Regardless of whether your results are instant, you have every right to curse a tumor and command it to leave in the name of Jesus. (I guess I should explain that cursing the cancer means pronouncing death over it, as I’ve been warned by the story about the preacher who told a man to curse his cancer, and the man started exclaiming, “You @&#%,#@!$ cancer!...”) Then, with that cancer gone, you will weigh less, and that will be supernatural.

If you’re overweight just because you eat too much, you can apply Galatians 5:16 and believe that you are not a debtor to the flesh to live after the flesh (Romans 8:12). This IS supernatural weight loss, but it isn’t spectacular weight loss. Not everyone will receive a spectacular manifestation of the Holy Spirit, but anyone can believe the Bible and control his flesh. I’ve heard other stories of other people who had instant significant weight loss in Christian services, though I don’t know any of the people involved. However, I believe that such things would fall under the category of manifestations of the Spirit, not something that everyone can believe for instantly. Even Paul had to discipline his flesh to keep it under (1 Corinthians 9:27). If even he had to do it, so do you. It isn’t always fun, but it’s necessary. Otherwise, if you did experience a special manifestation of supernatural weight loss, you would still gain all that weight back if you didn’t change your habits!

I’ve heard Leviticus 9:24 cited as proof (and it is) that God can supernaturally burn fat: “And there came a fire out from before the LORD, and consumed the altar the burnt offering and the fat: which when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces.” However, there are NO cases recorded in either Testament of God’s fire burning fat that was in a person’s body at the time! So with God all things are possible, but I can’t give you a Scripture to stand on for supernatural weight loss if it’s only a matter of excess fat that you want God to burn up instantly. I’m not saying it couldn’t happen. Signs and wonders are great to hear about, but you can’t just believe for them in all situations. I always want to steer you to the Word, and thus to what could work for anyone, anytime, anywhere.

As I've said elsewhere, I've found that eating fewer calories and expending more calories has been the only thing that's worked consistently for me. An occasional fast helps, too; it's amazing how well that works when you sense a strong need to mortify your flesh. Still, we have every right to ask God to help us lose weight with the expectation that He will! I can't see that God would want you to be in an unhealthy condition because His explicit will is for you to be in health. He will need your cooperation, so be open to whatever He tells you. It's possible that you could pray for His help in losing weight, and He'd tell you, "You need to stop your nightly habit of having a hot fudge sundae with four large scoops of peanut butter ice cream topped with whipped cream, nuts and candy pieces after your triple cheeseburger platter. And get off the couch and do something more active than playing video games or swapping text messages all day." If you hear and heed His advice, that is still supernatural weight loss.

Does Isaiah 58 Prove that if I Fast, My Health Will Spring Forth Speedily?

It appears to at first glance, but it actually doesn't. Read Isaiah 58:6-11 and see what it's really saying.

A sloppy reading of this passage has led generations of Christians to teach erroneously that fasting looses bands of wickedness, undoes heavy burdens and lets the oppressed go free. I fasted two days the week I wrote this, but no bands of wickedness were undone, no heavy burdens were removed and no oppressed people went free because I fasted. Fasting IS a New Testament practice, the main idea of which is to keep your flesh under, which is why I did it.

Isaiah did not say that fasting undid bondage and oppression. His point was that the Israelites were attempting to prove their piety by fasting, yet they were oppressing people and putting heavy burdens on them. The idea was that God would rather that their "fast" be ceasing to oppress people rather than just abstaining from food. That would be more valuable.

This is more obvious when you read the 3 verses prior to the passage cited above:

Isaiah 58:3-5:

Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labours.

Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high.

Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the LORD?

Isaiah was lamenting what the Israelites did while fasting. He made it clear that God had no pleasure in their fasting while they still acted mean.

"Health speeding forth speedily" was a promise, but the stated conditions were not going on a fast. Instead the conditions were dealing their bread to the hungry, bringing the poor to their houses, covering the naked and not hiding themselves from people in need. In other words, it was walking in love instead of callousness toward others that would produce health springing forth speedily.

So we should expect today that being good to others will be good for our health.

Some people cite health benefits from fasting; I've found that fasting helps take off extra weight, so I've lost weight and felt better after fasting. However, that has nothing to do with what Isaiah was talking about, and there is actually nothing in the Bible that says "Fast and get healthier" even if that might work for you. There is no shortage of books claiming that an Old Testament diet will make you healthier, too, but nothing in the New Testament supports that claim. No Christian was ever told, "Keep the Law when it comes to food and you'll feel better and be healthier."

How Long Does It Take to Build Faith for Healing that Works?

If you're even asking this question, it's possible that you have the wrong focus and need to read Faith in Your Faith vs. Faith in God. Don't see life as a quest to build gigantic faith. Instead, make it your quest to find out what God says and then act like it's so. That makes sense because it IS so!

Different people take different amounts of time to "get it" when it comes to healing, just as different people take different amounts of time to "get it" when it comes to the new birth. The important things are: (1) Keep building your faith by meditating on what the Scriptures say about healing until you are able to reach out and receive your healing from God, no matter how long it takes you, and (2) You can do it, just as many others have done! Don't give up because you aren't a faith giant by the day after tomorrow!

How long it takes obviously has something to do with how diligently you work at getting the Scriptures about healing inside you. It must get to the point where they become part of you and become real to you. If you read a healing verse once every other week, you'll probably never walk in effective faith. You HAVE faith (everyone does) but You will probably have to study and work at it until you are ready to ACT on the Word concerning healing. If you are not willing to invest a considerable amount of time doing this, you may end up just staying sick. If you are unwilling to hear the Word of God on a continual basis, you will not develop your faith and you won't be able to receive healing from God. It isn't just going to happen overnight. There is no quick formula or shortcut for it. If you aren't willing to pay the price, just accept your sickness and live with it. That's not God's best for you, but it's the best you'll get without effort on your part. Too many Christians have the idea, "I'll try this faith stuff but if I don't get results by next Tuesday, forget the whole thing." It's like the person who told me, "I tried tithing for three weeks and it didn't work!" Walking in the light of Scripture is something you keep doing for your entire life, not something you "try" for a short while to see if it works or not.

Some people were blessed to be born into families that already believe and act on the Word. It is easier for such people to walk in faith because it's what they're used to doing. If you're from a family of drunks who only use Jesus' name as a curse, it will be harder for you. I was not raised in a faith-filled Christian home, but I managed to build my faith in healing, and so can you even if you weren't raised in a faith-filled Christian home either.

Think of the amount of effort you might spend going to specialists, getting tests, and so on. Isn't it worth some of your time to take God's medicine? I knew a man (now deceased at an untimely age) who would not bother coming to many healing services we did when he literally lived a block away and could have walked to them. Yet he was willing to be out of commission for weeks having surgery after surgery even though he mentally assented that divine healing is for all. It is amazing what people think they have time for and what they don't make time for. What if all that time had been spent building his faith instead so that he could have been ready to receive his healing that Jesus paid for?

To the readers who think this sounds like a works gospel – it isn't. Jesus did the works. Through Him, you already have all things pertaining to life and godliness (2 Peter 1:3-4). Your work is to believe the gospel, and that can take work! This apparent paradox is stated in Hebrews, where we are exhorted to "labor to enter into God's rest" (Hebrews 4:11). God's rest is free and does not depend on your works. Your labor is to believe so that you can tap into it. "For we which do believe have entered into rest" (Hebrews 4:3). God gave the land of Canaan, which is symbolic of our blessings, to Israel freely. However, those who did not believe could not enter it, while those who did believe were able to enjoy it. God made the provision, but faith was required to enjoy that provision.

Will you invest more effort in getting help from man than in getting help from God? Doctors are fine, but you need to make study of the Word on healing a high priority while you're getting natural medical care, or the natural care will be the only thing that helps you. Then you're limited to what man can do for you, whereas with God all things are possible (Matthew 19:26).

Why Do People Fall Over in Healing Lines?

A person can fall over in a healing line for many reasons, not all of them spiritual:

1. The person just expected to fall over anyway. (This is common, whether we want to admit it or not. In some circles, we've made it a tradition that you're supposed to fall over, though the Bible never says that you need to fall over to be healed.)
2. The minister shoved the person over. (This is also more common than we'd like to admit, though in decades of ministry so far, I have never pushed anyone over. I've been accused of doing it when the power of God hit someone, but the people standing by could see that I never even touched the person. However, some preachers are chronic shovers, some more subtle than others.)
3. The person wanted the cute usher behind her to catch her.
4. The person was tired and wanted to take a little nap on the floor.
5. The person stood there with his eyes shut and hands up for 5 minutes and got dizzy.
6. The person got himself emotionally worked up and fell for that reason. (I've had people do this in my healing lines, and I really wish they'd stay upright when it's not God causing them to fall.)
7. The person wanted to fall and get hurt so that he could sue the preacher. (Yes, this has happened in a couple notorious cases!)
8. The person really, really wanted to have "an experience" and worked himself up into having one.
9. The anointing was so strong that the person could not stand up.
10. The anointing made the person shaky, and while the person could have prevented falling, he felt that it would be easier to receive from God on the floor.

Of course, we will spend most of our time discussing the legitimate reasons for falling. In case you didn't figure this out, these are (9) and (10) above.

It has become somewhat of a cultural thing at healing services that people are just expected to fall over. I have observed with some (but not excessive) amusement that some people turn around to see if an usher is there before they "collapse under the power." That is generally a sign that it is not the anointing making them fall.

Actually, the ushers are there primarily for the people who fall in the flesh (see reasons 1-8). I fell backward onto a concrete floor once with no ill effects and no "catcher" when it really was the anointing. But if it isn't the anointing, you'd better have some ushers handy, because some people will fall anyway! Unfortunately, people can and do get hurt in healing lines! It is my personal conviction (which I admit that I cannot prove from a specific Scripture) that when the Holy Spirit knocks people down, no one gets hurt. The problem is that even if the Holy Spirit knocked you over, that 250-pound guy next to you might decide to keel over in the flesh at an inopportune moment. I know someone whose arm was broken on the floor in a situation like that. Hence the need for sharp, alert ushers during prayer lines! We're not trying to create new healing needs in the people.

Aside from theatrics on the part of the preacher or the people in the line, there is plenty of Scripture to support the idea of people falling when the power of God comes on them. In some cases, it is simply being “blown over” by the power of God, in others, men were moved with a strong reverential fear of God.

“Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye? They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them. As soon then as he said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.” – John 18:4-6.

“And behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.” – Matthew 28:2-4.

“And as he [Saul, who became Paul] journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him unto Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.” – Acts 9:3-9.

We know that Paul as well as those who traveled with him fell over when Jesus appeared to him: “And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.” – Acts 26:14

“While he [Peter] yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, be not afraid.” – Matthew 17:5-7.

“And when I saw him [Jesus], I fell at his feet as dead.” – Revelation 1:17

“And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him. And he [God] said to Abram, Know of a surety...” – Genesis 15:12-13. This could not speak of a regular sleep, because God spoke to Abram while he was in his “deep sleep,” which was evidently some kind of supernatural trance.

“And I fell down before the LORD, as at the first, forty days and forty nights: I did neither eat bread, nor drink water...” – Deuteronomy 9:18. “Thus I fell down before the Lord forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first...” – Deuteronomy 9:25. This is one of the most amazing cases of the power of God moving on someone. Moses did not eat or drink for forty days while under the power of God. That was obviously supernatural!

“This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I fell on my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake. And he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee. And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet...” – Ezekiel 1:28-2:2. Here we have a case of God picking someone up after he fell down! That would be interesting to see, wouldn't it?

“Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face. Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet...” – Ezekiel 3:23-24. Here's another case of someone falling before the glory of God and having God stand him up again!

“And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face.” – Ezekiel 43:3.

“And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision. So he came near where I stood: and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face: but he said unto me, Understand, O son of man: for at the time of the end shall be the vision. Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground: but he touched me, and set me upright.” – Daniel 8:16-18.

“And I Daniel alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves. Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength. Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground. And, behold, an hand touched me, which set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands. And he said unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and stand upright: for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling.” – Daniel 10:7-11

“And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb. And, behold, one like the similitude of the sons of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength. For how can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord? for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.” – Daniel 10:15-17

Peter “fell into a trance” in Acts 10:10. The Greek word for fell there denotes the trance coming on him, and does not mean that he literally fell down. However, the voice said “Arise” three times during the vision, and the Holy Spirit told him to “arise” after it was over (Acts 10:20). This would seem to indicate that Peter was not upright at the time. It is possible that he would have been prostrate, although he could have been sitting also. We know for sure only that he was praying (Acts 11:5).

Saul may not have been immediately knocked over by the power of God, but he was certainly affected by it in 1 Samuel 23:24: “And he [Saul] went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on, and he prophesied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah. And he stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day and all that night.”

Note that shaking under the power is recorded in many of these instances as well as falling. Thus, it is normal for people to shake, even if they do not fall, when they encounter the power of God.

If you find yourself shaking, it is not wrong to go down on the floor voluntarily, even if you could stay up if you wanted to. If the anointing is heavy on you, you may find it easier to receive from God on the floor. Then at least you don’t have to be concerned with trying to stay on your feet. However, I would advise against just going down on the floor because you think it’s the thing to do when you haven’t felt any tangible anointing on you. Falling won’t help you receive anything – you’re either in faith or you’re not at that point. Falling over may just make it harder for the ushers and others involved with the service. Also, falling in the flesh will break contact between you and the minister out of whom the anointing is being transmitted into you, and it can short-circuit what God wanted to do through the anointing.

I am by no means saying that most of the people who fall over these days do so because the power of God overwhelms them. I am simply saying that it is Scriptural for this to happen at times. However, please notice that in none of the cases listed in Scripture was the person expecting to fall over. In general, people make much too big a deal over falling over or not falling over. It is really not important. The idea is to get healed. Jesus promised that the sick would recover when hands were laid on them. He never said they would fall over or that they would be shoved over like bowling pins, and it doesn’t matter. It is their recovery that is promised, so it is their recovery that matters.

Should I Expect to Fall Over or Resist Falling Over when I Am Prayed over?

Neither!

The idea is that someone will lay hands on you (the sick) so that you will recover (Mark 16:18). Falling over has nothing to do with it. I would prefer that you stay on your feet and recover after hands are laid on you rather than having you fall over and stay sick. Both are quite possible and happen all the time.

Some people just expect to fall over, and down they go whether it's the anointing or not. (Thank God for ushers.) You should NOT go up expecting to go down, even if a lot of people are falling over. You should expect that you will recover because hands are being laid on you in obedience to Jesus' instructions. You should focus on receiving healing. Whether or not you fall is irrelevant.

Because your focus is on receiving healing from God, you should not be trying NOT to fall over, either. Some people brace themselves as if they are just daring God or the preacher to knock them down. That is the wrong focus and it will hinder you from receiving your healing.

I share a story elsewhere in this book about the time I resisted an evangelist who kept trying to push me down, and how I did not fall but did not get my healing either. (Another time I let that same evangelist push me down – it wasn't the anointing that knocked me over, but the real anointing of God did heal me!)

I believe that another principle applies here. "Touch not God's anointed, and do His prophets no harm" (1 Chronicles 16:22 and Psalm 105:15). You will not secure any kind of blessing for yourself by making a scene over the fact that he is pushing you. As annoyed as you may be, shouting, "Don't shove me, Bro!" is not something I'd recommend. The fact is that many anointed ministers do this, and if you want to receive from their anointing, you will have to cooperate with them. Locking your legs and being defiant will not help you in the long run. Remember that you are receiving from GOD and the man is only a messenger of the anointing. Keep your eyes on your Healer.

Please note that I am in no way defending the practice of shoving the sick over. Jesus said that you would lay hands on them, and I do not believe He meant that there should be 100 pounds of pressure behind your hands when you do so. However, ministers are people too and they are growing just as you are. If you will cooperate with the minister, you will not only have a better chance of getting healed, but also you won't look foolish when you protest being shoved over and the man who just prayed over you never touched you. (This happens too!)

I have said for years that we could have two lines at the end of a service. The first line would be a healing line for people who want to get healed. The second line would be a feeling line for people who want to fall over. I could lay hands on everyone in the first line and say, “Be healed in the name of Jesus!” Then I could shove everyone in the second line as hard as I can and say, “Fall over in the name of ME!” (I could not do this in Jesus’ name because He never pushed anyone down.) No one’s ever taken me up on it. (One pastor got angry because he thought I was serious about doing it! I had to explain that my offer was tongue-in-cheek.)

Go up expecting to receive your healing, and get it. Don’t let your mind get distracted by thoughts of whether you will or will not fall over. Falling or not falling does not matter – receiving your healing does. Focus on receiving your healing.

If I Fall Over, Should I Try to Get up as Soon as Possible?

No.

If the power of God knocked you on the floor, it stands to reason that God wants you on the floor! Preoccupation with getting up will interfere with your ability to receive from the anointing.

There is no need to try to be “macho” and prove that you can get up as soon as possible. In almost every case, you can get up if you really want to. In some instances, you can be pasted to the floor by the power of God and unable to move, much less get up. (This has only happened to me once.) Or you may find yourself falling over again if you try to get up and walk back to your seat. (I’ve had that happen too.)

Unless you’re asked to get up, it is a good idea to soak in the anointing on the floor. If an usher or another person in authority tells you to get up, you are obligated to get up if you can. In places where there is limited space, ushers are sometimes told to clear the floor to make room for more people. If the line will just be continued out in the hallway or somewhere else, this is unnecessary. If the front of the room is filling up with bodies, it can be a good idea to have prayer lines in the hall, on the platform, or in the room after you move some chairs around quickly. People won’t feel rushed, and the line won’t get bottlenecked when there is no more carpet real estate for people to occupy down front.

The best time to get up is when you sense the anointing subside or lift off you. There is usually a definite time when you sense this. You can attempt to get up before then because you assume that you are helping the ushers by clearing more space, but this will do more harm than good if you are still wobbly and an usher has to be diverted to follow you back to your seat. Once the anointing has lifted, there is no reason to continue to consume floor space that might be needed by someone else.

Of course, I am assuming in this answer that you were truly toppled by the anointing, and that you did not just fall because it is the cultural thing to do these days. In that case, you might as well get right up, since it wasn’t God’s idea for you to be down in the first place. The same applies if (God forbid) there isn’t any tangible anointing present and the preacher just pushed you over.

Is It Right to Get into a Second Healing Line for the Same Condition?

Yes.

Mark 8:22-25

We have the above example in Scripture of a man who was ministered to twice by Jesus Himself. Although this was apparently all at one time, Jesus laid hands on him twice for the same condition, and this was not a sin. The man was partially healed the first time and completely healed the second time. Jesus did not refuse to pray for him again, so we should not refuse to pray for people again, either.

It doesn't hurt to get another "dose" of the healing anointing!

It has been suggested that getting in a second healing line for the same condition only proves that you were not in faith the first time. Well, if you weren't in faith the first time, you'd better get in line again! However, you can get in line again even if you are standing in faith, having believed that you received when hands were laid on you the first time. The idea here is not to "believe you receive" a second time, which is unnecessary, but simply to let more of the anointing flow into your body.

There can be some time between the point when you "believe you receive" and the time that your healing completely manifests in your body. During this time, if there is an altar call for the sick, you qualify to get in it, even though you are standing in faith. Although it is your confession that you are "healed by the stripes of Jesus," you can get in line if your body is still sick. (You don't have to get in line; it's up to you.) As long as you understand why you are up there, you are not "negating your first prayer" by going up again, nor are you "confessing" that you are not healed by going up. Altar calls for healing are for anyone with bodily sickness at the time. If we got really technical about it, we could say that everyone's healing was already provided by the stripes of Jesus, so nobody should get in line! Everyone could receive without a healing line. But not everyone does.

There is a problem if you are getting in your seventy-fifth prayer line for the same thing. If you find yourself getting in healing lines all the time and never receiving, the best thing you can do is stop getting into those lines and build your faith by studying the Scriptures about healing. If you continue to build your faith, you will get to the point where you will be ready to receive your healing. Sometimes it is better to sit out a while and build your faith. Otherwise, you can get used to going up and not receiving anything, which makes it harder next time.

If you do any amount of healing ministry, you will come across spiritually lazy people who get in line every time but don't want to put forth any effort themselves. These people want you to wave your magic wand and make their horrible condition go away, and if nothing happens, they'll blame you for being unanointed. You cringe on the inside when you see them coming up yet again! I am not advocating getting in additional healing lines so that you can make the minister "do his thing" while you do nothing to build your faith. (Some people show up late and then tune you out while you're preaching; they just want to get in the line instead of coming to "hear and be healed" as they did in the Bible.) Getting in line with a lottery mentality, thinking "Maybe this time it will work" is not what I'm talking about and is not a good reason to get in another healing line. If you're not prepared to receive by faith, and you haven't already received by faith and are just getting the minister to agree with you, you won't benefit by getting in line once, let alone twice or more.

Don't be like some healing line "frequent flyers" whom you may encounter occasionally, who just like getting into lines to feel the minister's hands because he or she just gets a weird thrill from getting attention and laying on of hands from a member of the opposite sex. Such people sometimes try to talk the minister's ear off when going up for ministry in their craving for opposite-sex attention. You might not believe me, but if you lay hands on enough people, you'll know what I'm talking about. This would be more common in a smaller church setting where the minister might be expected to spend more time with individuals who come up for prayer.

Before leaving this question, I have one more comment. Don't get in the SAME healing line more than once! If you've already had hands laid on you, don't run to the back of the line so that you can go through it again. If everyone did that, the service would look like something out of a Dr. Seuss story instead of the Bible! I have seen people do it. If you didn't receive the first time, you're in unbelief, so why would you think that going up a second time in unbelief will solve anything?

I Believe I Received My Healing When I Prayed, But My Body Doesn't Act Like It. They Called a Healing Line. Should I Get into It or Not?

That is up to you. If your healing has not fully manifested, you will not offend God by getting in a healing line. It certainly won't hurt. However, when you stand in the line, your attitude should be that you want the person laying hands on you to agree with you that you have already received your healing. You are not going up there to "believe you receive" a second time, which is unnecessary. But if you have a chance to be ministered to under the anointing, you can go up and let that anointing go into you.

On the other hand, it's perfectly okay NOT to get in that line if your conviction is that you already believed that you received at some point in the past, reasoning that God is watching over His Word to perform it in you, that His Word is working mightily in you, and that you will see the manifestation whether or not you get into the healing line.

I can understand why some people might not want to go up. They are concerned that getting into the line is a "bad confession" (through action) that they are not yet healed. They don't want to get in a line "for people who need healing in their bodies" because they're afraid that it would make a statement that they have not yet received their healing and that it would even undo their prayer to receive healing. If you are going up with the idea of "believing you receive" again, you are stating that you did not really believe that you received at some point in the past. Of course, if you are not really in faith, you ought to get in faith, get up there, and believe that you receive when you the minister lays hands on you. However, it is not a contradiction to have hands laid on you even though you believe you received your healing when you prayed at some point in the past.

Let me address one more concern. You are not lying by going up in a healing line when you have received your healing by faith. You should consider any healing line to be open to anyone who is still experiencing any kind of physical problem, whether you have already prayed the prayer of faith or not. This refers to general calls for healing. It would be out of line to be in line when the call was for stomach trouble and you want prayer for your wrist.

The Minister Called Out a Condition that Almost Fit Me – Should I Go up for Prayer?

This refers to a case where it sounds for sure like the minister is talking about you, but some minor detail that might be a bit off makes you wonder if it's really you.

I was in this situation once. I got very technical, as we computer lovers are known to do, and I did not go up because of a minor point. I should have gone up and I knew it, but I talked myself out of it. If it sounds like you because of a series of details and there is only one fuzzy point, I would go up unless the minister was being emphatic about that one fuzzy point. Ministers are human beings like you. They can miss God or misinterpret what they pick up in their spirits. Most of the time, God has not spoken words to them about anyone. They simply sense something in their spirit and attempt to articulate it the best way they can. I don't think that God would be upset with you for getting in a line if there is a reasonable likelihood that the minister means you.

Sometimes it is just a slight communication glitch, and the person didn't quite come across saying what he meant to say. Take this case of a lady who had a headache and went up for prayer. Later on, the minister asked her, "How's your head?" She exclaimed, "It's GONE!" (I didn't make this up. I was on the platform leading worship at a convention when this happened. I almost had to stop playing the piano because it struck me so funny. No one else seemed to catch the irony.) You know what she really meant, even though that's not quite what she said, right?

Another key is what you sense on the inside. If you're not sure if you should go up, check your spirit. If you're supposed to go up, something will stir in your spirit. You'll have a knowing that you ought to go up there.

I am not saying that you should get into a line for ear trouble if the minister calls out nose trouble just because your nose is near your ears. However, if he called out a very specific condition that you have and said he sensed it was someone's left ear, and it was actually your right ear, I would go up. There is no clear-cut answer to this question, but the best advice I could give you is that if you think it sounds like you, go up. If you get sent back to your seat, don't be personally offended. I still have to remember "his left, my right" when I'm ministering to someone with a "left side" problem. We're all growing in these things. Stay open and stay teachable.

The Minister Called Out My Condition But Someone Else Already Went up for It. Should I Stay in My Seat?

NO! Get down there, the sooner, the better!

First, you have no idea if that other person even has your condition. Maybe he's going up for the wrong reason or he misunderstood the minister. Maybe he has some other condition and just wanted to go up there for healing, even though doing so knowingly is completely out of order.

Second, if the anointing is present to heal that condition, no one says that multiple people can't get healed at the same time. Sometimes many people with the same condition all get healed when they come forward in response to a specific call. There were multiple healings of the same condition in the Bible. Two blind men were healed at once and ten lepers were cleansed at once. Many paralyzed and lame people were healed in Samaria through Philip's ministry. Don't assume that a special anointing is just for one person and that you miss out if you're not the first one prayed over. I saw a miraculous string of back healings once when a minister called out anyone with a back problem. Then he went down the line and all the people with back problems were healed instantly. (I was the man's translator and he touched me by accident, and the anointing on him was so strong the ushers had to carry me around and hold a microphone up to my mouth so that I could keep translating!)

In some cases, it seems that there is one person in particular whom the Holy Spirit was singling out, but if others with that same condition go down for prayer, they can get in on the same anointing and get healed, too. Sometimes it just seems to "spill over" onto the other people in line. If YOU have the condition, get down there – YOU may be the one person in particular whom the Holy Spirit was singling out! Even if you aren't, you were still being obedient to go down front and you should expect God to honor that.

Can I Go Up for Prayer for “a General Overhaul?”

You CAN, but I'd have to say that after MANY years, I've never seen that really work. In other words, I've never seen someone come up and say, “I need healing for my back, my lungs, my heart, my right knee, my left kidney, both shoulders and my left eye” and come away healed of all ailments. I've seen more than one condition healed at once in the same person I've prayed over (for example, cancer and an ankle problem), but these “general overhaul” scenarios don't seem to pan out. In fact, I sometimes cringe on the inside when I get an “overhaul” request like that.

Please understand that if you have problems in all those body parts, Jesus has provided healing for every last one of them. That isn't the issue. The issue is, if you've never successfully believed to receive healing for ANY body part so far, it's a stretch to think that you will receive healing for ALL your body parts at once.

What I usually do is to try to get the person to focus on receiving healing for ONE specific condition. If the person can receive healing for that, on another occasion it will be easier for that person to receive healing for one of the other conditions. Going seven directions at once is hard for anyone to do.

I would be pleasantly surprised if you became the first person I've ever seen get everything in a “general overhaul” prayer. But if I were the one going up in that situation, I'd go up for only one of the conditions in a single service. Two mentalities I would avoid would be: (1) “If I shoot for the stars, I might at least get across the parking lot, so I'll name as many conditions as I can and hope that I get healed of one of them.” (2) “What's the downside? If nothing happens, I can't be any worse off than I am now.” What you DO need to do is to be ready to receive when hands are laid on you. For me, at least, this would be easier if I went up there for one thing instead of a shotgun blast of different conditions.

Should We Have “Catchers” in Healing Lines?

No specific Scripture tells us how to handle people who fall over in healing lines, so we'll just have to use some common sense. The argument against catchers is that if the Holy Spirit knocks people over, He won't hurt them anyway, and if you have no catchers and concrete floors, people will be less inclined to “fake it” and fall over when they don't have to. The argument for catchers, which I would subscribe to myself, is that many (sometimes most) people fall in the flesh, and you don't want them to get hurt. Also, you don't want Sister Toothpick to get hurt when Brother Beerbelly lands on her! Nor do you want some flake to file a huge lawsuit because he got hurt in your healing line. I agree that the Holy Spirit won't hurt you. There are no instances in Scripture where someone got hurt going up for a healing. However, I believe it is still wise to use catchers.

When I started laying hands on the sick publicly, I tried to prop people up if they started to fall, but that was a bad idea, too, and the Lord told me to quit doing that. I think it's safer just to let people fall, assuming that you have catchers and you don't have a concrete floor. My advice is, don't apply any kind of backward pressure to push people over (you might or might not be surprised how common this is), but don't try to keep someone upright who's obviously going down. I admit that I am stating a personal opinion, since there is no Scripture that addresses this particular situation.

Why Do Some Ministers Allow Only People with “Healing Cards” to Get into a Healing Line?

I understand that Jesus and His disciples did not use healing cards, but they did not use musical instruments, overhead lyrics projectors or tax receipts either as far as we know, and these are okay. For that matter, in the Bible there are no “altar calls” as we know them where people shut their eyes and sneak one hand into the air while no one is looking around (except the ones who are looking around, shame on them), yet millions have been saved under such circumstances. (I won’t give those calls myself; I prefer “everyone looking around” calls. I figure that if you mean business with Jesus, you’ll have to confess Him before men anyway.) I would put healing cards in the same category. They are a human device designed to make things flow better. Before you get upset that you are kept out of a prayer line, you should understand the many good reasons that some ministers use healing cards.

Healing cards restrict access to serious people. If you won’t take the time to fill out a healing card, you aren’t serious about your healing in the first place. That, or you just have a bad attitude toward authority in a service and you wouldn’t be in a good position to receive anyway.

This is a good way to keep out people who say, “I’d like to be healed and not have to wear glasses!” who are just seeking a thrill or an excuse to get near the anointing. (I’m not mocking you if you want to be healed of eye trouble. I was healed of an untreatable eye problem myself. If you’re serious, fine. Not wearing glasses just happens to be one of those things that some flaky people get in healing lines for. Don’t do it unless you really mean business.)

The thrill-seekers and the frivolous are not usually the first ones in a prayer line. The folks who aren’t serious get into the line after half the line is done. They want in on the action at the last minute. Let me tell you, if you have to think five minutes about getting in the prayer line, you should do the minister a favor and keep out! Let the folks who are definite about what they want from God receive ministry. You can’t say that you came expecting anything if you hemmed and hawed through several choruses before figuring out if you wanted to go up and receive your healing or not. Having said that, don’t condemn others who get up halfway through the line – it is possible that their condition makes it extremely difficult or painful for them to walk, and they wait so that they don’t have to stand in line a long time.

Because healing cards are generally given out in advance, they require you to come to the service expecting something specific. The people who come expecting are usually the ones who receive. Those for whom healing is an afterthought generally don’t get anything.

It also keeps latecomers out of the line, which is a perfectly good idea. Some people just want to go up and have the minister do it all, and they don’t respect the minister, the anointing, or God Himself enough to show up to the service on time. Such people are unlikely to get anything anyway, other than the fact that they “get” annoying!

In some crusades, you are not allowed to get into a healing line until you have been certified as being in attendance at one or more teaching sessions on the subject of healing. This ensures that only those who come to “hear and be healed” (as they did in the Bible) will go up for ministry. The ones who bop from healing meeting to healing meeting “a-hopin’ and a-prayin’” (but not really listening to the messages) will be excluded, which is good because they waste everyone’s time getting ministry. If you’re unwilling to be instructed on healing before prayer, you have no business going up for prayer. The chances would be good that you would fail to understand how to receive your healing when hands are laid on you, and you would not get anything. You will then complain that the minister has no anointing or some similar nonsense – while others around you get healed.

Healing cards also enable the crusade staff to be good stewards of the anointing that is on the person (or persons) laying hands on the sick. The staff can weed out certain kinds of people who will just put a drain on the minister and his anointing. By requiring people to be specific, they will save the minister the trouble of dealing with people whose healing request is, “I just need healing in general for everything, I think.” (This is a common type of “request.”) They may also be able to stop the types who say, “Well, I also want prayer for my back, and for my left foot, and for my right eye, and my stomach...” but are not in faith for any of these parts to be healed when they come up. The more specific you can be, the better it is for the minister, because he can pray in agreement with you when you’re specific. The staff can sometimes help those who otherwise would not be in faith so that the minister does not have to spend service time trying to help them. The staff may also be able to screen out the flaky types who really want to preach or prophesy when they get near the microphone in front of people. See How NOT to Testify about Your Healing. Good rule of thumb for preachers: Always keep your thumb (and the rest of your hand) on the microphone when someone wants to testify!

Finally, healing cards provide a means to check up on people after the crusade. The minister can find out how many people kept their healing and how many lost it or never received it. Don’t seek this information unless you are humble and have a cast-iron stomach, because most people do not get healed in healing crusades, and most of those who do don’t keep their healings long-term. At least that’s my observation at this writing; I am hoping to help change this by putting out this book! I am certainly not against crusade-style healing meetings, but we must be realists about the fact that some people will not have enough time during the crusade to learn the Word to establish a foundation for receiving and maintaining their healing. Thank God for the ones who do get healed, and we’ll keep on working to find better ways of instructing and ministering to the sick!

I am neither advocating nor discouraging the use of healing cards; that’s a matter of personal preference for the minister. I’m just stating some good reasons why some ministers use them.

What Kind of Music Should Be Done During Healing Lines?

There is no instruction on this subject in the Bible. It is totally a matter of preference. The best answer to this question is – whatever music the person ministering likes! (Find out in advance if you can.) Some preachers like upbeat music, many like slow, worshipful music, some like singing while others like instrumental music, and some prefer no music at all! Having played (and sometimes sung as well) for healing lines for preachers in all but the last (obviously) of these categories, I haven't noticed any correlation between the quality of the anointing and the type of music. I don't think God cares about the type of music as long as people are reverent. They can be running the aisles and still be reverent; they don't have to be quiet. The one kind of music you don't want to do is something that encourages people to get out and do Greek line dances or something in the flesh. (However, if the minister tells you that he has an unusual anointing whereby people are healed by the busload while doing Greek line dances, don't let this comment stop you from cooperating. I just haven't seen that yet.)

Some of the old-timers insist that the songs from the good-old-days just had more anointing on them, but you'll put the hip-hop crowd to sleep singing those old songs. On the other hand, you may drive away the retirees if you do all rap music. (I have heard anointed rap music, but not any anointed "gangsta rap." Also, "Christian" heavy metal "scream rock" where you can't understand the words being screamed would be counterproductive during a healing line, or any other line for that matter. An appropriate line for unintelligible Christian scream rock would be at the exit door.)

Of course, you should never do unbelief music – including modern, rocking unbelief music with videos of waterfalls and low-flying helicopter shots of beaches behind the projected horrible lyrics. I've had to try to preach faith while the music someone picked out served to suck the faith out of anyone who believed the lyrics. Pretty waterfalls with lyrics about being weak and poor or majestic mountain peaks with lyrics that say that God gives and takes away will do nothing to help anyone. I don't want to sing about a day when my strength is failing when Moses's strength never failed and he had a covenant worse than the one I enjoy.

For additional advice for musicians who play in healing services, see Healing and Music.

Should We Protect the Healing Minister's Anointing by Keeping Him in an Isolation Room before His Entourage Escorts Him to the Platform When It's Time to Preach?

I had a church want to do this with me, and I asked to be allowed to worship God with the congregation. I didn't want to feel like I was in an isolation room on a game show where I wasn't supposed to know what was going on. I like worshipping God and when they let me mingle with the saints and do that, it made me a lot happier than the original plan would have made me. (I don't flip through my Bible during worship as so many preachers seem to do – I actually WORSHIP God with everyone else! I do my preparation before I get there.)

The premise behind the whole isolation room and entourage thing is that the preacher's anointing will be "protected." Perish the thought that any of it might leak out before the appointed time!

I do understand that sometimes people will try to throng the preacher and need to be stopped so that the preacher can actually get up and preach! Or maybe the local church just has a lot of really annoying people who want to pester the minister with frivolous prayer requests and chitchat. So having some ushers around can be a good thing if that's the idea. However, I don't need ushers to stop the anointing from getting out, and I don't need to be in an isolation room so that I don't lose the anointing. The anointing isn't that fragile. If it is, I'm in the wrong business! If we can't be "real people" when we minister, we'll leave the impression that you have to be in some hyper-spiritual state before you can minister effectively. The anointing works just fine at the supermarket with no ushers or isolation room. It works nicely on the golf course with no entourage to protect it. I've proven this out. It's not about being hyper-spiritual as much as it is about being bold – and caring about people enough to want to let God use you to minister healing to them even if they're "unlovely" people.

Part of the problem is that we as preachers have convinced ourselves that the anointing only works when we have the right atmosphere, the right music, the right people, the right order of the service, and so on – which you might not ever have in most places! Many times I've had to get up and try to stir people's faith after the music team doused everyone with a fire hose of unbelief with the songs they picked out and/or silly comments they made between songs! Or in another case, they let some silly saint with minimal Bible knowledge get up and "testify" for an hour about how God took his marriage, his business and his health to draw him closer to Himself. Amazingly, God did move after I got up there! If you think that everything has to be perfect before the anointing can flow, you'll never flow in it because things will never be perfect.

They didn't have isolation rooms in their church buildings in Acts – because they didn't HAVE church buildings! The miracles in Acts were done out among the people without our modern trappings. That tells me that our modern trappings aren't essential if we want to see miracles.

We need to stop seeing the anointing as something so fragile that it will dissipate at a moment's notice. Otherwise we'll get an unhealthy mindset that wonders if we're "prayed up" enough (the devil will always tell you that you're not) or if we've studied enough or if we've fasted enough or whatever. This puts the burden on emphasis on YOU rather than on JESUS where it belongs! God can use very "unspiritual" people who make themselves available to Him. He isn't going to yank the anointing from you if you make a mistake or if you had to deal with an emergency with your car before the service and you didn't have as much time to pray as you'd hoped for.

The Word says that the anointing abides in you (1 John 2:27)! It does not say that the anointing only comes on you when you work yourself up into a mega-spiritual state and keep yourself that way by isolating yourself from everything and everyone. You don't have to worry that the anointing is going to leave if someone talks to you before a service.

Jesus isolated Himself at times to go pray, but you don't see Him isolating Himself at the synagogue until worship was over and then addressing the people. And the story of the woman with the issue of blood shows that He didn't have an entourage to stop people from touching Him. In His case, He WANTED people to touch the hem of His garment and get healed by the anointing that was on Him! Perhaps if we would be like that, we would see more miracles.

Must We Lay Hands on the Specific Afflicted Body Part?

No.

Jesus touched Peter's mother-in-law's hand and she was healed instantly of a fever (Matthew 8:14-15). The woman with the issue of blood could not have touched Jesus where the problem was! Many people were healed just by touching Jesus' clothes. As long as there is a physical connection, you don't have to pray over the specific spot.

However, there are other cases where Jesus did lay hands on a particular spot: Eyes (Matthew 9:27-30, Matthew 20:30-34, Mark 8:22-25), and ears (Mark 7:32-37, Luke 22:50-51). In other cases, Jesus simply spoke or ministered some other way, so it can work either way.

It's probably a good idea to lay hands on the afflicted area where it is reasonable and socially decent to do so. You should have enough sense to know that your hands don't belong in certain places on members of the opposite sex, or even members of the same sex! You should get someone of the same gender as the person being prayed over to lay hands on certain spots if it would be indecorous for you to do so. You can then lay hands on the person's head or something. Remember the case of Peter's mother-in-law. Don't get legalistic about where you put your hands. Jesus did not require His disciples to take courses on hand placement for different illnesses. Just believe what Jesus said – you will lay hands on the sick and they will get well!

Should We Do Different “Things” to Necks, Spines, Arms, Pelvises and Legs Depending on the Condition?

Nothing in Scripture supports this idea, and you should be very wary of any teaching that is not backed up with Scripture. I’m quite aware of the peculiar teaching alluded to by the question. We don’t see any verse that says, “And Bar-Andrew, the son of Andrew, came to Jesus with the flu, and Jesus did The Arm Thing and then The Neck Thing to him and healed him. Then Pheobe, the daughter of Ralph, came to Jesus with a bladder infection, and Jesus did The Pelvic Thing and The Leg Thing to her and told her she was healed.”

Everything you need to do healing ministry is in the Bible; you do not need any other book – including this one – to be thoroughly equipped for every good work (2 Timothy 3:16-17). Other books are useful only to the extent that they teach you the Word and how to apply it.

One danger healing evangelists can get into is trying to make the particular way that God uses them the standard for the entire Body of Christ. One minister said he felt power bounce between his hands if someone had a demon. Do we make that the standard – see if power bounces between your hands to see if a demon is present? God might actually show you the demon. But that doesn’t mean that everyone else has to actually see demons.

Someone who flows in the word of knowledge might try to teach someone else that you get up there and allow the Holy Spirit to use you by supernaturally calling out healings in the audience. God uses some people in the word of knowledge, but someone else might simply lay hands on people and have gifts of healings and the working of miracles flow through his hands. God likes variety. No two ministers will be able to minister in exactly the same way. God did not create you to be a copy of anyone else, so you should not attempt to be a copy of someone else.

If you’re comfortable having God use you while doing “things” to people based on a huge list of memorized conditions with corresponding “thing” combinations, don’t let me stop you if it works for you. But don’t think that such lengthy memorization is necessary to minister healing, because no one in Scripture did the “thing” thing, and plenty of miraculous healings were done other ways.

How Long Should We Keep Our Hands on Someone When We Lay Hands on Him?

There is no set amount of time in Scripture to keep hands on someone, but there is no case in Scripture of hands being laid on someone for a long time. Technically, there is no need to leave your hands on anyone more than an instant, since you can then claim Jesus' promise, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:18).

In practice, "hit and run" laying on of hands won't work for a lot of people because they're too nervous or distracted when you first lay hands on them. It takes them a little time to settle down and allow the Holy Spirit to minister to them. You'll have to be led by the Spirit when it comes to this. Some people are "human bricks" who for one reason or another are in no position to receive at all, and you could stand there all night and nothing would happen. This is unfortunate, but there are plenty of such people out there. (Don't "assure" such a person that he has received his healing just to be able to move on!)

With some people, you may feel the anointing start to go into them and then seem to come back out. You can encourage such people to receive the anointing. You may want to say that you can't receive it with your head; you receive it with your heart. Some people will receive when they just quiet their heads down enough for their spirits to rise up.

You may even have to yell at some people (in love) to be quiet because they start going into a hyperspiritual tizzy when you lay hands on them. Encourage them that it is not time to pray and not time for them to praise at the top of their lungs, nor time to suddenly engage in machine-gun-speed tongues; it's time for them to receive. I think most people will find that it's easier to receive from God with their mouths shut.

On the other end of the spectrum are people who want "soaking prayer" – they want you to lay hands on them for a long time, possibly hours. This is advocated in some circles, but I challenge anyone to come up with the Biblical case of the need for lengthy "soaking prayer" because I can't find one. It's the faith, not the duration, of the prayer that counts. The prayer of faith should not take a long time. Believing that you receive does not take hours. If the person wants lengthy ministry, he is probably not picking any particular time to turn his faith loose to believe that he receives at that moment. Once you believe you receive, any prayer after that should be simply thanksgiving.

Imagine that an unsaved person came up and said, "I want soaking prayer for my salvation. Please lay hands on me until I'm saved." What would you think of that idea? Probably about what I think about long prayers being needed to receive the physical benefit of salvation – healing! You would not believe that someone was saved just because you prayed soaking prayers for his salvation for an hour. The person could be saved immediately by making the risen Jesus the Lord of his life. Likewise, a person can receive healing immediately by believing that he receives the benefit of healing that Christ purchased for everyone.

If you're laying hands on a sick person and there is a tangible flow of the anointing, usually indicating that some kind of special manifestation of the Spirit is happening, I have no problem with keeping your hands on that person until you sense that the anointing to lay hands on him has lifted. That might take a little while, but I've never felt led to do it for really long periods of time.

What Should We Do or Say When Laying Hands on a Sick Person?

There is no technical requirement in Scripture to do anything other than lay your hands on the person. As long as the person knows why you are doing it and is in agreement with it, you should expect the person to recover because you laid hands on him in the name of Jesus.

I usually speak to the sickness directly and command it to leave in the name of Jesus, but even that is not required. You can speak to sicknesses without laying hands on people, after all. We have seen a couple medically “incurable” cancer cases healed by simply speaking without any physical contact.

There are many different ways to minister healing, and laying on of hands is just one of them. You could also teach the person the Word about healing and have him believe that he receives his healing as he prays, as Jesus taught. That works too!

Who Has to Be in Faith, the Person Laying Hands, the Sick Person, or Both?

Preferably both.

Some situations have different nuances, but with the exceptions below, God expects both parties to exercise faith.

Mark 9:17-29 gives us an illustration of this point. When those ministering were not in faith, nothing happened. When Jesus, who WAS in faith, came along, He still told the father to believe. He did NOT say, “MY faith will carry this without yours getting involved. If My disciples had just had their acts together, your son would already be delivered.” In fact, the exasperation Jesus expressed was “O faithless generation” as opposed to “O faithless disciples.” Furthermore, that comment was addressed to the father of the demonized boy, not to the disciples! It was lack of faith on the disciples’ part AND on the father’s part, not just one or the other.

On a boat, Jesus rebuked His disciples for lack of faith, but His disciples were the only ones there to rebuke – there were no members of the public at large on that trip. On another occasion He rebuked the faithless hearers and not the faithless disciples: “Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not” (Matthew 11:20). So both a minister and a recipient could be rebuked for not exercising faith. Having said that, let me say that Jesus is far more interested in BUILDING your faith than He is in rebuking you for not exercising it.

Consider the many times that Jesus told the recipient, “According to YOUR FAITH be it done to you.” He never said, “According to MY FAITH be it done to you.” This shows that the recipient needs to be in faith, not just the person ministering healing. Therefore, we should never teach that we can just lay hands on people and it’s all up to our faith. Too many sick people think that way already, with the result that they just sit there like a blob expecting someone else to do all the “work” for them. They sometimes go from meeting to meeting, assuming that if a minister is just anointed enough some night, they will get healed. They will keep going from meeting to meeting until they learn the truth!

If it were all up to the MINISTER’S faith, JESUS would have been at fault for not having mighty miracles at Nazareth. Clearly the problem was not on His end. He COULD NOT do miracles because of their unbelief. You won’t find a more faith-filled preacher than Jesus! So no matter how much faith you have, you’re not above your Master. Your faith cannot override other people’s unbelief. So it is not all up to you.

This is further underscored by the fact that Jesus gave His disciples instructions about what to do when a city did not receive them – dust off their feet and go somewhere else! He did not say, “If they don’t receive your words and get healed in that city, pray harder and blame yourself for not having the faith to get them healed. Then go actually get the job done in that city. Don’t come back until they’re healed.”

On the other hand, it must partly be based on you as the person laying hands, because Jesus got the demonized boy healed while the disciples did not.

One could theorize that God would not expect much faith from unbelievers or new believers, but that isn't true either. NONE of the people Jesus addressed in the four gospels was a believer in the New Testament sense of being born again! Yet "their faith" made them well.

I understand why a minister might WANT to say, "If you don't get healed, blame me –it's my lack of faith." This would be a convenient way to defuse the common objection that faith healers make people feel guilty for not having enough faith. However, as we've just seen, such a comment would not harmonize with Scripture, even if it makes people feel better – unless they also are people who lay hands on the sick, in which case they will now feel bad (often unnecessarily) if nothing happens.

Now let's consider three special cases.

Manifestation of Gifts of Healings, Working of Miracles and (Special) Faith

Sometimes when the Holy Spirit manifests Himself in these ways described by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11, a person can get healed when NEITHER the person laying hands NOR the sick person is really in faith in the normal sense. That's why they're gifts – they're God's freebies! Sometimes unbelievers, weak believers and even older believers without a good Bible foundation can be healed this way. I've seen people healed by the gifts of healings in environments where there wasn't a lick of real faith for healing between the minister and the sick person. The minister couldn't preach his way out of a paper bag and the sick person had no idea what the story was with divine healing, which made sense because the minister certainly didn't tell the story. And by God's mercy, the sick were healed anyway.

In other cases when the gifts manifest, the sick person may need to respond by coming forward or raising his hand. In such cases, at least some faith does get involved on the sick person's part. And the minister needs enough faith to offer to minister healing.

The Sick Person in James 5

The sick person in James 5 may or may not be a believer (a point proved as part of another long discussion). The "prayer of faith" is prayed by the elders; there is no mention that the sick person has to pray along with them at all. So the faith that matters there is the faith of the people doing the ministry. The sick person still DOES have to exercise faith to call for the elders of the church for healing ministry (which lamentably, few do although they are supposed to do it if they have a serious illness that keeps them bedridden). That does require at least some faith, as otherwise the sick person would conclude that a visit from the elders would be a waste of time and not bother calling for them.

The Mature Believer

Mature believers don't necessarily need anyone to lay hands on them, though if they're struggling with something, they're certainly permitted to ask. The best ways to be healed are to speak to the sickness and command it to leave and to "believe you receive" the healing Jesus provided when you pray. These two methods don't require anyone else to be present, so in this case, ALL the faith being exercised is on the part of the sick person.

If I Lay Hands on Someone and Nothing Happens, Should I Apologize to That Person for My Lack of Faith?

I wouldn't recommend it, though I've seen it advocated. The premise is that you don't want to act like you're pointing the finger at the person and saying, "Nothing happened, so it must be because of your lack of faith – the problem obviously isn't on God's end or on my end!" So you put the blame on yourself, thus making the sick person feel better about it, I suppose.

However, I have quite a few good reasons for NOT recommending this practice.

First, you can end up offering a false apology when it WAS the person's lack of exercise of his faith. Jesus offered no apology to the people at Nazareth, because of whose unbelief He Himself could do no mighty work (Mark 6:1-6). He offered no apology to the religious people in the house where the paralytic was lowered through the roof; while the power of the Lord was present to heal them, not one of those religious leaders got healed (Luke 5:17-26). He wasn't the problem. If Jesus did not apologize when healings didn't occur even though God's power was present to do it, we don't need to apologize either.

Second, even if it WAS your unbelief that hindered things, nothing in the Word tells you to apologize for it. Even when the disciples failed to cast out a demon because of THEIR unbelief (Jesus plainly labeled it as THEIR fault), Jesus did not demand that the disciples apologize for their lack of faith to the man and to his demonized son. Paul left Trophimus sick at Miletum, but he did not apologize to Trophimus (as far as the Bible records) for failing to get him healed faster.

Third, you could short-circuit a healing that is actually in progress though it is unseen so far. You end up being the one putting a stopwatch on God, determining that if the healing does not manifest within "x" units of time, nothing happened. Thus, you could apologize for a "failure" that wouldn't have been a failure if everyone had stayed in faith. I would prefer to encourage the person to stay in faith than to say, "Oh, it didn't work, so turn your faith off now and blame me for the failure."

Fourth, you are teaching people to do the very thing that you are trying to avoid! If people who watch you minister see you apologize, they will feel compelled to apologize every time they don't see results when THEY minister to a sick person within whatever time limit you've shown them, and they will be tempted to beat themselves up for their lack of faith – which is what you were trying to prevent in the first place.

Fifth, lack of faith is not necessarily the culprit anyway but rather lack of EXERCISING the faith that you already have. "My faith must have been too small" does not make sense given that if you had faith as tiny as a mustard seed and USED it, you could command a tree to be uprooted and cast into the sea. The devil would prefer that you engage in endless introspection about the size of your faith, because he knows that he will probably get you to conclude that your faith is too small to get the job done. Yet when the disciples asked Jesus to give them more faith, He answered by describing what could be done with even the tiniest amount of faith if you would act on it (Luke 17:5-6). He certainly didn't say, "Oh, I see that you do need more faith; here's another helping of it."

Sixth, while it may seem humble to put yourself down to avoid the prospect of someone else's feelings getting hurt, putting yourself down will only reinforce a failure mentality in the future. If you lay hands on a sick person and the person does not recover, God does not see you as a failure who needs to apologize, and neither should you. God would rather than you do your best to obey Christ's commission and not see results in a certain case than to just back off and never lay hands on anyone for fear of failure. Someone asked a famous healing evangelist what would happen if he laid hands on a person and the person died. He replied that EVERYONE he lays hands on is going to die sooner or later!

Seventh, you could wreck any confidence people might want to put in you, as they will think, "Why go to him? He doesn't have enough faith. Nothing will happen, and he will just apologize for his lack of faith. What a waste of time." By emphasizing the negative, you miss a chance to be a positive encourager who exhorts people to trust God and not let go of what they're received.

Eighth, you could actually discourage other people from laying hands on the sick if they think that they will have to "eat crow" by offering an apology for their lack of faith if no results are immediately forthcoming.

Ninth, blaming yourself for an apparent failure only reinforces the wrong mentality that many people already have that everything is up to the preacher! "Preacher, do my believing for me and make something happen! Wave your magic faith wand!" is an all-too-common attitude. When you "take the fall," you are sending a very clear message that if nothing happens, it's your fault because it was all up to YOUR faith! Do you want everyone to come up for ministry with that mindset? I certainly don't!

Tenth, when people were healed in Jesus' ministry, He said that it was THEIR faith, not HIS faith, that had healed them. If it was up to THEIR faith and not HIS faith then, it is still up to other people's faith today. It helps if you are believing too, as you can really encourage the other person, but the bottom line is that you can't receive a healing for someone else any more than you can receive the new birth for someone else.

Eleventh, if you shared the plan of salvation with someone, and that person did not immediately receive Jesus, would you owe that person an apology because your "lack of faith" caused him to not receive the new birth? It doesn't make any sense when you put it that way, does it? If you wouldn't do that with that aspect of salvation, why would you do it with ANY aspect of salvation?

Teaching people not to blame themselves for their lack of faith by blaming YOURSELF for YOUR lack of faith doesn't make logical sense to me. The Bible doesn't forbid such apologies, and you can do whatever you're comfortable doing. However, by apologizing for your lack of faith, you really aren't avoiding finger-pointing for lack of faith – the only difference is which direction your finger is pointing.

I Felt Fine Before I Laid Hands on a Bunch of People at a Service. Why Do I Feel Sick Now?

The anointing is just as real as electricity, and like electricity, it affects physical bodies. It is quite possible to feel almost sick yourself after ministering to the sick under the anointing. It is not as much a matter of being actually sick as it is of being “drained” because of the power that was flowing through you. Sometimes this doesn’t hit you until a little while after you have left the service. You can go quite suddenly from feeling ready to conquer the world to just wanting to zonk for a long time without eating or doing anything else.

I have no ready explanation for why this happens some of the time but not all the time. You could just as easily feel “wired” after ministering and be so revved-up about the things of God that it seems as if you couldn’t sleep if you wanted to. Be careful in cases like that if you have a busy schedule – don’t try to just run on the anointing! If you don’t take care of your body and make yourself get some rest, even when you’re all pumped up like that, it will catch up to you. Your body has ways of getting the message across that it has been overtaxed, and you will experience some of those ways if you’re not careful!

It is scriptural to feel physically drained after an encounter with the presence of God. See the answer to the question, Why Do People Fall Over in Healing Lines? for some examples. Note particularly Daniel’s experience. God does not make people sick, but His presence can be so overwhelming to the physical body that it can become weak and seem sick. This did not happen every time in the Bible, so there is no reason to think that it should happen every time now, either.

Of course, it’s possible to feel sick because of an outright attack of Satan after a service, but this would be the exception, not the rule. You can run that off with your authority in Christ. There is a difference between feeling SICK and just feeling tired. If you really have sickness symptoms (sore throat, cough, etc.), command them to be gone in the name of Jesus just as you would have done if someone else came up with those symptoms during the service. If you’re just “worn out,” go get some rest so that you don’t get even more “worn out.”

Can I Get a Certain Minister's Anointing for My Own Ministry?

I'm not sure why you would want another minister's anointing when he (or she!) is unique and you are unique. As for me, I want my anointing, not someone else's anointing, because I'm not called to do exactly what that other person is called to do. However, I do understand and agree with a desire to have the Holy Spirit use you in at least a similar way that He uses a more seasoned minister whom you may have seen. You may see that person flow in signs and wonders more than you do and desire to have a greater flow of them in your own ministry. There's nothing wrong with desiring that.

There is much fuss in certain circles about who received some famous minister's "mantle" when he died; multiple people can insist that they got the same mantle! I don't care to get involved in such fusses; I will be quite content to let God use me that way He wants to use me, which is sure not to be a copy of how He used some other minister, regardless of his "mantle."

So as long as you can see that you will not be a copy of anyone else, and your desire is to flow in the anointing like someone else, we can discuss some things that work and some things that don't work.

Just as Jesus taught how not to pray before He taught how to pray, I will start by telling you some things that do not work that are wastes of your time:

The Drive-By Power Grab

"I'll touch the minister's clothes or shake hands with him, and when I do, I'll believe that I receive the anointing that is on his ministry for my own ministry. It will flow out of him and into me."

That is unbiblical. When people touched Jesus, they did so to get healed, not to sneakily suck His anointing into them so that they could go out and minister the same way. There are no recorded cases of anyone receiving a "stealth" anointing by this method.

When Elisha received Elijah's mantle, that was a pre-arranged transaction that they both agreed to; Elisha did not sneakily touch Elijah and suddenly get his anointing.

Moses had been grooming Joshua for a long time to take over his leadership role. Joshua did not get that by just brushing up against Moses and believing that Moses's mantle would instantly be transferred to himself.

When Timothy received an impartation, it was done with the full knowledge and consent of the leadership in one case (1 Timothy 4:14) and Paul in the other case (2 Timothy 1:6). He didn't get it by brushing up against Paul in a room somewhere without Paul's knowledge or consent.

If you are looking for a shortcut to walking in the anointing in a notable degree, I'm sorry to have to inform you that there isn't one. It is utter foolishness to think that an anointing would be transferred to anyone just by having a fleeting contact with someone else who isn't even aware of the transaction, while the transferee could be living any kind of prayerless, undisciplined lifestyle but still suddenly receive some kind of stupendous spiritual endowment.

The Stealing Line

"I'll get into his healing line and when he lays hands on me, the power will be transmitted to me and I will believe that I receive his anointing for my ministry."

You are OUT of line if you do this in a healing line. I'll refer you to the discussion, "Beware: Wrong Motives for Getting into Healing Lines" for more on why you should NEVER do this.

If the minister specifically called for an impartation line, then you're in divine order if you go and receive an impartation. Otherwise, please don't mess up the healing line if you aren't in it primarily for healing!

Grave Error

"I will go lie on the tombstone of a famous deceased preacher and his anointing will get on me for my ministry just as power emanated from Elisha's bones when someone was thrown on his grave."

This sort of ridiculous thing is what makes unsaved people seriously wonder if we've lost our marbles. It certainly isn't supported by Scripture, as no one ever got that result.

"But wait," you may protest, "it DID work – look at what happened at Elisha's grave! The man was raised from the dead by the power in Elisha's bones! Surely if I practice 'grave-sucking' (as some call it) I will get that preacher's power into me!"

You would do well to read the account more carefully in 2 Kings 13:20-21. First, the man who touched Elisha's bones was DEAD! He was not a living person who tried to get Elisha's miracle anointing. Second, the man who came back to life did NOT get Elisha's miracle anointing! He simply came back to life. There is no account of him then going around with Elisha's anointing doing the things that Elisha did.

So again, nothing in Scripture supports visiting and lying on a grave to get an anointing.

"But So-and-So has been known to have made repeated trips to the grave of a deceased preacher with a healing ministry," someone may counter, "and now he has prodigious miracles himself!"

Do you want to get involved with something beyond the Bible because of someone's experience? You never get your doctrine from experiences; you only get doctrine from Scripture! There's enough IN the Bible that shows you what to do; you don't need to go BEYOND the Bible.

Sow Money, Reap Anointing

“I will give to that ministry, and then I will be a partaker of the grace that is on that ministry. That means that I will get to flow in the same anointing as the preacher I’m supporting!”

Paul did tell the Philippians, who were among Paul’s financial partners, that they were “partakers of his grace” in Philippians 1:7. However, he did NOT say that they were partakers of his anointing. In fact, a number of Greek commentaries point to a better rendering here: “You all are partakers with me of grace,” as the NKJV renders it. In other words, they partook of grace as Paul partook of grace, but they were not partaking of the grace that was particular to Paul. Most modern translations use phrases such as “fellow-partakers with me of grace,” “partakers with me of grace,” “partakers of grace with me,” etc. The King James Version is somewhat of an aberration from the mainstream on this verse, but its wide use may explain how people have used this verse to advance the idea of getting someone’s anointing by giving as a partner. Young’s Literal Translation, a good starting point if you have questions about a particular verse, reads, “all of you being fellow-partakers with me of grace.”

Also note that context within the verse itself even in the KJV: “Inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye are all partakers of my grace.” This grace was upon Paul in his bonds; it is hard to twist this into saying that the kind of grace that enabled Paul to endure his bonds was the anointing on His ministry that had fallen on everyone at Philippi.

We do not see anyone at Philippi establishing churches, having anointed cloths brought from his body to the sick (Acts 19:11-12), or healing everyone in an area as Paul did in Acts 28:8-9. So we really don’t see the idea played out that you could give to the Apostle Paul and get his anointing for yourself. It would be wonderful if there were such a shortcut, but there isn’t. Now if you support a ministry, you do share in the credit for what gets done (including what is done through that minister’s anointing) because your support helped enable him to do what he did. But that is not the same thing as receiving that man’s anointing, which is frankly a ridiculous concept given that only God sets different ministry gifts in the church (1 Corinthians 12:28-30). No matter how “cool” you might think it would be to flow as that minister does, if God has not called you to that particular ministry, no amount of giving will impart that same calling and anointing to you. You can’t set yourself into any particular kind of ministry regardless of how you give; only God can call and separate you to the particular ministry that He has for you. And God’s preparation for your ministry will involve a lot more than just sending a check to someone.

Quickie School

“I will attend So-and-So’s school some week, and I will come out ready to flow in that gifting and office by the end of the week!”

There are plenty of Wizard of Oz Schools of Ministry where their motto seems to be, “I can’t give you a brain, but I can give you a diploma.” No one is ready for ANY set-apart ministry office after just one week of training! As great as Paul’s experiences were, it was many years (not days) after he was saved that he stepped into his eventual calling. That is why the better Bible schools and training centers have courses of study that last a lot longer than a week! And even then, a diploma doesn’t give you an anointing or a calling. Only God can give you those.

Just Claim It As Yours

“Since I have Christ’s anointing abiding in me, I can just go out and do whatever anyone else does because that’s my right in Christ! All anointings are mine, so I claim the right to flow in that same anointing that this particular minister flows in!”

While you have Christ’s anointing to do His works in a general sense, there are giftings to stand in certain ministry offices that are not shared with everyone in the Body of Christ. Paul asked, “Are all workers of miracles?” and “Does everyone have the gifts of healings?” (see 1 Corinthians 12:28-30) and the clear answer to both questions is “No.” Certain ministers have divine equipment to stand in their ministry offices. If your calling is to lead a home Bible study, you do not need the same equipment as someone who goes out and preaches to tens or hundreds of thousands of unsaved people at a time on the mission field.

Now that we’ve seen what DOESN’T work, let’s take a look at some things that DO:

Serving under a Ministry

While serving under a ministry does not guarantee you that same anointing if you are not called to that minister’s office, what if you know you ARE called to that office? God will usually have you serve under someone else with a similar calling to “learn the ropes.” For example, you will probably not be the senior pastor of a large church right after you graduate from a Bible training center. You may end up being the youth leader, an associate pastor, a worship leader, or some other more junior position. You will learn things about pastoring as you serve – a lot of what you’d like to know and maybe even more things you wish you didn’t know! I saw a lot of things as an associate pastor that at least gave me some idea what I was in for before I started pastoring. I also served other ministers with healing ministries by leading worship for them, and sometimes running sound, catching, selling teaching materials, or whatever else they needed me to do, which wasn’t preaching. I did a lot of “helps ministry” before I started preaching healing services myself. It was the best training I could have gotten, as I got to see first-hand what it was like to flow in the kind of ministry I would eventually have..

There's a saying in the ministry, "Some things are better caught than taught," and while that's not a Bible verse, I do agree with that statement. There's no way you can impart through a book what it feels like when a tangible healing anointing starts manifesting. It got to the point that I knew as soon as the preacher did when he was about to suddenly change the order of the service and start laying hands on people because I sensed when the anointing for that seemed to come into the room, even though I was the piano player. You can't learn that in a classroom. I also got to see preachers handle situations where I thanked God I that wasn't the one who had to handle them at the time! I learned from them how to handle those situations. (In some cases, I learned how NOT to handle certain situations! The best mistakes to learn from are other people's mistakes!) Many Bible schools don't prepare you for some of the real-life ministry predicaments you can face even if they teach the Bible well. I think more schools today are realizing that the practical side of ministry needs to be taught as well. For example, how do you handle it when everything around you says QUIT, and how do you handle betrayals, looming church splits, big givers who think they can control your ministry, and other common scenarios?

We can see examples of this type of ministry preparation in Scripture. Two notable examples are Joshua and Elisha. Joshua was Moses' assistant for a long time. He got to see first-hand what Moses did. Finally the day came when Joshua had to step into Moses' shoes after Moses died. Elisha was basically the water boy for Elijah. Elisha didn't do any miracles the whole time he served under Elijah, but he could watch Elijah do them and see what Elijah's ministry was like. Finally, the day came when Elisha did step into Elijah's role when Elijah was caught up to heaven. There were other prophets who knew some things back then; some even told Elisha that his master would be taken up that day. But Elisha was the one who had faithfully served Elijah, and he was the one who walked in Elijah's prophetic office after Elijah was taken up.

It would surprise me just as much to see someone with no field experience be thrust out into full-time ministry as for a prospective pilot to be expected to fly for an airline when all he's had is ground school to teach him the basics of aviation. There's a good reason why they require certain numbers of flight hours with an instructor before you can do certain things. They don't send you up in a plane by yourself when you have had ground school but have never flown; someone with a lot of experience has to be there with you during your early flights. You can read books about riding a bicycle, but that's not the same as riding one. You can read books about playing the piano, but you're not ready to give your own solo piano recitals (I did a couple in my teenage years) if you don't spend a lot of time actually sitting at a piano working on your skill.

So assigning you to serve someone else for a season (often longer than you think He should!) is one method that God very often uses to prepare someone to flow in the office that someone else is flowing in now.

Observation and Association

You can watch someone flow in the anointing and learn some things that way. This certainly applies in cases where you're serving someone else as described above, but you can also watch people who are not in that kind of relationship with you. Sometimes God will bring people who flow in the anointing across your path with whom you can associate even if you don't report to them in a ministry setting, and you can learn some things from them. It's easier to walk in faith when you can watch others around you walk in faith; you can follow their example, just as Paul urged people to follow his example (1 Corinthians 4:16, 1 Corinthians 11:1).

This will not by itself confer the anointing on you, but if your calling is the same as the calling of the person you're observing, you can learn some things about flowing in the anointing that go with your office. This will help you flow in that anointing.

When you watch someone else's boldness, there's just something about it that rubs off on you. I had the privilege of preaching at a church in a mountain village in Central America where the founder of the church started it by doing an outdoor miracle service in that village. He commanded rain to stop in the middle of the service, and it did, and many people got saved that day. Also during the service, someone had come up with a child whose feet were perpendicular to his body instead of straight. I'd never heard of that particular deformity before, but the eyewitnesses at the meeting recall hearing bones snap as the preacher grabbed the child's feet and instantly straightened them out in the name of Jesus. It was an undeniable miracle. I was fascinated to hear the first-hand accounts. Now I had spent some time with that preacher and was actually staying at his house while I was in that country. I was preaching under his tent in the capital city, and at the end of the service, a woman brought her child up for prayer. The child's feet were perpendicular to his body instead of straight! I had just preached a message (in Spanish) entitled "Jesus Heals Everything" and apparently this woman believed my message! I share a little more about this encounter elsewhere in the book, but the bottom line is that I grabbed his feet and turned them and they straightened out on the spot right in front of everyone! I can tell you that at least it was "easier" in a way knowing what that my host had already done, so I knew that it was certainly possible for God to heal that particular kind of deformity on the spot. I could have known that from the Word, of course, because with God, all things are possible (Mark 9:23). Still, it's helpful to be around people who are used like that – it definitely has an influence on you! When you've seen multiple broken backs healed in front of you in a single service when someone else was praying, it increases your boldness if a person with a broken back comes up to you – it helps avoid the thinking, "Uh-oh, this case might be over my head." To this day, I've had a lot of success ministering to people with back issues.

I have served under ministries that didn't make it in the long run, but I've served others whose ministries are still going. You can at least learn to follow the attitude of faith that the failed ministers had, but if you follow some people too closely, picking up all their habits, you can end up slipping into the same pitfalls that ensnared them. One of these preachers had signs and wonders that I loved to watch, but my personal observation was that he never seemed to take time to pray and study the Word before he preached, at least not from my observation. I used to wonder how he could "get away with that," as I figured that if I didn't take time to study and pray, my ministry would be on the scrap heap in short order and I'd not see any signs and wonders. In the long run, he didn't "get away" with anything, and his carnality cost him his ministry later on when he fell. I was still positively influenced by his faith, though not by his personal example in other areas. Shortly before he fell, he was ridiculing the man who founded the Bible school that he attended, claiming that the founder had "lost it" mentally. (The Bible school founder had written a book that made this preacher angry because it stepped on his toes.) But the Bible school founder did well until he went to be with Jesus, and it was the mocker who ended up "losing it." The last time I saw the mocker preach, I had agreed to play the piano for him as in earlier days and I wished afterward that I had not been publicly associated with his meeting – his message was so carnal, it was almost unbearable to hear. It was nothing like the strong faith messages he used to preach. His downfall followed in short order. Some things will cost you eventually. In particular, touching God's anointed is never a good idea. We can still critique and disagree with other people's doctrines, but there's a difference between that and tearing someone down as a person. Plenty of horrifically anti-faith preachers are good people from a moral perspective.

Reading and Listening

You can also pick up someone's attitude of faith by reading that person's books or listening to that person's recordings. The person might be long gone, but if his works are preserved that way, you can still pick up his faith attitude. This is similar to the previous point. A particular hero of mine is Fred Francis Bosworth, who wrote the book "Christ the Healer" in the first half of the 1900's. Brother Bosworth saw a lot of miracles and emphasized faith in the Word rather than trying to get people to rely on his personal giftings. When I get to heaven, I will thank him for the blessing that his book was to me, though of course I never could have met Brother "F.F." in person since he went to be with Jesus two years before I was born.

In turn, Brother Bosworth was influenced by other preachers he knew personally, including John Alexander Dowie and John G. Lake. For a time, Bosworth lived in a "Christian utopia" founded by Dowie. (I'm certainly not saying that Christian utopias are good ideas; Dowie's Zion, Illinois venture turned into a colossal failure.) Dowie had a spectacular healing ministry, though later in life he got into serious doctrinal error and ethical failures. Lake also had a spectacular healing ministry, and fortunately he did not flame out the way Dowie did.

Impartation

I have had people with significant miracle ministries lay hands on me for impartation (on purpose!) as the Holy Spirit directed. (One of them bear-hugged me instead of just laying hands on me, but I wasn't complaining!) This is a biblical practice. What I want to get across to you is that while such impartations are helpful, they are not the whole picture. You will not have notable miracles just because someone who does have them lays hands on you. If you live as they live and pray and they pray and follow their example, you may indeed follow in their footsteps. However, if you ignore the Word and prayer and just browse the Internet and listen to secular music all day, you will not have long-term results no matter who it was who laid hands on you! When you see the prayer lives and the consecration of certain other people whom God is using, it increases your desire for prayer and consecration as well!

2 Timothy 1:6 refers to a gift that is in Timothy by the laying on of Paul's hands. In light of the immediate context in 2 Timothy 1:7, it is possible that this refers to the Baptism with the Holy Spirit, though there is certainly room to allow that it could have referred to some other gift.

1 Timothy 4:14 would more likely refer to some spiritual gifting that was imparted to Timothy by the laying on of hands by church elders. Apparently a prophecy was given to Timothy when this happened.

Summary

There are some good "longcuts" to walking in the anointing the way that another minister does, but no shortcuts. You probably noticed the pattern that the methods that don't work for walking in another minister's anointing are attempted shortcuts and "get-anointed-quick schemes," while the methods that do work require a lot more time on your part. God does not have a "blue light special" going on His ministry giftings.

Can I Believe for a Double Portion of the Anointing?

I don't see any New Testament Scripture that gives you the right to believe for a "double portion" of the anointing.

I am fully aware that Elisha asked for and received a double portion of Elijah's anointing in the Old Testament. He went on to do twice as many miracles as Elijah. However, under the New Covenant, all believers can receive the Holy Spirit. Jesus said that you would receive power after the Holy Spirit came upon you (Acts 1:8). The Holy Spirit has infinite power. He is available to flow through you into others who need His power. I don't see how you could later receive DOUBLY infinite power. From whom would you get it? What would be as powerful as the Holy Spirit?

1 John 2:27 talks about "the" anointing that abides in you. There is no hint that you need more anointing or that you could get a "better" or "double" anointing compared to what you now have.

No one in the New Testament ever conducted a special "double portion service" where you could come and get a double portion of the anointing. Thus, I have to conclude that any such services today are 100% hype and 0% substance.

The only sense in which you could have a "double portion" would be to be used twice as much in the gifts of the Spirit. We should all desire to be used in Holy Spirit manifestations, so wanting to be used more (or twice as much) is a valid craving. However, there is still no Scripture that gives you the right to "believe and receive" being used in certain gifts. We are all used as the Holy Spirit wills when it comes to special manifestations. If there were some prayer you could pray to MAKE the Holy Spirit use you more in the gifts of healings, working of miracles or the gift of faith, I would have prayed it a long time ago and written it here for you to pray. He may not use you at all in such special manifestations; He may want you to prophesy or speak words of knowledge instead. You have to leave such things up to Him.

I'm also not denying that there can be "impartations" under the New Covenant. However, those are also as the Spirit wills. You don't need an impartation to have a special healing ministry if you're not going to have a special healing ministry! It doesn't make sense for a healing minister to lay hands on you to receive "his" anointing if you aren't going to travel doing healing ministry as he is doing.

There is a lot of fuss over who "got" So-and-So's mantle when So-and-So passed away. I don't want So-and-So's mantle because I'm not called to have So-and-So's ministry. I want MY mantle to flow in MY ministry. No two ministries are ever the same any more than any two people are ever the same. Besides, LIFESTYLE is a bigger determiner of how well you can flow in the anointing than who laid hands on you. If you live a fleshly life, you will have a hard time getting results no matter who laid hands on you. If you'll believe the Word and fellowship with the Lord, you will find that you don't need to receive someone else's special anointing because you'll find that God has given you the equipment that you need to fulfill your specific calling.

Someone may get involved and lay hands on you, becoming the conduit through which God imparts a necessary gifting to you. However, you're really getting that gifting from God, not from that person, and you should see it that way.

Why Did Paul tell Timothy Not to Lay Hands Suddenly on Anyone?

Paul's exhortation to Timothy had nothing to do with healing. He was not talking about laying on of hands for healing. He was talking about laying hands on people to ordain them as elders in the church. He warned Timothy not to set anyone up as an elder quickly. This is consistent with his advice elsewhere to make people prove themselves before being given an office in the church. Otherwise, Timothy could inadvertently become a partaker of other men's sins by putting his stamp of approval on men who were sinning.

The fact that Paul was talking about ordination is obvious from the context. No further discussion should be needed once you read this whole passage:

1 Timothy 5:17-22:

Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward.

Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses.

Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

Does Saying Grace Protect Us from Food-Related Illnesses?

1 Timothy 4:1-5:

Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils;

Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving:

For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

The food is sanctified (set apart), though this verse doesn't say that it is somehow purified by that process. The context here is discussing doctrines of devils that command you to abstain from meat. Paul's point is that eating meat or anything else is fine with God; God wants you to receive it with thanksgiving. That's where saying grace comes in. As long as you thank God for your food, He doesn't place restrictions on what you eat – anything is OK. It is clear that God expects you to thank Him for your food, though.

Also, it isn't just prayer that "sanctifies" the food; it's the Word, too. That's because it's the Word that establishes that you can eat it, even if it's lobster, pork, or some other food that was forbidden under the Law of Moses.

So I don't "say grace" because I'm trying to protect myself from illness; I do it out of gratitude to God for providing my food.

Jesus set an example for us:

Matthew 14:19:

And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

Matthew 15:36:

And he took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

Matthew 26:27:

And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it;

Luke 22:19:

And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

Luke 24:30:

And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

Paul practiced what he preached, too:

Acts 27:35:

And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

So there is a Biblical pattern of giving thanks for your food. However, it isn't explicitly stated that this rids the food of any potential harm. Fortunately, you don't need a verse that proves that "saying grace" makes your food OK to eat; Jesus already said that if you drink any deadly thing, it shall not harm you (Mark 16:18). I believe that your immunity from poisoning would cover what you eat, too, since you are legally healed by Jesus' stripes. That alone would cover healing for the effects of anything bad you ate, such as food poisoning.

I can remember getting food poisoning right before a service where I was helping another minister. Things were coming out both ends five minutes before the service! But I believed and received my healing, and I was fine after that – I didn't have to miss the service. I'd had food poisoning before and I knew that you don't usually get relief that quickly. It's more fun to tell a testimony like that than to live it, though. I know someone else who was in that situation minutes before the service and he was the speaker! The Lord healed him instantly, too.

Why Does God Keep Using a Certain Healing Minister So Mightily when His Personal Life Is So Messed Up?

Why does God use anybody? It isn't on the basis of merit. The whole idea of grace is that you receive things from God without any merit of your own. God only uses imperfect people because there are no perfect people on the earth. As the verse above shows, God does not take away the gifts or the calling from anyone (including you) because of personal imperfections. That should encourage you, because God will not take away what He's given to you if you happen to mess up. Even if you really, really mess up.

That doesn't mean that we live with a "who cares if I mess up because God can use me anyway" mentality. We should always do our best to please God. However, God does not distribute certain anointings or ministry callings on the basis of who are the best Christians. An anointed minister did not earn his anointing by doing lots of good works. You cannot earn the anointing; you can only flow in it. God decides who is called to what, and many verses talk about someone being called from his mother's womb. In other words, the calling was given before the person had a chance to sin or not sin. So the calling could not have been a merit badge given later to reward good behavior. Ephesians 2:10 shows us that the good works God has for you were all planned out beforehand. They are not merit badges for being the best Christian around.

How good do you think you have to be before you are qualified to do miracles in the name of Jesus? Not very good, according to Jesus, who said that many would do great miracles and cast out demons in His name and yet be unsaved workers of iniquity (Matthew 7:21-23)! If a rank sinner who believes in the power of the name of Jesus could do a miracle, why can't you, and why can't the healing minister you're thinking of?

Maybe you're confused by this because you heard that a message (based on Galatians 5:6) that if you do not walk in love, your faith will not work. But that isn't true in the light of 1 Corinthians 13:1-3. You can have no love and be a "nothing" as far as God is concerned and still operate in mountain-moving faith! (However, that is expressly not the will of God, whose greatest commandments are to love Him and love others as you love yourself! Walking in faith without love reduces you to a modern-day Pharisee who gets some parts of the Word right, but misses the most important parts.) Judas Iscariot did signs and wonders as part of the twelve original apostles while filching from the till and not caring about the poor, neither of which demonstrated any kind of love walk. The other original apostles did signs and wonders while fighting over who would be the greatest, trying to keep small children away from Jesus, and even wanting to call down fire to burn up a city full of Samaritans. Those were not manifestations of love either. How much love would the many "workers of iniquity" mentioned above have, who did "many wonderful works" in the name of Jesus? So love CANNOT BE a prerequisite to walking in faith, even big faith! Jesus said that whosoever speaks to a mountain and believes in his heart that his words will come to pass, he will have whatever he says. God wants you to walk in love and walk in faith, but they can operate independently. Very loving people can die for lack of faith, and very faith-filled people can lose their marriages and ministries for lack of love.

Having said that, if you drive people away by being an obnoxious idiot, it will be hard to minister in faith to anyone. There certainly could be times when not walking in love will cost you a blessing no matter how much faith you have. I will share one such case with you from my early years running a computer programming business. I had installed a point-of-sale/inventory system at a store in southern Massachusetts, and the computer in the back room was not working properly. The owner told me, "You have 45 minutes to fix this problem or you and your system are both out of here!" With the clock ticking, I went to the back room, got out my tools and took apart the computer. Just then, a young man who looked to be at most 20 years old walked back there, despite the sign that only staff people were allowed there. He seemed curious about what I was doing. He pointed to a card in a certain slot and asked what it did. I wanted to tell him off, but I remembered that I should walk in love, so I told him, "That is a floppy disk drive controller that funnels information from the PC to and from the floppy drive." I went back to work. But he seemed to want to continue to get a free computer lesson. "What's THAT?" he asked, as he pointed to a chip. I was even more upset and wanted to really say or thing or two, but I remembered to walk in love. I said, "That is an Intel 8080 microprocessor [that dates this story, doesn't it!] – it's the brain in the computer that does the calculations and runs the programs." I went back to looking for the problem in vain. Then the young man suddenly pointed at one prong on one chip on one bank of chips on one card out of several cards and asked, "What's THAT?" I looked at the end of his finger, and stunned, I said, "THAT is the problem! Thank you, you just solved it!" That one prong on that one chip was bent ever so slightly so that it wasn't quite seated in the board. I took the chip out and put it back in properly, closed up the computer, fired it up, and the problem was solved with time to spare! I told the store owner that the "kid" who came into the back room who wasn't even allowed back there according to the sign had shown me the problem, but she interrupted me and asked, "What kid?" "I said, you know, that young man who walked back in that room." She said, "I watch this store very carefully and we haven't had anyone in here by that description all day." I was extra glad that I walked in love at that point! Can you imagine finding out in heaven that you missed your miracle because you would not walk in love and you told off an angel that you were entertaining unawares whom God sent to show you the solution to your seemingly impossible problem?

Back to the main theme here. It's all too easy to slip back under the Law and think that God can only use you if you walk in love to a certain degree, and the degree (according to the devil) will always exceed your current degree of walking in love. So you could end up convinced that you are disqualified to do anything at all when in fact you're not.

In fact, the very asking of the question indicates that the questioner doesn't understand his own righteousness in Christ, let alone anyone else's. Here is the awful downward staircase you will get on if you believe that God should not use a certain minister because of his moral failures:

"That minister should not be able to flow in signs and wonders because of his moral failures."

"Therefore, God decides who can flow in signs and wonders based on personal merit."

"Therefore, in order for God to use me, I must always stay 'good enough' for His use."

"Because I just did something I shouldn't have done, I have forfeited the right for God to use me."

"There is no sense thinking that God could use wretched little me; I know I'm not good enough because I sin way too much."

I remember a long time ago fuming to God about how some ministers who lived horribly carnal lives had done prodigious signs and wonders. I've met several such people in person. (Thank God, they are the exception to the rule!) They flowed in God's power as I never have, and yet they were horrific examples of character that you'd never want anyone to imitate. The truth was, you could barely stand being around them when they weren't preaching under the anointing. I didn't think it was fair that they were being used the way they were when I was being so careful to please God in every area of my life and doing my best to walk in love. But He rebuked me! He had to remind me that His giftings are based on grace instead of personal merit, and that I should be glad, not mad, about His use of these imperfect vessels. I should instead have been rejoicing that if He could use those people, He could use me, too, and use anyone else who is available to the Holy Spirit. I could rejoice that His calling isn't fragile. I can't cancel my calling if I do something wrong.

This does not mean that sin won't cost you eventually. If you don't walk in love, the pastors who invited you will decide never to have you back. If you commit adultery, man will never forgive you or stop reproaching you (Proverbs 6:32-33). Your ministry will never be what it could have been if you had stayed faithful. Some pastors will never invite you again even if you've repented and some people will never finance your ministry again. God forgave David, but trouble never left David's household after his adultery with Bathsheba. David paid a terrible price for the rest of his life even though God continued to use him. Sin is forgiven under the New Covenant, but it still carries a price tag in this life because MEN won't always forgive you the way that God did.

But when you adopt the attitude, "God shouldn't use that fellow," you're now setting yourself up as a judge even though your track record isn't perfect either. Becoming judgmental will poison your walk with God. If you condemn others, others will condemn you, and you won't like reaping what you're sowing. Worse yet, if you run around in the flesh "touching God's anointed" by publicly ridiculing the minister, you could reap a harvest of corruption. Galatians 6:1 shows us that spiritual people attempt to restore those who have fallen. Unspiritual people usually try to shoot the wounded, so to speak. They try to lift themselves up by putting down others, but they only succeed in pulling themselves down as well. There was an all-too-well-known case of a famous minister who publicly exposed and humiliated a famous fellow minister, and the exposé ended up being publicly exposed and humiliated himself as he reaped what he had sown.

Those passing judgment have a habit of setting the bar a little lower than where they are. For example, a person who refuses to obey civil authorities' speed limits could justify himself by saying, "Well, at least I don't gossip as some people do at my church." A church person who does gossip could justify himself by saying, "At least I'm not involved in the lustful filth of pornography as some people in this church are, like Brother Gutierrez over there," while a person who actually is involved in the lustful filth of pornography could say, "At least my sin is private; it's not like I'm not an axe murderer."

I'll close this discussion with the words of James, which should speak for themselves: "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment." – James 2:12-13

Why Did Jesus Tell Some People Not to Tell Anyone about Their Healings?

No explicit reason for this is ever given, so you could come up with various explanations for this and we'd never be able to prove conclusively who's right. I can just tell you why I lean a certain way on this.

In some cases, it appeared that telling people prevented Jesus from going to certain places openly because of the crowds. While there was this "cause and effect," I think there is a better explanation.

Some have suggested that Jesus was exploiting human nature by using "reverse psychology," so by telling people not to talk He was ensuring greater publicity when they talked. I can't picture Jesus, as a perfectly honest Man, resorting to underhanded gimmicks like that.

When you study Jesus' ministry, you see that some crowds and some areas were more open to Him than others. The Pharisees wanted Him dead and kept looking for any flimsy "fake news" they could come up with to discredit Him. Some places (Nazareth in particular) were critical of Him and thus they were not open to miracles.

The fact that Jesus sometimes led people out of town before He ministered to them would be the key to understanding this, at least in my opinion. Remember, He kicked everyone out of a house except Peter, James and John and the parents of the girl whom He was about to raise from the dead. It seems to me that He wanted to get the unbelief out of there. In this same situation, after the girl was raised, Jesus told the parents not to tell anyone what had happened (Luke 8:41-56). This seems like a perfectly reasonable idea given that the other people were "laughing Him to scorn" in the passage above. Would you want people who were laughing at you with you if you plan to raise a dead person? Would it be a good idea to tell all the scorners what had just happened? I would think not. However, no explicit explanation was given.

The leper who was healed was also told not to tell anyone except the priest what had happened (Matthew 8:2-4, Mark 1:40-45, Luke 5:12-15). A man was healed of deafness and speech trouble and all the people around were told not to tell anyone (Mark 7:32-37). No explicit explanation was given there, either.

Leading someone out of town would also serve to get someone away from unbelief. If an area were like that, it would make sense to say, "Don't tell anyone in this town!" because if the healed person told the townspeople, they would probably talk the person out of his healing by saying that Beelzebub was the source of the healing! The person would then renounce, and lose, his healing. I know a preacher who felt led to tell someone who was healed of cancer not to tell anyone in that community. The person talked anyway and the locals convinced the person that the devil was behind the healing. The person renounced his healing and the cancer came back.

Why Was It Easier for Me to Get Healed When I Was a Baby Christian?

God often answers the prayers of young Christians in dramatic ways to encourage them, just as an earthly parent helps his youngsters in ways in which he won't help them when they grow older. You could probably get praise from your parents at one point in your life just by smiling and saying, "Ga-ga, goo-goo." However, you would probably not get any smiles if you did that today. They expected you to grow up, and so does God.

God does not love baby Christians any more than He loves mature ones. The babies need more support and encouragement. God provides that and His Body is to provide it too. However, part of maturing in Christ is learning to believe God's Word and receive things by faith on your own. If you don't develop that, the time will come when getting things won't be as easy. It's like a parent telling a child, "I expect you to clean your room before you get any privileges." The parent of a 2-year-old would probably grant privileges without such a prerequisite, but the parent of a 13-year-old would probably not. It would be reasonable to expect the 13-year-old to do something himself rather than sit around going, "Ga-ga, goo-goo."

Unfortunately, many people have this experience when they let their zeal for God taper off as they get older in the Lord. They "coast" on their past experiences with God but don't pray as much, so they don't have as many new experiences. Ignorance is not bliss for a Christian. You cannot continue to get a spiritual baby bottle by refusing to grow up. At some point the bottle will stop whether you're ready to lose it or not, just as it would for a natural child. That is because you are not just accountable for what you know – you are accountable for what you have the reasonable opportunity to know if you apply yourself. If you don't know the Word because you just got saved, God will have mercy on you. If you don't know the Word because you let your Bible collect dust for the last year, you can't expect God to treat you the same way that He would treat a new believer who doesn't know the Word.

Many times we let the things slip that were (and should still be) our mainstays: Spending time with God, reading the Bible, fellowshiping with other believers, and sharing the gospel with sinners. It's possible to let these things slip, and it's important not to do so. It should not be harder to get healed now than it used to be. However, you may have to make a stronger stand against contradictory symptoms in your body. God expects more faith from you as you get older.

This is why some healing ministers have noted that unbelievers and young Christians often get healed dramatically by gifts of the Spirit in healing services while mature believers don't. Although God is merciful, His perfect will for the believer is to be healed through simple faith in Christ's sacrifice, not through gifts of the Spirit. It can be more "fun" to minister to people who are not saved who are willing to come out to a meeting than it is to minister to Christians who won't give God's Word a prominent place in their lives.

It takes more strength to lift a 50-pound weight than it does a 5-pound weight. (That's 22.68 kilograms and 2.27 kilograms for those of you in metric countries.) However, it is easier for you to lift a 50-pound weight than it is for a toddler to lift a 5-pound weight because your muscles are more developed, and you've grown to be able to handle more weight. Therefore, even though it takes more force, it is not harder. Healing should be the same way. If you have to receive 100% by faith instead of having God meet you halfway in His mercy, it should still be as easy for you.

One more thing – check on what you really believe about healing. Plenty of Christians have heard so much nonsense on the subject that their minds are confused and it is hard for them to receive healing. See the discussion, Do You Really Believe in Healing?

Is God Really Interested in Taking Away Headaches and Colds?

Definitely!!!

Jesus took all your diseases, not just some of them. This includes minor diseases as well as major ones. He redeemed you from the curse for breaking the Law, and “every sickness” is included in that curse according to Deuteronomy 28:61. You do not have to have a headache. You do not have to have a cold. I have been healed of such nuisances plenty of times by believing God. God does not want you or me to suffer “nuisance” sicknesses. No Scripture indicates that God’s healing covenant stops at minor ailments, while dozens of Scriptures demonstrate God’s will and Jesus’ will to heal all illnesses of any kind.

In fact, it is a good idea to start believing to receive your healing from such minor ailments. Don’t wait until something like cancer or diabetes comes along. Get used to receiving healing from God now. It will be easier to receive your healing later.

Since Jesus healed “every sickness and every disease among the people,” it stands to reason that anyone with a headache or cold would have been healed. Since He has not changed, He still heals “every sickness and every disease among the people.” This agrees with Psalm 103:3, which says that God heals ALL your diseases (not just your major ones).

You can believe and receive healing for anything that’s wrong with you, even hangnails and pimples! The only “catch” with such very minor ailments is that it is easy to be wishy-washy about receiving healing for something that doesn’t interfere much with your daily life. Don’t play games with your faith. Either believe for something and go all out and get it, or don’t make a pretense of believing for something.

Can Someone Else's Unbelief Stop Me from Getting Healed?

Not unless you allow it to!

No force in this universe can prevent you from receiving your healing from God, just as no force can prevent you from getting saved if you choose to do so. If everyone else in town hates the gospel and you call on Jesus to be your Lord, you will be saved in spite of other people's unbelief. When it comes to personal faith for receiving things, the only thing that will stop you is your ignorance or unbelief. Other people's ignorance and unbelief cannot stop you unless you permit them to become your ignorance and unbelief!

You may be thinking of the encounter at Nazareth where Jesus could do no mighty work because of their unbelief. This passage cannot be used to say that mass unbelief could stop you from getting healed if you were in faith. Apparently, few there were in faith. On other occasions, only one person was in faith and that person received. The woman with the issue of blood received a healing at a time and place where no one else was being healed. The paralytic let down through the roof was healed while the others in the room (who were mocking) were not. If their unbelief could have stopped the paralytic's faith, he would not have been healed. Blind Bartimaeus got no help in his faith from those around him who were telling him to shut up, but he was healed in spite of their hostile unbelief.

Mass unbelief such as that at Nazareth definitely stops the flow of the anointing and the moving of the Spirit. In such an environment, you will either be healed by your faith or not be healed at all, since there will be few if any gifts of healings in operation. Remember, though, that Jesus did lay hands on a "few" sick people and heal them even at Nazareth. It is possible to get healed even when surrounded by Nazareth-level unbelief.

This having been said, it is still a bad idea to have people who are critical of divine healing around when you are standing for your healing. They may mean well, but you may have to be firm with them about not coming and trying to make you feel sorry for yourself instead of encouraging you in your faith. You do not need some man in a religion costume praying over your bed for God to prepare you for your imminent departure. A true minister should read you your rights, not your rites. Avoid any minister who attempts to talk you out of believing and receiving your healing. Yes, you may hurt the minister's feelings or those of your family, but it's your body and your life. If not hurting people's feelings is more important to you than getting healed, you are free to let anyone come in and do his religious mumbo-jumbo over you. If you really want to get healed, you need to avoid having unbelieving ministers in, who will not only not build your faith, but will try to talk you out of any faith that you already have.

Because Healing is 100% by Grace, Can I Live Any Old Way and Still Get Healed?

Probably not.

You can be the vilest sinner in town and get healed if you'll allow Jesus to minister to you. But if you intend to KEEP living as the vilest sinner in town, you will not walk in divine health. Let's talk about why that is.

Healing is received by faith. Without faith it is impossible to please God (Hebrews 11:6). So if you want to please God, you'll have to walk by faith. However, if you want to live "any old way" that means that you want live carnally rather than by faith. To be carnally minded is death (Romans 8:6). Those who are in the flesh cannot please God (Romans 8:8). As long as you choose to walk in the flesh, you will not walk in faith and you won't be able to please God. Your spirit – the real you – and your unspiritual body are at odds with each other. If you deliberately indulge sinful desires, you are allowing your unspiritual body to dominate your life. If instead you walk in the Spirit, you're allowing your born-again spirit that has God's nature to dominate your life. The second way makes it much easier to receive healing by faith.

Your unspiritual body is incapable of exercising faith. So if you live by the dictates of your body, you won't exercise your faith! If you don't exercise your faith, you won't receive healing. It's that simple.

Please remember that healing is not a reward for good behavior. The fact that there is a link between healing and walking in the Spirit as opposed to the flesh is NOT because you have to "live well enough" to deserve healing. No one "deserves" healing based on his track record any more than anyone "deserves" to escape hell. It is grace, and ONLY grace, that makes heaven and healing both available to you. The issue is not the provision of grace. God has already provided grace for the new birth, healing, provision and many other things. The issue is that carnality is the opposite of walking by faith, so carnality will hinder you from tapping into what is already yours by faith. You might have some success, but not nearly as much as you could have if you walked in the Spirit.

Also remember that while sickness is punishment for sin, God laid your punishment – "your" sicknesses – on Jesus when He punished Him for your sins. So if you live carnally and stay sick, God is NOT punishing you for your sins! They've been punished already. The only punishment going on is that you are punishing yourself by not being attentive to God and His Word. God says that if you'll give heed to His Word, it will be health to all your flesh (Proverbs 4:20-22). But if you live any old way and ignore God's Word, you aren't allowing it to be made health to all your flesh, and you will probably stay sick.

Does Sin in My Life Stop Me from Getting Healed?

If having sin in your life could stop you from getting healed, no one would ever get healed, because all people have sin in their lives. There are no perfect Christians on the earth.

When people came to receive from the anointing on Jesus, there were many instances where all were healed. Don't you suppose that these people had sin in their lives? Nobody had to get pre-screened to see if there was sin in his life before he was allowed to touch Jesus' clothing and be healed. Jesus was noted for being around people who were considered the dregs of society, yet they were experiencing the blessings that the Kingdom of God had to offer while the self-righteous religious crowd stayed on the outside looking in. Anyone could receive from Jesus, but healing had to be received on a grace basis, not a personal merit basis.

Because you are forgiven as a Christian, you have the right to be healed independently of your merits. See Forgiven People Can Be Healed for more discussion along that line.

In James 5:14-16, we see that if a sinner has sinned and is sick, and he then calls for the elders of the church to come anoint him with oil, he will be both forgiven and healed. (A believer can call for the elders, too, but he would already be forgiven by virtue of being a Christian, as pointed out elsewhere in this book.) In other words, God will set aside the fact that he deserves sickness for his sin in response to his faith and the faith of the elders. So sin will not stop the person from getting healed even if he is a sinner. Why should it stop you, then?

So on a legal basis, sin does not stop you from getting healed. As a Christian, God deals with you according to your righteousness. See You Are Holy and Worthy to Receive Healing for more on this.

On the practical side, if you are knowingly resisting the will of God in your life, it will be very difficult for you to receive healing even though it's free. Trying to receive from God while you are in effect pushing Him aside at the same time is not a good recipe for healing.

Also, you want the real you – your spirit man – to be calling the shots in your life. If you keep indulging the flesh, you will be used to walking by sight instead of walking by faith, which is not helpful when you want to overcome sickness. Still, you don't have to be perfect or even really good to receive healing because it is provided by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. It's provided for you whether you sin or not.

Here is where sin can be an issue. If you are in known sin and you refuse to repent, your conscience will convict you. You will not feel able to receive from God because of this area in your life where you have not judged yourself. Hence, you will not have any assurance that you will receive anything from God when you pray (1 John 3:21). You will have to deal with your conscience before you get that assurance. There are two ways of dealing with your conscience. If your conscience bothers you because of PAST sins that you have repented of, you need to renew your mind with the Word, which says that you are completely forgiven for those sins. Then you can be “sprinkled from an evil conscience” (Hebrews 10:22) and forget about those sins – just as God does! If your conscience bothers you because of sins you’re aware of but refuse to repent of, you need to change your mind – repent! Then you will have more confidence to approach God to receive whatever it is you need. If you are in sin, but you aren’t aware that what you’re doing is a sin, your conscience won’t bother you and you can still receive freely. Of course, that is not a reason to deliberately ignore the Word so that you don’t know what’s a sin in an effort to try to keep a clean conscience! But at least much of the time, even an unbeliever knows deep down when he’s sinning, so how much more should you now that the real you – your spirit – is born again! When you sin, you get an “icky” feeling on the inside. Now please understand that God NEVER condemns believers for their sins (Romans 8:1), He corrects them for their benefit because He is FOR them (Romans 8:31) and He LOVES them. If you feel condemnation, it’s either the devil or your guilty conscience – that awful “I’m a loser because I blew it” feeling does not come from God.

While Scripture does not teach that you can’t receive from God unless you always do the right thing, it DOES warn you not to violate your conscience, because you can make shipwreck of your faith if you do (1 Timothy 1:19).

God doesn’t heal you because you’re good. He heals you because HE’S good!

Does UNCONFESSED Sin in My Life Stop Me from Getting Healed?

We've established in the discussion Does Sin in My Life Stop Me from Getting Healed? that having sin in your life does not disqualify you from healing, which is offered on a grace basis. This current topic covers a specific prevalent idea in the Body of Christ that if you have unconfessed sin in your life, you must confess it to God so that He will forgive you before you can get healed. The premise is that you are not "right with God" while you have unconfessed sin in your life, and that in order to be "right with God" again, you must confess that sin, and then God forgives that sin and cleanses you from unrighteousness, and then you will properly positioned for your healing. Some have even stated that the problem in our country is that the Christians are not right with God. But that is impossible, because if you're not right with God, you're not a Christian! All Christians are right with God because they have been justified by the blood of Jesus. That doesn't mean that everything they're doing is all right with God – not one of us could say that – but they themselves are right with God thanks to Jesus' blood. Thus, they are able to receive everything God has, including healing.

The reason for the belief stated above is a wrong interpretation of 1 John 1:9. The only way to dispatch the wrong idea that UNCONFESSED sin stops you from getting healed is to prove that 1 John 1:9 does not mean what most Christians think it means. I've written an entire article on that one topic, which you should now read: What 1 John 1:9 Really Means.

After you read that section, you are finally in a position to answer the original question, "Does UNCONFESSED sin in my life stop me from getting healed?" No, it doesn't. As we have mentioned, ALL believers have unconfessed sin in their lives, and as they grow in Christ, they will learn what these sins are so that they can repent of them. But in the meantime, you can still receive healing, because healing is granted to you on the basis of your righteousness in Christ, not based on your ability to avoid sin and confess it when you know that you've sinned.

So avoid the kind of thinking that says, "I have to get sin out of my life before I can get healed." Unless you think you can be the only person since Jesus to walk in sinless perfection, you obviously realize that sin will never be out of your life in this lifetime. So if you think sin has to be out of your life before you get healed, you'll never get healed. And you will probably be upset as people with sin in their lives (confessed and unconfessed) get healed while you don't because they take by faith what God offers by grace while you try to earn the same thing with your good behavior.

Does UNREPENTED Sin in My Life Stop Me from Getting Healed?

As long as you are not resisting God's correction, unrepented sin (which would include sins you are committing that you aren't yet aware are sins) will not stop you from receiving healing or any other blessing that is already yours in Christ. Surely most if not all the people that Jesus healed had unrepented sin of some kind in their lives, but they were healed anyway. The whole point of Jesus' coming to earth was to pay for your sins so that the barrier that had existed between you and God would be demolished, and you could be a new, righteous creation in Him. Healing is available by grace, not by human goodness or effort, and you must receive it on a grace basis.

The problem arises when God is dealing with you about something and you harden yourself and refuse to change. At that point, your conscience will condemn you. (God doesn't condemn believers, but He does correct them!) When your conscience condemns you, you feel like a dog with its tail between its legs that knows that it just made a mess on the new carpet or scratched up the new car. You feel sheepish in God's presence because you know you have unfinished business with Him. Please understand that healing is every bit as much yours as it ever was under those circumstances, but your conscience is going to get in the way of praying the prayer of faith to receive from the same God whom you know you're resisting. Your boldness in His presence will be gone.

It's hard to actively resist God in one area while trying to receive from Him in another.

This matter is covered in Scripture in 1 John 3:21-22, which I encourage you to read.

Can “Sin in the Camp” Stop Me from Getting Healed?

That depends on whether you want to receive your healing through the gifts of the Spirit (never guaranteed) or through faith in the Word (always guaranteed). If you want to receive through a special manifestation of the Spirit, YES, it can be a hindrance. If you are receiving by your own faith, NO, it will not be a hindrance.

This will shock those of you who have been taught that “sin in the camp” is strictly an Old Testament idea or a legalistic Law of Moses idea. The same idea carries through into the New Testament in Ephesians 4:30, where we are told not to grieve the Holy Spirit. The clear context in the surrounding verses is the avoidance of certain sins. In other words, if you deliberately allow blatant, unrepentant sin in your church and the leadership won't address it, the Holy Spirit will be grieved, and if He is grieved, He won't move the way that He would if He were not grieved.

I am shocked at how many churches allow shacked-up musicians and singers on the platform. The current record where I've been personally is four such people on the same worship team, but that church no longer exists. Many churches are allowing this foolishness in the name of grace, love, forgiveness, tolerance, and so on. I know of many such churches, and I have noticed something. We ran a “tight ship” at the church we pastored. While we didn't chase sinners out the door, we didn't tolerate hypocrites who one minute told of their extreme love for the Lord and another minute were fornicating with their cohabitants. We had a lot of miracles at our church. The churches that ran sloppy operations where Bobby Badmorals and Sally Shackup were leading worship didn't have miracles through the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and they couldn't seem to understand why we had lots of them and they didn't have any. Some people are taught that because of grace, God just winks at and overlooks such blatant hypocrisy. But if you think that God overlooks hypocrisy under grace, you should read what happened to Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1-11). God is still holy, and while He does not demand perfection from us, He does not want those in front of the congregation to be modeling un-Christian lifestyles for the world to see, making a mockery of His life-transforming gospel. Shack-ups on worship teams should all be replaced with Christians.

So if your goal is to receive through a minister's anointing in a service and the Holy Spirit is grieved, you may not see Him move the way He needs to in order to get your healing to you.

However, if you “believe you receive when you pray,” that is another matter entirely. Someone else's sin, and even a whole church's sin for that matter, cannot stop you from receiving healing by faith in God's Word. That would not be fair. God will not withhold healing from you because of what other people around you are doing. If there is sin around and someone called on Jesus to be saved from his sins and become a new person in Christ, would God honor his prayer and do it for him? Absolutely! It is a transaction between you and God that does not depend on the faith or conduct of anyone but you. So if your basis for receiving healing is the more reliable “believe you receive” approach, “sin in the camp” cannot stop you from receiving the healing that is already legally yours because of what Jesus did for you.

Is It Possible for a New Testament Believer's Prayer to Receive Healing to be Hindered?

Yes.

Scripture is clear on this one.

1 Peter 3:7:

Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

If God says that your prayers can be hindered, that's good enough for me! In this case, if you don't treat your wife right, it can hinder your prayers. While I was pastoring, I observed that most men knew the verse about wives submitting to their husbands, but they didn't know this verse. I kept it before them because I didn't want their prayers to be hindered, and most men really needed to hear this verse! I can assure you that some of their prayers WERE being hindered by their "Me Tarzan, You Jane" treatment of their wives.

This verse isn't specific to healing; it would indicate that any prayer could be hindered by ill-treatment of your spouse.

Of course, in this case, your prayers don't HAVE to be hindered – you can treat your spouse right and avoid this particular hindrance.

Paul (who definitely preached divine healing) warned the Corinthians that some of them were sick and prematurely dead because they disrespected the Lord's Supper. So mistreating other believers in the church (in this example, by pigging out on their communion elements and leaving none for them) and thus not regarding the Body of Christ, would be a hindrance to healing. After all, don't you suppose that those Corinthians were trying to receive healing in prayer – yet they didn't!

By far the biggest hindrance to healing I have seen is lack of knowledge about what Jesus did for our healing. Other hindrances covered in the Mistakes to Avoid section. (I didn't lump lack of knowledge with the "mistakes," as it's hard to blame someone who has never heard the truth for not knowing the truth.)

Another hindrance that is right up there is a guilty conscience, and there are two flavors of that hindrance. If you feel guilty about past sins that you have repented of, you need to be "sprinkled from an evil conscience" (Hebrews 10:22). Those sins aren't hindering anything anymore, but the devil wants you to think that they still demote you in God's eyes and make you less deserving of healing. On the other hand, if you aren't repenting of known sins, your conscience will nag you and you will lack boldness in God's presence (1 John 3:21-22).

Along similar lines is a failure to understand your right standing with God. If you CORRECTLY see yourself as just as righteous as Jesus, you will have a much easier time receiving from God than if you see yourself as an unworthy, undeserving little worm.

Does Teaching that There are Hindrances Hinder People from Getting Healed?

One might ask, if we preach hindrances, won't people be hindered, whereas if we just preach healing without preaching hindrances, people will just get healed and pay no attention to hindrances? That sounds nice, but it's like saying that if I never warn you that there are potholes that will blow out your tires on the route you are currently taking to church, you will not blow out your tires, because I didn't preach it to you. Your tires will still blow out! If I warn you and you take a different route, it won't happen. At any rate, I could not in good conscience preach that there are no hindrances in prayer when the Word clearly says otherwise. Part of my job as a preacher is to warn you. (Scripture talks about warning and exhorting people and rebuking them with all authority. If you as a preacher, particularly a pastor, never do this, preferring to preach feel-good messages that don't get anyone upset, you aren't doing your full job. If I didn't warn you, I wouldn't be doing my job.)

On the other hand, I don't major on hindrances; I major on the truth of divine healing – that Jesus paid for your healing and you can just take it by faith right now.

I would certainly not want you, five seconds after you believed you received healing, to feverishly start going through a hindrance checklist (including the Mistakes to Avoid section of this book) to try to find your hindrance! Just as plants don't spout up 5 seconds after you plant seeds, there will be times that you have to allow the Word to work in your body when you don't see an instant result. This doesn't mean that you have let some hindrance in!

I understand the appeal of just saying, "There are no hindrances to healing! So be healed!" But if Paul could state that your prayers will be hindered if you don't treat your wife right (see 1 Peter 3:7 and the discussion, Is It Possible for a New Testament Believer's Prayer to Receive Healing to Be Hindered?), obviously there CAN be hindrances that we will have to identify and avoid.

Of course, if you say that there are no hindrances to healing, that is tantamount to saying that EVERYONE you lay hands on will be healed. That would be the case if there were no hindrances, wouldn't it? Is that what will happen? Probably not. Even Jesus could not do mighty miracles at Nazareth because the people's unbelief hindered it. So of course there are hindrances. But you don't have to be involved with any of them.

By far the #1 "hindrance" I've seen is not knowing what the Word says about healing. Fortunately, that hindrance can be removed by studying what the Word says about the subject.

Unforgiveness Is Itself a Forgiven Sin, So How Could It Hinder my Healing?

Now we have to wade into some really interesting waters where most preachers would prefer not to go because they don't have a decent explanation. Jesus warned in Mark 11:26 that if you don't forgive other people's sins, God won't forgive yours! How can this be when the New Testament says repeatedly that all our sins are forgiven? Can you actually negate grace and forgiveness by failing to forgive someone? Can you actually burn in hell because you never forgave a seventh grade bully for giving you a "flat tire" and a "wedgie" in the hallway? (For those who were never bullied, this refers to flattening the heel of your sneaker and yanking your underwear up sharply.) After all, if your sins aren't forgiven, hell is where you go!

Few things are clearer in the New Testament than the fact that Jesus redeemed you from hell. (In fact, you can even see this truth in the Old Testament because the Passover lamb, which definitely represented Jesus, had to be roasted in fire after being killed. He went to hell so that you would not have to go there.) It is also abundantly clear that exemption from hell is based on grace, not based on works that we have done or not done. Unforgiveness is a sin, but all our sins have been paid for, which would include the sin of unforgiveness! But the fact that Jesus seemed to imply that you could be lost for unforgiveness would seem to contradict this. Of course, the Bible can't contradict itself, so there must be some explanation for this. And there is one, but it tends to upset people. If you get upset, feel free to offer a BETTER explanation!

When Jesus taught the Jews, some of His teaching applied to the "before" side of the resurrection. The so-called Lord's Prayer is an example. Jesus taught the Jews a prayer where they prayed to the Father "in heaven," which was never done in the epistles after the church age commenced. The dozens of references to the "Father" in the epistles never refer to Him as being in heaven and there is no example of a prayer to God who is strictly "in heaven." While He certainly is (for example, He "speaks from heaven" in the New Testament), He also indwells believers (which He didn't at the time Jesus taught), so for God to hear you now, your prayer need not "ascend to heaven" to reach Him. They asked God to forgive them (which is unnecessary for us because we are already forgiven), to deliver them from the evil one (which is unnecessary for us because He already did deliver us out of from Satan's kingdom), for God's kingdom to come (which it has; Jesus said that some that He spoke to would not see death until they had seen God's kingdom come with power) and to grant us food today (which we would not pray today, as Christ has provided all our needs already and we simply receive them). These particular petitions were never encouraged after the resurrection by Jesus or the New Testament writers. I realize that some readers may be outright scandalized by my assertion that the Lord's Prayer is outdated and not for today, but if you study the New Testament, you don't see any cases of anyone praying the Lord's Prayer or admonishing others to pray it after Jesus rose from the dead. The apostles' prayers on the "after" side of the resurrection are quite different from the Lord's Prayer. Just to cite one example, Paul prayed that people's eyes would be enlightened to their inheritance. Jesus could not have prayed that prayer because the New Covenant that grants that inheritance had not yet been ratified, so that could not have been part of the Lord's Prayer. Thus, we can see that New Covenant praying is not the same as pre-New Covenant praying as exemplified by the Lord's Prayer.

I am not the first to put forth the idea that pre-resurrection and post-resurrection praying were to be different. The originator of this idea was Jesus Himself! He talked about the day that they would see Him again (after His resurrection). He said that in that day they would ask the Father for things in His name. The Lord's Prayer does not do this. In other words, the rules for prayer would change after His resurrection and ascension to the Father. The Lord's Prayer is written in red but it is not written to the church in the Church Age. Some prayer rules apply now that did not apply before the resurrection. Jesus did not teach His disciples to pray in tongues, but after He rose He said that they would speak with new tongues (Mark 16:17), and the New Testament encourages us as Church Age believers to pray "with the Spirit" (in tongues) as well as "with the understanding" (1 Corinthians 14:15).

Prayer rules were not the only rules that changed after the resurrection. Before the resurrection, Jesus commanded His disciples to go only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. After the resurrection, He commanded them to go into all the world and preach the gospel. So the evangelism rules changed as well. His commands to only go to Israelites are written in red (in red-letter-edition Bibles at least). Jesus said those words. But those words are not in effect for New Covenant believers, even though they are recorded in the New Testament. We would certainly get ourselves into trouble if we took the position that His command to only go Jews was written in red, so it must be binding on the Church today.

Thus, you can see that there is a difference between the New Testament and the New Covenant. (I can imagine some of the gasps when people read this for the first time.) Jesus' teaching to the Jews was in books that are part of the New Testament, but not all His teaching applies New Covenant believers, as you can see. We are to preach good news to both Jews and Gentiles.

Consider Jesus' teaching on divorce and Paul's teaching on divorce. The difference has led to many "Who's right, Jesus or Paul?" discussions with the usual conclusion being, "JESUS is right; He's the Son of God and Paul isn't. Paul's words aren't written in red." But any serious student of Scripture should know that the Bible is ALL God-breathed and cannot contradict itself. Therefore the only possible conclusion is that Jesus and Paul are BOTH right – even though they seem to contradict each other! After all, Jesus said that if you get a divorce for any reason other than fornication and then remarry, you've committed adultery. But Paul – in contradiction to Jesus' words – allowed for divorce in cases where an unbeliever wasn't content to dwell with a believer and wanted a divorce! Moreover, Paul asserted that if someone who was "loosed from a wife" (divorced – the term loosed refers to a violent tearing away that would have been understood as divorce by Paul's readers) remarried, he did not sin! Well, isn't adultery a sin? If remarriage is adultery, you could not do it without sinning, could you? Jesus said it was adultery and Paul said it wasn't. How can they both be right? The answer is that Jesus was answering questions about the Law of Moses for the Jews rather than laying down rules about divorce for the Church Age as Paul did by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Many times the point Jesus made about the law (such as even looking at a woman to lust after her being a sin) were to prove to people who thought that they were righteous based on the law that they were all actually incapable of acting completely righteous. He was definitely not advancing a new, updated, stricter Law of Moses 2.0 for the Church to follow! Even under the original Law of Moses, remarriage after divorce was permitted.

Now that I've opened that can of worms, I might as well point out that Paul did not contradict himself, either. Many churches take his statement in Romans 7:2 to mean that a person cannot remarry while the ex-spouse is still alive. But Paul referred to the Law, which DID allow remarriage. Paul said that a woman is bound to her husband as long as he lives – he did NOT say that a woman is bound to her EX-HUSBAND as long as he lives! The Law to which Paul referred did not teach that a woman is bound to her EX-HUSBAND as long as he lives either (Deuteronomy 24:1-2).

The bottom line is that Paul's instructions were written to the Church. Jesus did not even address the issue of an unbelieving spouse while speaking to the Jews about the Law. This makes sense because before His resurrection, neither spouse was a Christian believer in ANY marriage!

Of course, fantasizing about committing sin without doing it is itself sin, as Jesus said, but it is important to remember that the church was never given the Law of Moses to follow! In fact, the church wasn't given the Ten Commandments to follow, either! (Now we're REALLY stepping on religious toes!) 9 out of the 10 commandments are echoed somewhere in the New Testament (the only one left out is Sabbath-keeping, and even now we are commanded to fellowship with other believers), but the New Testament emphasizes grace and new life, not human attempts to do the right thing according to the Law. You can read Acts 15 where the church had a big argument about whether or not Christians had to keep the Law of Moses to be saved. The conclusion was that they didn't, and it was wrong to impose something on the Church that no one had ever been able to keep (except Jesus) as a requirement for salvation!

The church was given the law of love, not a detailed list of do's and don'ts designed for carnal unbelievers who didn't have the Spirit of God in them. Paul said that the Law wasn't given to the righteous, but rather to murderers, kidnappers, homosexuals and the like. The Law shows the unrighteous their need of salvation by bringing a knowledge of sin, but it was (and still is) incapable of imparting new life to anyone. It shows you your need to be saved, but only faith in Jesus can save you.

I have said all this to prove to you that there is a dividing line where some pre-resurrection statements of Jesus do not apply to the post-resurrection church. Once you see this, the Mark 11:26 dilemma becomes solvable. Jesus was talking to the Jews under the same Law of Moses under which He had to live Himself. He was not threatening New Covenant believers with loss of salvation if they did not forgive everyone. Thank God that your salvation that Jesus purchased isn't that fragile!

Also, if that isn't enough, Ephesians 4:32 and Colossians 3:13 prove that you get forgiven BEFORE you forgive others in the Church Age, rather than forgiving others and THEN having God forgive you, as in Matthew 6:14-15 and Mark 11:26. Ephesians 4:32 and Colossians 3:13 make no sense if you have to be the first to forgive – if that were true, Christ would not have forgiven you UNTIL you forgave others!

So it would seem that the answer would be that under the New Covenant, unforgiveness cannot hinder your healing. But the truth is that it can, but for different reasons.

We should all be comfortable with the fact that we live in the age of grace, not law. But unforgiveness agrees with the Law, not grace. When we think that someone should get what's coming to him, we are in effect judges who pass judgment under the Law. We are agreeing with the Law and disagreeing with grace. But when you agree with the Law, you agree that you yourself deserve what's coming to you, too! You can't receive healing with a "law" mentality. On the other hand, when you have a "grace" mentality, you are willing to forgive others even as Christ forgave you. You realize that based on the Law, you're not such hot stuff yourself, and you thank God for His grace that gives you better than what you deserve and gives the other person better than what he deserves.

The other problem is that walking in unforgiveness can make you sick in the first place! Trying to receive healing while holding on to unforgiveness is like claiming healing from stomach trouble while drinking a bottle of drain opener or claiming healing from lung cancer while smoking four packs of cigarettes a day. Unforgiveness will poison you even worse than some natural poisons.

Here is a good scripture to remember about an unforgiving (unmerciful) attitude poisoning your body:

Proverbs 11:17:

The merciful man doeth good to his own soul: but he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh.

I knew a man with bad back trouble, including arthritis and a slipped disc. We laid hands on him but he experienced no relief. However, the moment that he forgave a CHURCH that had wronged him (at least he thought they did), his healing manifested. We had a woman come to one of our meetings who held onto bitterness against her mother for almost 30 years. She was crippled, in horrible, untreatable pain, and on disability. She was healed of what the doctors said was a hopeless condition the night she forgave her mother. (Her mother wasn't even still alive – you don't forgive for the OTHER person's benefit; you forgive for YOUR benefit!)

So don't poison yourself with unforgiveness if you want to be healed. Let the matter go, whatever it is, and allow God's grace to flow in your body without hindrance.

If Unforgiveness Is a Hindrance, How Did ALL the Multitudes Get Healed – Surely There Were Some Who Hadn't Forgiven Their Ex-Spouses?

Given that Jesus warned the Jews that if they didn't forgive, God wouldn't forgive them, how could people in the crowds who hadn't forgiven someone receive anything? After all, you'll never find a big crowd where there isn't someone who has an unforgiveness issue. Indeed, someone probably had a grudge against an ex-spouse or a mean relative. Besides, didn't Jesus tell a parable about being handed over to the torturers if you were forgiven but then you refused to forgive someone else? That would be the opposite of being able to be healed! Jesus said that you had to forgive when you prayed to receive something. So how did people with unforgiveness get healed anyway?

Not Believing and Receiving When They Prayed

The multitudes were not following Mark 11:24 to be healed, so the condition in Mark 11:25 that they had to forgive while they stood praying did not apply to them. They weren't praying! They were receiving their healing through a moving of the anointing. Rather than praying, they were just touching Jesus' garment or having Him touch them. You will not always find an opportunity to touch someone flowing in the anointing, but you can always "believe that you receive," forgiving anyone you're upset with when you do it. When it comes to an anointing being ministered, Jesus didn't lay down a rule that forgiving others was a prerequisite to having that anointing flow into you. When He commissioned His disciples to heal the sick, He did not tell them that the people would first have to forgive anyone they had a grudge against before the disciples could heal them. In healing services today, people are healed without a prerequisite that they must forgive everyone before they can go up to get hands laid on them.

Why Weren't the Unforgiving People in the Crowds Sent to the Torturers Like the Man in the Parable?

The crowds who approached Jesus were not people who already knew the Lord's forgiveness and then refused to extend it to others. They likely didn't even know forgiveness for themselves until AFTER their encounter with Jesus. So that parable would not apply to the crowds in that situation. The parable was about people who HAD BEEN FORGIVEN and then refused to forgive others.

Another point is that the crowds did not consist of believers. When you're given more, more is expected of you. In the New Testament, Paul urged believers to forgive others as Christ had ALREADY forgiven them. The crowds did not know Christ's forgiveness the way the Church does today. So again, the idea that they could be "turned over to the torturers" for failure to forgive after they've already been forgiven would not apply to the crowds who thronged Jesus.

Now what about Jesus' warning to forgive, lest God not forgive you, which was part of His teaching about speaking to mountains and believing that you receive when you pray. If these people held onto unforgiveness, wouldn't they be in a position where God wouldn't forgive them either, and would thus fail to be healed?

And how would the crowds even know that they were supposed to forgive in the first place when the Pharisees were teaching them all their lives that they should hate their enemies?

They Came to Hear and Be Healed

I can answer that. Jesus did NOT just go around healing everyone. He TAUGHT the people, who came to hear and be healed, not just be healed. Jesus emphasized mercy and need to display it to others repeatedly when He taught. He emphasized that mercy was more important than doing all the right sacrifices required by the Law. He DID teach forgiving those who have wronged you in any way in the same teaching where He emphasized speaking to mountains and believing that you receive when you pray. He told people to love, bless, do good to, and pray for their enemies. He taught clearing up offenses with others quickly. He warned about getting offended. I don't think you could listen to the kingdom teachings of Jesus of Nazareth for very long without realizing that God's standard was to forgive those who have wronged you.

Thus, it is reasonable to assume that the ex-spouse grudge holders would realize their need to forgive and show mercy while listening to Jesus teach before He ministered healing to them, and that if this were an issue with some of them, they probably got it taken care of listening to His teaching before they were healed. If the One doing the miracles gives you instructions on what to do, you would pay Him heed, I would hope.

But as we saw above, they would still be able to receive if they had NOT forgiven other people.

God's Goodness and Repentance – in That Order

Another principle gets involved when sinners are present – God's goodness leads men to repentance (Romans 2:4). This is different from repentance leading men to God's goodness. So when it comes to sinners, God's order is NOT (1) Repent, sinner! (2) God will now demonstrate His goodness now that you've made things right, but rather (1) God demonstrates His goodness to you (2) His goodness leads you to want to repent of your current godless life and follow Jesus. This is one reason you see many notable miracles among the unsaved who make the effort to come to a healing crusade. At least they've taken a step toward God by putting themselves in a place where God can demonstrate His goodness. Then they get their miracle and see His goodness. They may or may not get saved as a result, but they should.

Does Satan Have the Legal Right to Afflict Me if I Leave a Door Open to Him?

NO!

That doesn't mean that he won't walk through an open door, but let's rephrase the question, given that Satan is a thief:

"If you leave your back door open when you go to church, does a thief have the legal right to come in and take your TV?"

That question puts things into the proper Biblical perspective.

God has NOT given Satan the right to afflict you just because you left a door open to him. Under the New Covenant, you are completely redeemed from the kingdom of darkness. Satan has no legal business touching you or anything you have for ANY reason, whether you leave doors open or not. I'm not saying that he won't walk through them as any thief would, but he doesn't have the RIGHT to do it. You have every right to run him off even if your own negligence gave him an easy entry.

Satan is NOT God's henchman sent out to avenge sin. This is absolutely clear because God says, "Vengeance is mine" (Romans 12:19). Only GOD has the right to avenge sin. How He does it is solely up to Him. He had the right to make the decision to avenge your sins by punishing Jesus for them. When you receive Jesus, your sins are considered "avenged" and there is no more reason for your sins to be avenged by anyone, God or Satan included.

You must understand that Satan is a complete rogue. Everything he does is anti-God and anti-Christ. He does not fit into ANY of God's plans. ALL his actions are illegal and he will be punished accordingly.

Many Christians have bought the lie that God uses Satan for His own purposes in His master plan for the universe. But if that is true, at the end of time, Satan should receive a PAYCHECK, not PUNISHMENT. Be assured that Satan is not on God's payroll.

That is why we should be completely opposed to Satan's actions and do whatever we can to destroy them, just as Jesus did (1 John 3:8).

If I Get Seriously Ill, Should I Tell Other People?

Yes! In particular, you should call for the elders of your church and ask them to come anoint you with oil and pray the prayer of faith over you (James 5:14-15). If you are so ill that you can't make it to church (for example, you are in the hospital), this is what the Bible plainly commands you to do, and you are in disobedience if you don't do it. MOST Christians walk in disobedience in this matter.

Why wouldn't a Christian obey this command?

The most likely reason is ignorance – they don't even know they're supposed to call for the elders.

Another reason is pride – “I want my pastor to think that I'm a Word person who can take care of this by himself.” But actually, all you're proving to your pastor is that you DON'T obey the word – James 5:14-15 in particular. Word people obey the Word!

Another reason is failure to understand why you have a pastor and elders looking out for you, and thinking, “Aw, I don't want to bug the staff – I know they're so busy with so many things.” But that's no excuse for disobedience! People with a bad self-image might have swallowed the devil's lies that they're not important enough to merit a visit.

Another reason would be that the pastor and the staff are all in unbelief when it comes to divine healing, and their prayers would NOT be prayers of faith so they would do you no good anyway. If that's the case, you're in the wrong church! You want to be in a church that OBEYS James 5:14-15 instead of being in one that DISOBEYS it.

Another reason could be that you are already in disobedience to Hebrews 10:25 by not being part of a local body. Sorry, that ministry you like on TV or the Internet is not going to come out and visit you personally in the hospital. You will NEVER grow up to be a truly mature Christian if all you have is a “TV pastor.” (See The Importance of a Good Local Church.)

Now other than the elders of your local church, should you tell your friends and family? The Bible has no instructions on this matter, so it's up to you. (When the Bible is silent, I prefer to be silent, too!) I understand that you don't want some unbelieving relative slobbering at your bedside, praying useless “Oh God, Oh God, do something!” prayers. In extreme cases, you may have to ask a friend or family member to leave, especially if they're hostile to the gospel (or the healing part of it) and you have someone else coming to pray with you in faith. That matter does get some Biblical mention, because Jesus took people out of town in some cases to get them away from unbelief before He ministered to them. It is not helpful having someone there who resents your friend who is commanding your sickness to be gone in the name of Jesus.

However, you don't have to be secretive about your condition when you are REALLY in faith, because other people's unbelief won't move you. Their unbelief cannot stop your ability to receive— unless you let it!

Especially if you're a preacher, never be too PROUD to let anyone know that you're in the hospital. There is no need to swear others to secrecy or check in under an assumed or modified name to try to prevent anyone from knowing that you, the great man of power for the hour, had to make a trip to the Emergency Room. You want other people to be completely honest and open with you, don't you? What kind of an example would you set for them by trying to hide something? If they're supposed to let you know if they're in the hospital, why would you not let anyone know? Besides, YOU should be calling for the elders of your church – I don't see any exception in James 5:14-15 for ministers, including senior pastors!

Our Church Preaches Healing. Why Aren't We Seeing Miracles?

There are several possible reasons for this, and I'll save the most likely one for last. You can go through this checklist and see if any of these issues apply to your church. I've seen cases of all the issues cited below in churches over the years.

You Aren't Preaching Healing Quite as Much as You Think You Are

Check up on what is being taught and see if it really reflects Scripture. I know places that SAY that they preach healing, but what they really preach is the POSSIBILITY of healing today, not definite instructions on how to receive healing based on Christ's finished work. There is a difference between saying "Divine healing is active today" and "Christ provided healing for all in His atoning sacrifice for us." The former will please people who don't believe that healing is for all, while the latter makes it clear that it is definitely for all. If your church does not preach that healing belongs to everyone without exception because Christ bore our sicknesses, your church is not really preaching divine healing at all. God can't confirm a watered-down version of His Word. If you preach that sometimes God withholds healing in His Sovereignty or some other such compromised doctrine, God can't back your preaching, and the demons will be the ones going, "Amen! Preach it, Brother!"

You're Ashamed of the Healing Part of the Gospel, So You've Backed Off

Preaching the truth about divine healing can get you labeled as a "cult" rather quickly. When we pastored, two other churches in the area warned people away from us, claiming that we were a non-Christian cult because we taught healing and prosperity. Guilty as charged – we certainly did preach healing and prosperity! We walked in love toward the perpetrators, and after they got to know us a while, they quit the nasty comments and they even became quite friendly with us. They realized that we were fellow Christians after all! After a while, it got hard to deny that we were having real miracles.

It is tempting to back off when you're attacked like that, but you can't do it! Some preachers start soft-pedaling certain Bible truths when they start catching heat for preaching them. This happens in the areas of abortion and homosexuality as well as healing and prosperity. Such cowards will never see the power of God move properly in their churches. If you want healing, you have to preach healing! You can't just leave it in your church's "statement of faith" and expect people to pick up on it if you don't preach it from the pulpit. You're never going to be universally loved and appreciated any more than Jesus was, so get over yourself and preach the Word boldly! The more boldly you preach the accurate truth of divine healing, the better!

You're Preaching Other Junk that the Holy Spirit Won't Hook Up with

I've seen churches that preached divine healing accurately – but also preached plenty of fad doctrines. Paul talked about “every wind of doctrine.” Fad doctrines and unbiblical “new revelations” are an unfortunate part of the church scene. Some churches seem to jump on every fad that blows through. I knew a pastor who hopped on the latest doctrinal bandwagon every year until he got desperate and realized that what he was doing was just confusing the sheep instead of feeding them. Some churches get weird with bizarre deliverance procedures, “spiritual warfare” in the heavenlies, hyper-discipleship that seeks to control people's lives, unbiblical concepts of apostolic authority over churches the “apostles” didn't plant, notions that the church is the one church in the area that God has raised up to be over the other churches in the area, and other fluff. God still moves in such places to a limited degree, but the Lord confirms His Word with accompanying signs. If what you preach isn't the Word, God can't back it.

People Aren't Receiving the Message

Jesus surely preached without compromising the truth at Nazareth, but He had no mighty miracles there. It wasn't because of a fault in His preaching; the fault was with the people who did not receive His preaching. It isn't always the pastor's fault if there are no miracles. If people are steeped in religious tradition, they may shrug off the truth when they hear it from the pulpit and get no benefit.

You're Grieving the Spirit by Tolerating Brazen Sin

I visited a church that knew the truth about divine healing, but had a shack-up on the worship team and a transvestite running sound. That is NOT a recipe for miracles! The Holy Spirit has only imperfect people available to Him, but when the people who serve in the church won't repent of ungodly lifestyles and the church leadership won't deal with them, not much Holy Spirit activity is going to happen. Do you suppose that Jesus would say, “Congratulations! You're truly a grace church that affirms, welcomes and celebrates people as they are without judgment?” No, He is the same yesterday, today and forever, so He would say what He said to the church at Thyatira concerning the immoral woman who was seducing other saints – “I have something against you – you're putting up with them!” He would say to those in sin, “Neither do I condemn you. Go and sin no more.” Some churches are good with the “neither do I condemn you” half of that but not good at all with the “go and sin no more” part of it. Please understand that we want ungodly people who do all kinds of things to come get saved, but we shouldn't put them in visible positions of service in the church before they repent of certain things. It sends a message to the congregation that sloppy living is fine. People will reason, “If it's good enough for them, it's good enough for me, too.” You can't shy away from dealing with issues with church workers if you want the Holy Spirit to manifest His presence.

Now let's get to what I consider the biggest reasons that churches can preach healing properly and still not see miracles:

You're Not Allowing the Holy Spirit to be Lord of Your Services

Many churches are so schedule-bound and clock-bound that the Holy Spirit has no opportunity to get a word in edgewise! Everything is planned in advance and has to follow the schedule that allows so many minutes for praise and worship, so many minutes for the offering, so many minutes for the message, and so on. This can absolutely stifle the Holy Spirit!

I am not against TV ministry. I have been on TV. But I am convinced that TV (or streaming Internet broadcasts) can be the worst thing that can happen to many churches due to the broadcast time limitations and the necessity to fit everything into a fixed time slot. The leaders always have to keep one eye on the clock, and it's obvious to the congregation that they're doing it. What if the Holy Spirit wants to move in an unusual way and have an unusually long service? I suppose He just had to be told "no." What if He's done before the time slot is done? Then you can fill up the time with things the Holy Spirit isn't involved with, I suppose.

I realize that some churches have rental or lease arrangements and even police presence arrangements that require them to finish services by a particular time. God can still work with that even though it isn't ideal – as long as you let the Holy Spirit be in control during the time that you DO have. Many pastors want to be "in control" of everything, but if you really want to see God move, you have to allow the miracle-working Holy Spirit to run His church! The only admonition repeated to each of the 7 churches in Revelation 2 and 3 was, "He who has ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches." If you don't bother listening for His instructions, you won't see His miracle-working power in demonstration the way that you should.

There are times when the Holy Spirit wants the whole service to be worship. At other times, He wants the whole service to be a succession of special manifestations mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11. If you cut off the moving of the Spirit, you cut off the flow of miracles. Sometimes you might get through one worship song and the anointing just "falls" and you need to cooperate with it and scrap the rest of the song set and possibly the prepared message. Sometimes you have regular worship but you have to scrap the message and say things that the Holy Spirit wants preached on the spot for the rest of the service. You cannot enjoy the benefits of such services if you feel that you need to be in control of everything.

I know a preacher who used to lament to the Lord that He was not moving in the services in any special ways. The Lord brought cases to his remembrance where He was trying to get that preacher to change the order of the service in the middle of the service, but he just barreled ahead with his preplanned, accurate Word messages. This is what can make some accurate teachers as dry as toast. It's good to be accurate, but your church needs to embrace the Holy Spirit as well as the Word. Otherwise, your accurate teaching will result in some people being healed by faith, but you won't see the spectacular manifestations you wish you'd see. Some people won't get healed (unfortunately) without such a manifestation because they just don't "get it" (yet at least) when it comes to the Word. The problem wasn't that the Holy Spirit needed to be coaxed into moving – it was that the preacher needed to be coaxed into allowing Him to move! Once he allowed the Holy Spirit to have His way in his services, he started seeing some marvelous and unusual manifestations of the Holy Spirit. He hasn't been the same since – and he's still an accurate Word teacher! You don't have to choose between good teaching and a good flow of the Holy Spirit – you can have both, and that's what God wants.

Can I Command a Scoffer to be Healed as a Sign to Him?

No.

Jesus never did miracles for scoffers. A servant is not above his master. On many occasions, He performed miracles and healings in front of scoffers, but the scoffers themselves never got healed. A prime example of this is found in Luke 5:17-26. The power of the Lord was present to heal the scoffers (the Pharisees and doctors of the law), yet not even one of them got healed as far as we know! A man who was let down through the roof was the only one who got healed.

Consider the cases in the New Testament where someone asked for a sign:

Matthew 12:38-40:

Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee.

But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas:

For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Matthew 16:1-4:

The Pharisees also with the Sadducees came, and tempting desired him that he would shew them a sign from heaven.

He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather, for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?

A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them, and departed.

Luke 11:16, 29-30:

And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven.

[Jesus did not perform any sign to answer their request.]

And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign, and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.

John 6:30-31:

They said therefore unto him, What sign shewest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?

Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

[Jesus did not honor this request but again spoke of Himself.]

Luke 23:8-9:

And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceedingly glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing.

Jesus was unwilling then to perform signs and miracles just to satisfy the curiosity of scoffers. He has not changed, so we know that He would be equally unwilling to do so today.

The fact is, Jesus has already performed large numbers of signs and wonders, many of which are documented in the Bible. If anyone wants to “see” a miracle, he can turn to the Bible. It is unfair to ask Jesus to do one more sign just because you don’t believe the Bible accounts, to say nothing of the many documented healings that have taken place in our generation.

Jesus was moved with compassion, not with a desire to put on a circus act, when He healed the sick. He will not stage a sideshow for the benefit of someone who is hostile to the gospel.

It wouldn’t do any good anyway; the scoffer would find some way to explain away the miracle. “If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead” (Luke 16:31). Jesus did rise from the dead, and scoffers today still doesn’t believe, confirming this verse!

I have known people who have had a miracle performed right under their noses who have not received the Lord. Miracles are nice for getting the attention of sinners, but the sinners must make their own choices concerning Jesus. Unfortunately, some stick with their preconceived ideas in spite of an obvious miracle. Some people love sin too much to want to depart from it.

The bottom line is that a sign or a miracle does not convert an unbeliever. He is converted when he hears the good news of his salvation and acts on it. People may think that they need to see a miracle, when what they really need to do is give heed to the Word of God.

Will Multitudes Turn to Christ if We Assemble Enough Medical Documentation of Miracles?

No.

I used to think that they would, but both experience and the Word prove otherwise.

Hear the conversation between the rich sinner and Abraham:

Luke 16:27-31:

Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.

I know someone whom Jesus raised from the dead TWICE. A hospital wrote out his death certificate both times! We went out street witnessing together. I did get the high school crowd's attention by letting them know that this man was undead. (Young people are big on "undead" stuff these days.) But the fact that he could document his undying didn't convince them that Jesus is Lord. Some actually got scared at first, but they ended up just not believing his testimony, proving the Bible passage above. I know someone else who had a phenomenal miracle of being brought back from the point of death. This person has before-and-after X-rays to prove her healing. But if you bring her testimony to a scoffer, the scoffer keeps scoffing.

If you claim that someone was raised from the dead, a scoffer will just say that he was misdiagnosed as being dead when he was really still alive. Or else he'd say that plenty of people get brought back with electric shocks to the heart, even though there is no death certificate involved in such cases. See a sample conversation between you and Smart Alex to see what happens when you present medical proof of a miracle to someone who doesn't believe the Bible – and doesn't want to start believing it.

I am sometimes asked by skeptics to provide "proof" of miracles that I have seen. I've learned that it's a lost cause for the reasons above. I'll just keep on laying hands on sick people and seeing them get well. My time is better spent doing that than it would be trying to line up all kinds of medical testimonials that skeptics will just find reasons to reject anyway.

What Do You Do if You're Ministering and There Are "Brick-Heads" Who Won't Receive the Anointing When You Lay Hands on Them?

Unfortunately, some people are like bricks. In other words, you would feel just as much flow of power if you laid hands on a brick as you would if you laid hands on them. You will find that many of these people are church-wise folks who have been around a long time. In general, new believers and unbelievers are easier to minister to because God has mercy on them and doesn't expect as much from them given where they are in their walk (or lack thereof) with Him. When I first started laying hands on the sick, I asked God "to heal people" and He did. Today I would command sickness to leave in Jesus' name, but I know more now than I did then. If a baby is a year old, no one will object to him saying "Ga-ga. Goo-goo." People will think it's cute. But it is NOT cute if a 31-year-old goes around saying, "Ga-ga. Goo-goo." You expect more from a mature person. So does God.

So what do you do? Above all, be led by the Spirit. I have only a few suggestions, and these are definitely "So say I, not the Lord" ideas. I will be the first to tell you that I have no specific Scriptures on this, other than to say that in general, when there was community unbelief (which isn't what is being discussed here) at Nazareth, Jesus just went to other villages and taught rather than wasting His time where there was unbelief. At least a few people were healed through the laying on of hands, though apparently nothing else happened at Nazareth. If all you have are brick-heads, you can look for somewhere else to preach. If you're dealing with one or a few brick-heads in a group, here are my suggestions.

1. Try to start with people who are visibly ready to receive. I don't know how you describe knowing that someone is ready. It usually shows on his face, but not always. Paul was able to discern that a man had faith to be healed in Acts 14:7-10. If the "brick-heads" see others receive, they may be encouraged to receive themselves and let their walls down. No one says you have to start at one end of a line and work down – unless the host pastor told you do to it that way, in which case you need to follow his instructions.
2. If you have a small number of people in line, you can sometimes get in some quick teaching or exhortation from the Word before you finish with someone. Sometimes it helps; sometimes it doesn't. You can't tell the person everything there is to know about healing while you're standing in front of him. The idea is to tell everyone about faith and healing in your message. Still, some people doze off on you or don't pay attention. Such people will probably not be healed because they do not do what the crowds did around Jesus – hear and be healed.
3. If it's not an assembly line kind of healing line where the ushers scoot the people out to replace them with more people down front, you can tell such people that you will come back to them and keep going. This can help to keep the "flow" of the anointing going. Spending too much time with too many people in a row who are in no position to receive tends to ruin the flow of the anointing. Of course, keep your word and come back! I've seen a couple services where the minister did this but then forgot and never went back. Oops!

4. You might think this is a little underhanded, but I will admit having done it: At some point, I came across someone who was like a sponge and was very open to receiving from God. I practically needed someone to catch me because of the way this person hooked up with the power. Then I had to pray for others who were not receiving as well, and the flow of things was broken. I went back and laid hands on the first person some more! This person “pulled” on the anointing some more, and the “flow” got going again. It was sort of like getting a jump-start. Anyway, that seemed good at the time. If you think you have a better idea, I’m open to suggestions. (What would you have done?) I also suspect that I have seen some other ministers do the same thing for the same reason, which is where I got the idea.

5. DON’T FOLLOW this piece of advice a minister once gave me: “If you push the first three people down, the rest of them will fall over, too.” Don’t ever play games with the anointing. If the power’s not flowing, it’s not flowing, so don’t try to con people into thinking that it is. Never put on a show. That’s just plain dangerous and it’s a good way to end up having evil spirits get involved with your ministry, particularly if you minister in prophecy and “grope” for “personal words” to give people when there is no anointing flowing for that. You cannot make the Holy Spirit do anything. You aren’t there to “use” the Spirit; you’re there to allow the Spirit to use you! Don’t buy into the “fake it until you make it” advice either, which is actually given out by some ministers too! If there is no manifestation of the Spirit, just preach and teach the Word. People who believe the Word can get healed without any special manifestation of the anointing. It doesn’t mean that you’re ill-prepared or in some secret sin if there’s no flow through special manifestations of the Spirit. God just doesn’t move the same way in every service.

Is It Unbelief to Ask a Person You Laid Hands on Whether He Feels Better Yet?

Definitely not.

On the surface, it might appear that if you even ask the question, you're expressing doubt as to whether laying on of hands works according to Jesus' promise. It DOES work, but you need the cooperation of the other person, too.

Fortunately, this is a Biblically open-and-shut case. Jesus asked a blind man if he could see after He touched his eyes in Mark 8:22-25. In fact, He asked the man to look up after the second time He touched his eyes, which was tantamount to asking again how well he could see! If Jesus could ask, it's okay for you to ask!

Is It Unbelief to Check Yourself to See if You Are Healed Yet?

It depends upon why you're checking and what your definition of "healed" is.

If you are checking to see if you really received your healing when you prayed, then yes, you are in unbelief, and you were never in faith to begin with. If you are in faith, you KNOW that you have received your healing. You need no physical confirmation to convince you that it is so. You are just as sure that you are HEALED of the condition as you are that you are SAVED from eternal damnation.

Your body is the wrong place to check to see if you are healed. Check the WORD to see if you are healed. Your body can change but the Word will never change. The Word will change your body because it is health to all your flesh, including whatever part of it is uncomfortable at the moment (Proverbs 4:20-22). If hands were laid on you in the name of Jesus (by yourself or others), you have God's assurance that you shall recover. So you check the Word to see whether or not you shall recover!

However, if you are standing on the Word and you KNOW that you have received your healing, then no, it is not unbelief to see if something is still hurting or scabbed or whatever. You are not trusting the results of your investigation to determine whether or not you have received your healing by faith.

This is similar to the question about the appropriateness of asking someone else on whom you laid hands if he notices any improvement. You should probably read the answer to that question as well.

Should We Anoint the Sick with Oil When We Lay Hands on Them?

If the sick person has called you to come visit him, and you are one of the elders of the church, then definitely yes. This is explicitly commanded in James 5:14-16.

There is one account in Mark 6:12-13 where the disciples anointed the sick with oil and they were healed. It is not stated elsewhere that oil was used when praying for the sick. Therefore, this would seem to be a matter of preference for the preacher.

Many ministers anoint the sick with oil. Some churches expect this of any minister who prays for the sick. While it isn't required by Scripture, there is certainly nothing wrong with this practice. Oil symbolizes the anointing, the Holy Spirit, and consecration to God. It's not a sin to use oil, and no minister should hesitate to honor the local church's custom of using oil if that is expected. It's definitely not an issue that's worth fussing about with anyone. Just try not to make a total mess while you're doing it so that people's clothes (and yours) aren't ruined!

If you are being prayed over and the minister does not anoint you with oil, nothing is wrong, and that is not a reason to think that the prayer is any less effective. Oil is not required in situations other than the one in James 5:14-16.

Must We Use OLIVE OIL to Anoint the Sick?

No.

The Bible only mentions anointing with oil. It never mentions what kind of oil. So I suppose that crankcase oil would do, though I don't recommend it. Any oil you have will do. Personally, I use either olive oil or cooking oil. It's just generic oil anyone can buy at a supermarket. It isn't a big deal to me. It's the prayer of faith that heals the sick person anyway, not the oil itself.

My wife had 20% use of her lungs when she was in her twenties. She needed a machine to stay alive for 6 years. She was healed after she was anointed with oil by some Christian friends. They didn't have any olive oil handy, so they asked her if it was okay if they used lamp oil. She said, "Yes, as long as you don't light a match." She was healed and has had 100% use of her lungs ever since. One doctor kept looking for scars because he was sure she had gotten a lung transplant. I suppose she did, but it wasn't done in a human operating room. I'm glad that God didn't nitpick over what kind of oil her friends used.

Actually, anointing her with lamp oil was entirely OK because the Greek word for oil in James 5:14-16 is elaion, which is actually used elsewhere in Scripture to refer to lamp oil, for example, in the parable of the wise and unwise virgins. In other places, it obviously refers to edible oil or at least some kind of oil other than lamp oil, as you would not "pour in lamp oil and wine" to someone's wounds if you were the Good Samaritan. (Only a Bad Samaritan would pour lamp oil into wounds.) If I had a better kind of oil than motor oil available, I'd use it.

I've seen ads for anointing oil that stress that it's pure olive oil, as if that makes it work better. I suppose by their logic that it should be extra virgin olive oil, as you would not want to use immoral olive oil on anyone. And it should work better if it is from the Holy Land. I'm not sure why that would be, but the ads emphasize that it's from the Holy Land, so it must matter, right? If you pursue this "logic," you will insist that your extra virgin olive oil from the Holy Land have an all-important Certificate of Authenticity, which should state in no uncertain terms that the oil came from the Holy Land (Israel). That way, you can have the greatest confidence when you apply it to sick people. You will be happy, and so will the guy who buys olive oil in bulk containers at a supermarket in Tel Aviv and resells them in little vials with Certificates of Authenticity that declare correctly that the oil came from Israel. (The Certificate does not state whether in fact it even came from Israeli trees, as that is not a prerequisite to stating truthfully that the oil came from the Holy Land.)

Actually, I don't know where the Israeli oil sellers get their oil, but regardless of what marketing you may see, it is not important to use olive oil or oil from any particular geographical location when you anoint the sick. Use whatever oil you want and make sure that you minister in faith, which is what really counts.

Is It Important to Use ANOINTED Anointing Oil When We Anoint the Sick?

No.

Nothing in Scripture even hints that the oil itself must be “anointed” through some process such as a service to anoint anointing oil that I saw in a video someone lent me once. People went out and bought oil to bring in so that it could be anointed during that service when the pastor prayed over it. They make videos of all kinds of things these days, but don’t believe everything you see on them. The person asked what I thought, and I said that the video was a complete waste of my time.

There were no prayer meetings in the Bible to anoint oil before it was used, so any such meeting today is an absolute waste of time. And so is watching a video of such a meeting, even if the minister in question might say some helpful things when he’s not caught up in that kind of fluff.

I suppose there will be people will buy oil and resell it at a high markup claiming that it has been prayed over, anointed, or whatever. Merchandising the gospel is not a new concept; people did that in Bible days, too, and Paul spoke against it. (2 Corinthians 2:17: “For we are not, as so many, peddling the word of God; but as of sincerity, but as from God, we speak in the sight of God in Christ.”)

It’s faith, not the oil, that makes anointing with oil work. (See Must We Use OLIVE OIL to Anoint the Sick? for similar comments about what kind of oil you use.)

Everything in the kingdom of God works by the seed-time and harvest principle. If you want a harvest of salvation from hell in your life, why not take this time to plant your best seed into Simon Whiteteeth Ministries? Then sit back and expect a miracle of salvation to fall from heaven upon you. Also send your prayer requests, as I'll be personally praying for your particular prayer requests as well as those of the other 150,000 people who respond to this letter.

The Lord has shown me that if you give me exactly $3527 (for Psalm 35:27) before the end of this month on the Jewish calendar, it will result in an extraordinary financial windfall. (For me, at least, but I believe it will for you, too.) If you don't have a Jewish calendar, you can order one from us for only $15 plus $13 shipping and $3 handling. Our mail room obviously has very inefficient handlers, but we're working on that. Our bulk shipping cost is well below $13 and we'll just keep the difference, adding to your gift. Please note that $3527 is a fixed divine price regardless of whether it represents pocket change to you or it would be almost impossible to come up with because you work part-time at a big-box store with no benefits. Therefore, you more affluent readers will be in a better position to receive a harvest from God.

In addition, a rich donor who was going to give $250,000 anyway contacted our Fundraising Gimmicks Department and arranged for a "matching contribution challenge." So now every dollar you give will result in your having given two dollars! (To be mathematically consistent, the rich donor will not get credit for giving any dollars – for your gift to be doubled; "his" has to be multiplied by zero.) What a deal for you! So right now we are obviously a better giving value than that other organization you were thinking of supporting.

Forget your pastor and his building fund for now and plant your best seed into Simon Whiteteeth Ministries. I'll even add you to my mailing list so that you can get these letters every month. In fact, I'll even sell my mailing list to similarly minded ministers without your permission so that you can be blessed by their mail also.

Warm Personal Regards,

Simon Whiteteeth

Simon Whiteteeth

Founder, Simon Whiteteeth Ministries

Brother Whiteteeth:

Please pray a special prayer for my miracle of salvation. Enclosed is my best seed of:

() $3,527 () $ 50,000 () $200,000 () $1,000,000 () Other: _____

I would also like to order (_____) sets of your latest, most important ever, 6-part series, "God Wants ME to Prosper!" @ $150.00 per set.

Of course, you would know immediately that this was a bogus offer. After all, if Mr. Whiteteeth were primarily interested in your salvation, he would share the Scriptures with you about it so that you could receive it for yourself. It is no different with healing, as it is simply the physical side of the salvation that Jesus purchased for you.

Although sowing and reaping is an eternal principle, you do not plant soybeans in a field and then harvest corn from that same field. Planting money into a decent ministry would result in a financial return to you, not a healing return.

I personally refuse to support ministries that spend the majority of their correspondence ink asking for money or engaging in gimmicks. I would just as soon see them go under, particularly if they are going to send out letters where the teaching (if any) is designed to “wind you up” to give more money to their ministry. As for me, I’ve never begged anyone for money and I don’t plan to start now. I want to support ministries that spend their time blessing people, not begging for money. Sadly, there have been three very anointed ministries that I stopped supporting not because of a problem with their teaching or anointing, but because of their incessant gimmickry while fund-raising.

You’re free to do what you want with your money. But I urge you not to use it to “buy” something that’s already free.

Can I Believe to Become Smarter?

Yes. But just being smarter in the intellectual sense is not the only thing you need, because some people with PhD's drive cabs. (I suppose doctorates in things like Middle English Literature are hard to translate into profitable opportunities.) You also want to be wiser! A lower-IQ person armed with God's wisdom can do better than a high-IQ person without God's wisdom. I have done things in business with much more success than people who seemed smarter and better qualified because I had God's help and favor. Every working person should know Psalm 5:12: "For thou, LORD, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou compass him as with a shield." One revelation from God could make you a very wealthy person even if you are not a "whiz" in the natural. All the brainpower in the world would not have interpreted the king's dreams as Daniel did with God's help. So you want to believe for God's wisdom. That will take you beyond what mere smarts will get you.

I made good money over the years supporting myself doing computer projects that no one else could figure out how to do. Some of them had been abandoned as impossible by other consultants. When I went in to offer my services in a couple of cases, I didn't know how to do the projects either, but the Lord led me to promise that I would deliver a solution, and if I could not do it, the client would owe me nothing. Then I went to prayer and asked God to show me how to do them, and He did! One involved a computer type, a terminal, a language and an operating system that I'd never used before, and another involved writing code in 3 different computer languages. I did the projects! So I can tell you for sure that you can believe God to become smarter, even if you're smart already. My standard procedure was to read whatever technical manuals were involved and pray in tongues when I got to a point where I couldn't understand something. God would give me the understanding. That's how I got started; I never took a college course about computers. You're missing out on a lot of fun in business if you don't get God involved!

I was about to present a proposal to a computer client that involved them buying from Company A, but I felt that I needed to pray in tongues before I did my presentation later that day. After an hour, I finally got an interpretation: "Company B." I actually said, "No, Lord, you mean Company A," but He didn't. I asked, "Why not Company A when they seem to have the better product?" "They do," I sensed Him say, "but in three years they're going to go bankrupt." So I rewrote my whole proposal and surprised the client by suggesting Company B. The controller of the company asked why I didn't go with Company A, and I said, "They have a better product, but I think that they will be bankrupt in three years. So you would be better off long-term going with Company B." So the client went with Company B. Three years later to the month, Company A declared bankruptcy. Incidents such as that can make you look a lot smarter than you actually are! (They never did ask me how I "figured that out.") So sometimes the issue is not as much being smarter, it's hooking up with an infinitely smart Heavenly Business Partner!

A certain company's computer was down, and dozens of workers were idle as a result. I wasn't in charge of maintaining that system, but I felt sorry for them and asked the Lord to help me be a blessing to them. I knew nothing about minicomputer hardware maintenance at the time. But the Lord impressed me that the hard drive controller card was the culprit. The maintenance company had swapped hard drives to no avail and done a few other things that didn't work and they were stumped. I mentioned to my contact that they needed to check the hard drive controller card. The maintenance company said that the card could not be the issue, and they kept swapping other parts to no avail. Finally someone at the company pressured them into taking my advice. That card was the issue, and the computer was back up and running in short order. Does that mean that I was "smart?" Well, I seemed to be, but again, I was believing for "smarts" in the situation, not necessarily an IQ boost. But I was able to solve a problem I knew nothing about when the experts were stumped and were convinced that the problem couldn't have been what it actually was.

Don't try something like this unless you know it's God, but I used to work for a certain corporation and I felt led to write a computer program that no one had asked me to write. In fact, I spent over a day and a half doing something my boss had not instructed me to do. As I was hitting the last keystrokes to finish it this new program, my boss came flying in and told me to drop everything – he had an emergency. The Chairman of the Board wanted a certain report in his office by the end of the afternoon. But my boss realized that such a program could take a whole day or two to write. I smiled and said, "Oh, you mean something like THIS!" and I hit a button. Out came the printout that the Chairman needed. Now THAT definitely got the boss's attention – and made him look good when he took it to the Chairman of the Board that afternoon! All the "smarts" in the world can't do something like that, but when you have God's wisdom, there aren't any limits. And at my boss's request, I got to spend a lot of time telling him about Jesus because of that supernatural incident! That also got me a personal meeting with the Chairman, who told me that he understood that I knew "the Big Guy" and wanted me to pray for the company. There was a week to go in the month and salvaging their financial situation would require them to have the greatest sales week in their 300-year history. I took a Christian brother with me as a witness, went to the park next door and the "gift of faith" came on me. I commanded millions of dollars to come in by the end of the month. And they did; the company had its greatest week in its 300-year history. It wasn't my smarts or his that accomplished this; it was getting God involved.

You have Bible passages to back you if you want extra wisdom. Daniel 1:20 tells of Daniel and three other Jewish young people: "And in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king enquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm." They may or may not have had higher IQ's, but they were wiser and more understanding than their heathen counterparts and thus were more useful to the king. If God could do that for some young people under an inferior covenant, He certainly should be able to do that under our better one. Under the New Covenant, James tells us that we can ask God in faith for wisdom and get it (James 1:5-8)! Christ has been made unto you wisdom (1 Corinthians 1:30), and Colossians 2:3 refers to Christ, "in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

I know a preacher who was told that his son would never be able to function normally in society. He and his wife kept believing the Bible and his son became normal. But why stop there? They kept believing God and he became much better than normal. Before long he was an absolute genius, and in his twenties he was making seven figures a year! Not bad for someone who supposedly had no hope of living a normal life. Well, I suppose making millions in your twenties isn't a normal life, but that isn't what the doctors meant.

If you suffer from a learning disability (which may or may not be expressed by a letter combination), you have the covenant right to be healed of it. ALL illnesses, not just physically noticeable ones, are part of the devil's kingdom from which you are redeemed. What if the issue is genetic? You STILL are redeemed from it. "Jesus" is the name at which every name that is named must bow, and those learning syndromes have names. So you can make them bow their knees and get out of your life!

Can I Believe to Become More Physically Attractive?

That depends.

If you mean that you could be more attractive without a massive tumor hanging from your face, then yes, you can believe for healing and become more attractive, because you are redeemed from all forms of sickness. You would look better without skin rashes, and they are covered by the redemption Christ purchased for you as well. Many times sickness makes people look awful, so being healed of such a sickness will make them look more attractive.

If you mean that God could make you look younger than your age, then yes. Most people in our youthful-look-obsessed culture would consider you more attractive if you look younger once you get into middle age and old age. This is something that God provides for His children – they should age more slowly and live longer than their unsaved counterparts. He “renews your youth like the eagle’s” (Psalm 103:5). Even in old age, you should be fit and flourishing (Psalm 92:13-14). See Don’t Get Sick When You Get Old for more on this topic.

Abraham’s wife Sarah was too old to have children from a natural perspective, but after God promised Abraham children, Sarah suddenly became such a “hot babe” that Abraham lied about her because he was afraid that she was so good-looking that the ruler of Egypt would kill him to get her for his own! That had to be quite a transformation. There is no Bible promise of anything that drastic for everyone, but it did happen in her case!

We had an interesting sudden move of the Spirit along these lines in the church that we pastored after I was preaching along these lines. People were told by outsiders and unbelievers (who had no axe to grind) that they suddenly looked 10 to 15 years younger. (I remember being in a service 20 years before that happened where a prophet prophesied that the day would come when that would happen.) I’ve been accused of lying about my age. That is a good problem to have, believe me. It would be nice to see Christians get “carded” all the time to make sure that they really qualify for senior discounts. (At some restaurants, they may not care, as they just offer smaller portions for less money.)

If you mean that you could be more attractive if you lost weight, then yes. God can help you do that. (See Can I Believe for “Supernatural Weight Loss?”)

If you mean that you can suddenly look like Barbie so that you can get all the men around to ask you out when right now they're tripping over each other to ask your sister Voluptua for dates, I'm sorry to disappoint you. I have yet to hear a testimony of a brunette with a large build transformed into a blonde bombshell in a service, and I don't expect to hear such a testimony. (I have met formerly brunette women who were dyeing to be blonde, but that was not supernatural.) While you should look better than you "should" for your age, God has not promised to make you the cause of accidents because your looks are so good that carnal ill-mannered men turn around for a second look while they're driving. If that's the kind of transformation you have in mind, YOU need a transformation—your mind needs to be transformed by the Word so that your thinking isn't conformed to the world! The world is obsessed with looks. What really matters is being godly. A SMART man will look for a godly woman, not the one who most resembles Barbie. Proverbs 31:30 warns, "Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised."

I once asked the dean of a Bible School in another country, "What is the greatest cause of failure in the ministries of your graduates?" (You have to be on decent terms with someone before you can ask questions like that.) He told me, "Marrying for looks." He explained that many of the head-turner women his graduates had married ended up being a liability in the ministry because their hearts weren't in it. Eventually their ministries couldn't continue because their wives were fighting their calling and they just settled into a mediocre life outside of the ministry.

I'm not saying that you could never find an attractive and godly person, but godly must be your priority or you could pay for it dearly. My grandmother told me a long time ago, "Always remember, it's better to go through life wishing you were married than to go through life wishing you weren't!" If a girl's main asset is her looks, what will you do in 30 years when she doesn't have those same looks, trade her in for a newer model? (Jesus made it clear He wouldn't approve of your trade-in.)

Paul said, "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works" (1 Timothy 2:9-10). Peter said, "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:3-4).

So if you want to make yourself a "great catch," the best thing you can do is develop your walk with the Lord. Pray, read your Bible, serve in church, and let sinners know how to be saved. That should be your primary emphasis, not your looks. You don't have to look dumpy, but some people spend a lot more time on their looks than on their walk with the Lord, and that's not good time management. Don't buy into the world's obsession with looks.

Can I Believe for Gray Hair to Go Back to Its Normal Color?

Assuming that you aren't super-old, yes, given that the Lord renews our youth like the eagle's (Psalm 103:5). I read an article by a bird expert who claimed that you can't tell a younger adult eagle from an older adult eagle.

This question has special meaning to me, because at this writing I have fewer gray hairs than I did twenty years ago! (I've never dyed it or used any "formula" on it.) I am routinely mistaken for being much younger than I really am. I have stood on the Scripture above and seen it work for me, so I can get quite excited about discussing it!

Now the only thing is that our youth-obsessed culture makes gray hair at any age sound like a bad thing, but God disagrees:

Proverbs 16:31:

The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.

So I suppose that I will not always "speak away" gray hair. There's really nothing wrong with it.

Can I Believe for Excess Flab and Stretch Marks to Disappear after I Have Lost a Lot of Weight?

First, congratulations for losing enough weight for this to be an issue! I don't see any reason why you couldn't believe for this, as all things are possible to him who believes (Mark 9:23). At this writing, I don't know anyone who has believed for this, but I'm not going to use my limited experience as a ceiling for what is possible with God. I've seen Him take care of far more outlandish things than this.

There is no specific Scripture where someone came to Jesus and asked for the disappearance of evidence of weight loss, but I could see this legitimately falling under the category of having God "renew your youth like the eagle's" (Psalm 103:5).

Are Old Testament Dietary Laws God's Prescription for Good Health Today?

No.

1 Timothy 4:1-5

The passage above shows that everything is now lawful (with the slight exceptions in Acts 15:20, though I doubt that you were planning to eat meat offered to idols or drink blood anyway).

Acts 15:20:

But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

The Law of Moses was never given to the Gentiles. God never told Gentiles not to eat pork products. For that matter, He never gave the Ten Commandments to the Church, either, though you can see parallels of all but one of them in the New Testament. You still don't have the right to run out and commit adultery! The law of love in the New Testament precludes that, as do the multiple warnings to flee fornication or even the appearance of evil. The law of love actually goes beyond the Law because men look for loopholes where there are laws to try to justify wrong actions that they want to do. Doing everything under the umbrella of love precludes harmful actions even if they are NOT specifically addressed in the Law of Moses.

However, what you eat has nothing to do with the law of love unless what you're eating makes someone eating with you stumble. Beyond that, it is clear that we can eat whatever we want. The whole idea of having to keep the Law today is vigorously disproved in Acts 15:24 and elsewhere; much of Acts 15, the book of Galatians and the book of Colossians are devoted to this topic.)

Even in Peter's rooftop vision, he was told to arise, kill and eat ceremonially unclean animals (as far as the Law was concerned). If God were still enforcing the ceremonial "uncleanliness" laws concerning diet, He would have been telling Peter to sin in the vision!

Acts 10:9-16:

On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour:

And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance, And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

Wherein were all manner of fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

The question then could be asked, “Why would God forbid certain foods that aren’t really harmful under the Law?” The answer is that these observances were part of the ceremonial laws concerning ritual uncleanness. There were many other forced actions if you wanted to stay or become ceremonially clean. Many of these laws were hygiene-related, even going to great extremes. But the statement that you don’t have to refuse meats today because every creature is good means that you can have all the lobster meat you want without it being a sin under the New Covenant. (This is good, because I really like lobster!) If lobster (and all the other “unclean” meats) were harmful, then they would NOT be good (contrary to what Paul told Timothy) and God would surely have extended the dietary prohibitions for our own good.

It is still possible to overdo things and eat or drink too much of something. For example, you would not want your sole source of hydration to be “energy drinks” and your sole food to be hot fudge brownie sundaes. But God leaves such matters up to our discretion rather than legislating them in the New Covenant.

People keep writing books on the supposed health benefits of the Old Covenant dietary laws, but NOTHING in the New Testament validates the idea that Old Testament eating is the healthiest eating.

What Are the Differences between the Gift of Faith, the Gifts of Healings, and the Working of Miracles?

These are the three so-called “power gifts” found in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11. Paul does not elaborate on them, so the distinctions are somewhat open to interpretation. Before I try to categorize them, please realize that you don’t have to pigeonhole a gift into a certain category to flow in it or receive from it! The same Holy Spirit works all of these manifestations. I will also say up-front that the distinctions I draw here are more a matter of experience and personal opinion than Scriptural argument, since you won’t find much Scripture to define these gifts. You may feel free to disagree with my definitions; I won’t consider you a heretic.

The most important thing is to obey the Holy Spirit’s promptings, not to categorize them. Take the healing of the beggar at the gate in Acts. You could make a case that this was “gifts of healings” at work because Acts 4:22 calls it a miracle of healing. You could also make a case that this was “working of miracles” at work because Acts 4:22 calls it a miracle of healing. Finally, you could attribute this to the gift of (special) faith because Peter said that the faith which is by Jesus gave the man perfect soundness (Acts 3:16) (though this is a more debatable assertion). But any way you define it, the man was healed!

The Gift of Faith

The gift of faith is sometimes called “special faith,” and rightly so. All believers have faith. God has given you the measure of faith (Romans 12:3) and you had to have faith to be saved (Ephesians 2:8-9 and many other references). Faith comes by hearing the gospel. The man at Lystra received faith to be healed by listening to the gospel (Acts 14:7-10) and you can get faith to be healed the same way. So this cannot be talking about faith in the general sense or even faith for specific things that are already promised to you in the New Testament. The “faith” in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11 is given by the Spirit to certain people for certain situations. Faith in general is for everybody. You cannot use 1 Corinthians 12:8-11 to prove that only certain believers can have faith! (If a believer has no faith, what could that believer be believing?)

Perhaps the best way I can describe this gift from experience is that this is a “know-so” faith, the same as you could exercise for any Bible promise, but without a specific Bible promise to back it up. (If you have a Bible promise to back you up, you can always receive whatever it is without any special manifestation of the Spirit, so that can’t be what this gift is.) You have a revelation in your heart that God will do something in particular, and you are responding to a specific word from God to you as opposed to His general Word to all believers. There is no doubt that you have received your answer even though you cannot quote a particular Scripture for it.

This special faith receives from God just as general faith would, but there can also be an added element of unusual boldness. When this comes on you, you feel like some invincible comic strip superhero. You just know that you will get results. There is no question about it. You declare boldly what God is doing. Let anyone say otherwise, and you'll just feel like laughing. You realize that a supernatural boldness has come upon you.

I remember a time when I was in charge of the PC's at a business and a woman's PC wouldn't even boot up. When she referred to her PC, she kept doing so in a way that sounded like she was asking God to "curse" her computer. (She actually used a different but similar word but I know some readers would get upset if I repeated the actual word here.) When I told her that she should stop asking God to do that, she was upset and said that it was just a figure of speech. I told her that God heard what she said and that it looked as if He had done a pretty good job of exactly doing what she said to the computer. She got even more upset and said, "Just fix this (you can guess what goes here) computer!" The gift of faith came on me and I said, "Okay, watch THIS!" Without even touching the computer, I walked over to it, pointed at it, and said loudly, "God BLESS this computer!" Then I just turned it on. It worked perfectly from that day forward. And the woman, while she didn't get saved on the spot, at least changed how she referred to her computer.

It's a fun story, and it was fun to do it! But I don't want to mislead you into thinking that I am Mr. Megafaith who just goes around doing things like that all day. The anointing came on me to do it. I was sure that it would work, although it seems like a rather outlandish thing to do. That's the thing about the gift of faith. When you're flowing in it, the outlandish becomes easy.

Later when I was running my own computer business, I had set up a client on a new system that cost about $100,000 at the time. It was my job over the weekend to transfer all the data from the old system to the new system via those big 9-track tape reels. (Obviously, this was not a recent event!) It was going to take most of the weekend with little time to spare, though I MADE time for church. (If you're wise, you'll do that too!) But Saturday afternoon, the new tape drive attached to the new system stopped working. There was no way I'd be able to get a repair person in there with enough time to spare. I had a serious problem! I tried and tried, and that drive just wouldn't work. My next thought was that I should speak to that new tape drive and command it to work in the name of Jesus. But I also felt that it would be a bit beyond what I could believe with 100% assurance. Faith is the assurance of something unseen, not the 90% probability that it will happen! So I prayed in tongues for a while since I was the only one in the computer room and I sought the Lord for His wisdom on the matter. After some time, I felt the Lord instruct me to lay hands on that drive and command it to work in the name of Jesus. Now I had boldness and an assurance that it would work. So I laid hands on it and commanded it to work in the name of Jesus, and it started working. I got the conversion done that weekend. Not many minutes before, that was "over my head" but when the gift of faith kicked in, it was suddenly easy.

I was preaching at a certain church and found out that a woman there had been telling the pastor, "Don't invite him in. He's not anointed." At the end of the service, that very woman came up for prayer for a busted ankle. Thank God, I remembered to walk in love rather than saying what my flesh would have loved so say to her just then. (Namely, "YOU tried to get me uninvited here and now you want ME to pray over YOU! Hah!") For all I knew she had come up just to "prove" that I wasn't anointed! I laid hands on her and the gift of faith rose up and I COMMANDED that ankle to be healed in the name of Jesus. The power of God knocked her onto the floor. I told her, "You're healed!" Now normally you wouldn't do that, since it will depend on whether that person received or not, but "I knew that I knew" that she was healed because it was an operation of the gift of faith. When she could finally get up, her ankle was indeed completely healed. She told the pastor that she had never been knocked over by the power of God like that in 15 years as a Christian, and that he should have me back because I was really anointed. Walking in love produces much better results than walking in the flesh!

I was ministering to a woman with really bad arthritis overseas, and this gift came on me, and I pried her clenched hand apart. It was healed instantly. Normally I do not go around just prying arthritis-crippled hands open, and I wouldn't recommend that you do it, either, but the gift of faith manifested and a supernatural boldness came on me.

It's a blast when God uses you in this gift! I can at least share something that will help you about this and the other power gifts – when you do what YOU can do, God can kick in and do what you CAN'T do. Most of the manifestations I've seen of the gift of faith happened after I was already laying hands on someone solely based on faith in the Word. I doubt that those manifestations would have happened if I had not been willing to "do my part" first.

As my computer examples illustrate, this gift of faith can apply to things other than simply healing.

As a final Bible illustration of the gift of faith, I believe that it was in operation when Paul commanded Bar-Jesus go to blind for a season (Acts 13:6-12). Jesus said that we could heal the sick, but He never mentioned that we could sicken the well. Thus, there was no specific Scripture for this action. In order for Paul to command it in faith, he needed a faith to rise up in him that was different from the general faith by which we live our lives.

The Gifts of Healings

This is perhaps the most obvious of the three because the result is healing! One important point that is lost on many people is that you don't need a special gift of healing to minister healing to the sick! All you need is the name of Jesus, and you have the right to use that name because you are a believer. You can command sickness to leave in the name of Jesus, and it must obey you.

Being bold to use the name of Jesus and lay hands on the sick and see them recover is Scriptural, but it does not constitute the gifts of healings! It can't, because those who believe (all believers including you) can lay hands on the sick and expect them to recover, and the gifts of healings are only in operation through some people. (Anyone could be used in this at one time or another, but no one is used in this all the time. Some preachers who have a ministry along this line flow in a fairly consistent manifestation of these "healing gifts," but even they cannot control when they manifest.)

The gifts of healings go beyond a simple prayer of faith or the taking of your authority in the name of Jesus. They involve a tangible healing anointing. People can be healed without a tangible anointing simply by using the name of Jesus, but when this healing anointing is present, people who would not normally receive by faith, including unbelievers, may get healed. The people healed may be taken by surprise! Sometimes, so may the preacher!

The gifts of healings may manifest in various ways. Probably the most common is through laying hands on people who come forward for healing. Another common way is for the minister to have a "word of knowledge" and announce that God is performing a specific healing. The healing power falls on one or more individuals right in their seats. There can be as many variations on this as there are ministers. The Holy Spirit is creative! I have seen people healed for no apparent reason when I ministered in music (with or even without words). The power of God just hit them. I am sometimes one of the last people to find out what went on; I find out after the service! The power of God can also just "fall" on people without any altar call, announced word of knowledge, or any other particular thing. In some cases, God's glory just visits the place and people just start getting healed in the presence of God. God is not boring. Thank Him for variety!

Laying hands on the sick in the name of Jesus does not require that you or the person prayed over "feel" anything at the time. However, it is common for the gifts of healings to kick in once you have already committed yourself to use the name of Jesus to command healing. You may start feeling nothing, but suddenly the power of God manifests itself and you and/or the person being prayed over feels it. You won't always feel a tangible anointing when you lay hands on the sick in the name of Jesus, but you certainly won't feel anything if you don't lay hands on the sick in the first place. That is the #1 reason why we don't see more of this today – people think that it doesn't work, so they shy away from laying hands on the sick completely. It's a shame. In some cases, the fear of man that brings a snare (Proverbs 29:25) enters in, and the believer becomes more concerned about what will happen if it doesn't work than what will happen if it does!

One often-asked question is why this “gift” is put in the plural. I don’t know, but my best guess is that some ministers have a gift for certain conditions, and God uses them consistently in healing certain conditions. I heard a preacher who specialized in teeth once. I know someone who got a cavity filled in one of his services, a fact that was attested to by his dentist, who was actually angry because he was sure that this person had gone to another dentist to get the filling. (Why didn’t God just heal the tooth? I don’t know; you can ask Him about that if you want. That’s just how He did it in this case. It was a sign and a wonder.) I know someone else who seems to have success with back problems. Another minister that I know has very good results with tumors, blind eyes and deaf ears. Why is this? I don’t know! Ask God! We do have the New Testament example of Philip the evangelist, who seemed to have special success with paralyzed, lame and demonized people.

“Healings” is also in the plural in the Greek in the three places where it is found in 1 Corinthians 12. Why this is plural is perhaps more obvious. “Working of miracles” is not “working of miracle” because the person performs more than one miracle over time. “Gifts of healings” are not “gifts of healing” because more than one healing is performed. At least that’s my opinion on it; I don’t claim to have the definitive answer. I use the phrase “gifts of healings” in this book to be technically correct, but surely, everyone would understand that you meant the same thing if you said “gifts of healing” or even “gift of healing.”

The Gift of Working of Miracles

This gift involves some kind of action that supersedes natural laws. Examples of this include Jesus’ turning of water into wine, the multiplication of the loaves and fishes and walking on water. I would also include the supernatural blindness that came upon Bar-Jesus in Acts 13:6-12. I would consider this to be involved in the cases of the raising of the dead. (See Condition: Nonviability for a list of cases in the Bible where people were raised from the dead.)

This gift can go beyond physical healings. I have seen God fix bad computer equipment when I spoke to it. I actually started getting an interesting reputation when I used to just go over and touch broken computer terminals, and they would start working again. I would feel power go out of my fingers into the terminals. At times it felt like a big electric shock. (It was rather shocking to the people who saw these incidents, too!) If I could just do this as a covenant right all the time, I could make a business of it and put computer repair centers out of work. This kind of thing happens as the Spirit wills, not as we will. Some of us will be used more in “working of miracles” than others. It became consistent enough that I was willing to make some trips to seemingly hopeless situations because God used me that way so much. A certain millionaire had a computer with a floppy drive that wasn’t working. I took the computer apart and couldn’t see any way to fix it myself. I didn’t have a spare floppy controller card for it. I ask the Lord what to do, and that gift came on me again. I laid hands on that controller card, and it started working. It kept working, too – Jesus does all things well! Now my dilemma was what to write on the invoice. I hadn’t swapped out any equipment or tweaked any settings or done anything to the software on that PC. What do you write on the bill when all you did was pray? Being an honest Christian, I did the only thing I could – I actually wrote on the invoice that I had prayed for the floppy controller card and that it was fixed! Since the PC worked, the client didn’t really care if I had spun it around on the ceiling; fixed was fixed.

A church that I attended many years ago had a computer that stopped working. I laid hands on it and it started working. Then a minister who was a friend of the church asked if I could come lay hands on his hard drive that wasn’t working right. I went to his house and laid hands on it and it started working. My wife’s brother-in-law had left his laptop in a convertible in a rainstorm, and it just wouldn’t work anymore. Without getting out any rice or hair dryers, I laid hands on it and it started working again right in front of him and a couple other family members. So there are plenty of opportunities for miracles to manifest that don’t involve healing. However, we don’t control the manifestations of any gifts; we can only make ourselves available. If I were to deal with a broken PC and that anointing did not come on me, I would be as helpless as the next person.

God describes what happened to the beggar at the gate called Beautiful as a “miracle of healing” (Acts 4:22). So miracles do encompass healing. These would be instantaneous miracles involving a dramatic physical change, not just a recovery from an illness. For example, if you don’t have a right arm, and you suddenly grow one when hands are laid on you, that is a miracle, not a healing. Your right arm was not healed because there was nothing to heal! You needed a creative miracle to get a new arm.

General Truths about the Gifts of the Spirit

The gifts of the Spirit (or “manifestations of the Spirit”) manifest as the Spirit wills, not as we will. God has left Himself an open door through the gifts to move in ways other than simply responding to faith in His Word. However, faith in God’s Word always works, while you cannot count on a gift of the Spirit manifesting to meet your particular need. You do not “own” or “have” a gift in the sense that you can control its operation. However, you may be consistently used by the Spirit in certain gifts as He sees fit. You cannot “claim” a gift and operate in it “by faith!”

Never attempt to “operate” a gift of the Spirit “by faith” without specific direction from the Lord! Some bad teaching going around says that you can just do it by faith and expect the gift to manifest as you step out. That is presumption and it is extremely dangerous! You can end up having the devil accommodate you since you have ceased to flow under the direction of the Spirit in the gifts of the Spirit. Don’t try to “use” the Spirit. The Spirit is supposed to use you!

I have met people who say, “Open your mouth and believe that God will fill it. Once you’re prophetically activated, you can prophesy to anyone!” Well, I don’t believe that you can prophesy on demand to everyone (and have it really be God), and Peter didn’t believe it either, because he said, “For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost” (2 Peter 1:21). If it isn’t something the Holy Ghost moved you to say, don’t prophesy! And besides that, there are no Bible instructions to “activate” someone prophetically anyway.

Should We Wait until We Sense the Anointing to Lay Hands on the Sick?

That depends upon the context. Mark 16:15-18 does not say that you have to wait to sense the anointing. You can lay hands on the sick in faith in the name of Jesus and expect them to recover. There is no mention of waiting for the anointing in James 5:14-15 because the prayer is offered in faith according to God's promise. There is no indication that the apostles did any special "waiting" before ministering to the sick.

It is unnecessary to sense the anointing. You are anointed to lay hands on the sick and bring deliverance to the captives. You may not always feel as though you are, but you still are. That is why you don't have to wait for some kind of physical sensation that the anointing is present. You simply believe that you are anointed by God to lay hands on the sick on the basis of His Word.

Sometimes when you step out in faith and lay hands on the sick, you'll sense the anointing flowing through you once you've already placed your hands on the person. If you waited to sense that anointing before you laid hands on the person, you might never have sensed it.

That much being said, if you are ministering from the pulpit, you should be sensitive to the Spirit. There will be a greater anointing if you lay hands on the sick at a time when the Holy Spirit specifically directs it than if you just go ahead and do it. If you lay hands on the sick when the healing anointing is specifically present (i.e., the Holy Spirit wants to use you in "gifts of healings" or "working of miracles" or "special faith"), you will likely see greater results than if you just lay hands on people in faith. The reason is that some people are not in faith and they will not be healed if it is simply a faith transaction, whereas when it comes to the gifts of the Spirit, people who are not in faith at all can be healed.

Some "old-time" healing evangelists would not even get up to minister until they sensed the anointing, but that isn't how I prefer to operate. If there is no special anointing to lay hands on the sick early on in the service, I will start teaching the Word to build the people's faith. I would rather do that than stand on the sidelines having everyone repeat a certain chorus for the fortieth time just because I don't want to get up there yet without sensing the anointing to flow in the gifts of the Spirit. What would you do if you never sensed a special anointing during the whole service? That could happen, as the Holy Spirit doesn't move the same way all the time. I'm not throwing stones at the old-timers. I understand why they waited. They wanted to make sure that God was moving. There was certainly a healthy reverence for the Holy Spirit that went along with that. And certain ministers, if they DID get up to teach, you'd be sorry they did. I've met people who flow strongly in the Holy Spirit who can barely teach their way out of a paper bag, yet they continue to see miracles. Different people are gifted different ways. Some people have stronger teaching gifts than others, while others have stronger flows of the anointing when they lay hands on people. I think it's best to strive to be the best we can be in BOTH areas – our ministry of teaching the Word by which faith comes, and our sensitivity to the Holy Spirit's "flow" in a service. If you're already a strong teacher, work on cooperating with the Spirit and spend time praying in other tongues. If you're already strong in the area of flowing with the Spirit, spend time in the Word and work on your preaching. In either case, you'll become an even more effective minister of the gospel.

It is certainly never a sin to lay hands on the sick at ANY time since Jesus gave you the authority to do so!

BEING Anointed vs. FEELING Anointed

Who Can Lay Hands on the Sick in Mark 16, Apostles or All Believers?

All believers.

Jesus said that these signs shall follow them that believe, not just them that preach so that others believe.

According to what He said, there would be two classes of hearers. One class would believe and be baptized and be saved. The other class would not believe and would be damned. And then He said that certain signs would follow those who believe. That refers to the people who were preached to who were in the first category of hearers. They heard the Word preached and believed it. These people were not the apostles themselves, but rather those who would believe because of their preaching. They were “normal” believers. THEY would lay hands on the sick and they would recover. That is NORMAL Christianity.

Stephen was not an apostle, but he did signs and wonders. Philip held no ministry office as we think of one today when he started a citywide revival in Samaria. (He later held the ministry office of evangelist, not apostle.)

God did not confirm the apostles. He confirmed the Word that they preached with signs following. Since His Word is the same today, we should expect God to confirm it with accompanying signs today.

There is no record of any apostle being poisoned in the book of Acts. This is a promise that has been found true by preachers in our day, but none of the apostles fulfilled it as far as we know. This is further evidence that the “signs” part of the Great Commission would be for all believers – including you – today, not just for the original Apostles of the Lamb.

Paul was NOT one of the original apostles who heard Jesus’ commission in person. However, he went out and healed sick people just as they did. You don’t have to be one of the original Apostles of the Lamb to heal the sick!

Jesus appointed seventy preachers who were not identified as apostles (Luke 10:1). They were commanded to heal the sick (Luke 10:8-9) just as the apostles were commanded to heal the sick. They obeyed Jesus and came back rejoicing that even the demons were subject to the name of Jesus (Luke 10:17-20).

Therefore, people who are not apostles CAN lay hands on the sick and see them recover. That includes YOU!

Can We Pray and Believe for the Healing Anointing to Manifest?

Definitely, and you should!

We cannot tell God when and how to move through the manifestations of the Spirit found in 1 Corinthians 12:8-11, but we can pray and expect to see these manifestations in our services. The Holy Spirit may manifest Himself differently during different services. The emphasis in a given service could be on teaching, evangelism, giving, repentance, consecration, healing, prayer, worship, or many other things. If we consistently ask for “gifts of healings” and “working of miracles,” we should expect that they will manifest consistently, though not in the same way in every service.

You usually can't tell ahead of time exactly how God will move, so that is why it is so important to “pray out mysteries” in other tongues. That way, you can pray for God to do things you wouldn't even have considered. Your prayer in other languages authorizes Him to do those things! God has left this “trap door” for us so that He can move on the earth in ways that are “above all we ask or think” without violating the authority that He gave man on the earth. Man still authorizes His moving, even when he doesn't know exactly what he is authorizing when he prays in tongues!

Although the Holy Spirit moves through the gifts as He wills, He moves where there is a desire for Him to move. Otherwise, Paul wasted his time telling the Corinthians to “covet earnestly” the best gifts (1 Corinthians 12:31) and to “desire spiritual gifts” (1 Corinthians 14:1). If it's all up to God, what difference would it make? But you know and I know that there are some churches where the Holy Spirit just seems to hang out and others where the Holy Spirit never manifests Himself. The difference is that He is wanted and welcome in some places, and He is not welcome or even recognized in other places. You wouldn't expect him to be a regular at a church that makes fun of the Holy Spirit manifestations going on across town at a better church.

Thank God, no one told the believers in Acts that they should sit back and just see what the Holy Spirit wants to do instead of praying. Read Acts 4:29-33. The believers asked God for healings, signs and wonders – and got them! If they prayed for that successfully, so can we. Note that the key was praying for boldness for themselves. God gave them the boldness to proclaim the Word despite extreme opposition, and He confirmed His Word with signs and wonders. We have the same covenant that they had! Go for it!

There is a key other than prayer to seeing signs and wonders. Mark 16:20 says that God confirmed the Word with signs following. Part of the preparation for signs and wonders is the proper preaching of the Word. If we would present the Word better and more boldly, we would see more signs and wonders, since they confirm the Word that is preached. Of course, this assumes that you are preaching the Word – something that God can confirm – instead of traditions of men and your personal opinions.

Does Having Worship Leaders Wave Green Flags Help People Get Healed?

Some churches are convinced that it does, but absolutely nothing in Scripture indicates that waving green flags will result in healing. If such were the case, one would expect mass healings to occur at the beginning of auto races.

I am quite aware that someone who sells “worship flags” or “banners” can claim that certain colors, and even combinations of colors, mean certain things and will do certain things to the atmosphere, but there is NO Scriptural backing for any of it. I would have equal authority to come up with my own meanings. For example, waving a white flag means “I surrender all,” waving a red flag means “Beware, a bullfight is in progress,” waving a yellow flag means, “Please drive more slowly in the parking lot on the way out; there has been an accident,” waving a green flag means “GO and tell other people the gospel because that is a far more productive use of your time than sitting around figuring out what flag color combinations should be waved at which points in the next service,” and so on.

If I were sick, I would find the waving of green flags distracting and a hindrance to getting healed. It is hard to “shut yourself in with the Lord” and worship Him in spirit and in truth if you are supposed to be watching the worship team dance and wave banners. I occasionally went to services at a church (that no longer exists) where I felt that as a man of God I had to close my eyes during worship to avoid watching the gyrations of the Twirly Whirly Girlies up front. To me, such “worship dancing” creates a stumbling block for anyone with a lust problem, and possibly opens the door to lust problems with people who don’t already have them. This particular church lost a senior pastor due to sexual sin after losing a previous pastor to sin. Another large church learned a lesson the hard way when it had lust problems ripple through it after putting dancers up front. The lust problems stopped when they put a stop to the “worship dancing.” I saw one dancer in action whose moves would have been more appropriate at a lust club than a church. I’m not saying that every dancer is like that or that the dancers don’t mean well, but there is ZERO instruction for “worship dancing” in the New Testament, which should be a red flag.

If people aren’t careful with the flags, they can create a new NEED for healing. I almost had an eye taken out in a small church by an overzealous and under-cautious flag waver who was going around the sanctuary.

The only way I could picture green flags helping healing occur would be a kind of “placebo effect” in a church where everyone really believes that waving green flags has that effect. Thus, they release their faith when the green flags come out in a way that they would not normally do. However, this has NOTHING to do with the actual operation of the Holy Spirit. There is ZERO instruction in the New Testament about waving flags, which should be a tip-off that the whole colored flag business is a fad. Some people fancy themselves to be color experts with special knowledge about color meanings and their effect on a service, but they’re getting their ideas somewhere other than the Bible. Beware of any new “revelation” that lacks chapter-and-verse backing! If you really want to wave flags, the New Testament doesn’t forbid it, but it has no Biblical significance.

What if You're the Minister and Someone Comes Forward with a Healing Request that You Know is Beyond Your Faith?

First, I would seek the Lord about it quickly under my breath. He may want to use you in the "gift of faith," and you would then be supernaturally be able to believe for a healing that is way beyond something you would be comfortable praying for in faith. If you didn't at least ask, you could miss out on the greatest miracle you've ever seen!

I was preaching under a tent in Central America in a dangerous, drug-ridden area where someone had been killed outside that very tent only weeks ago. (They told me that after I'd agreed to preach there!) I preached in Spanish (without an interpreter) a message entitled "Jesus Heals Everything!" Everything I describe went on in Spanish but I will write it in English so that you can understand it. I laid hands on a lot of people. When I thought I was done, a woman came up with her baby. Everyone was watching, as the other people were no longer in line. She showed me her baby and said that she wanted the baby to have straight, normal feet. I looked and saw a very strange birth defect – the baby's feet had grown out at right angles, not straight ahead like everyone else's. I almost panicked. I knew this case was way beyond anything I'd ever prayed over, and in desperation I talked to the Lord under my breath and asked Him what I should do now that this lady actually believed my "Jesus Heals Everything!" message. I couldn't tell her that I was wrong and that He doesn't really heal everything, because that would make Him out to be a liar. His Word says that with God, all things are possible (Matthew 19:26). And after all, she believed what I preached!

I'll never forget what happened next as long as I live. The Lord told me to grab the baby's feet and straighten them out! So I did. In a matter of seconds, the baby's feet were facing forward like everyone else's. I figured that ought to satisfy that dear woman, but it didn't. She examined her baby's straight feet and said, "There are no arches. I want arches!" She was right; the baby had flat feet. I figured that this would not be a good time to share with her that I have flat feet, too, but I just don't care because I'm used to being the way I am and it doesn't cause me any problems that hinder anything I want to do, except having to avoid certain footwear with pronounced arches! At this point, it was one of those "in for a penny, in for a pound" situations. I asked the Lord what to do and He told me to put my fingers where the baby's arches should have been and press up! I did, and God instantly put arches in that baby's feet!

That apparently excited another woman nearby who also had a baby with archless feet, and she came up so that her baby could get arches! The Lord had me do the same thing, and her baby got instant arches as well!

I saw a similar miracle in our church in Maine years later; a woman was able to run for the first time in twenty years. And my feet are still flat!

It can be tough on your mind and flesh when someone has a “difficult” request. Wait until someone without arches wants them and you’ll see! Your “archenemy” will try to whisper in your ear that you will look like the biggest fool when nothing happens. You have to decide really quickly if you will listen to Him or to the Lord. Sometimes you just have to press the “mute” button on your head (so to speak) and just let the rivers of living water flow out of your spirit.

But now you should be wondering, what if someone comes up with a really difficult request and you DON'T sense a manifestation of the gift of faith or any assurance from the Lord that anything will happen?

I’ve been there, too! I remember a woman coming up who was missing several teeth, and she wanted God to give her replacement teeth on the spot. That was frankly beyond what I was willing to believe for, especially since I sensed that she was trying to get me to do the believing because she wasn’t in faith herself.

I think the best thing to do would be to just be honest and tell her, “That’s really beyond what I feel I can believe for right now. But if YOU can believe for that, according to YOUR faith be it done unto you!” I forget exactly what I said at the moment, but she did not get any new teeth.

If God were moving differently, perhaps the “gift of faith” would have risen up again and she would have gotten her teeth. But there were no “working of miracles” or “gifts of healings” or “special faith” manifestations happening. If anything were to happen, it would have been her faith plus my faith. We love it when the Holy Spirit moves in a special way, but we don’t control His manifestations. Most of the time, it will be “according to our faith” that things will be done (or not done).

Having a deaf person come up used to scare me. That was before one of them started to hear. Now it’s not so scary anymore. Our faith grows as we spend more time in the Word and see God honor His Word in front of our eyes.

That doesn’t mean someone couldn’t get a dental miracle. I’ve believed God to keep a tooth myself! I used to play golf with a man who received a filling during a service and his dentist “chewed him out” for seeing another dentist when it was actually the Lord’s doing. So what didn’t God just give him a new tooth instead of a filling? I don’t know. (It’s okay to admit that you don’t know everything.) God COULD give someone new teeth. I have a friend who called a healing line and had someone who was missing some teeth come up because he wanted to receive new teeth – not fillings, as the teeth were completely gone. My friend laid hands on the man in the name of Jesus and God put new teeth in his mouth on the spot. God is unlimited. The issue is never what He can do, it’s what we can believe (Mark 9:23). As we grow, we should be able to believe for more things and see greater miracles even when there is no special manifestation of the Holy Spirit.

And remember that the God whose power flows through you does not consider any condition “harder” to heal than any other condition. That perception is strictly at our end.

What Can You Do for Comatose or Delirious People Who Cannot Believe God for Themselves?

(There are also people who are in such physical torment that even though they are not vegetables, they are basically unable to pray for themselves. The same comments here would apply to those people.)

I have heard testimonies of people who went in and read God's Word to people in both categories and they were healed. God's Word is spirit and life and there is something about it that gets into the person's spirit even though his mind may not be operating much or at all. Don't sell God's Word short.

One lady we prayed over who had "terminal" cancer ended up slipping into a coma and was never expected to come out of it. But she did come out of it and she ended up singing in her church choir. Another person who wasn't expected to last another day in the ICU was discharged from the hospital the next day without having to be moved to a less-intensive-care room after we went in there and laid hands on her. Just because someone is in desperate straits doesn't mean that the Word won't work.

We prayed over another man who couldn't talk anymore, and he died. (I need to include experiences like this, too!) We found out later that he wanted to die, but his wife wanted him to live. She didn't tell me or the other healing evangelist who was with me that her husband wanted to die until later. You can't override someone else's free will. I recently (at this writing) visited the home of a man in very bad shape at his family's request, but he didn't even want prayer. He wanted to die. It doesn't matter who you are; you will never raise everyone up off of deathbeds because some people don't want to be raised up. Your faith cannot override their free will.

The prayer of faith can be prayed over "any sick among you" (see James 5:14-16), not "any who are sick, but not too terribly sick, among you." In this case, obviously a family member would be making the call to the elders, not the comatose person, unless the person made the call before going into a coma. However, the person must want to live, otherwise there literally isn't anything you can do.

How Can We See More Miracles Today?

1. Teach God's Healing Covenant Clearly.

People must have a Biblical basis for believing in healing. Faith comes by hearing God's Word (Romans 10:17). If people hear that they were healed by the stripes of Jesus and that any sickness in their body is trespassing and is not rightfully theirs, they have a basis for faith to be healed. If they are just trained to wait on manifestations of the Spirit in services and they are never taught to know for sure that Jesus has paid for their healing, they may never get to receive their healing.

Many churches say, "We believe in healing," but they don't believe that Jesus paid for everyone's healing. If you do not believe that Jesus paid for your healing, you have no firm basis for faith. Many relegate healing to the moving of the Spirit, yet Galatians 3:5-6 speaks of God doing miracles in response to faith. When people come with expectant faith like that of the people who came to Jesus, they will get healed as they did in Jesus' ministry.

2. Preach the Gospel to the Lost!

Too many of us ask God to have signs follow us when we aren't going anywhere. Great signs and wonders followed the preaching of the Word. If there is no preaching of the Word to the unsaved, there will be few "signs and wonders"-type miraculous healings. The signs to follow mentioned in Mark 16 are clearly to follow those who believe as they obey the Great Commission by GOING to tell others the good news about what Jesus did for them. The gifts of the Spirit are not playthings for the entertainment of the saints. They confirm the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Why should God "confirm" anything when no one is preaching the resurrected Christ to the lost? There is no message to confirm then! Besides, if you don't even have the boldness to tell a lost person how to avoid hell, what makes you think that you have the boldness to raise up a person in a hospital bed surrounded by pessimistic doctors and unbelieving relatives?

If you want some horrible meetings, invite an evangelist who flows in sign-type gifts to your church, and then don't invite the unsaved. Just show up wanting a good time for the saints. The evangelist and you will both be frustrated. He will have to try to get the saints revived so that they will start inviting people to church rather than hoping that people will come because they saw ads for the services.

3. Ask God for Boldness.

You can't pray for faith, but you can pray for boldness. The apostles did, and God answered their prayer (Acts 4:29-33). You will see a connection in the Bible between bold preaching and signs and wonders. The more boldly we preach Jesus, the more signs and wonders will follow.

4. Ask God for Miracles.

The united believers in Acts 4:29-33 prayed for, and got, miracles, though the emphasis was on boldness to preach the Word, which God said He'd confirm with signs. Therefore, it is scriptural to ask God to perform miracles and expect Him to do them. We have other witnesses on this subject. Paul commanded believers to earnestly desire the gifts of the Spirit (1 Corinthians 12:31, 1 Corinthians 14:1, 1 Corinthians 14:39). However, it needs to be understood that this kind of praying for miracles would have to do with gifts of the Spirit. ANY believer can receive a miracle through faith without asking God to do anything new and without requiring a gift of the Spirit to operate (Galatians 3:5-6).

5. Get Rid of Hindrances.

The believers in Acts were in one accord. If there is strife and discord in your church, you don't qualify for what they got. Sin in the camp will stifle the move of God even under our new covenant, as is discussed elsewhere in this book, despite modern teaching to the contrary. This applies more to leaders and active church members, not to the flakes who flit from church to church and fringe people who attend but never help in any area. Those people don't qualify to be part of a revival anyway, so don't worry about what they do. Those who can't start a revival can't stop it either.

6. Pray in the Holy Spirit.

You can have accurate teaching and still have a dry church. If you want the Holy Spirit to manifest Himself but no one is praying, you will probably miss out on a lot of manifestations. I don't teach as some do that you need an army of intercessors backing you up at all times, but I've found that things flow better when you do some praying in the Holy Spirit in addition to your other preparation. Now please don't get in bondage to this and let the devil tell you that you can't have anything because you didn't pray "enough." His version of "enough" is always more than you actually prayed, no matter how much praying you did. But if you're not praying in the Spirit at all, you'll miss out on some things because Scripture is clear that we are supposed to pray in the Holy Spirit (tongues) as well as with our understanding (1 Corinthians 14:15). You can't figure out with your understanding everything that the Holy Spirit wants to do, so makes sure that you "lean not to your own understanding" (Proverbs 3:5). Paul, who certainly saw a lot of signs and wonders, said that he prayed in tongues more than them all at Corinth (1 Corinthians 14:18), so it must still be important.

7. Reverence and Worship the Lord in Spirit and in Truth.

The testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy (Revelation 19:10), so it stands to reason that when Jesus is exalted, manifestations of the Spirit will follow. No one will have to “change gears” when Jesus is already being glorified when the manifestations of the Spirit further glorify Him. This is a bigger concern in developed countries where the time of worship is often transformed into entertainment or a concert instead of a true corporate worship experience. If worship is reduced to a sing-along or a rock extravaganza, it creates an atmosphere that is not conducive to a move of the Holy Spirit. The #1 thing missing in the church in developed nations is the fear of the Lord. We have always strived to promote an atmosphere of true reverence in our services, and I believe that this is part of why we’ve seen a lot of miracles.

Can I Pray a Certain Prayer to MAKE God Use Me in Certain Spiritual Gifts?

No, because the manifestations of the Spirit are given as the Holy Spirit wills (1 Corinthians 12:8-11), not as WE will.

If there were a way to MAKE God use you in a certain gift, it would be no longer a “gift” but an “obligation” on God’s part.

Believe me, if I could pray to MAKE special faith, working of miracles, and gifts of healings manifest on demand, I would do it every time I encountered a sick person! It would be so much easier if the sick person never had a need to exercise any faith but could rather just trust in special manifestations flowing through me. But that isn’t how these Holy Spirit manifestations work.

It is helpful to DESIRE spiritual gifts, and in fact, we are COMMANDED to do so (1 Corinthians 14:1). So if you DON’T want the Holy Spirit to use you supernaturally, you are out of divine order and out of God’s will on the matter. However, that doesn’t make you lord over the Holy Spirit when it comes to these manifestations. He still decides when to use someone in a particular gift.

In the verse above, He even wants you to desire to prophesy – a particular one of the nine manifestations that Paul enumerates two chapters before (1 Corinthians 12:8-11). So you should desire to prophesy. But that does not mean that you can prophesy on demand whenever YOU want to do it (2 Peter 1:21), as some today teach in error.

It is important that you make yourself AVAILABLE to the Holy Spirit to be used as He sees fit. If you will do that, He WILL use you, because the manifestation of the Spirit is given to EVERY man, at least every man who is open to it (1 Corinthians 12:7). So you have the right to believe that the Holy Spirit WILL use you in at least some of the ways that Paul describes some of the time. However, you do not have the right to specify which gift (if any) He uses you in at any particular time. Leave that up to Him.

How Can I Get God to Use Me in Gifts of Healings?

Gifts of healings manifest as the Holy Spirit wills, not as we will, but they also depend on our desire and yieldedness. There is no way to “make” God use you in any particular “spiritual gift.”

1 Corinthians 14:1 tells us to desire spiritual gifts, especially prophecy. So it is completely biblical to want God to use you in gifts of healings and other manifestations of the Spirit and to present yourself to Him as available. However, the timing and the particular ways He uses you are up to Him, not up to you. There is definitely no “magic prayer” you can pray to MAKE God manifest gifts of healings through you in a particular situation. If there were, believe me, I’d pray whatever it was every time, because I love flowing that way.

If there were some promise to believe so that you could always “claim” gifts of healings, they would be rights – they would no longer be gifts. The word “charismata” is used to describe the “gifts” – and charis is the Greek word for GRACE! Manifestations of the Spirit are by grace, independent of what we deserve.

However, you can do some things to position yourself so that IF the Holy Spirit wants to use you in that way, it will be easy. Some other things people do are a waste of time as far as “getting God to use you” a certain way. So let’s look at a list of things that help, followed by a list of things that don’t help. First, the helpful things:

HELPFUL THING #1: Be Born Again and Baptized with the Holy Spirit

This should go without saying, but these manifestations are for believers. It would be silly to expect the Holy Spirit to use you if you aren’t baptized with the Holy Spirit. If you aren’t already in both of these categories, this book has articles that will show you how to fix that!

HELPFUL THING #2: DESIRE to Be Used by the Holy Spirit

Some people don’t WANT God to use them in supernatural ways. That’s why Paul exhorted us to DESIRE spiritual gifts (1 Corinthians 14:1). If you go around saying, “I would never want to be used that way,” you will hinder the Holy Spirit from using you! If you WANT to flow supernaturally, God will accommodate you, though He still has control of the particulars. Make yourself AVAILABLE to the Holy Spirit – comparatively few Christians are.

Just sitting around saying, “If God wants to use me, He just will, so whatever!” is not good enough. That is NOT obeying the Word when it says to DESIRE spiritual gifts. It is wrong NOT to desire to be used in spiritual gifts because God COMMANDS you to desire to be used that way! You should not be “in neutral” about your desire for the Holy Spirit to use you.

HELPFUL THING #3: Give God Something to Confirm

The disciples went everywhere preaching, and God confirmed the WORD with the accompanying signs. Make sure that you minister the Word, first and foremost. Never base ANY kind of ministry, especially healing ministry, on manifestations of the Spirit. Always give the Word first place. Now there may be services where the Holy Spirit just has you “flow” and not preach, but such services will be the exceptions because people need to know from the Bible where God and Jesus stand on healing. Even if you aren’t in a ministry office, you should put the Word first when sharing about healing privately. Don’t just run around trying to slap hands on people who have no clue what’s going on.

HELPFUL THING #4: Pray in the Holy Spirit

To see people get healed by faith (which should be the primary goal), learn the Word and share it as boldly and accurately as you can. To see people healed by the gifts of the Spirit as the Spirit wills, spend time praying in the Holy Spirit. Often this is the time when God will show you a specific way that He wants to move through gifts of healings. If you spend no time in prayer, you could miss out on what He wants. The servant is not above his master. Jesus spent considerable time praying. If you want to see His results, you will have to pray as well as study and preach the Word.

HELPFUL THING #5: Keep Your Flesh Under

Your unspiritual body will always fight you when you want to do supernatural things. I’m sure that you can think of times when you decided to pray but your body screamed, “NO! I’m too tired! Go to bed!” Yet if you were going to spend that time watching football playoffs for hours, your body would give you no fight. So pursue the things of the Spirit on purpose so that you don’t fulfill the lusts of the flesh (Galatians 5:16). I’ve found that I need to fast on occasion to keep my flesh in check. Fasting will usually put a quick stop to flesh that wants to run wild. However, you don’t have to go on the extreme fasts promoted in some circles. God’s “atomic power” can flow through you without you having to fast for weeks.

HELPFUL THING #6: Make Yourself Available to Minister to the Sick

If you’re willing to do what God has already told you that you can do by FAITH (laying hands on the sick and having them recover), that is often when gifts of healings manifest. Let’s face it – if you don’t minister to any sick people, you’ll never flow in gifts of healings!

HELPFUL THING #7: Don't Put Gifts of Healings in a Box

Sometimes the opportunity to be used in gifts of healings could be staring you in the face, and yet because of your overly narrow preconceived idea of how gifts of healings work, you could miss it. See the discussion, Don't Put Gifts of Healings into a Box for an elaboration on this point.

See also the answer to the question, How Can We See More Miracles Today? For some other thoughts on what we can do to facilitate the flow of the Holy Spirit.

Now let's consider some things that will not help you at all!

UNHELPFUL THING #1: Trying to Impress God

I've known people who seemed to be convinced that if they would just be the "best" Christians around, read the Word more than everyone else, pray more than everyone else, do more Christian activities than everyone else, etc., then God would reward them by using them mightily in spiritual manifestations and revival involvement. Quit wasting your time and energy with that kind of thinking! Gifts of the Spirit are just that – gifts, not merit badges for good performance. They are based on GRACE, not WORKS – you cannot earn or deserve them. The more you think, "If I work harder for God, God will reward me with spiritual gifts," the farther you will be from being able to flow in God's power.

Sooner or later you may encounter some of the types of people I have met who seemed to want to be test cases of how carnally you can act and yet still be used by the Holy Spirit. Some people with awful prayer lives, awful love walks, selfish and arrogant attitudes and general fleshly behavior seem to "get away with it" and still be used more powerfully than we are. Again, it's because gifts of the Spirit are given by GRACE, not MERIT! Now I'll caution you that sloppy living WILL cost you in the long run, but I'll tell you, God lets some people get away with a lot more than I would while He waits for them to repent. I guess that's why it's a good thing that God runs the universe and I don't.

UNHELPFUL THING #2: Constantly Begging God to Use You in Gifts of Healings

God's call on your life is not going to change just because you want it to. If He wants you use you frequently in gifts of healings, and you're available, He will use you. But it's still up to Him. I was on the opposite end of one type of manifestation – I kept begging God NOT to use me that way, and He rebuked me. He had to remind me that He is the potter and I am the clay, and whatever He wants is what matters, not what I want. I gave up my rights to what I want the day I handed my life over to Jesus.

The question is not IF but WHICH when it comes to being used in manifestations of the Spirit. God DOES want to use YOU! But it's up to HIM which way He uses you.

UNHELPFUL THING #3: Trying to Get Someone Else's Anointing

I'm not sure why you would want the anointing of someone who is called to do different things from what you're called to do. Every person's calling is different. Yet some people go from meeting to meeting thinking that if they just "soak" under someone else's anointing, it will get on them. Or WORSE, they think that if they get in enough of someone's prayer lines, the minister's anointing will be transferred to them. (A whole separate answer is devoted to this whole thing of getting someone else's anointing.)

UNHELPFUL THING #4: Waiting to "Feel" the Anointing

You might never "feel" the anointing if you won't budge until your flesh gets some kind of confirmation that God's Word is true. God wants you to lay hands on the sick in faith, believing His Word. When you are willing to step out in faith, that is often when a special anointing will kick in. The fact that you "felt" the anointing on a particular occasion before you laid hands on someone does not guarantee that you will "feel" the anointing before you lay hands on someone else.

Should I Just Go to the Big-Box Store and Lay Hands on People in Wheelchairs?

I don't see any Bible support for the idea that you can just go to a store, see someone in a wheelchair, and just lay hands on him and command him to be healed without doing anything else first.

First, signs shall FOLLOW those people who are preaching the Word! If you don't share the Word with the person in the wheelchair, he has no basis for faith. Even if something were to happen when you laid hands on him, it is doubtful that he could keep his healing. The Biblical pattern is to present the Word and THEN heal the sick. If you just lay hands on the person, there is no Word for a sign to follow.

Second, Jesus did not just go up to people at random and heal them without saying anything. Even in John 5:2-19, where the crippled man was clearly not in faith, He asked him first, "Do you want to be made well?" His answer could be taken as a backhanded yes – he was there because he wanted to get in that water and be made well, after all, but other people were beating him to it. This is similar to what could happen where you minister by the "gift of faith" – the person might not be in faith, but God uses you to raise the person up anyway. Perhaps someday you will just lay hands on someone in a wheelchair and see him walk by the gift of faith – but you cannot depend on the gift of faith operating all the time. Faith for healing comes by hearing the Word (Romans 10:17), so if you never present the good news about healing to the person, you can't count on him being in faith for his healing.

Third, the multitudes came to hear and be healed. They did not come ONLY to receive healing without hearing the Good News of the kingdom first. If we expect people to just be healed without hearing, we are not following Jesus' pattern. It was not the norm for Him or His disciples to go around looking for sick people and slapping hands on them at the first opportunity. When the disciples were commanded to HEAL the sick, they were told to PREACH first that the kingdom of heaven had come near. The healing followed the preaching.

Fourth, Jesus and His disciples usually had the sick either come to them or be brought to them. In a few cases, they were sought out by others to come minister to a specific person. Just going up to "random" sick people was not the norm.

Fifth, you don't know if the person WANTS to be healed! Many sick people are not gung-ho about getting healed. They are content to stay as they are. If the person has no strong motivation to be well, you are wasting your time. Even at the Pool of Bethesda, Jesus asked the man if he wanted to be made whole before He did anything else.

Sixth, you don't know whether the person in the wheelchair knows Jesus. It is infinitely better to go to heaven after living sick than to go to hell after being healed. His MOST important need is to be saved from his sins. That is more important than being healed or having his "felt needs" ministered to. The same good news tells about forgiveness of sins AND healing; you should not present one at the expense of the other.

I'll share something I've learned about many people in wheelchairs. They get tired of people coming over and trying to raise them up in the name of Jesus. Unfortunately, there are some egotists whose real motivation is to see an "awesome" healing testimony with their name in lights because they pulled someone out of a wheelchair. For some people, a wheelchair is a "target" for healing ministry. So if the person seems cynical at first, that's could be the reason. Make sure that you are motivated by real concern about the person, not a desire to brag about your accomplishment if the person gets up and walks.

I'll just share one more thing I've learned about some people in wheelchairs. Some of them actually CAN walk for short distances and using the wheelchair is just easier for extended periods. So if someone gets up and walks, it's only a real testimony if that person could not previously get up and walk at all!

I Sense that God Wants to Use Me to Lay Hands on the Sick during Services at My Church. What Should I Do?

Follow any known protocol that your pastor has established. He has authority over his flock, so you always need to cooperate with his directives.

If there is no established protocol for a situation where you sense that the Holy Spirit wants to use you to minister healing through you, talk to your pastor. Let him know what you are sensing. He can let you know what the ground rules are as far as when you could change the order of a service. For example, it is unlikely that he would want you to interrupt him in the middle of a message to call a healing line. Of course, it's unlikely that the Holy Spirit would want to interrupt him if he's speaking by the Holy Spirit!

It is more likely that there will be freedom for spontaneous action in a small church as opposed to a church with 10,000 people where the services are being televised on an international Christian TV network. However, you can be in a large church that is open to the Holy Spirit and the pastor may allow you to minister healing if you sense that the anointing is on you to do it. In such a case, though, you will almost certainly have to already have a good relationship with the pastor and the church staff before you would be granted that kind of freedom. They would want to know that you have some kind of track record when it comes to hearing from God and healing the sick – as well as being a reliable, non-flaky Christian.

Also, there are times I'm aware that a healing anointing has seemed to have just come into the room, but I'm not the one who's supposed to flow in it. When I served other healing ministers, they were always the ones who would do the actual ministry. But I did learn to sense when that anointing was present. I would know that the minister was going to change the order of the service to call a healing line before he announced it. So my point is that even if you feel that the healing anointing is present, that is not necessarily an indication that YOU are supposed to lay hands on the sick now.

Back to the track record thing. You may wonder, "Isn't that like getting out of college and having all the employers look for two years of experience? How are you supposed to get two years of experience when businesses only hire people with two years of experience? Well, how am I supposed to GET a track record if only people with a track record can minister to the sick in services?"

My answer is that you get used to ministering to the sick OUTSIDE of services by telling them the Word and laying hands on them. That's how I started. When you start seeing results, word will get out.

Some larger churches such as the one that I attend require members to attend small group meetings. The small group settings allow time for more personal ministry. That would be one place where the Lord might start using you.

However, "outside" the service doesn't mean that you just go around immediately after the service and try to lay hands on people in the parking lot. If the pastor doesn't know you well, he will almost certainly put a stop to that – and he should. Too many flakes show up to give people "parking lot prophecies" and who knows what else.

After a while, if people know that the Lord uses you along those lines, you might have people ask you to lay hands on them after the service, and that's fine unless there's a rule against it.

Where this could get touchy is if there are DESIGNATED altar ministers who are available to lay hands on the sick after the service. If you start taking upon yourself the job of someone who has to be trained and appointed by the pastor to minister after a service, you could be seriously stepping on toes, to say nothing of stepping out of order.

So what do you do in a church where you have to be DESIGNATED by the pastor to minister healing after a service, but you repeatedly sense that God wants you to minister to the sick? That's an easy one. Go through whatever training is required and become one of the DESIGNATED altar ministers who lays hands on the sick! If that's how God uses you, that would be a good place for you unless the Lord directs you otherwise.

You might think, "I already know about divine healing. I don't need to go to a training class!" But you don't know EVERYTHING about divine healing and neither do I – even though I've TAUGHT the healing class at the church where I'm a member. Even today, I would gladly sit and listen to someone else teach on healing as long as they know what they're talking about. I'm happy to hear messages on healing that other people preach at our church. I don't think you can hear "too much" on the subject any more than you can be "too healed." If a training class is a requirement, don't be too PROUD to attend it. Part of the training will probably include what your particular church's expectations are and how your particular church does things. There would be no way for you to know that even if you just ministered to the biggest crowd ever assembled in some African country.

To What Extent Are Prolific Miracles Limited to Those Called to the Ministry?

Some preachers obviously walk in a lot more anointing for miracles and healings than the rest of us do. This is to be expected because 1 Corinthians 12:28 talks about those who have ministries along the lines of working of miracles and gifts of healings. (See 1 Corinthians 12:28-30.) Because the Spirit uses only some people in this spectacular way, it stands that the rest of us will not flow in that degree of power or anointing for healing. If we all were equal when it comes to healings and miracles, Paul would not have mentioned some individuals with the comment, “Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healings?”

This does not mean that you cannot lay hands on the sick – you can. However, you cannot expect to be used like a minister who majors in this kind of ministry unless that is also your function in the Body of Christ. You have authority to lay hands on the sick and expect them to recover. However, you may not see as many instantaneous spectacular miracles as someone called to be an evangelist.

One obvious reason that these ministers have more miracles to report than you do is that they encounter more needs every day than you do. They are always ministering to the sick. They have a heavy anointing because the anointing needs to be there to meet the needs of many sick people. Many times, sick people healed in those meetings would never have been healed by their own faith. If the ministers had a lesser degree of anointing on them, they would never have been able to minister to long lines of sick people in one night. They need a greater special anointing for healing because God has called them to minister to more sick people.

Also, these kinds of anointings are usually, but not always, associated with the office of the evangelist. Philip is our example of a New Testament evangelist. He preached the gospel with signs following and turned many to Jesus. The purpose of the signs is to advertise God’s goodness so that the goodness of God can draw men to repentance (Romans 2:4). This doesn’t mean that only evangelists can flow in these gifts consistently. I have seen people with prophetic ministries flow in these gifts, also. Signs and wonders are also the calling card of the apostle (2 Corinthians 12:12).

Don’t sell yourself short if you don’t have a full-time healing and/or miracle ministry. God may well use you in a spectacular way. Stephen was a layperson who did great signs and wonders. Philip had never been commissioned (that we know of) as an evangelist before he went to Samaria; he was a table waiter! When he did the work of an evangelist by preaching the gospel to the lost, the signs followed. (He was later called an evangelist. He is the only New Testament person so labeled.) Ananias, who prayed for Paul to receive the Holy Spirit, was used supernaturally in a way that still affects the entire world. Yet he was an ordinary believer as far as we know. We don’t know anything else that Ananias did. There are plenty of good testimonies today of ordinary believers reading and believing Mark 16:18, laying hands on the sick in the name of Jesus and having them recover.

Inasmuch as you play the part of an evangelist to those around you, you should expect signs to follow the preaching of the Word out of your mouth, just as they would follow the preaching of an evangelist. The more lost people you reach, the more signs and wonders you should see.

Can I Die if I Try to Stand in a Ministry Office I'm Not Called to?

A well-known faith teacher taught his training center students that trying to stand in an office to which you are not called can cost you your life. I even have his book at home that says so. I would agree with that statement the way that I believe he meant it – that if you presumptuously try to stand in an office KNOWING that God has not commissioned you to stand in that office, the results can be dire. The teacher above cites a case of a prophet who tried to stand in the office of teacher simply because he saw other people doing it and wanted in on it – even though it soon became obvious that he couldn't teach if his life depended on it. His teaching caused confusion in the Body of Christ. He had always had notable miracles, yet his atrocious teaching caused serious problems. He died suddenly and prematurely. This could have been a real stumbling block for younger Christians. The wiser Christians would know that an anointing does not prove proper doctrine. I once had a lesser-known guest speaker at my church who had prodigious miracles, but I could never invite him back after he tried to introduce crazy doctrine, in this case, that you are supposed to be physically immortal until Jesus returns. (Others in prior generations before him had fallen into that same bad teaching before they died!) I had to rebuke him.

However, the devil loves to twist people's words as well as God's words, and some teaching began to circulate among some of the well-known faith teacher's followers: "You'd better know for sure what you're called to do before you start standing in a ministry office. Otherwise, you could DIE because you intruded into the wrong office!" The irony is that this dire warning contradicted other things that this same faith teacher taught his students! He taught his students not to get caught up with names and titles, but to go out and preach Christ. He taught that it would at some point become obvious what your ministry was and which office you stood in without anyone having to announce it.

That is good advice. The devil would love to keep you out of the ministry (if you're called to it) by making you think that you have to have your calling and office all figured out before you start, lest you get sick and die by being in the wrong place. This will lead to trying to figure everything out, even though most if not all of us could not tell people everywhere we're going to go in ministry at a young age, even when we think we know! It is better to just get out there and preach and let the Lord lead you where He wants you to go.

Even if you think you're called to be an apostle, don't run around when you just graduated from Bible school handing out business cards labeling yourself as an apostle. (By the way, I can't think of ANYONE at this writing who has ever handed me a business card with "apostle" on it who truly stands in that office!) Even the Apostle Paul didn't start out in that office. He was either a prophet, a teacher or both (Acts 13:1). Wouldn't it have been a shame if a fellow believer Bar-Bummer (the Son of Discouragement) approached Paul and said, "Paul, you are a teacher. Don't intrude into the ministry of apostle or you could DIE!" People fail to realize that the Lord can shift you from one office to another or have you stand in more than one office at the same time. As a result, they can run around saying that someone is missing God by doing something new when the person is not missing God at all. This can turn into a form of "touching God's anointed" that will not bring any honor to Jesus or benefit to the one doing the criticizing.

The other problem is trying to pigeonhole ministers. One evangelist might prophesy a lot, while another might also be an accomplished teacher. No two ministries are alike. Let people hear from God for themselves, and don't get involved with doom prophecies!

I had a well-meaning former pastor beg me not to start the church I started. He assured me that I was not called to the office of pastor, and that if I tried to operate in that office, I would soon go broke and lose my health because I would try to stand in the wrong office. I still respect this man, but I had to obey God rather than him, and I'm glad that I did. My net worth multiplied and I never walked in better health. We had so many miracles that an internationally-known church spent 15 minutes in one of its services just rattling off the miracles we'd seen to stir up the congregation! Now that doesn't prove that I was in God's will, as the Lord is gracious. That's the next point. We operate under grace, not under law. I'm quite aware that Uzzah died touching something he wasn't supposed to touch, but that was under the law.

Be very sure of this – under grace, God is not going to kill or otherwise judge you if you perform the function of a certain office believing that you are supposed to be doing what you're doing, even if it turns out later that you settle into a different office or even never really belonged in the office that you tried to occupy at first. Say that you become the umpteenth person who was SURE that he would NEVER pastor a church and you end up pastoring one. (I can relate first-hand to that!) But on the way, you led a bunch of people to Christ doing the work of an evangelist. Will God smite you for "intruding" into the office of evangelist? Of course not! As long as you are doing what you honestly believe God wants you to do, God will always have your back even if you miss it along the way. You don't have to worry about being struck dead for going out and advancing the Kingdom of God the best way you know how!

If you go out and evangelize, you are obeying the Great Commission even if you are not called to be an evangelist. If you desire to prophesy, you are agreeing with Scripture even if you are not called to be a prophet. If you teach others the Word, you are obeying Jesus' command to teach others even if you are not called to be a teacher. So don't let the devil get you into fear about missing your real calling. God will reveal to you anywhere where you're missing it (Philippians 3:15) as you get out there and serve Him the best way you know how.

Can I Get Sick or Die If I Receive Communion While Unworthy to Do So?

No.

Paul did not warn the Corinthians about receiving communion in an unworthy state; he warned them about receiving communion in an unworthy manner, as is clear from the context. Receiving communion “unworthily” does NOT consist of doing so when God considers you unworthy. The “unworthy” problem was solved when you became a Christian! You are ALWAYS worthy to partake of the Lord’s Supper because of the blood of Jesus that is being commemorated! How ironic that a Christian could think himself unworthy when the blood symbolized by the fruit of the vine declares otherwise!

Even an unbeliever doesn’t have to worry about this – unworthily is an adverb, not an adjective. It describes HOW you partake, not the PERSON doing the partaking.

The “unworthy manner” consisted of pigging out so that other people had to miss out. Those doing the pigging out were mistreating the Lord’s Body (His Church). They were treating the elements as regular food instead of symbols of Jesus’ broken body and shed blood. Simply put, they were making light of something holy that Jesus commanded us to do.

Fear of partaking “while unworthy” has robbed many Christians of the very thing they need – a reminder of the broken body and shed blood of Jesus, when it was that shed blood that made them worthy in God’s sight!

Why Are There More Miracles on the Mission Field than at Home?

If you describe the “mission field” as third-world countries, there are some good reasons listed below.

Parts of the United States have turned into mission fields in their own right. It used to irk me that I would see more and better miracles in other countries than I would see back in the United States. But after I relocated to a “mission field” part of the United States, I saw miracles happen there that were as good as what I used to see in other countries. The reasons below for seeing more miracles really apply more to third-world countries than simply being on “the mission field,” but even in developed countries, many of these apply on reservations for indigenous people.

1. Miracles Follow the Preaching of the Gospel

Mark 16:15-18 makes it clear that the healing of the sick accompanies going into the entire world. Because the gospel is reaching the lost, God performs “signs and wonders” (which include but are not limited to healings) to get their attention. If you’re not reaching the lost, you aren’t “going,” so why should you expect any signs to follow you? God confirms His Word. If you aren’t giving out His Word, He has nothing to confirm! On the mission field, there is a greater emphasis on evangelism, so there would tend to be more dramatic confirmations of the gospel message.

2. They Don’t Have Christian Bookstores Full of Anti-Healing Unbelief Books

It’s great to tell new believers what they have in Christ before the wet-blanket crowd gets a chance to tell them that you never know what our sovereign God will do, Paul had an eye disease, and you’re Job Number Two. Once people latch on to these arguments, you cannot get them healed unless you can show them why these arguments are invalid. That is one reason for this book. You can give them some good reasons why these traditions of men don’t make sense. See the Objections Overruled! section.

3. They Have a Greater Desperation for Miracles because the Medical Facilities Aren’t as Good

People in some countries can’t just show a card and get medical treatment for most conditions. Many times, either God heals them or they don’t get healed at all. Thus, they are more desperate for miracles. They are like the woman with the issue of blood who spent all her living on doctors, but only grew worse. She was so desperate that she risked execution for being in public with a discharge to get her healing. People who are that desperate are ripe to receive a miracle. If you figure that you can live with your illness because you can get some medicine at the local drugstore, you will likely live with it instead of without it. You aren’t desperate enough.

However, desperation by itself is not faith, and “desperate” prayers don’t work unless they are desperate faith prayers. Remember, the woman in Mark 5:25-34 was desperate, but she came in faith based on what she had heard of Jesus. She was not coming in desperation alone. The people need to hear God’s healing covenant so that they can pray in faith, not simply in desperation.

I used to visit a certain country a lot where you could see bugs flying in and out of windows at the local hospital! Even the unsaved tour guide said that many people in that country went to miracle services at church when they got sick, as you’d have to be rather desperate to go to a hospital like that! But then something happened that hurt miracle service attendance – the country built a sanitary, state-of-the-art hospital that wouldn’t look out of place in the United States. Sadly, when people have the option to get modern medical care, they often stop trusting God for healing the way that they used to do, and from my perspective, that seems to be what happened there.

4. They Don’t Intellectualize Everything

Education is good, but it makes a lousy god. You can’t completely grasp the things of God with your head. Faith is of the heart. Jesus never told you to believe in your head. Sometimes we block our healing by trying to intellectualize it instead of believing it in our hearts. It’s good to educate your head, but not at the expense of growing in the things of the Spirit. People in third-world countries are often less educated and would be less likely to have this problem.

Here’s an aside. Never knock education. Keep learning and get as much education as you want. Preachers do everyone a disservice when they brag about their lack of education. “I’m just a simple ole farm boy with a sixth-grade education, but God uses me to lay hands on the sick!” You don’t even need a sixth-grade education to lay hands on the sick; that privilege comes free with salvation. But ignorance is nothing to brag about. Don’t be proud of your lack of education. If you ever get a big ministry laying hands on the sick, you won’t be able to run the business side of your ministry with a sixth-grade education! You’ll need some other people around you to run your business affairs for you. Ministries are businesses whether you want to think of them that way or not. You don’t go into the ministry for the money, but if you’re in the ministry, there is a business side to run. Good ministries have been destroyed not because they didn’t know the Word but because they didn’t know how to handle money and the business side of ministry. One Bible school founder said that more ministries fail because of the business side of things than fail because of the spiritual side of things.

You are not more spiritual because you are less educated! Never make fun of people because they have advanced degrees. Some such people have unfortunately turned into eggheaded theologians, but there are intelligent people out there who love God and have doctorates. When you knock education from the pulpit, you alienate the intelligent people in the congregation who worked hard and sacrificed to get a good education. That’s self-defeating, because these people usually make better money than the less educated and can give better offerings!

Consider that the men in Jesus' parable of the talents got different numbers of talents according to their different abilities! Get more education and you get more ability, assuming that you really learn your stuff and don't just cram to get good marks on tests.

5. God Meets People Where They Are

People on the mission field are often more open to the gifts of the Spirit. They may not know much about the Word, but they know that God can do miracles. They are much like the nobleman in John 4:46-53. They are unlearned, but also tenacious and sometimes desperate to see miracles. Such people will put us to shame if we aren't careful! God is willing to meet them where they are. His perfect will is for them to know the truth so that they do not have to depend on manifestations of the Spirit for healing. But God knows that they haven't had the opportunities that you've had to hear the Word taught, and He is patient with them.

6. They Are Used to the Supernatural

The devil will move wherever he has an open door, and less-developed countries often have more demonic activity than more-developed countries. (I was going to say that some places "overseas" have more demonic activity, but it occurred to me that you might live in one of those places, and overseas to you would mean somewhere else. I suppose that by definition no one lives overseas, since "overseas" to people overseas is somewhere else, like where you live.) The people already know that there is a spirit realm and that the supernatural is real. Witch doctors still make a good living in many places by "healing" the sick temporarily until the devil makes them sick again so that they have to go pay the witch doctor more money. I think it is easier for the people to accept the supernatural side of the gospel when they are used to the supernatural in general. I have seen this with my own eyes.

One benefit I've seen in such places is that powerless Christianity doesn't last long there. If you can't cast our demons in a place where there are a lot of demons, you're useless to the locals. In one particular country I've visited, the locals had a tradition of explicitly inviting a demon to enter their bodies to heal them. So it's no wonder that when sweet old Granny comes forward to be saved, she starts getting belligerent in a man's voice because that demon doesn't want her to receive Jesus. If you can't deal with that demon, people won't bother coming to see your preach much longer.

Unfortunately, “Christian” witch doctors out there pose as Christian ministers but actually minister under the influence of evil spirits. Their ministries are easy for us to spot because we know God’s Word. The fact that they act and teach contrary to the Bible is a give-away that their ministries are not of God. (This is why there is a need for teaching as well as evangelism on the mission field. Many times, when we think of a distant country, we just think that they need evangelists. But after the people are saved, they need pastors! They need apostles, teachers and prophets, too, and such people also need to be sent to the mission field.) If the people knew the Bible better, they would reject the fake ministers. Also, some ministers may be Christians who have brought in elements of their old pagan religion into their Christianity and have concocted a mess. Some confused people even worship BOTH Jesus and Satan, or so they say. I guess they are hedging their bets. They are also offending our jealous God in a big way.

When the people have a zeal for God and the gifts of the Spirit but little knowledge of the Word, they are open to fraudulent or flaky ministries that are based on spectacular “manifestations” instead of the Word. That is why zeal must be coupled with knowledge!

I know a country where a fraudulent minister gave out demonic words of knowledge and fleeced the people for a lot of money before they wised up. He would tell people the exact location of valuables and claim that the Lord had instructed him to command the person to give these valuables as offerings. Just because someone can tell you your exact bank balance isn’t a sign from God that you should give him whatever “God” revealed to him that you should give! But the people didn’t learn that until it was too late.

Is a Particular Epidemic God's Judgment on Our Country?

It seems that whenever a bad storm, earthquake or epidemic hits a country, someone will be quick to declare that it is "God's judgment" on the country. "This is payback for all the unborn babies that were aborted!" "God is judging us for all the sexual immorality that is rampant in the land so that He doesn't have to apologize to Sodom and Gomorrah!" "This is what we get for turning from God as a nation." And there is an absolute truckload of Old Testament Scripture that would seem to back up these ideas.

No Old Testament-Style "Woes" Declarations during the Church Age

The problem with all this is that we are under the New Covenant (grace), not the Old Covenant (law). We do not see the New Testament leaders pronouncing woes on countries during the Church Age (after the resurrection and the coming of the Holy Spirit). Woes in the book of Revelation will be poured out in profusion, but these are after the Church Age.

God's Message Today

God's message during the Church Age is one of reconciliation through Jesus Christ, not condemnation for breaking His covenant. As spelled out more elsewhere in this book, the Jews repeatedly broke the Old Covenant and paid a big price for it. However, it is impossible to break the New Covenant because it was established between God and Jesus, neither of whom will ever break it. (This subtle point is found in the third chapter of Galatians.) Our message is the good news that Jesus paid for all our sins when God punished Him. His sacrifice purchased forgiveness and right standing with God for us.

You should keep this and the following in mind the next time someone tries to convince you that an epidemic (or other disaster) is divine wrath against your country.

Forgiveness Has Been Purchased

No matter how bad the sins of the country are, Jesus paid for all of them to be forgiven. It would be a mixed message for God to proclaim that He is not holding sins against the people who are being offered eternal life and also to proclaim that He is now making the nation pay for the sins that Jesus already paid for.

2 Corinthians 5:18-19:

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

Would not an epidemic sent as judgment be proof that God IS imputing the sinners' trespasses unto them during the Church Age?

Please do not confuse this with the heresy of universalism – if people do not RECEIVE the forgiveness Jesus paid for during their lifetimes, they will suffer forever in the lake of fire. However, that suffering is after this life, not during it.

Are There at Least 10 Righteous People in Your Country?

Suppose your country is Sodom the Second. By God's standard in Genesis, if there are at least 10 righteous people in your country, God will spare it the destruction that came upon Sodom (Genesis 18:32). Start counting. If you can count at least 10 believers in your country, you can be sure that God would spare your country a Sodom-level extermination event.

It has never been God's style to punish the righteous along with the wicked. Even in the case of Sodom and Gomorrah, the angel who was to destroy them told Lot that he could not do anything until Lot and his family were out of there (Genesis 19:22)!

Is Your Country THAT Bad Compared to Others?

It seems that it is usually the best countries that get the brunt of doom prophecies – ones that are sending out missionaries and helping to evangelize the world. If God were wiping out countries for wickedness, there are far worse countries where He could start – such as ones where they routinely imprison, torture and kill Christians.

The Blood of Jesus Speaks Better Things than the Blood of Abel

Lest someone think that an epidemic is caused by the blood of murdered unborn babies crying out for judgment (based on Genesis 4:10), consider that the blood of Jesus speaks better things than the blood of Abel that cried out for vengeance (Hebrews 12:24). Abel's blood cried out for JUDGMENT, but Jesus' blood cries out for MERCY!

Does God Have Bad Aim?

A bad hurricane came near a city in the United States known for a celebration of moral depravity. Some preachers came right out and said that it was God's wrath being poured out on that city's sin. But if so, God had bad aim. The worst of the storm did not come to that city but went elsewhere. One would think that God has better aim if He really wants to punish one city in particular. The same would be true concerning an epidemic. The fact that it is worse around one city doesn't mean that God was judging that city. When God meant business in the Old Testament, everyone would be smitten by the epidemic who hadn't already been killed by other means.

The Tower of Siloam

When the tower of Siloam fell and killed 18 people, Jesus made it clear that those who died were NOT under special judgment for sins (Luke 13:4). It is sad how quickly people jump to conclusions about a disaster hitting an area being judgment on that area. Remember, God would be willing to spare an area with only 10 righteous in it – even if the area is famous for its sin.

God's Response to National Sins

God's response to national sins under the New Covenant is to demonstrate His goodness that leads men to repentance (Romans 2:4). Here in the United States, God has shown His mercy over and over in the past when the nation started to put God on the shelf.

If you are another Jonah, disappointed that the fiery wrath of God has been put on hold, take heart – your country will get what's coming to it after the Church Age is over. (Read the book of Revelation.) In the meantime, expect God to demonstrate His grace.

What if Someone Doesn't Want to be Healed?

You cannot force healing on someone who doesn't want to be healed. You cannot override another person's free will with your faith. Some people don't want to be healed.

Some people would rather have people feel sorry for them, pamper them, and generally dote over them, than be healed. Some people would rather have something to crab about than be healed. Some people would rather get their disability payments from the government or the insurance company than be healed and have to work for a living. Some people are just tired of life and want to die. Some people are so unhappy with their lives that they are willing to commit "Satan-assisted suicide" by letting a disease kill them. Some people are worn out from battling a chronic illness for a long time and they're unwilling to continue. It's sad, but you cannot force healing on them.

Some people who have been near death have caught a glimpse of the glory that awaits them. Heaven must be an indescribably wonderful place because people who get a peek at it can lose their will to continue living here. Once they see where they're going and compare it to what they have here, especially if they are in constant pain, they may want to "check out" right away. You can't stop them. A famous minister raised his wife from the dead. His wife was upset because she did not want to come back. He had to let her die again! I know someone who had the same experience.

The only way to deal with people who do not want to be healed is to love them, pray for them on your own and try to tell them the gospel concerning healing. You can let them know that God loves them so much that He does not want them to suffer with illness. But if a person does not want prayer for healing, you are wasting your time and probably annoying the person as well.

Does this mean that if the person has given up, you have to give up too? Don't write a person off just because he doesn't want prayer right now. The person may decide later that he wants you to pray for him after all. Unfortunately, he will just have to stay sick for now. If the person wants to die, God will respect that decision, even though it may not be what you or his family members want.

What if Someone Wants Healing but Doesn't Want Jesus?

It depends on why the person doesn't want Jesus.

If the person doesn't want Jesus because he doesn't know much of anything about the real Jesus, God in His mercy will sometimes reveal His goodness by performing a healing miracle on such a person.

However, when someone understands who Jesus is but still chooses to reject Him, the person will have to remain sick unless God, in a sovereign act of mercy, moves through the gifts of the Spirit. Just as the new birth is available only through Jesus, divine healing is available only through Jesus. Divine healing and forgiveness of sins were part of the same atonement. It's a package deal. Asking for healing while rejecting the Healer is like telling the mailman that you want your mail but you don't want him to deliver it to you. It's like saying that you want your refrigerator fixed but you don't want the repairman to enter your house.

Witch doctors and pagan "healers" in some countries make a lot of money (or chickens, goats, etc.) from people who want healing but don't want Jesus. Unfortunately, their "patients" (actually "victims") end up with a lot more than "healing," which will only be temporary. They get demonic oppression along with the package. Satan doesn't hand out freebies. He always has a hidden price tag. He isn't out to relieve anyone's suffering; he wants to CAUSE as much suffering as he can. He is OK with "healing" you if it means that he can keep you under his control so that as a whole you'll be worse off when he's done with you.

There is no point casting a devil out and leaving a clean house for seven worse ones to enter along with the original one. If someone wants deliverance, he needs the Deliverer. If he needs healing, he needs the Healer. Divine healing and deliverance are only available through the name of Jesus. If someone rejects Him, he is denying Jesus the right to work in his body. How can He work in your body if you don't want Him there? He will only go where He is welcomed; He does not force Himself on anyone.

No one has a "right" to healing while rejecting the Healer. However, God in His mercy will sometimes heal someone who rejects Jesus to demonstrate His goodness.

What if I Lay Hands on People and They Don't Get Healed?

One of my personal heroes, F. F. Bosworth, asked the Lord a question like this because he was concerned about what would happen if he held a crusade and people didn't get healed. He said that the Lord's answer was, "What would you do if you preached to people and they didn't get saved?" Bosworth realized that the correct answer was that he would keep preaching the same message.

We preach the truth because it's the truth, not because it's "trending" in the polls today. We're preachers, not worldly politicians.

My question would be, what if you lay hands on people and they DO get healed? Think how the kingdom of God would benefit!

The devil likes to torment people (especially preachers) with the thought that they will preach to the sick, then lay hands on them, and nothing will happen. But Jesus said that you will lay hands on the sick and they WILL recover. The devil always tries to get you to agree with thoughts that contradict Scripture. It is always better to act on what the Word says than to NOT act because of what the devil says! Heaven will back you when you act on the Word. Heaven has nothing to back if you do nothing due to fear. When a fear thought comes, do you really want to assume that it's the first time that the devil has ever told the truth?

Will everyone you come in contact with get healed when you are out preaching healing? NO! They didn't all get healed in Jesus' ministry either. At Nazareth hardly anything happened (Mark 6:1-6). Jesus didn't get frustrated and shut down his ministry. In a house meeting, only one person got healed while a crowd of religious people didn't (Luke 5:17-26). And that was JESUS doing the ministry! Don't think that you're greater than He is. Jesus didn't run off to a mountain somewhere for a week of introspection to try to figure out why His ministry was not as powerful as it had been in other places.

Not everyone that the apostles preached to received Jesus, either. Some believed and some disbelieved. That will just about always be the case anywhere. If some are not saved or healed, or even ALL are not saved or healed at some meeting, that doesn't make you a failure. You're only a failure if you stop obeying the Great Commission, and even then, you can become an un-failure by obeying it again.

If you see yourself as dead to the world and alive with Christ, living only to do His will, it will help you when you are confronted with the devil's taunt that you'll preach and no one will get healed. That is because the real point of the devil's question has to do with YOUR self-image. He wants to put fear in you that YOU WILL LOOK BAD if you lay hands on people and they are not healed. With the devil, it's never about Jesus – it's always about you. His thoughts have nothing to do with having compassion on sick people. He wants you to "play it safe" and avoid personal embarrassment. Satan prefers having you be self-centered and hung up on your image. Fear of failure and subsequent humiliation could keep you from accomplishing anything. But I am dead with Christ. My reputation in this world is not what is important – pleasing God and obeying Jesus are all that matter.

But here's what the Lord has had to remind me about – you have done your job if you preach the Word and make healing available. You will have a reward in heaven for doing that even if no one gets healed. Most of the people I've handed tracts to have not gotten saved as far as I know. I will still get a reward in heaven for making the words of eternal life available to those people whether they ever act on them or not. In fact, I will get a reward for the roughly equal number of times that I OFFERED someone a salvation tract and the person refused to take it. It would be unfair for God to judge YOUR success by the actions of others, which you do not control!

Don't set yourself up for failure by letting the devil run his movies on a screen in your mind. Don't let your mind be his sin-ema. Otherwise he'll keep playing "The Failed Healing Preacher" (starring you) in your mind. It is up to you to take the Word to cast down his imaginations. So remember that Jesus said that you SHALL do the works that He did (John 14:12) and that you SHALL lay hands on the sick and have them recover (Mark 16:18). See THAT happening instead! This is not a treatise on visualization – just visualizing something won't help it happen if you have no faith attached to it. Visualizing without faith is just daydreaming or New Age junk. See yourself laying hands on the sick and having them recover rather than letting yourself be tormented by one of the devil's favorite questions (the one we're discussing here). That will make it easier when you are in a live situation ministering to the sick.

How Can Birth Defects Be Part of the Curse for Breaking the Law from which We Are Redeemed? It Would Make No Sense for God to Say that If You Break His Law, He'll Give You Birth Defects.

Indeed it is NOT logical for God to “give someone birth defects” who breaks His law when the person either did or didn't have birth defects before he was even able to sin! Is this why birth defects are not mentioned in particular in Deuteronomy 28:15-68? Does it mean that Jesus did NOT redeem us and our children from birth defects after all? My wife was in a service where the minister told people with birth defects not to come up for healing, though everyone else was welcome. Did that preacher know something that we don't?

No, we ARE redeemed from birth defects!

This matter is easy to understand when you realize that the curse in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 was not just an individual thing, although most of it could be applied individually. If Israel collectively did not heed the law, these curses would come upon Israel collectively. Take for example the “curses” involving foreigners invading Israel and carting off its produce and people. That's part of Deuteronomy 28:15-68. So is borrowing from heathen nations instead of lending to them. Such things were not related to a particular individual's sins. God would not send invading hordes because one particular person in Israel coveted his neighbor's wife. He would not cause the Israeli economy to tank for everyone just because one person misused God's name when he stubbed his toe. There are clearly judgments on the nation as a whole due to sin in the nation as a whole. While some curse components are individual conditions (such as the specific sicknesses mentioned), others are conditions (like slavery to other nations) that would be imposed on the nation as a whole.

Before you get all excited about “God's judgment” on your country the next time there's a bad storm, you need to realize that such country-wide judgments were not applied to the Gentiles in the New Testament. Israel was judged for having rejected its Messiah. There will be worldwide judgment in the coming times foretold by the book of Revelation. But we are not in that era yet.

The good news is that Christ did not just redeem us from PART of the curse – He redeemed us from ALL of it!

“ALL of it” would include Deuteronomy 28:61, where EVERY sickness is part of the curse for breaking the law. So if Israel broke the law, it would have not only flu epidemics but cases of Tourette Syndrome, Down's Syndrome, everything on the “autism spectrum” and the like, as these are part of “EVERY sickness.” EVERY sickness includes every chromosomal abnormality, whether named after someone or not. Every neurological deficiency, every missing body part, EVERY abnormality is covered by Deuteronomy 28:61, and you and your children are legally redeemed from them all!

You have to renew your mind to this, because worldly thinking says, “God made this special child this way” as if He had some purpose in giving that child something that would make his life (and probably yours) horribly difficult.

The man in John 9:1-7 was born blind and Jesus healed him. Peter healed a man who was sick from his mother's womb (Acts 3:1-16). Paul preached to a man who was crippled from birth and the man walked when he believed Paul's preaching (Acts 14:7-10). So we see that God's will is for birth defects to continue to be healed in the name of Jesus. I've seen God do it and so have other evangelists who flow in the Bible pattern for that office.

The case in John 9:1-7 in particular makes it clear that birth defects are here because of sin in the earth in general – NOT the specific sins of the parents or the child. Jesus was explicitly asked about that issue and we have His answer in that passage. Having a child with birth defects is NOT punishment from God for something awful that you have done.

The name of Jesus is above EVERY name that is named (Philippians 2:9-11). That includes the names of specific birth defects and genetic "diseases!"

I Have a Birth Defect. I Need a Miracle. How Do I Get It?

Galatians 3:5-6 tells you how to get your miracle. God does miracles by the hearing of faith. In other words, you receive a miracle exactly the way you receive any other kind of healing. The same principle applies.

You believe that you receive your miracle when you pray (Mark 11:24).

In cases where a birth defect causes someone to be unable to do this because his mind cannot grasp it, or in cases where the child is not old enough to believe God yet, the parents have the right to receive the miracle on behalf of their child. This would be the same with a case of healing for anything else.

There is no special secret procedure to follow just because something is a birth defect. We are healed by the stripes of Jesus, and that includes being healed of birth defects. That healing is ours and we can appropriate it by faith.

Jesus' name rules over the name of any birth defect or condition (Philippians 2:9-11).

I remember preaching on this for three services in a church without knowing that there was someone there who couldn't hear properly in one ear because she was born without part of her eardrum. (God knew about it even though I didn't, which is why He led me to minister along those lines.) She heard this very word (with her good ear) and believed it. She said that she KNEW when she came up to have hands laid on her that she would receive her miracle and she that would be able to hear OK out of that ear. And that's exactly what happened! You can "believe that you receive when you pray" to be healed of a birth defect just as she did. Healing is yours, and that is how to get it from "available" to "manifested."

God's power is unlimited. The only limit is what we can believe (Mark 9:23)! Let's be bold and believe for the impossible – because with God, nothing shall be impossible (Luke 1:37).

Did Jesus Literally Bear ALL Our Diseases or Just Representative Samples of Each One?

Did Jesus actually suffer EVERYONE'S specific cancer, or did He just have one case of cancer that sufficed for everyone who would ever have cancer?

This is similar to asking whether Jesus literally bore ALL our sins (which He did) or just a representative sample of each sin. In other words, was He punished for Sam's sin when he had lustful fantasies involving Dave's wife AND punished for Eric's sin when he had lustful fantasies involving a character on the TV show "Beautiful Immoral Beach Babes" AND punished for Tom's sin when he had lustful fantasies involving the scantily-clad singer of the pop tune "It's So Good, It's So Right, Fornicate with Me Tonight" – or was He just punished in general for the sin of having lustful fantasies?

The answer to the second question should be quite clear – Jesus bore OUR sins in His body (1 Peter 2:24). He was wounded for OUR transgressions and bruised for OUR iniquities (Isaiah 53:5). The punishment He endured was for ALL sins ever committed by anyone, including you. He was punished for YOUR specific sins as well as everyone else's specific sins. Your sins could not be "borne away" from you any other way.

I have established in another discussion that forgiven people can be healed. Because Jesus had to be punished BODILY for our sins (remember, He bore our sins in His own BODY on the tree – wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities); He took away sickness from us as well because sickness is called a curse and it is clearly a punishment for sin. Before there was sin, there was no sickness, and on the new earth in which righteousness dwells, there will be no sin and no sickness. They always go together.

The "curse of the Law" made clear that ALL sickness, whether specifically enumerated or not, was punishment for failure to keep the entire Law (Deuteronomy 28:61). The fact that Christ has (past tense) redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Galatians 3:13) shows that He redeemed us from ALL sicknesses, including ALL sicknesses you have ever had, have now, or ever will have. Any sickness you could have is one you technically deserved for failure to keep the whole Law. Jesus took your sin and gave you the gift of righteousness (Romans 5:17) so that you no longer "deserve" any sickness.

The word "bare" – meaning in this case "bare away" or "take in another's place to remove it from the other" – is used to describe what Jesus did to our sins in Isaiah 53:12. This is the same Hebrew word used for "hath borne" in Isaiah 53:4 – He "bare" our sicknesses and carried our pains. The meaning must be the same in both instances. Jesus bore our individual sins Himself to remove those sins from us. Therefore, He bore our individual sicknesses and pains to remove them from us as well.

It is truly mind-boggling how He could have had that many sicknesses in His body on the cross, but I don't consider it any more mind-boggling than how He could have had that many sins attributed to Himself for punishment on the cross and how He could have suffered punishment for every single one of them. I don't know the mechanics of exactly how God did either of these, but I believe that He did both because His Word says so.

Isaiah's use of the word "our" makes clear that it is OUR sicknesses and pains that He bore, not just "representative" sicknesses and pains belonging to no one in particular. It would not really make sense for Him to suffer something that no one else had suffered – He could not "bear it away" from anyone if that were the case.

Coupled with the spiritual punishment for sin, it is beyond human comprehension what Jesus went through on the cross. Fortunately, we have never been commanded to mentally comprehend the gospel, only to believe it!

Does Satan Literally Invent All Diseases?

This question may seem to have an obvious answer – “Yes! He’s bad and God’s good! If it’s good, God made it, and if it’s bad, Satan made it. Good God, bad devil.”) Yet when you start to think it through, the answer might not seem quite as clear-cut.

Is Satan really so smart that he can devise ways to alter DNA to create genetic problems? Do you remember from biology class how incredibly complex DNA is? Satan is only a created angel, so what would give him the ability to be “God-like” when it comes to being a creator, just in an evil manner? Can he really invent new classes of evil biological beings that destroy other biological beings? Are viruses and bacteria and genetic illnesses his handiwork the way that lions and eagles are God’s handiwork? That would seem to promote Satan to the “creator” class along with God, wouldn’t it? Man with all his super-expensive lab equipment cannot produce life, including damaging life-forms like cancer cells or antibiotic-resistant germs. If man, God’s crowning achievement, can’t even do it, how could an inferior being – a fallen angel – somehow be able to pull it off? Wouldn’t this be something only God can do?

Another thing to consider is that death did not come into the world by SATAN – it came into the world by SIN (Romans 5:12). Satan did not have the power to do ANYTHING in this world until Adam sold out to him. He would never have been “the god of this world” as we know him today if Adam had not sinned. I will go along with the notion that sin was Satan’s idea – he sinned from the beginning. But Adam was under no obligation to join him in sin.

Here is something else to consider. Did SATAN invent the diseases that would be poured out of the vial in Revelation 16:1-2? I think it would be a bit much of a stretch to hold that this “vial” means that God will “allow” Satan to do the dirty work or that heaven has a collection of things the devil made waiting to be poured out as judgment. I see no reason not to accept this passage at face value and believe that God created these judgments for sin and put them in a vial. Perhaps someone will object, “But you are saying that God created something that wasn’t good or very good,” and I would respond that God said that everything He made in Genesis 1 was good or very good. There was no need for a vial of sickness in heaven in Genesis 1 before man fell because there was no need for judgment of unrepentant sinners, so He would have had to create that vial of sickness later.

So is the answer that God created everything, but did so in such a way that it was subject to corruption if sin entered the picture? This would be consistent with the idea that God created Lucifer, who was capable of becoming corrupt if he made the wrong choice, though he did not HAVE TO sin and become corrupt. Furthermore, God made MAN, who was also subject to becoming corrupt (spiritually dead) if he sinned. That doesn’t mean that man HAD TO sin, but when he did, he was created in such a way that sin would corrupt his very nature and make him a slave to sin. Satan did not create that arrangement; God did. Satan only goaded man in the direction of that corruption.

So now we have to ask, “Does the Bible give us any direct testimony on this subject in either direction?” And as usual, we’ll find that it does.

Let's consider the DNA thing. Can Satan actually create DNA?

Apparently he CAN! The Egyptian sorcerers caused a stick to become a snake. Snakes have DNA. When Moses pronounced a plague of frogs, the Egyptian sorcerers did the same. Frogs have DNA. Now they were unable to produce gnats, which have DNA, and I can't tell you why that is because God doesn't explain it. But based on the testimony of Scripture, it appears that Satan CAN create DNA. He may not have been the original inventor of it, but it seems that he is able to replicate it when it suits his purposes.

So therefore, we would have to conclude that Satan could create other DNA-based organisms that are harmful to man, and he would have the right to do so after Adam allowed him entry to the earth to corrupt it.

Now we need to consider the testimony that when God created the earth and everything on it, it was all "good" or "very good." Sickness is NOT good and certainly not VERY good. Therefore, it could NOT have been part of God's original creation. If God didn't create it, it stands to reason that Satan, who is always out to hurt God's creation, created it.

I don't know all the medical ins and outs of boils, but Satan was able to smite Job with boils from head to toe, as well as a number of other painful and annoying ailments. It is clear from the book of Job that SATAN, not GOD, did this. So once again, Satan is capable of producing sickness and putting it on someone.

Next, we see that there are "spirits of infirmity" whose function is to make people sick. The woman who was bowed over in Luke 13:11-16 had one, and Jesus did not declare the name of some crippling disease that was the problem. Rather, He said that SATAN had bound her for 18 years. While the mechanics of the disease might seem complicated, the physical problems were all caused by an evil spirit who was doing Satan's work in the woman's body.

So while at first it was tempting to conclude that Satan isn't smart enough to create living organisms or diseases, the Word forces us to conclude that he is. And it is clear that sickness and affliction are his works. So yes, Satan CAN invent diseases and He is the ultimate source of the diseases that go around today.

However, Satan is an outlaw. He is NOT God's leg-breaker sent out to avenge sin. God says that vengeance is His (Psalm 94:1, Romans 12:19, Hebrews 10:30). That means Satan has no moral right to do anything that he does, though he has the legal right to be on the earth and mess things up because Adam gave him that right. Those of us who are in Christ have authority over Satan and all his power (Luke 10:19), so we can stop him from afflicting us.

So if something is good, God made it. With the exception of God's acts of judgment, if something is bad for you, Satan made it. Good God, bad devil!

Is It Ever Right to “Hold Back” on Preaching Divine Healing?

In some cases, yes. In most cases, no.

If YOU have complete control over what you’re preaching because it’s your building that you own or rent, or it’s a public location, then you should NEVER hold back any part of the gospel. Paul, who had control over his preaching ministry, “held back nothing that was profitable” (Acts 20:20) and “shunned not” to declare “all the counsel of God” so that he would be pure from the blood of all men (Acts 20:26-27). If it’s your call, never preach a D-gospel! Never, never, never, hold back preaching divine healing because of criticism or fear of men’s opinions of you. Sooner or later, you’ll be labeled an evil cultist (as I’ve been) for preaching that healing belongs to everyone. Preach the Word anyway!

If we’re supposed to preach the whole counsel of God, why would it EVER be OK to hold back part of the gospel? Let me give you some cases and try to keep you out of unnecessary trouble.

When the Church or Ministry that Is Hosting You Doesn’t Agree with Divine Healing

I’ve preached in churches that definitely do NOT believe that healing is in Christ’s atonement. But I haven’t preached healing in those churches. That would be out of order. You see, the local pastor has the highest authority in his congregation. It doesn’t matter if I know more of the Word than he does or have been saved three times as long as he has. I am his guest. I will never knowingly preach something contrary to what I know the host pastor (or his denomination) preaches unless I clear it with him first. There was one case where I shared the Word privately with a pastor because I knew that he preached something different than what I believed. I convinced him privately of his error and he gave me permission to go ahead and preach the opposite of what he had been saying to his church. At this writing, that’s happened to me a grand total of once! Of course, I will never preach something that I believe to be unbiblical just because the host church believes it. You know, you can bless and help a lot of people if you have the chance to minister on other important topics where they can agree with you in a particular denomination! There are topics other than healing in the Bible even though healing is my personal favorite one to preach!

I would do that with any topic – if I know something will be controversial or unsettling, and thus not good for the church, I’ll avoid it. If the church doesn’t believe that all your future sins are forgiven, I won’t touch that when I’m there. I can be free in this book to say what I want, of course. And I do realize that there will be pastors who take issue with some of my views on the many topics covered in this book along with healing who may not want me around as a result. I understood that when I decided to publish this book. A lot in here will correct what many pastors – even “faith” people or “grace” people – have been teaching. But I can correct them privately through this book. I decided that there are some things that just need to be said by SOMEONE even if they cost me preaching engagements.

I would NEVER correct a pastor in front of his church – the Bible shows a different precedent. Peter had gotten involved in hypocrisy and had even dragged Barnabas into it. But Paul did not say anything about the matter in front of the church where Peter was at Jerusalem. He didn't embarrass Peter in front of his home church. He waited and corrected Peter at Antioch, which was PAUL'S home church (Galatians 2:11-14).

If You Are Taking over a Church that Has Not Been Preaching Divine Healing

In general, I would not pastor a church that was not OK with divine healing, but in exceptional cases, God might call you to pastor a church that has NOT taught accurately about divine healing if it will accept such teaching in the future. It should still be your goal to preach healing there, but from a practical perspective it will take a while for the people to get to know you and to earn their trust and respect. You can't just go in there and blast them to bits with your New Testament "cannon." If God really called you there, He will make a way so that you will be able to preach the full gospel freely.

When a Disease Is Healed, Can I Believe to Receive Healing from the Damage that It Caused?

Absolutely!

If a childhood fever left you blind, you have the right to receive healing for blindness. If an illness you had a long time ago left you paralyzed in any part of your body, you have the right to receive healing for that paralysis. Probably someone among the blind people Jesus healed went blind through a disease, and probably some of the paralytics were that way because of polio or some other illness. The cause of blindness, paralysis or any other problem does not matter. Jesus provided healing for everything that could ever go wrong in your body.

Remember, Jesus healed the maimed, not just the sick. This would cover accident injuries as well as problems caused by diseases.

In Matthew 15:30-31, Jesus healed the maimed people in the crowd. He is the same yesterday, today and forever, so He is still willing and able to heal the maimed today!

Do We Need to Know the Specific Condition before We Can Minister Healing?

No.

People sometimes find it helpful to be able to identify a certain body part to speak to, and if that information is available, that's good. However, it is not required. Jesus was not a medical doctor. He did not diagnose cases. If you're smart, you won't try to do so either, unless you're a certified doctor yourself, and even then, it isn't necessary unless you're providing "expert testimony" for someone else's healing testimony. It is not your job to diagnose illnesses. It is your job to command healing of whatever the problem is in the name of Jesus.

I saw a book once that made it seem as if you had to be a doctor to minister to healing lines. It was full of "this condition means speak to this particular body part" advice. I'm not qualified to comment on the quality of the advice, but I wouldn't waste my time with something like that. Besides, when medicine advances, what do you do when you realize that you've been praying the wrong thing for a certain condition?

Don't play doctor. The Great Physician lives inside you. He knows exactly what is wrong. Jesus said that you could lay hands on the sick in His name and they would recover (Mark 16:18). He did not say that you had to provide expert medical diagnosis for the sick. Besides, if you start practicing medicine when you aren't qualified to do so, you can (deservedly) get into legal trouble. This is not time to try your hand at being an amateur doctor! Lay your hands on the sick in the name of Jesus and leave the diagnosis as well as the healing to Jesus, who does all things well.

What Is “Inner Healing,” and Do I Need It?

The problem with this term is that it is used in different ways by different groups, and it can mean anything from something completely Biblical to something that is not only unscriptural but dangerous.

Unscriptural and Dangerous “Inner Healing” Practices

Let’s start with the negative kind. This is the sort where someone asks you to go back deep into your past to try to find old hurts. Supposedly, you then face these hurts and get healed of them. In some cases, you end up with new hurts that weren’t even there before, or else your old hurts seem to hurt more. Any kind of relive-your-past-and-picture-Jesus-in-it “healing” is actually junk that has crept into the Church from modern psychology.

This completely disobeys Scripture.

Philippians 3:13-14:

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

In fact, precisely the problem with many Christians is that they are so hung up on their past that they do not press forward and do anything useful. They need to heed Paul’s advice and quit dwelling on the past and start setting their mind toward accomplishing things in God’s kingdom. If they would just obey these verses, they would not have time to get snared by their past.

You cannot dwell on that harm that people have done to you. To do so is to walk in unforgiveness. If you are carrying ill will toward someone who hurt you in the past, you need to decide to forgive that person and ask for God’s help in doing so if you’re struggling with it. That’s all. Quit dwelling on it. You don’t need to get healed, you need to decide to forgive. Once you forgive, you may find that healing follows without even any specific ministry for healing!

Get on with your life! In so doing, you will find that the hurts of the past start waning. Do not play the victim card and make an excuse that thus-and-such that happened to you is the reason you why can’t make it in life. God always causes you to triumph in Christ (2 Corinthians 2:14) if you’ll believe it!

God is the Healer of your emotions as well as your body, as proved elsewhere in this book. Trust Him as your Healer in the areas where you are still hurting on the inside.

“Spiritual Healing”

Avoid ANY healing that claims to heal your spirit – it’s completely unbiblical. A famous old song needs to be rewritten. After it says, “And then I cried, Dear Jesus, Come and heal my broken spirit,” it should continue, “And that day Jesus said to me, I know what you mean, but the truth is that your spirit doesn’t need healing, it needs replacement. Let me give you a new spirit so that you will be born again rather than asking Me to try to fix your busted, dead spirit.” (I realize that these new words wouldn’t fit the meter of the song too well.) When you receive Jesus, your old spirit is replaced, not healed – you become a new and perfect spirit that never existed before.

Once you are born again, your spirit is as perfect as it will be throughout eternity! Your spirit will never be your problem again! Your problems will stem from an unrenewed mind and from your flesh. (Your body and soul are NOT born again; only your spirit is.)

Since your spirit is perfect, it NEVER needs healing. So never let someone minister to you claiming that he will heal your spirit or give you “spiritual healing!”

The only thing with the term “spiritual healing” is that it is sometimes used to denote emotional healing by people who don’t know the difference. Emotional healing is biblical, while spiritual healing is not.

Healing in the Dark

Some people have gotten into this New Age stuff where you sit in a dark candlelit room to get healed (supposedly). The devil loves the darkness, but children of the light don’t need to go hide in the dark to get healed on the inside. Beware. You’ll find that Jesus is not given His rightful place as Healer in such circumstances. In one such church, the pastor told me to my face that he prefers not to use the term “born again.” That was a giveaway that something was corrupt! (There were many other giveaways later, such as signage that indicated, “We welcome and celebrate immoral lifestyles.”)

Biblical “Inner Healing”

“The LORD raiseth up them that are bowed down.” – Psalm 146:8

“The LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.” – Psalm 145:14

“He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.” – Psalm 147:3

Part of the anointing on Jesus (Luke 4:18-19) was “to heal the brokenhearted” and “to set at liberty them that are bruised.” Jesus is willing to do this for you. He is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8) and therefore He is still anointed to do it.

If you need to be comforted, God will comfort you. He is called “the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation” (2 Corinthians 1:3-4). He comforts those who are cast down (2 Corinthians 7:6). Acts speaks of walking in the “comfort of the Holy Ghost” (Acts 9:31).

People who are hurt desperately need a revelation of God’s love and compassion for them. They also need to see some flesh on God’s love from other members of the Body of Christ. Don’t just tell them to “believe God for emotional healing” and go your merry way!

God cares about every part of you, spirit, soul and body. If you have emotional needs, He longs to meet them along with your physical needs.

Should We Pray to Determine the Real Root Cause of an Illness?

There is no record that Jesus and His followers prayed to determine the real root causes of illnesses before they ministered healing to the sick. The sick were healed regardless of what the root causes were. So there is certainly no requirement for such prayer to be done before ministering to a sick person. This fact should give you confidence to go ahead and minister healing without having to get involved in all the messy details of someone's imperfect life.

Searching for "real root causes" can turn into a witch hunt for sins and do more harm than good. The Pharisees wanted to know whether a man was born blind because of his own sin or because of his parents' sins. They were on a witch hunt for a "real root cause" and Jesus immediately pointed out that both of their "real root cause" theories were false (John 9:1-7). Sin was not involved at all, other than Adam's sin that allowed birth defects to be part of mankind's experience! We don't want to turn into modern-day Pharisees who assume that if someone is sick, there is some dark hidden secret cause that needs to be brought to light and dealt with so that the root of the sickness can be destroyed.

Another pitfall of searching for "real root causes" is that it tends to magnify the problem, not the solution. Jesus has paid for the solution, so that is what you need to emphasize. Searching for a problem only tends to elevate the problem in the minds of everyone involved. It is hard to receive or minister healing when the focus is on the problem. The sick person needs to get his focus on Jesus, who is the Solution to his problem. We are not detectives who attempt to ferret out people's problems – we are proclaimers of good news that they can be free from disease regardless of its cause because of what Jesus has done for them!

A cousin of the "real root cause" thing is to trying to identify "where the door was left open to the devil." It's basically the same thing, and the same comments apply. You don't need to determine where you left the door open to the devil to be healed. Coming down with this year's flu strain probably has nothing to do with failure to stop the devil from getting an opportunity in your life, and you'd search in vain to try to figure something out.

Another problem is that you can just plain get in over your head when it comes to people's inner messes and provide a "Babylon" opportunity for people to babble on and babble on about their lives for as long as you will allow it. And if you are in someone else's church ministering to the sick, frankly you have no business getting involved in complex personal issues that should be dealt with by the pastor, not by a visiting evangelist. (Sometimes people will want to grab your ear because they already talked to the pastor and didn't like what he had to say. They hope that you will side with them instead of with the pastor. You REALLY don't want to get involved in such stuff, even though such people really DO want to get you involved! Do yourself a favor and make sure that you never try to provide pastoral counsel to anyone unless you are that person's pastor! Let the pastor do his job – and that advice holds true even if you think you could do a better job than the pastor in that particular case.)

The biggest danger that goes with searching for inner, hidden roots of sickness is that in many cases there aren't any! Often the person hasn't done anything special to bring on sickness; he just got a bug when someone else who had it sat next to him on a bus and kept sneezing, or he got bitten by an infected insect, or he has a physical issue beyond his control. Then when you keep looking for an inner cause, you'll either invent one (bad) or waste a lot of time while focusing on the problem (also bad).

Having said this, there are cases where prayer for healing is like putting a bucket under a leak rather than fixing the leak. It stops the immediate problem but it doesn't solve things long-term. If a person is having ulcers because he is in strife with his wife all the time, he can get healed of his ulcer, but he'll end up with more ulcers until he addresses his marriage situation. If someone gets healed of cancer but continues to use tobacco, he may find himself with cancer again.

Jesus did warn about a real root cause when He told the man at the Pool of Bethesda to go and sin no more lest a worse thing befall him (John 5:14). So Jesus recognized that a certain root cause could result in more sickness. But think about this – Jesus healed the man without an assurance that the man's sin problem was solved. It was possible that the man COULD go and sin more and get even sicker than he was before. Jesus healed him anyway. He did not require the man to clean up his life before He ministered healing. Everyone who has ever been healed has sin in his life; it's only a matter of degree. Sin is the reason why Jesus had to shed His blood and die for us! He is the Remedy for the sin problem. He opened the door for the sick to be healed when He bore our sicknesses for us that we deserved as punishment for our sins.

Paul advised Timothy to change what he was drinking (1 Timothy 5:23). In this case, Paul was addressing the root cause of Timothy's stomach trouble to try to spare him additional trouble. There is nothing wrong with physical common sense or medical advice to address something that is causing a physical problem. As with Timothy, it is better to avoid sickness in the first place than to keep having to get healed of the same issue.

There are certainly cases where emotional issues lead to sickness, and if the underlying issues aren't dealt with, sickness will return – or perhaps never completely leave in the first place. Jesus is the Healer of our emotions as well as our bodies. He is able to save us to the uttermost (Hebrews 7:25) in all areas of our lives. We have seen people gloriously healed after they dealt with certain emotional issues.

So here is my personal take on the matter: If you are ministering to a lot of sick people, don't take up any time praying to find the "real" reason each one is sick. Just take authority over the diseases in the name of Jesus. If someone you can spend more time with seems to keep struggling after you do so, that would be the only time I'd seek the Lord about what additional issues there might be. It might be something in the Mistakes to Avoid section.

Does a Serious Sickness Attack Prove that a Major Breakthrough Is Just Ahead?

No!

But how many times have you heard a fellow believer say, “Oh, I just KNOW that my big breakthrough is just ahead because ALL HELL is coming against me! The devil has been on me so hard and I’m so beaten up! But that’s OK, because I know that the dark is always the darkest before the dawn.” (See Proverbs 32:1-6).

“The dark is always darkest before the dawn” is not even true in the natural – astronomically speaking, the dark is darkest around midnight unless you live in an area where businesses close and turn off their lights between midnight and dawn. It is not true in the spirit realm either. How many believers have faced serious attacks and DIED? For them, things were the darkest so far until they went COMPLETELY dark as their earthly lives ended. There was no dawn. The fierce attack did not prove that a breakthrough was imminent. An attack only proves that the devil wants to steal from you, kill you and destroy you, as always.

If ALL HELL came against you, you could whisper the name of Jesus and ALL HELL would have to back off (Luke 10:19)! It is pitiful how many Christians have more confidence in the devil to attack them than in the name of Jesus to destroy Satan’s attacks. I’ve met people who even treated Satan’s beatings as a badge of honor – “Oh, he’s really afraid of me now; look how he’s been eating our family’s lunch lately because he’s so worried about what God is about to do through us!” No, Satan would be more afraid of you if you actually believed the Bible, which plainly says that he and his cohorts have been utterly spoiled and defeated by the Lord Jesus Christ (Hebrews 2:14, Colossians 2:15). Then the devil would NOT be eating your lunch and you’d be thanking God for the victory that He gives you through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Corinthians 15:57). Rather than moaning about how the local demons are having a heyday with you, you would be walking in the fact that you have ALREADY OVERCOME them (1 John 4:4) and you’d be enforcing your victory.

That doesn’t mean that you won’t have trials. You will –the devil will see to that. But God has given you the ability to triumph in Christ over ALL trials (2 Corinthians 2:14) if you’ll act on His Word. But it isn’t up to God to stop Satan – YOU must actively exercise your authority over him and run him off. GOD is not going to make the trial stop. YOU must stop it by standing on the Word. If you don’t stop it, it won’t stop.

But what about Paul, who said that Satan hindered him?

1 Thessalonians 2:18:

Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us.

Paul was still planning to go back to Thessalonica anyway:

1 Thessalonians 3:11:

Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you.

If Satan could hinder Paul for a season, he might work through other people to hinder you, but Paul still finished his course and did everything God wanted him to do despite Satan's hindrances, and you should believe that you will too.

2 Timothy 4:7

We don't see any "major spiritual breakthrough" as a result of the hindrances. Paul was often hindered by being persecuted for the gospel's sake, including being thrown in jail. However, he did not consider that the hindrances would ultimately stop him from achieving his objective. More importantly, there is NO indication that Paul was beaten up with sickness or that any kind of disease was the hindrance. He did not say, "We wanted to come, but Satan made me and all my companions sick with the latest stomach bug." So if you're suddenly seriously ill, you are NOT experiencing what Paul did. You can control what Satan does to you, but you cannot control other people's wills, and people (including Christians) sometimes let Satan use them to be a nuisance to you.

If you're wise, you'll resist the devil's sicknesses just as fervently as you would resist the devil's temptations to sin. You will NOT have the attitude, "Oh, well, I guess I'll have to tolerate this for a season because it's a sure sign that something great is about to happen. I can't wait for this trial to be over and for my breakthrough to arrive."

Despite what preachers sometimes say, having Satan mess around before a service does NOT prove that you're about to have a really good service. In fact, if you don't resist him, steadfast in the faith (1 Peter 5:8-10), you might have a really LOUSY service because you didn't take authority over him when he manifested himself and put a stop to his antics as far as you are concerned. (You can't control what other people do. Sometimes Satan will send a kook to your service to disrupt things. You need to be open to the Holy Spirit's wisdom and discernment to know how to handle the situation.)

The whole idea that things have to get really, really bad just before they get really, really good is not a Bible promise. You could point out that things looked at their darkest at Ziklag just before David took the throne, but I could point out that there were no major catastrophes just before Solomon dedicated the temple and God's glory filled it.

While I'm at it, I might as well also point out that the common saying that God is never late but seldom early is a lie, too – unless your faith is in that fake Bible verse. If your faith is in the idea that God will wait until the very last minute to bail you out every time, that is the result you will get. But I prefer to believe what the Bible says – that God's help is "right early:"

Psalms 46:4-5:

There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High.

God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early.

"Right early" in the Hebrew means "at the break of day" – the first thing during daylight hours, not the last thing!

I roll my eyes on the inside when I hear yet another Christian say, “Look at what I’m going through! God must have something really, really big ahead for me! The devil must be REALLY AFRAID!” The devil IS really afraid of you because you’re in Christ, but if you think that Satan has any right to bash you just because you have a calling that will hurt his kingdom, you need to renew your mind some more. Satan has NO RIGHT to do ANYTHING to you because you are not part of his kingdom (Colossians 1:13). Run him off!

Should a Christian Go to a Healing Shrine?

You don't have to – you can be healed by faith. The New Testament never instructs you to visit a healing shrine. If you are critically ill, you are to call for the elders of the Church and be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. The prayer of faith will raise you up (James 5:14-15).

On the other hand, there are no admonitions to avoid healing shrines. Jesus visited a healing shrine (the pool of Bethesda) where God, through an angel, was responsible for the healings. Notice, though, that Jesus healed a man there – He didn't pick him up and carry him to the water to get healed! This is a good example for you. When you have Jesus, you don't need the shrine – you can get healed without it.

However, Jesus did not tell the other people there that they were sinning. It was hardly a sin to wait until an angel troubled the water and get healed. There is no record that the angel stopped troubling the water after Jesus visited the place. For all we know, people kept getting healed that way.

I would personally not go to a healing shrine for my own healing, but I could not tell you that you're in sin if you go. Just be careful. I don't know what places do what, since I don't frequent such sites, but make sure that you don't get into something that denies Jesus. If the people running the shrine don't believe that Jesus Christ was God in the flesh, stay away. If anyone other than Jesus Christ gets credit for the healings, stay away. (That includes His mother and His apostles and other saints who have passed on to glory!) I know of one notorious "Christian" healing shrine in South America that seems to get a lot of visits, but the goings-on there are demonic, not Christian. They like to emphasize certain occult manifestations, and having been involved in the occult before I was a Christian, I was shocked to learn of the things that went on at this "Christian" place that sounded all too familiar.

Different "healing shrines" do things differently, so you can't make a blanket statement about them. Some may have people who can teach you what the Bible says about healing and help you get it. Others, at worst, may even have manifestations of devils, as in the case I mentioned above. Needless to say, if the people running the place aren't born again, you have no reason to turn to the heathen for your healing. I have been to one shrine (out of curiosity, not a need for healing) that was pretty good in some ways and quite flaky in others. All in all, I would expect that some people would get healed going there because the people who ran it were Spirit-filled Christians, and Jesus was correctly promoted as still healing today. However, at this shrine, there could be decent healings going on one minute and another minute could feature people singing idolatrous worship songs to Mary and going outside to crawl up stone steps on their knees, deceived into thinking they were getting a "plenary indulgence" (forgiveness for all their sins) – something only receiving Christ can get for you! I have yet to hear of a shrine where there wasn't some kind of messed-up doctrine or questionable manifestations.

I know people who get into such things and actually get healed, but they usually end up confused in other areas. I actually played the piano at a conference in front of 3,000 such people with the understanding that I would not worship Mary even if they did. I was assured that these were Spirit-filled Christians who knew better. One speaker told people how to “believe that they receive when they pray” as well as any faith teacher I’ve ever heard, and many people were healed as a result of hearing the real Word that night. But the next afternoon, another teacher got up and taught that Mary will “lead the end-time fight against Satan.” (It was the second-worst message I’d ever heard preached live in my life, right behind one that said that God will cause His children to fail in the last days so that they will be humble and only God will get glory.) Later a speaker told me to do a song to worship Mary, and I walked off the stage in front of 3,000 people. I was as subtle about it as one could be walking off a stage in front of 3,000 people; I didn’t make a scene or even say anything. Needless to say, I was not invited back, nor did I desire to go back. I have my convictions; you can’t pressure me to do something I know is wrong even if 3,000 people are willing to do it.

What about “mud” shrines for healing? Who knows – maybe some places actually have mud that has the claimed therapeutic value. I don’t plan to find out myself. However, therapeutic mud will fall into the category of a natural cure like taking medicine, not a spiritual cure. If the mud is truly therapeutic, an unbeliever could immerse himself in it and be healed as much as any believer. If it works, great. But Jesus only made mud with spit; He never ordered anyone to go immerse himself in mud to be healed.

You don’t need to go to a healing shrine to get healed! If you’re thinking of going, please be careful what you get yourself into!

Should Christians Get Flu Shots?

That is entirely up to you – God will not be upset with you either way.

Vaccinations, including flu shots, are not covered by Scripture, so it would not be right to create doctrine when the Bible is silent.

The only Scriptures that would even come close to touching on the issue are (1) The ones in which Jesus said that the sick need a physician, not that those who are trying to avoid getting sick need a physician (Matthew 9:12, Mark 2:17, Luke 5:31) and (2) The ones that stress obedience to local authorities (Romans 13:1-2, 1 Peter 2:13-15, Titus 3:1). If you are REQUIRED to get a flu shot because of where you work, you need to go ahead and get one and (3) Paul's pre-emptive advice to Timothy to change what he drank to avoid getting sick in the first place (1 Timothy 5:23). It is not wrong to take natural steps to avoid illnesses when you can do so.

Some Christians may just avoid the expense and possible side-effects of a flu shot and reason that if they are attacked, they will run the flu off by faith. Not many Christians today are in a position to do that, but I hope that this books helps more of them get there.

Some Christians may go ahead with the flu shot, reasoning that they have done their part in the natural to avoid getting some new bug that is making the rounds. However, flu shots are NOT always effective, so you are putting your trust in something that MIGHT work rather in the Word that ALWAYS works. But I would not have a problem with getting a flu shot as long as you are still planning to make a stand of faith if you feel like the flu is attacking you.

Some Christians will go a third route and head for the natural health store for something with a name like FluGuardian, which could be a new concoction of garlic, raw onion, habanero peppers and Limburger cheese that claims to be a deterrent to getting the flu. (Its label hints that it works by strengthening your immune system, though its actual deterrent value consists of making sure that no one with the flu would want to get within ten feet of you.)

Isaiah Used the Words SICKNESSES and PAINS, But Matthew Quotes Him as Saying INFIRMITIES and DISEASES. How Can That Be a Correct Translation?

I need to start by stating that all of Scripture is God-breathed, so therefore there are no errors or contradictions in it. Thus, we have to accept that Matthew's rendering of Isaiah is OK by God's standards.

One could also ask how Matthew could say that He "took" our infirmities and "bore" our diseases when Isaiah said that He "bore" our sicknesses and "carried" our pains.

I don't believe that the Holy Spirit was confused when He made both of these verses part of Scripture. If anything, it underscores what Isaiah said. You could read Isaiah by itself and perhaps think that "He bore our sicknesses" only means that He happened to get sick with the same kind of sicknesses that we get. Well, it certainly is true that He was made sick – Isaiah 53:10 says so explicitly (see Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption). Even a careful reading of Isaiah shows you that He bore OUR sicknesses, not His own. Matthew uses the word "took" to emphasize that fact. What Jesus did for us was not just to bear sickness, but to take it away from us, just as He took it away from the multitudes on the basis of His future atonement. He TOOK the sicknesses we deserved from us so that we need not bear them. Likewise, He carried OUR pains, and Matthew uses the word "bore" there. This emphasizes that Jesus did not just have spiritual agony; He actually BORE the agony of our diseases in His own body. (Peter refers to His bodily bearing of sin, which necessitated the punishment of disease, in 1 Peter 2:24.)

So the exact wording is admittedly different, but the Holy Spirit was trying to show us through Matthew's wording some nuances of Isaiah's prophecy that might otherwise have been missed.

How Could Jesus Heal the Sick Based on His Future Atonement?

Matthew 8:17 shows us that Jesus healed the sick based on His future atonement. I realize that on the surface Matthew didn't come out and say that, but it's still the only correct way to interpret that verse. Matthew's use of the Greek Aorist subjunctive is a good hint (though not ironclad proof in itself) that the fulfillment was a one-time event, not an ongoing one, and so could not have applied to Jesus' healing ministry, which went on for quite a while. (I cover this in much more depth in my answer to the common objection offered by many denominational writers that Isaiah 53:4 was fulfilled in Capernaum and not at Calvary.)

It can trip people up to think that Jesus could have healed people BEFORE He atoned for their sins and bore their sicknesses and pains.

First, God's timetable from HIS perspective says that Jesus was "slain before the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8). So this timing issue doesn't bother God.

Second, Jesus forgave sins based on His future atonement. He had not yet paid for people's sins, but He still forgave them. I don't know anyone who proposes that Jesus' forgiveness of sins before Calvary was wrong. But sin and sickness were both dealt with when Jesus was punished in our place. If sin could be dealt with in advance, surely sickness could also be dealt with in advance. The people were forgiven and healed on credit, and Jesus' credit was good.

Third, consider the Old Testament symbols of Jesus that produced healing. The mere SYMBOL of Jesus in the Passover caused a mass healing where no one in Israel's tribes was feeble (Psalm 105:37). When a tree (a mere SYMBOL of Calvary) was thrown into bad water, the water was healed (Exodus 15:23-25). The mere SYMBOL of Jesus on a pole (Numbers 21:5-9) that symbolized the cross – John 3:14) provided not only forgiveness but also healing for anyone who beheld it. The mere SYMBOL of Jesus in the Passover in Nehemiah's day resulted in the physical healing of the people (2 Chronicles 30:18-20). So if it was legal for a pre-Calvary SYMBOL of Jesus to produce healing, surely the actual Man Himself should have been able to produce it before the cross. If other things symbolized what He would do and produced healing for the people, surely Jesus could symbolize what He Himself would do and produce healing for the people! Jesus was the ultimate symbol of Himself!

How Can Faith COME by Hearing When We Already HAVE the Measure of Faith?

Rest assured that Romans 10:17 and Romans 12:3 do not contradict each other!

Everyone has “the measure of faith” because God created man with the ability to believe. Paul didn’t say that God only gives “the measure of faith” to Christians. That would be an impossible statement, given that an unbeliever must believe in order to become a Christian in the first place! So there is no verse like the following:

Catch 22:1:

For a sinner cannot get faith until he exercises the faith that he doesn’t have yet.

You can see throughout Scripture that unbelievers (those who are not born again) can exercise faith. The “hall of fame” in Hebrews 11 lists people who believed even though they were not born again. God expected the Israelites to exercise faith. He rebuked them when they didn’t do it. Such rebukes would have been unfair if an unbeliever did not have the capacity to exercise faith. In fact, you could even have “great faith” without being born again like the Centurion who was not born again (Matthew 8:5-13).

The point Paul makes in Romans 12:3 is that we should not be boastful because it was GOD who gave us the measure of faith. Therefore, we should not go around bragging about our faith as if it were our personal doing. Every human being has the God-given capacity to believe.

Romans 10:17 does NOT teach that the general capacity to believe only comes when you hear the Word of God. In its context, it refers to the ability to exercise faith for a particular blessing, in this case the new birth. Although all men have the ability to believe, they cannot believe any statement of God that they have not heard yet. Even though a sinner can believe, he cannot believe the gospel until he hears the gospel. Thus, faith for a particular blessing only “comes” when someone hears the Word of God on that particular matter.

Picture a huge indoor stadium with various desirable blessings located in different places throughout it. As a human being, you have the ability to reach out and take those blessings into your hands. But there’s a catch – all the lights have been turned out! So even though you have the ability to grasp those blessings as a human being, you still can’t grasp them because you don’t know what they are or where they are. Now if someone gives you a flashlight, you could go around finding those blessings, and once you locate them, you can take them into your hands. With the flashlight, you now have the ability to take certain blessings as you find out about them. The general ability to take is what Romans 12:3 is about. The ability to take a particular blessing (the new birth in this case) is what Romans 10:17 is about.

The man in Acts 14:7-10 HAD the measure of faith as every other person does. However, after listening to Paul preach what GOD (not modern man) calls “the gospel” (the good news), he had faith to be healed. He was able to activate his faith for the particular blessing of healing. (Even then, he did not get up and walk until he ACTED on his faith to be healed, but that fact is covered elsewhere.)

So in short, you have the God-given ability to believe, but that ability can only become active and receive something when you hear the Word of God on a particular matter.

You don’t build yourself up in the Word to develop your ABILITY to believe. You already have that! You build yourself in the Word to become convinced of WHAT you can believe specifically so that you can act on it. God is not unfair; He has not asked you to believe and then made it so hard to believe that you’ll never do it.

Don’t make the mistake that so many people make – reading and reading and reading thinking that if you just read “enough,” someday you will have monumental faith. Your success in life is not based on how much Scripture you’ve read or how much Scripture you’ve retained in your head – it is based solely on how much Scripture you ACT ON. If you act on a single Scripture, you will get better results than a person who has memorized the entire Bible but never ACTS on any of it.

Make your focus acting on the Word, not simply stuffing yourself with the Word. If you are a hearer but not a doer, you deceive yourself.

James 1:22:

But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

How Can My Faith GROW if I Already Have the Fixed Measure of Faith?

The “measure” of faith in Romans 12:3 is metron, a fixed measure. God does not play favorites by giving some people more faith than He gives others.

However, some people’s faith is greater than other people’s faith, and that has always been true. Some Old Testament saints walked in faith and many others did not. A Roman man had “great faith” while others had “little faith.” Romans 12:3 cannot be interpreted to mean that your faith is given to you as a certain amount that cannot change, in light of 2 Thessalonians 1:3: “We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth.” We all start at the same level, but faith can grow, and even grow exceedingly. Therefore you cannot say that faith has to remain at the same level. Given that Jesus is both the Author and the Finisher of our faith (Hebrews 11:2), it is illogical to think that once you’re given faith, that faith just stays the same for the rest of your life. If that were the case, it wouldn’t need to be “finished” once you had it, so Jesus would not be the Finisher of your faith.

One analogy is that God gives everyone the same number of muscles. Some people have built their muscles and are stronger than people who have not built their muscles. However, working out does not increase the number of muscles in your body! It only strengthens your existing muscles that God gave you. God gave you the muscles but how strong you are is up to you, not God. It depends on what you do with your God-given muscles. Movie “action heroes” (and their stunt doubles) did not INVENT muscles – they only used them.

So when it comes to faith, everyone starts out the same but not everyone finishes the same. If you want to be a person of strong faith, you need to keep “working” your faith. Keep on acting on the Word and receiving the blessings Jesus died for you to have. Don’t put it off until you have some huge urgent need in the future. We all have areas where we can exercise our God-given faith in the present. The more you do it, the easier it gets. Something that might have thrown you for a loop in the past can become an easy matter in the future. Don’t say “I can live with it” when something is stealing, killing or destroying you – or even just annoying you. Exercise your faith and live without it!

How Can Faith COME By Hearing When We Already HAVE the Measure of Faith?

Does Your Faith Move God to Heal You?

No.

God doesn't need to be moved. He already decided to heal you and He already paid for your healing when He laid your sicknesses and pains on Jesus. If there is an issue receiving healing, YOU are the one who needs to do the moving, not God.

People who get into the error of thinking that their faith "moves God" have the wrong mindset. In their thinking, God may not be ready to heal someone, but then the person's faith "moves" God to do it. God is much more loving than that! He was already "moved" to send Jesus to be your sickness-bearer. He did all the moving He needed to do back then.

When Jesus healed the sick despite being physically weary, He was not moved by people's faith. The Bible is clear that it was His compassion that "moved" Him to keep healing the sick, not the faith of the crowds.

Is Faith a Force?

The basic definition of a force is something that pushes or pulls an object. 1 Corinthians 13:2 talks about faith that could move mountains. So based on that, faith would not only qualify as a force, but it would be greater than any natural force known to man.

Jesus told people who weren't even saved that their faith had made them well. Faith can lead to physical changes in your body when you exercise it in the area of healing, believing what Jesus did to purchase your healing as a New Testament saint. So to that extent, it again could be considered a force.

However, faith is not a force like gravity, electricity or magnetism. While God set up the laws that concern these, He does not have to get specifically involved with their exercise. If you jump off a building, you will be accelerated toward the earth, speeding up 32 feet per second every second until your abrupt deceleration once you hit the ground. It doesn't matter what your relationship with God is; it's just a physical law. Faith, on the other hand, depends on knowing what God has said about a subject because faith acts on what God says.

Faith is definitely not an impersonal "force" like "the Force" in a popular sci-fi movie franchise. Jesus never preached, "Use the Force" (not even in Luke), but He did urge people to use their faith.

However, there is a kind of faith that is NOT a force according to Scripture – dead faith, which is faith without works (James 2:14-26). The works here are not good works that earn you merit points, but rather actions that correspond to faith. So dead faith is faith without corresponding actions. Another way to put it is that dead faith is merely mental assent that the Word is true. You do not receive anything from God by merely mentally assenting that the Word is true. Real faith always ACTS.

Here is where the "God's sovereignty" crowd gets it wrong. They will tell you that faith is simply trust in a God who can make sovereign exceptions to His own rules. After all, Jesus superseded the law of gravity when He was NOT accelerated toward the bottom of the Sea of Galilee when He walked on water. But God doesn't break His Word. When you know what He says about something, you can act on that fact. For example, once hear the good news about Jesus, you can receive Him as Lord and be forgiven for all your sins and be made worthy to go to heaven. Once you hear the good news about healing, you can receive the healing that Jesus paid for you to have. Your faith is in what God has said and in His willingness to ALWAYS back His Word no matter what.

One frequent complaint about faith teachers is that they make it seem like you have to muster up enough "faith force" in and of yourself. Maybe some present it that way, but I don't. God has GIVEN you the measure of faith that you can exercise (Romans 12:3) – your faith is God's gift to you (Ephesians 2:8-9), not something that you have to whip up on your own. The devil wants you to get introspective, always asking yourself if you have enough faith for something. His answer will always be "No!" He wants you to look at YOUR FAITH rather than looking to JESUS, the Author and Finisher of your faith (Hebrews 12:2)!

Does God Use Faith?

Two verses are sometimes used to “prove” that God Himself uses faith, but I wouldn’t use either one for that purpose:

Hebrews 11:3:

Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

The point here, based on the word order in both English and the original Greek, is that THROUGH FAITH we understand something – that God made everything that appears out of things that do not appear – words. Many faith teachers make it sound like the order is, “We understand that through faith the worlds were framed by the word of God.” But the verse doesn’t say that everything seen was framed by faith; it says explicitly that things which are seen were framed by the WORD of God, not the FAITH of God. WE are the ones who understand that fact through faith. Nothing in Hebrews 11 talks about what GOD did because of faith – it’s all about different PEOPLE who acted on THEIR faith. So in this verse, it is again PEOPLE exercising faith – to believe that the worlds were framed by the word of God.

I suppose you could say that God knows that His words will come to pass and that you could consider that to be faith, just as we can speak and believe that our words will come to pass, as long as we’re saying something that the Word authorizes. However, it would be tough for God to follow Mark 11:22 and have faith “in” Himself, though that verse is the second one used to “prove” that God has faith. The idea put forth in some circles is that Mark 11:22 teaches that we should have the same faith that God has with which He runs the universe (“the faith of God”). But the problem with the Greek genitive expression there is that if we are consistent in our interpretation of it, then “the fear of God” (expressed the same way in the Greek) would mean that we are supposed to have the same FEAR with which God runs the universe. The word for fear is actually phobos – the same word used in general for fear in many Scriptures (though NOT in 2 Timothy 1:7, where the word translated fear actually means timidity, not fright). Phobos is NOT some special word meaning “reverence” or “respect.”

You can look elsewhere in this book for a long discussion of what Mark 11:22 really means.

So neither “proof text” really proves the idea that God has faith and uses it. Linguistically, if Mark 11:22 proves that God has faith, then any verse about the fear “of God” proves that God has fear! Of whom would He have this fear? And for that matter, in whom would He have faith?

I was involved with the occult before I was saved. Occult books are happy to tell you to use “faith” to get what you want, and they even provide examples of people who “spoke in faith” or “used the law of attraction” and got things. So what’s the difference? Their faith had nothing to do with God. In fact, the occult teachers have you trust in what they tell you is “your” psychic ability and/or “your” mental ability, which they then declare to be a gift from God (in order to at least pay Him lip service, I suppose). But psychic “gifts” are from evil spirits, not God. (A book popular when I was young claimed that a well-known psychic had “a gift of prophecy,” but she actually had a demon, which was a “gift” from Satan!) Occult writers do NOT tell you to trust in God. I found it interesting when I read occult books that the writers uniformly denied the deity of Jesus, telling you instead to use “your” God-like power. You couldn’t find a single one that taught that Jesus was God manifested in the flesh. (After I got saved, 1 Johh 4:1-4 made it clear to me why that was!)

The Bible does not teach that you have innate psychic powers. The occultists are the people who try to preach faith as a force that can get you anything you want. But a man “believing” that a beautiful woman’s husband will die so that he can have her is operating in satanic principles because the Word will not back that kind of “faith.” God will only honor faith that is consistent with His stated will. Occultists sometimes try to use their demonic version of “faith” to cause something to happen to someone that is against that person’s will. Real faith cannot “make” anyone receive something that he doesn’t want.

Every man DOES have faith, though. It is possible to exercise faith correctly or to misapply it. You can believe that a disease will kill you or you can believe that you are healed of it by Jesus’ stripes. Whichever you believe and speak is what you will have.

God certainly uses WORDS – they were His means of creating everything, as Hebrews 11:3 shows. He commanded things to “be” and they were. If you want to call the use of words like that faith, I won’t get into World War 3 with you over it. However, no verse in particular proves the statements “God uses faith” or “God has faith.” The two “proof verses” above (Hebrews 11:3 and Mark 11:22) don’t prove these statements and there aren’t any other verses that do.

If God Gives Everyone Faith, How Can Anyone Ever Be in Unbelief? Isn't Unbelief the Absence of Faith?

Given that God HAS given to every man the measure of faith (Romans 12:3), most people can't be in unbelief in the sense of being unable to believe or not having faith. If someone were UNABLE TO BELIEVE, it would be unjust for God to sentence that person to hell. That is why aborted and miscarried babies, young children and the mentally incompetent get free passes to heaven. Paul was "alive once" (as such people are) before he knew what sin was. But once he knew what sin was and he did it anyway, that was the point at which sin killed him (Romans 7:9). People who were never capable of knowing what sin was (see the categories above) are in heaven because sin never killed them. However, a person who is NOW an imbecile but who USED to understand what sin is will go to everlasting punishment if he did not receive Jesus while he had the chance, unless he gets healed based on someone else's faith and then receives Jesus.

However, the instances where we see unbelief in the Bible are cases where people did not exercise their faith. So I think a better working definition of unbelief is failure to exercise faith as opposed to the absence of faith. Not knowing the Word is ignorance. Knowing the Word but not acting on it is unbelief.

When Jesus talked about faith, he meant active faith – the type that is always accompanied by action, as opposed to dead faith – faith without works (James 2:14-26). The people He encountered had all been given the measure of faith, but some exercised their faith and were made whole, while others did not exercise their faith and received nothing. When He was looking for faith, it was evidence of faith that was precious to Him. For example, the centurion trusted that if Jesus would only speak a word, his servant would be healed without a personal visit from Jesus. That was faith in action.

On the contrary, unbelief is dead faith – faith with no action. It is CHOOSING not to exercise the faith that you have.

If unbelief were simply the absence of any faith, and thus the ability to exercise it, Jesus would have had compassion on the disciples instead of scolding them for their unbelief:

Mark 16:14:

Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

So it wasn't that the disciples COULD NOT believe because of a lack of ability to believe, it was that they COULD believe but CHOSE NOT TO believe.

Thus, you can have faith but be in unbelief. Unbelief cannot simply mean that you have never heard a promise from God that you can believe. This is proved below in the case of Abraham:

Romans 4:20:

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

It would not have been possible for Abraham to stagger through unbelief if he had not yet heard a promise to unbelieve. It was possible for him to stagger through unbelief after he heard the promise. We know that faith (for specific things) comes from hearing God's Word (Romans 10:17). Abraham had God's word on the matter. He had all that he needed to exercise faith. If he staggered through unbelief, it would have been due to a willful choice to NOT BELIEVE what God said, not IGNORANCE of the fact that God had said anything. So again, we see that Biblical unbelief is about CHOOSING not to believe rather than being UNABLE to believe.

As believers, we certainly have proven our ability to believe, yet the author of Hebrews warns us not to allow an "evil heart of unbelief" in departing from the living God (Hebrews 3:12). That means avoiding a conscious choice NOT TO BELIEVE on our part.

How Can Faith Be Both a Fruit of the Spirit and a Gift of the Spirit?

This question is not as easy to answer as it first appears.

Galatians 5:22:

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith,

1 Corinthians 12:9:

For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

At first this does seem like a contradiction, as faith would have to be either a fruit or a gift. Either it is developed in you by the Holy Spirit or it is dropped on you for a specific thing by the Holy Spirit.

The main problem is that the Greek word for faith (pistis) also happens to be the Greek word for faithfulness. It is the same word used in the verse below:

Titus 2:10:

Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

The King James Version, Young's Literal Translation, the Reina-Valera Version (RVR 1960) and one other lesser-used one are the only ones that I know of (at this writing) that translate the word as faith in Galatians 5:22 – all others translate it as faithfulness or in one case, a synonym for it.

However, the majority is not always right. Looking at the uses of pistis in the King James Version, Titus 2:10 is notable for being the only exception. Everywhere else, pistis is translated as faith. So there would be quite a burden of proof that we should NOT translate pistis as faith as is done many dozens of times elsewhere in the New Testament.

The key is to realize what the “gift” of faith is. Paul is clear that some people are given the “gift” of faith and others are not. So this kind of faith CANNOT be the “general operating faith” that we would use, because EVERYONE has faith (Romans 12:3, Ephesians 2:8-9). The gift of faith must be faith for something specific that would not normally be covered by the Word. The classic case of the gift of faith in action is raising a dead person. You would have to “know that you know” that you can do it before you command a dead person to come back! But there is no Scripture that guarantees that you can raise a dead person. You can heal a sick person in the name of Jesus (see YOU Can Do Miracles), but you have no blanket authority to raise a dead person. Faith can “come on you” to raise a dead person, but your “general operating faith” cannot do it. (If it could, Christians would be around forever because if one died, we would just raise him!)

Thus, this “special faith” cannot be a fruit of the spirit, because EVERYONE can bear those kind of fruits.

Now that we have established that, it doesn't really matter if the FRUIT is "faith" or "faithfulness" – the kind of faith that is a gift of the Spirit is something different.

Does the Spirit work faith or faithfulness in you? You can make an argument either way, but you don't have to resolve that issue to answer the question at hand.

I would actually tend toward faithfulness for the reason that faith is something of the heart, not the spirit, and contrary to some traditional faith teaching, there is a difference between your heart and your spirit. But that's another discussion. Actually, it's the second discussion listed below!

What Are the Differences between the Gift of Faith, Gifts of Healings and the Working of Miracles? Does Faith Come from Your Spirit, Your Mind, or Somewhere Else?

Does Faith Come from Your Spirit, Your Mind or Somewhere Else?

Somewhere else.

Romans 10:9-10 makes it clear twice that it is with the HEART that man believes – so faith comes from your heart, not your spirit or your head.

So that was an easy question to answer, at least initially. Now the problem is, how do we define the heart?

The traditional “faith teaching” is that your spirit and your heart are synonymous terms, but that can be fairly easily disproven.

Proof that Your Spirit and Your Heart are Distinct

Jesus said in Mark 11:23 that you can have what you say if you don't doubt in your heart. Your born again spirit is created in God's image (Ephesians 4:24), so your spirit will never get into doubt.

In Mark 16:14, Jesus rebuked the disciples for their hardness of heart. The book of Hebrews warns against developing “an evil heart of unbelief” (Hebrews 3:12). Your born again spirit cannot participate in evil or unbelief. A few verses earlier, the same author warns against hardening your heart (Hebrews 3:8). Your born-again spirit cannot get “hard” to the things of God. How could your spirit get hard when it's “one spirit” with God (1 Corinthians 6:17), who Himself will never get hard to the things of God? So your spirit can't be your heart.

In Acts 5:1-11, we see that Satan had filled Ananias's heart to lie to the Holy Spirit and that Ananias had conceived this thing in his heart. No one's born-again spirit would ever conceive such a thing, nor could Satan ever fill someone's born-again spirit!

John raises the point in a slightly more subtle manner:

1 John 3:20:

For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

Here we see that your heart can condemn you, but God, who knows all things, WON'T condemn you (Romans 8:1). Your born-again spirit will always take God's side, so your born-again spirit will not condemn you either.

So we can see that your heart is still imperfect, while your spirit man is already perfect.

Thus, your heart and your spirit do NOT refer to the same thing.

So What IS the Heart?

The heart (Greek word kardia) is used in the Bible similarly to how we would use it in English. It can refer to many different things. It is one of those cases where “we all know what it means” but we’d be hard-pressed to pin down exactly what that meaning is.

It would seem that the heart must at least be the seat of our emotions.

Romans 9:2:

That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart.

2 Corinthians 2:4:

For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

The warnings against hardening our heart and getting an evil heart of unbelief make it clear that the heart is also the seat of your human will.

When it comes to faith, faith is not an emotion, but it IS an act of our will. We can choose to believe or disbelieve God. If our free will had no bearing on believing, God could not punish those who do not believe with an eternity of suffering.

Not Mental Assent

Faith cannot have to do with the mind because you can mentally assent to gospel truths with no benefit to yourself. The demons “believe in God” from an intellectual perspective, but that isn’t helping them at all. You could mentally assent that Jesus is the Savior of the world and still end up in hell because you never acted on that fact by receiving Him.

Action Required

Faith always ACTS on the Word, while mental assent KNOWS the Word but will not act on it. Action is a CHOICE on your part – a matter of your will. There is no real faith without corresponding action (James 2:14-26). So faith always involves your will. Your will is distinct from your spirit. If it weren’t, your fallen nature (the dead spirit you had before you received Jesus) would have always kept you from receiving Jesus!

Faith's Origin

Ultimately, the faith that you have comes from God Himself (Romans 12:3, Ephesians 2:8-9). So it does not originate from your spirit, your mind, your will, your heart, or any other part of you. The only question would be where it resides, and the Bible answer is that it resides in your heart. It is part of the makeup of your heart that God created.

What Is the Difference between Unbelief and Doubt?

The difference becomes clear when we establish a Biblical definition of unbelief and a Biblical definition of doubt.

Unbelief

It is tempting to just define unbelief as the absence of faith, given that the Greek word used most often (but not always) for unbelief is apistia while the word for faith is pistis. This definition of “unbelief” would be what people have when they just don’t know what the Word says. However, when we survey all the places where unbelief appears in the New Testament, we’ll see that they do not describe conditions where people did not know what God said. Rather, they knew what God said but chose not to act in agreement with what He said, or at least struggled with it. So if we really want to get technical, a better word for not knowing what God says is ignorance. Because some people see the word ignorance as insulting, some people might prefer to use the phrase lack of knowledge. But be careful of confusing people with this verse:

Hosea 4:6:

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

Preachers like to use this verse to convey the idea that people are dying because they’ve never heard what God says about healing. While that is true, this verse doesn’t prove it. The lack of knowledge in this verse is willful ignorance – the people rejected knowledge. They must have known God’s law, because God says that they had forgotten it. You can’t forget what you’ve never heard! So this is not a case of “I had no idea that God is the Lord Who Heals Me.” It is case of “I don’t care what God said even though I’ve heard what He said.” (Willful ignorance is also discussed in 2 Peter 3:5-7 where people who had heard of a catastrophic global flood chose to be ignorant of what happened back then.) So Hosea did NOT say that people perish because they’ve never heard about healing!

So let’s go on a tour of all the places in the New Testament where the word unbelief is used. The first two relate to Jesus’ experience at Nazareth:

Matthew 13:58:

And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

Mark 6:6:

And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching.

We cannot say that people at Nazareth had never heard what Jesus could do. That would be wrong because He WAS able to get a few sick people healed there (see Mark 6:1-6 for the whole story). So this unbelief was not from ignorance. After all, He had preached there before! They gave Him an even icier reception the first time – they tried to throw Him off a cliff and kill Him! They couldn't have been that angry unless they heard His words!

In Matthew 17:14-21, the disciples failed to cast a demon out of a boy because of their unbelief. They certainly knew what Jesus had said – that He had already given them authority over ALL demons (Luke 9:1). In fact, they had already successfully cast out other demons before this incident (Mark 6:12-13), so it wasn't as if they didn't know that they had the authority to do it. So ignorance was not the issue. In Mark's version of this story (Mark 9:17-29), the boy's father makes an interesting plea – "I believe, help thou mine unbelief." This shows that interestingly enough, believing and unbelief co-existed to some degree with him. If unbelief were simply the opposite of believing, his statement would make no sense. It would then be the nonsensical statement, "I believe, but help me because I don't believe." I think what the man was really saying was, "I know and believe what You say about all things possible to me, but please help me with the fact that this situation looks really awful and my senses are giving me fits because they contradict what You say and I'm being shaken by them." Whether you agree with that or not, I think you must agree that the man was not in ignorance of what Jesus said – he knew it because he'd just heard it. He was still struggling with unbelief.

In Mark 16:14, Jesus rebuked His disciples for their unbelief regarding His resurrection from the dead. They were not ignorant of what He had said about the matter. He made it very clear that He would be killed and then rise three days later. Their "hardness of heart" hindered them, but they were without excuse in the matter.

Now Paul discusses the Jews' unbelief:

Romans 3:1-3:

What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

This is not a matter of ignorance either – Paul says explicitly that the oracles of God were committed to them! So they knew that God said. Their response was unbelief – they did not act in agreement with what they knew God had said.

Then Paul discusses Abraham:

Romans 4:20:

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

He knew the promise of God, so it was not a case of ignorance. In Abraham's case, He believed and acted on what God had said.

The next 4 passages are from Romans 11, where Paul is talking about the Gentiles being grafted in:

Romans 11:20:

Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not highminded, but fear:

Romans 11:23:

And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graff them in again.

Romans 11:30:

For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief:

Romans 11:32:

For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

The Gentiles became the main focus of God's moving in the earth after the Jews rejected Jesus. Their unbelief led to God having to move through the Gentiles. However, Jesus walked among the Jews and was preached among them. The Jews were not in some distant African tribe that was ignorant of God's covenant. God's New Covenant was prophesied throughout the Old Covenant and then came to life before their eyes. So again, we're looking at a refusal to cooperate with God's will, not a case of never having heard God's will.

The next verse is the sole place where ignorance and unbelief come together:

1 Timothy 1:13:

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.

The Greek word for ignorantly does indeed mean without knowledge. Even then, it wasn't that Paul had no knowledge of Christianity. He HAD to understand what Christians believe because he was throwing Christians in prison! So he had to decide who was a Christian and who wasn't so that he'd know whom to haul off to jail! However, he had not walked with Jesus in person as the other apostles at the time had done. If those other apostles had turned against Christians, they would not have obtained the same mercy because they could not plead ignorance in the sense that Paul could.

Also notice that if ignorance and unbelief could be the same thing, it would be have been redundant for Paul to use the word ignorantly AND the word unbelief. So I don't see this verse as a unique verse that proves that ignorance can be unbelief.

The book of Hebrews warns believers not to get an evil heart of unbelief. This was addressed to people who already knew the truth and were already walking in it, not to people who were ignorant of it:

Hebrews 3:12:

Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

The last 3 places where we see the word unbelief are also in Hebrews. They all refer to the Israelites who did not enter into God's rest because of unbelief. The Jews knew what God said, but they were dominated more by what they saw than by what God said, so again, this was not ignorance but rather failure to act on what they knew:

Hebrews 3:19:

So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Hebrews 4:6:

Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief:

Hebrews 4:11:

Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.

So we see that unbelief refers to failure to act on what God says as opposed to not knowing what God says, which would be ignorance. In other words, you don't even qualify for unbelief until you've heard what God says, any more than you can exercise your God-given faith until you've heard what God says.

I will note in passing that some of the Hebrews references do use a different Greek word for unbelief from the other passages, but that doesn't play a crucial role in this discussion.

Now we need to come up with a working definition of unbelief that will fit all the cases above. I think that "not acting in agreement with what God said" would cover the bases. Paul wasn't acting in agreement with what God said (in ignorance, not realizing that God had really said it) before his conversion. In the other cases, people knew full well what God said and that He had really said it, but they didn't act accordingly. In many of the cases, they allowed sense knowledge to be more important to them than what God said. In others, the issue was that the people hardened their hearts.

Doubt

Now let's do the same thing with doubt. It is again tempting at first to just say that doubt is the opposite of faith. But the verses below disprove that. Here are all the places in the New Testament where we see the word doubt:

The first is when Peter walked on water, successfully at first. But then he changed his focus from Jesus' word to the circumstances, and his water walk petered out:

Matthew 14:31:

And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

The next two citations concern speaking to a mountain and not doubting:

Matthew 21:21:

Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done.

Mark 11:23:

For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

The remaining cases simply refer to being uncertain in mind about something, and they use completely different Greek words that are translated into the English word doubt. This includes phrases like “no doubt.”

The word in Matthew 14:31 is distazo, which appears in only one other place – Matthew 28:17, where Jesus rose from the dead, but some doubted. The Greek word literally means to two-stand. Perhaps a good way to put this would be that they “stood between two opinions.”

The Greek word in the other 2 verses is diakrino. The problem at first is that diakrino is translated all kinds of different ways, including discerning, judge, contending and several other dissimilar-seeming words. It does not seem to lend itself to a tight definition as well as unbelief.

It is also the word for wavering and wavereth in James 1:6, where James warns that you will receive nothing from the Lord if you waver.

It is also the word for “doubting” in “doubting nothing” in Acts 10:20 and “nothing doubting” in Acts 11:12.

Doubting, in English usage, involves being unsure or lacking conviction, considering that more than one outcome is possible. This is clearly different from faith, which is being sure of something you can't see (Hebrews 11:1), in which case only ONE outcome is possible.

Diakrino is another Greek compound word; dia means through and krino means judge. So “through-judge” would be a literal meaning. Do the various translated meanings above have any common thread? It seems that they do. In each case, there is more than one possible conclusion or outcome. Someone is determining or fighting for a specific outcome over another. Someone who is judging may have to decide between two options – “guilty” or “not guilty.” So judging in itself is not a bad thing, and neither is discerning whether one thing is true or another thing is true. Christians are to have their senses exercised to discern good and evil (Hebrews 5:14)!

Thus, someone who doubts is considering more than one conclusion. While that is okay if you're judging or discerning, it is definitely NOT okay if you are determining what to do in a situation where God has spoken plainly. If God has said something, there should be only one conclusion – God is right and any other conclusion is wrong. So you stick with what God says instead of judging between two opinions – God's Word and something that contradicts God's Word!

Interestingly, diakrino is also the word translated staggered where Abraham staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief! So there we see that doubt and unbelief can be at work at the same time.

So What's the Difference?

It seems that unbelief is knowing what God says but acting the opposite way, while doubt has heard what God says but remains unconvinced – it mentally stands between two opinions.

If you're unsure of what God says, you're in doubt, not in unbelief.

Put a little differently, doubt questions God's Word while unbelief refuses to act on God's word.

We saw that unbelief can coexist with ignorance (in Paul's case), but doubt cannot. You cannot doubt that something is true without hearing the statement in question first! Otherwise, there is nothing to question. So you can't be in doubt if you're still ignorant.

Certainly, doubt and unbelief can work together. Satan got Adam and Eve to DOUBT that God's word was true. Only then did they act in UNBELIEF – doing something contrary to what God had commanded.

Here is an example: You are eating in a restaurant and the manager comes in and yells, "Fire! Everybody needs to get out right now!" You could just sit there because you doubt that the person really is the manager, or because you doubt his assertion that there really is a fire. Or you could assume that there is a fire and that the person who said to leave is the manager, but you don't believe that you have to leave because you assume that the fire will be put out shortly, so you don't have to abandon your delicious meal and let it get cold on the table. That would be unbelief.

Unbelief is More Serious than Doubt

Unbelief is treated as a more serious condition than doubt in Scripture. We saw a reference to an "evil heart of unbelief" but no reference to "an evil heart of doubt." When Jesus rebuked Peter for doubting, one could see it as a loving rebuke, but when He addressed His disciples about their unbelief in Mark 16:14, he "upbraided" them. Upbraided is translated from the Greek verb oneidizo, which is used elsewhere to denote harsh rebukes. It is the same Greek verb used in Matthew 5:11 when Jesus said "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you," in Matthew 11:20 when Jesus upbraided cities, in Matthew 27:44 when the thieves "cast him in his teeth", in Mark 15:32 when they reviled Him, in Luke 6:22 about being blessed when men reproach you, in Romans 15:3 when men reproached Him, in 1 Thessalonians 4:10 when we suffer reproach, in James 1:5 where God upbraided not, and 1 Peter 4:14 where you're told what to do if you're reproached for the name of Christ. So it is clear that the Lord sees unbelief as more deserving of a stern rebuke than doubt.

When someone doesn't know much about healing and struggles with it, that's different from a case where someone has been taught all about divine healing but then won't cooperate with it because he's "mad at God" for "allowing" a relative to be chronically ill and/or die.

Can Faith and Doubt Co-Exist?

Yes. Peter was referred to as a person of "little faith" (as opposed to "no faith") when he doubted. So he was in faith – obviously, he had walked across some water in a storm already. He began to sink when doubt started to get the upper hand, but if he were completely in doubt and not in faith, he would have sunk like a rock immediately before Jesus could grab him.

Jesus spoke of believing and not "doubting in your heart" that something would happen. That's interesting, because the "heart" is the center of one's will. Your spirit man can't be your "heart" because your spirit is already perfect, created in God's image (Ephesians 4:24) and thus incapable of doubting. Thus, we have to allow for the possibility that you could have thoughts of doubt IN YOUR HEAD and yet still receive what you are believing for as long as that doubt hasn't gotten into your heart. The presence of a thought of doubt is often just the result of Satan whispering HIS thoughts to you ("It won't work this time," "Jesus didn't really mean what He said," and so on.) So you could have BOTH faith (in your heart) and DOUBT (in your head) at the same time. But if the doubt is only in your head and you haven't accepted it, it still won't stop you from receiving! However, if you accept the thought of doubt in your heart, that is a different story. Now you have two conflicting thoughts in your heart pulling you two different ways, which means that you're wavering and double-minded. You can tell if a doubt is in your head or in your heart by what you're saying with your mouth. (See How Can I Tell If Doubt Is in My Heart or Just in My Head?)

In Matthew 21:21, Jesus made the interesting statement, "If you have faith and do not doubt, you shall..." If doubt were simply the opposite of faith or the absence of faith, that would make no sense. In that case, Jesus' words would mean, "If you have faith and don't have the lack of faith..." (which would be redundant) or "If you have a lack of doubt and you don't doubt..." (which would also be redundant). So doubt must be something that can creep in if you are already BELIEVING, i.e., are in faith.

Interestingly, Doubting Thomas is never called that in Scripture. He didn't have any nickname that referred to his spiritual condition, but he was really Unbelieving Thomas because Jesus told him not to be faithless (unbelieving) but believing as opposed to not being doubtful but believing:

John 20:27:

Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

The word faithless here is simply the opposite of the word believing here – the Greek words are apistos and pistos. The leading “a” is a negation, just as an atheist (who doesn’t believe there’s a God) is the opposite of a theist (one who believes there’s a God). Thomas had heard enough of the fact that Jesus would rise from the dead while he walked with Jesus. So he wasn’t in doubt about where Jesus stood on the issue; he was in unbelief.

Can Faith and Unbelief Co-Exist?

Yes. The man in Mark 9:23 said, “I believe, help thou mine unbelief.” So he had both faith (belief) and unbelief at the time. His faith and his unbelief were pulling him in opposite directions and he knew it, which is why he cried for help.

What Do You DO about Doubt and Unbelief?

If you’re doubtful about what God has said, the obvious antidote would be to feed on His Word until you no longer are in doubt about what God says.

If you are in unbelief, it comes down to an act of your will – you must decide to BELIEVE what you know that God has said and act accordingly. Merely stuffing yourself with the Word does not solve the decision issue. You must choose to be a DOER of the Word and not a self-deceived person who only hears the Word but doesn’t do it (James 1:22).

Then adopt Jesus’ solution to fast and pray to keep your flesh under.

How Can I Tell if Doubt Is in My Heart or Just in My Head?

Jesus said that a mountain would move if you speak to it believing that it will move and you don't doubt it in your heart (Mark 11:23). He didn't say that doubt IN YOUR HEAD would stop your faith from working. It won't – Satan may try to whisper thoughts of doubt at your head even though you don't have doubts in your heart. His thoughts don't count. Nor do the thoughts of your unrebored flesh. Your flesh has never had a spiritual thought. But you can keep your flesh under and ignore its pleadings.

So it's important to know how to tell if doubt has lodged in your heart or if it's just a matter of thoughts in your head coming from your flesh or from the devil.

It's as easy as 1-2-3-4. Matthew 1-2-3-4, that is. Jesus said in Matthew 12:34 that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks." If you're giving VOICE to your doubt, it is coming from your heart and it will override your faith. If you aren't SAYING that you doubt something, that doubt is only in your head and not in your heart, and it will not override your faith.

What Can I Do to Make God's Written Word Become "Rhema" to Me?

If you want more revelation of the Word, my first recommendation would be to receive the Baptism with the Holy Spirit if you haven't already done so. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would teach you all things (John 14:26). You can trust Him to do His job if you're open to Him. He inspired the entire Bible, so He knows exactly what every verse means! Ask for His help to understand the Word.

My second recommendation would be to pray Paul's prayer for the Ephesians contained in Ephesians 1:15-23, and make it personal. Ask God to give you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him. He will! I have prayed that for myself with great benefit.

My third recommendation is to do as God encouraged Joshua to do – meditate on the Word (Joshua 1:7-8). This is not Eastern demonic meditation where you try to EMPTY your mind; it's FILLING your mind with the Word to renew your mind. In plain terms, think about the Word a lot! The more you do this, the more it will seem to become a part of you. It will become natural to act on it instead of acting on what your reasoning and senses tell you. (See Crossing the Bridge from Head Knowledge to Revelation Knowledge.)

Now that I've answered the intent of the question, I should point out that the question itself is actually flawed. The Greek word rhema simply refers to a spoken word, no more and no less. It does NOT carry the connotation of a "direct revelation from God," even though if you walk in certain circles you've probably heard teaching that makes it seem that way. For example, "We need to get God's written Word – logos – to be "rhema" revelation to us– a direct word from God!" But the Greek word logos also means a spoken word and it is so used all over the New Testament. Jesus is called the Word (logos) in John 1:1, and He is not a written word in a book! So what is the crucial difference between logos and rhema? Actually, you can't make a Biblical distinction when you see how both words are used. The terms are basically just as interchangeable as "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God" in Bible usage. (Some people claim there is a difference there, too, but that is unsupportable in Scripture – they mean the same thing, as you can see if you study where those two terms are used.) Rhema just means word, nothing more.

So I suppose that for consistency's sake, the best time to pray for a "rhema word" would be while entering your PIN number into an ATM machine. Then you'd be asking for a "word word" while entering your "personal identification number number" into an "automated teller machine machine."

What Is “Therefore” There For in Mark 11:24?

Mark 11:23-24:

For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

These 2 verses appear to deal with unrelated concepts – the first talks about speaking to something without praying, and the second talks about receiving something in prayer without speaking to anything. So why is the word therefore at the beginning of verse 24?

The connection is that both verses talk about speaking and believing. In the first case, you speak to something, believing that a certain result will occur. In the second, you speak by praying, believing that a certain result will occur. (Heaven does not honor “unspoken prayer requests” – if you’re not saying something, you’re not praying something!) In both cases, you believe that your words will come to pass. You can believe that what you say will happen when you say, “Sickness, get out of my body in the name of Jesus,” and you can believe what you say will happen when you say, “I receive healing for this sickness right now in the name of Jesus.”

To What Extent Can We Claim Old Testament Healing Promises?

As a New Covenant believer, you should mainly focus on New Testament healing facts as opposed to Old Testament healing promises. Always remember that the New Covenant is a better covenant established upon better promises (Hebrews 8:6). You can learn a lot from the Old Testament. Believers are never encouraged to throw out the Old Testament, which was written for our admonition. It was written for us, while the New Testament was written to us, especially the epistles.

If something is a statement of fact, it is as true now as it ever was. For example, God declares that He IS the Lord Who Heals You. God never changes (Malachi 3:6), so He still IS the Lord Who Heals You. So you can still bank on that statement under the New Covenant. Likewise, when God says that He heals all your diseases, you can still count on Him being the One who heals all your diseases today.

If something is a blessing that is conditional based on your right standing with God, you can claim it based on your right standing with God that you have in Jesus Christ. For example, there are blessings in the first 14 verses of Deuteronomy 28 that depend on you keeping the entire Law of Moses. You haven't kept the whole Law, but because you are in Christ, God will deal with you as if you had Jesus' perfect track record of keeping the whole Law. In other words, His blessings are yours as if you had never sinned at all under the Old Covenant. So the first 14 verses of Deuteronomy 28 contain blessings for you to enjoy.

If something is a blessing that would require you to keep a Jewish feast, you need to rightly divide the fact that Christ fulfilled the law. God healed Hezekiah's people when they kept the Old Testament Passover. That does not mean that you should keep the Passover to get healed today. The Passover pointed to Christ our Passover (1 Corinthians 5:7) in the New Testament. So it would be reasonable to expect to be healed today celebrating the Lord's Supper, not by celebrating the Jewish Passover feast.

If a blessing refers to Israelites or others when God's favor was on them, you can take that as God's way of treating you because you now have God's favor thanks to the blood Jesus shed for you. Old Testament prophecies often contain a long list of promises to ruin Israel and other nations as punishment for blatant, unrepented sin. But toward the end of these same prophecies, there is often a restoration prophecy that in some cases includes healing promises. When God restored Israel, He was willing to heal Israel. You should consider yourself to be in the standing with God that Israel had when God purposed to rebuild the nation, not when He purposed to tear it down.

If a blessing refers to the future millennial rule of Christ, it cannot be appropriated as a promise for today. There are quite a few such Scriptures, particularly in Isaiah. If the time described refers to the lion lying down with the lamb, it clearly is not describing something applicable for today. However, even in such cases, you can learn about God's heart to heal, as once the day comes that Christ rules in Jerusalem, healing will be in far more actual manifestation than it is today. This still shows that when Jesus has His way, people are healed.

If healing was obtained by atonement, you can see that Christ's atonement for you has provided healing for you. You do not need to do whatever they did to atone for sin; Christ already did everything that will ever need to be done. So when you read that people ran around with censers and made atonement for the people's sin, you can rejoice that Christ has already made the atonement needed to stop any plague. You do not need to run around your town with censers to accomplish something that Christ already accomplished.

If there is a condition requiring your action attached to a promise, you should assume that the same condition applies today. For example, Psalm 91's protections only apply if you "dwell in the secret place of the Most High" – not if you think that your child's Sunday soccer game is more important than church and you take the things of God lightly. The promises of prosperity and success if you will meditate in the Word day and night should only be taken to apply to you if YOU meditate in the Word day and night.

If a statement appears without conditions, you should assume that the blessing applies to you today without conditions because all the promises of God are "yes" and "amen" in Christ by us (2 Corinthians 1:20). Thus, "who heals all your diseases" (Psalm 103:3) should be accepted as a blessing for the believer today.

The #1 thing you have to remember about healing while reading the Old Testament is that under the New Testament, you were healed by Jesus' stripes. This was a wonderful condition that no one in the Old Testament was able to enjoy. You have a better covenant established upon better promises, so apply God's better covenant to yourself rather than limiting yourself to a worse one.

Is It Scriptural to Pray in Agreement with a Suffering Person that He Will Die?

If a Christian has lived out a full life and wants to die, that person has a scriptural right to die and go home to be with the Lord. Refer to the remarks elsewhere about Paul choosing to stay here instead of departing and being with Christ (Philippians 1:22-24). In fact, if the person really wants to die, you cannot force healing on him because you would not be in agreement with him. A person does not have to choose to be kept alive by machines and extraordinary medical procedures.

On the other hand, you would never want to pray that a sinner will die in his current lost condition, knowing that he will spend eternity in hell. If a sinner wants prayer to die, he needs to receive Jesus to be born again first! Then he can go home to glory instead of endless torment if he still wants to leave. It would be no act of mercy at all to agree that a sinner will die and go to a Christless eternity, where the fire never goes out and the worm never dies (Mark 9:44 and elsewhere). He might think that death would be a relief, but death would be only the doorway to worse suffering. He could not possibly be better off dead than alive no matter how much he is suffering now. I would never agree to help someone have such an awful fate.

Also, if a person has not lived out a full life, there is no precedent for explicitly praying that he will die. You would in that case be praying contrary to the known will of God. However, if the person wants to die anyway, you can't keep him here against his will with your prayers. To that extent, your "agreement" is just that you won't try to keep him here.

We had an elderly person in the church we pastored say, "DON'T pray for my healing. I just want to go be with Jesus. Just pray that I won't suffer much." So that's what my wife and I prayed, and she did indeed "go home" without suffering. That's where her faith was, and that had to be our point of agreement. It would not have been agreement to pray that she would live when she wanted to die.

What Should I Do if I'm in a Country Where I Can Be Sued for Praying for Someone by Name without His Explicit Prior Consent?

Then don't pray for anyone by name without his explicit prior consent, unless you want to be tied up in court in that country. If you do pray, do it by yourself in the privacy of wherever you're staying, not in public. Suing is a sport to some people.

We have to use wisdom about these things. Jesus said to tell everyone the good news, but that doesn't mean that it's a good idea to walk the streets of Tehran with a sandwich board with slogans about Jesus on it.

If you visit a church in such a country, the pastor probably will tell you not to pray for anyone without consent. This is a matter of church policy to protect the church and the pastor from a lawsuit. If you're not sure, ask! I've been in the exact situation that I describe here. NEVER go against the host pastor's instructions, unless he tells you to praise Allah or worship Mary or something else that would violate your beliefs as a Christian.

Now having said that, I actually think in many cases that such policies do preachers like me a favor. It gets rid of those "Please ask God to heal Cousin Carl in Calgary" prayers when Cousin Carl in Calgary knows nothing about the matter. Those aren't effective prayers anyway, and barring the "gift of faith" operating, nothing will happen anyway and the prayer is a waste of time. You can't ask God to "bomb" Cousin Carl with healing power to be healed any more than you can ask God to "bomb" Cousin Carl with saving power so that he can get saved. Cousin Carl needs to hear, believe and act on the gospel, not just have people "pray for his healing."

Should I Go to the Local Big-Box Store and Offer to Pray over the Sick?

I've seen well-meaning Christians do this, but I don't. That store is private property, and you don't have the same right to stand in the store or in its private parking lot that you would in a public park. I do my public ministry in public locations.

Now, I HAVE laid hands on the sick (as opposed to "praying for them," which is technically an incorrect description) in big-box stores, but the situation always involved someone telling me how horrible he felt. I figured that because I had the authority to do something about it, I should. I watched one lady dance around the meat aisle thanking Jesus, instantly healed of a flu case that had bothered her for days. But I don't head to the store with the purpose of trying to turn a section of the store into a revival meeting. (In this case, I got to lay hands on two other people in the meat aisle, but that was the extent of it.)

The well-meaning Christians whom I saw making regular trips to a certain store to pray over people were eventually chased out by store management, and rightly so. You will be a better witness if you respect people's property rights.

Does Scripture Promise a Mighty Worldwide End-Time Revival?

Given that the word revival is never used in the New Testament, the short answer is no.

However, there is a very exciting promise of a country-wide “revival” that will sweep EVERYONE in an entire country into the kingdom! Here is this amazing and often-overlooked prophecy:

Romans 11:26:

And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob:

While the Bible doesn't define revival, I think most of us would agree that having everyone in a country get saved would qualify for the use of that term, especially in an age where a small number of people getting saved could be trumpeted around the world as a revival if the preacher has the right media connections.

Another indication of this mighty Israeli revival is found in the following passage, which is also about Israel rather than the Gentiles:

Isaiah 60:1-3:

Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

If the Gentiles are coming to their light, this move isn't among the Gentiles. Also note that in general, gross darkness is going to cover the earth, which is not a depiction of a world that the church has taken over or is experiencing a mega-move of God that is sweeping people into the Kingdom.

Israel is the only country that is the subject of such a prophecy. The conditions in the rest of the world before Jesus returns aren't as rosy:

2 Timothy 3:13:

But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.

(“Wax” means become; it does not mean that that cars will get poorer wax jobs or that women will wax themselves with botulism toxin more to try to get rid of wrinkles in the last days, though that may be true.)

This hardly depicts a situation where the Church has taken over everything.

What about the church taking over the seven mountains of culture? The only “seven mountains” mentioned in Scripture are the seven hills on which the whore of Babylon sits:

Revelation 17:9:

And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

In general, the Bible does not talk about a mighty last-days earth-sweeping revival, but it DOES talk about a global falling away:

2 Thessalonians 2:3:

Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

If there were not a global apostasy, the man of sin (the Antichrist) would never be able to assume power! He has to deceive the nations into letting him run the world! If Christians take over the “politics” mountain of culture, the Antichrist will never be allowed by the body of Christ to lead anything, so the Scriptures about him will never be fulfilled. If they take over the “education” mountain of culture, children will not be taught lies that would make them willing subjects of the Antichrist’s ungodly one world government. If they take over the “media” mountain of culture, news organizations all over the world will warn the public of the dangers of the Antichrist before he can get anywhere. And so on...you get the idea.

Paul affirmed that in the last days, many would depart from the faith (1 Timothy 4:1) and that the times would be perilous, not glorious:

2 Timothy 3:1-5:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come.

For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

Without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.

Jesus made it plain that the last days are times in which many will be offended (Matthew 24:10) – have you ever seen so many offended people as today? If they aren’t offended themselves, they’ll get offended on behalf of someone else who isn’t even offended himself! Many false prophets will deceive many (Matthew 24:11). Iniquity will abound, and people’s love will grow cold (Matthew 24:12). There will be wars, famines, pestilences and earthquakes (Matthew 24:7). Christians will be hated by ALL nations (that includes the one you live in) before Christ returns (Matthew 24:9), not welcomed with open arms to come bring revival to every person in every nation. This planet will NOT be a made-ready-for-Christ utopia when He returns! Otherwise, Jesus’ words would be lies. Thus, the whole idea that a worldwide move of God will cause the majority of people to get saved is a nice-sounding but anti-biblical fantasy. After all, Jesus said that FEW would find the right gate and MANY would not (Matthew 7:14).

So how can people conclude that Jesus is coming back for a church that has taken over the world on His behalf?

One possibility is a popular but untenable interpretation of Ephesians 5:25-27. This interpretation says that the church is going to grow into perfection so that by the time Christ returns, it is without spot or wrinkle. Thus, it will flow in the fullness of what it should have been flowing in all along, with mature believers always doing the will of God. However, that isn't Paul's point. Jesus has already sanctified (made holy) the church with the washing of water by the Word, and that is how He can present the church to Himself holy and without blemish. The lack of blemish is not because we have attained sinless perfection in our works (which will never happen in this dispensation) but rather that Jesus' blood has already made us holy and without blemish in God's eyes.

I have gone through great lengths to persuade you in this book that there is only ONE Church Age. There was no "Early Church Age" where miracles were allowed to an extent that they can't be allowed today. People may have changed, but the ground rules for the Church Age have never changed. I hope you would agree, because no Scripture supports any divisions in the Church Age. The same things that were available to the original apostles are available to us today. It would be making exactly the same mistake the denominational people make (with a different time twist) to assert that will be a "Last-of-the-Last-Days Church Age" just before Jesus returns where the ground rules are different and we can have more miracles. There's nothing to support that either. There is one Church Age and one set of rules. Period.

I would expect to see more miracles today than in the "dark ages" due to the increase of knowledge since then. Daniel said that knowledge would increase (Daniel 12:4), so accordingly, I would expect miracles to increase, even though the ground rules for the age have not changed. Thus, I would support the idea of the church getting brighter while the world gets darker. What I DO NOT SEE in Scripture is that the church will get brighter and make the whole world brighter.

Another passage sometimes used completely out of context to describe an end-time revival is a depiction that "Joel's army" of believers is going to rush on cities, run on walls and generally take over. But that is the opposite of what Joel was talking about – he foretold coming gloom and doom for Israel back then:

Joel 2:1-11:

Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand;

A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations.

A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather blackness.

They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.

They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.

The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

And the LORD shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the LORD is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

The day Joel foretold was a day of gloom and darkness, not light and revival! Before this army shows up, the land is like Eden, and after it's done, the land is a desolate wilderness. If it were a revival army, we would expect that the land would be a desolate wilderness before it shows up, but Eden after it's done! People will be PAINED and have their faces blackened when they see this army approach. So it will be no cause for celebration! Yes, this is "the Lord's army" that "executes His word" (this is where some people get confused), but it is His army of judgment executing His word of judgment! So this passage has NOTHING WHATSOEVER to do with an end-time revival outpouring!

Another reason that people expect a worldwide outpouring is the sheer number of false prophetic words about a great revival that shall surely start in the very place where each particular prophecy was given! This has gotten to the point of absolute silliness in some circles. All it does is prove a total lack of discernment on the part of the hearers who are supposed to "prove" prophecies (1 Thessalonians 5:21). Let's face it – if there are n prophecies of a great end-time worldwide outpouring starting in different locations, at least $n-1$ of those prophecies must be false prophecies– and I wouldn't bet any money on the n^{th} one either!

Before I close this topic, let's put something into perspective. Back when I pastored, I had a man in many times to speak whom I perceived to be a we're-taking-over "dominionist." Disagreement over "eschatology" (the study of end times) is not an issue that would stop me from inviting someone in who had a different view as long as he didn't use it as a wedge issue in his messages. He didn't push his view with us, and his messages were always a blessing to our church. Likewise, if I know that a pastor is a dominionist, it won't stop me from being willing to preach at his church, though obviously I'd stay away from end-time topics in my preaching. So all of this is interesting to study, but differences of opinion in the matter should not cause rifts in the body of Christ any more than differences of opinion about the timing or existence of the Rapture and the Millennium.

In short, nothing in Scripture promises a worldwide end-time revival. We have really never seen a worldwide revival, though there have been some “hot spots” over the years. I don’t see that any worldwide outpouring is required to fulfill any prophecy before Jesus can return. Still, I don’t claim to know all that the Holy Spirit has in store, and I know that He does want to move on the earth wherever people will allow Him to move. We may yet see some surprising moves of God ahead, though they can’t go beyond the limits of what the Scriptures above predict.

Scriptures that DO Point to God Moving in the Last Days

Having said all that, There ARE Scriptures that point to God moving mightily in the last days despite all the deception and ungodliness. Here are three that I would put in that category.

Romans 5:20:

Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound:

It seems that with God, the more sin there is, the more He pours out His grace! The next Scripture echoes this:

Isaiah 59:19:

So shall they fear the name of the LORD from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall lift up a standard against him.

So when evil days come, we should expect a “backlash” against the evil in those days to be orchestrated by the Holy Spirit. The darker the world gets, the brighter the Church should get!

Psalms 119:126:

It is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.

There has been more “making void God’s law” today than ever before. Thus, THIS is the time when we should expect God to act! He doesn’t have to add to the finished work of Christ, but we should expect Him to stir up believers to act on that finished work. It is not God’s style to just hand everything over to the devil. When the devil is working, you can count on God to be working too! God isn’t just going to hand the planet over to Satan and not do anything Himself.

For a discussion of so-called “latter rain” and some other reasons why I can’t see an end-time revival that sweeps almost everybody into the Kingdom, please read Healing and the Last Days, which comes at this same point from some other angles and brings up other Scriptures.

What Can You Say to Someone Who Just Lost a Loved One to Sickness?

The most important thing a grieving person can know is that you care. The person does not need a theological dissertation about anything. I think the best thing you can say is probably, "I'm sorry about your loss." Just being there for someone speaks volumes even if you don't say a whole lot.

While "He's in a better place now" is true if the person was a believer, it is probably not very comforting and can come across as trite. The grieving person is not upset about the believer's current surroundings in glory. He is grieving because he misses the person who went to be with Jesus. That is perfectly normal and natural, and there is nothing "anti-faith" about being sad about a loved one's departure. There is no "instant cheer-up" faith Scripture to stand on that makes everything okay, and the relatives don't need your exhortation to cheer up; they need your compassion. The Bible tells us to weep with those who weep (Romans 12:15), not to rebuke those who weep because they're not rejoicing at the moment.

In fact, I'd be concerned about a person who didn't grieve at the loss of a spouse; one would wonder whom that person had waiting in the wings in an abnormal case like that!

We can pray that God will manifest Himself as the God of all comfort who comforts us in all our tribulation (2 Corinthians 1:3-4), comforts the downcast (2 Corinthians 7:6), heals the brokenhearted, and binds up their wounds (Psalm 147:3). We can be thankful that Jesus came to heal the brokenhearted (Luke 4:18).

If the deceased was not a believer, "He's in a better place now" is an outright lie that makes God out to be a liar, and under no circumstances should you say such a thing about someone who was known to be an unbeliever until his dying breath.

Of course, "He is wailing and gnashing his teeth in eternal agony in hell where the fire never goes out and the worm never dies" would be a correct statement about a deceased unbeliever, but not a comforting thought to share with the mourning family.

It can be especially difficult if the deceased person was a "faith person" who said he was "standing on the Word" for his healing. In such cases, family members can be angry at God and take it out on "faith people" when they feel that God failed to honor His Word. Sometimes, if they know you are a "faith person," they will demand to know why the person died. I think the best answer comes from Deuteronomy 29:29: "The secret things belong unto the LORD our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." Since we cannot see inside people's hearts the way God can, some things will remain a secret to us until we see God in heaven. So it is not a problem to admit "I don't know" concerning the exact reason that a particular person died. However, the things that are revealed to us, including His will to heal in all cases, are still true throughout this lifetime. What we must not do is back down on the integrity of the revealed Word to provide false comfort to the bereaved, which is all too often what happens. (See Descent into Stupidity for what can happen when people try to give false comfort to the bereaved.)

What is not a secret is that we do know that God's will is healing in all cases. God didn't make healing a secret. God does not make exceptions to His will for "secret" reasons – that is not what Deuteronomy 29:29 is talking about. So we cannot even hint that some sovereign exception could have been the case. However, especially if you are the pastor or a minister, you may get angry statements from grieving family members that the deceased was a person of great faith, and if anyone knew how to believe God, he did, and so on. They want you to side with them against the Word, and you can't, but at the same time, you can't come across as insensitive or as just wanting to give a lecture to the family. If they demand that you admit that sometimes it isn't God's will to heal, you can't agree with that statement. You are experiencing Perilous Pastoral Pushback. You must not compromise the Word to please men. When things don't play out according to God's revealed will, the breakdown is always on man's end of things, even though we don't want to see it that way. The alternative is to deny the integrity of the Word and say that God no longer exalts His Word above His name (Psalm 138:2), but He now violates it as He sees fit in His sovereignty.

So your job is to "speak the truth in love" (Ephesians 4:15), which means that you can neither be insensitive nor compromise anything God has revealed in His Word. Be glad that Christ has been made wisdom unto you (1 Corinthians 1:30) so that you may know how to answer every person (Colossians 4:6) as you walk that tightrope.

Here are some statements that are NOT good things to say to grieving families:

"If that person had been in faith, he wouldn't have died so young."

While you can't deny this, saying something like that outright to the bereaved makes you seem like an insensitive boor rather than a compassionate follower of Jesus. This is why you need to walk in love and wisdom, not just Bible knowledge! Knowledge puffs up; love builds up (1 Corinthians 8:1).

"If YOU had been in faith, you would have commanded that person to be healed."

This isn't even necessarily true; there are many reasons that people don't get healed – many of which involve that person not wanting to be healed. It is not right to heap guilt on others (or yourself) because someone died. And as one faith preaching pioneer said, "Everyone I lay hands on is going to die at some point."

"He may have been a Christian, but he wasn't a tither, so the devourer wasn't rebuked for his sake."

Save the tithing lessons for some other time. This would just make the bereaved think that all or Christian ministries want is people's money if you bring this up at such a time.

"He kept confessing that it was HIS cancer and that his back was KILLING him, and that's why he died of cancer of the spine."

Save the Word confession lessons for another time, too. The bereaved need your comfort, not your Bible lessons on confession.

Many things could be discussed down the road, but immediately after the loss of a loved one is not the time to have those discussions!

Under NO circumstances should you EVER repeat one of the following LIES:

“God took him.”

(God received Him if He was a believer; He did not “take” him. The only person I can think of in the Bible that God “took” was Enoch, and he DIDN’T die!)

“God needed him in heaven in His choir.”

(God has no urgent personnel needs in heaven that require killing someone on the earth. Satan is not God’s heavenly headhunter.)

“In His sovereignty, God chose to say NO to his prayers and our prayers for his healing.”

(This is covered elsewhere in this book.)

“God wanted him to go home because He knew that others would be saved at his funeral.”

(Only one Man had to die so that others could be saved, and it wasn’t the deceased person. This is also covered in more detail elsewhere.)

“We can never know God’s will for sure; He works in mysterious ways.”

(The Bible never says that God works in mysterious ways. The Bible tells you what His ways are. It is improper to blame God for working the works of the devil. See elsewhere for more on this particular lie.)

“His time had come because He had finished his work.”

(There is no God-determined pre-appointed time to die. If a Christian dies before living a long life, the only way that could be possibly be God’s will is in the case of a martyr.)

“God didn’t want him to suffer any longer, so He caused him to die.”

(Jesus, who is the same yesterday, today and forever, did NOT go around killing people to terminate their suffering! He terminated their suffering by killing their diseases!)

Are Women Redeemed from Labor Pains?

Because Jesus bore our pains (Isaiah 53:4), you might wonder whether women have been redeemed from labor pains. It would seem that pains should include everything, including pains associated with childbirth. However, Genesis talks about women bringing forth children in sorrow, so this question isn't quite as easy to answer as it first appears. We know for sure that women are redeemed from sterility and miscarriages (Exodus 23:25-26) and death while giving birth (1 Timothy 2:15, which will require a lengthy explanation below due to the many difficulties in interpreting that verse). But being redeemed from labor pains (or not) is a trickier question. Jesus obviously did not have labor pains on the cross, but He took all kinds of other pain for us.

One quick "try" to rationalize the idea that God's people should have quick, painless childbirths would be Exodus 1:19: "And the midwives said to Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere in the midwives come in unto them." However, this argument falls apart when you back up 2 verses to Exodus 1:17, "But the midwives feared God, and did not do as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men children alive." This proves that the midwives were lying to Pharaoh. They were NOT actually late to the deliveries due to the Hebrew women being so quick to deliver their sons, who were supposedly having supernaturally fast childbirths.

Making this more interesting is the fact that there are two major curses in the Bible – the "curse on the earth" in Genesis 3:16-19 (see below) and the "curse of the Law" (i.e., the curse for breaking the Law) in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39. Without question, Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the Law because Galatians 3:13 explicitly says so. However, "in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children" was part of the curse on the earth, not part of the curse of the Law.

Here is the full "curse on the earth:"

Genesis 3:16-19:

Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception, and in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast harkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it thou wast taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

There is no mention of weeds (thorns and thistles) in the garden before sin. Obviously, we have not yet been redeemed from weeds, either.

People still have to work for a living, so that part of the curse on the earth is still in effect. (Some lazy people have tried to make a doctrine that Christ has redeemed from working, but 2 Thessalonians 3:10 and Ephesians 4:28 disprove this.) Also, if this curse were removed from the earth, we would be immortal already, since we would no longer return to the dust of the earth. (There are people around preaching that old error, too, but when the people preaching this die, as inevitably happens, it weakens the credibility of the argument. Of course, the fact that we have mortal [subject to death] bodies that have not yet received immortality according to Scripture also ruins that argument.)

Because we still physically die eventually (“return to the dust”) and have to work for a living (at least you’re supposed to, even if you live in a welfare state, if you’re able to work), it would appear that we are still under the “curse on the earth” which includes sorrow in bringing forth children, which we will have to define more clearly below.

If you read most translations of Genesis 3:16, including the NKJV, they translate the verse to say “labor pains.” The most common Spanish translation (RVR 1960, which translated directly from Hebrew) also uses the word for pain. Young’s Literal Translation sticks with the King James’s “sorrow” rendering. So if you read most translations and don’t do any digging into the Hebrew, your version of the Bible will just tell you flat out that women will have labor pains.

So that would seem to be a convincing argument that women are not redeemed from labor pains since they are part of the curse on the earth that remains to this day.

Now to make sure that “no” is a completely Biblical answer, there are two necessary steps. We must prove conclusively that labor pains are in fact part of the curse on the earth from which we have not yet been redeemed, and we must demonstrate that Christ did not redeem us from that particular kind of pain.

If labor pains aren’t part of the curse on the earth, the entire argument above falls apart. So let’s start by examining the Hebrew in the phrase “in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children” to verify that sorrow actually does mean “pain” as in labor pains. So a quick lookup reveals that the Hebrew word used for sorrow in the phrase “in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children” appears in the following other Bible verses as the underlined word or phrase:

Psalm 127:2:

It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

Proverbs 5:10:

Lest strangers be filled with thy wealth; and thy labours be in the house of a stranger;

Proverbs 10:22:

The blessing of the LORD, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it.

Proverbs 14:23:

In all labour there is profit: but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.

Proverbs 15:1:

A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger.

Jeremiah 22:28:

Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not?

Now we have a problem! The word sorrow did NOT turn out to denote actual physical pain clearly in any of the other places where it appeared. Therefore, we are on very shaky ground if we want to declare that Genesis 3:16 is the only verse in the Bible where that word means pain. There is another Hebrew word that means pain, and the one in Genesis 3:16 isn't it. It's actually the one mistranslated "sorrows" in Isaiah 53:4; the literal Hebrew indicates that Jesus carried our pains. So even though the same English word "sorrow(s)" is used in both Genesis 3:16 and Isaiah 53:4, it isn't the same Hebrew word, and the one for pain is the one in Isaiah, not Genesis!

So we have not been able to prove that labor pains are part of the curse on the earth. You could make a case that labor itself in childbirth is part of the curse on the earth, and thus a woman will have to go through labor (hard work) to have a child. But if this simply means hard work as opposed to pain, a woman could still be redeemed from the pain associated with that hard work.

Can we make a case from the first instance of the word sorrow in Genesis 3:16, which is actually a different Hebrew word? It appears in the context of conception, not childbirth, but let's at least look at the other cases where the word sorrow in "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception" appears in the Hebrew:

Genesis 3:17:

And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

Genesis 5:29:

And he called his name Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground which the LORD hath cursed.

Once again, we can't make a convincing case for this to refer to actual physical pain, as it is possible to work hard for a living without being in pain.

Does the Bible say anything else about labor pains, particularly in the New Testament? Yes, it does:

Galatians 4:19:

My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you,

Galatians 4:27:

For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband.

So far we haven't encountered anything decisive about pain per se. But now we find:

Revelation 12:2:

And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

In the case of Revelation 12:2, the Greek word does refer to being tormented (and is so translated in other places), not just working hard. This doesn't necessarily mean that you have to be in pain, but the woman in this metaphorical statement was. Now consider:

John 16:21:

A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

So we'd best look up the words for travail, sorrow and anguish in the Scripture above and see if they shed any light on anything.

The word for travail means to deliver, bear or give birth, and nothing more. So there is no pain element associated with it.

The word for sorrow means grief, sorrow, heaviness, or in the case of giving, it's the word used for "grudgingly" that tells you not to give grudgingly. It does not indicate physical pain in any other verse where it appears, though it certainly doesn't connote a feeling you would ask for if you had a choice.

The word for anguish is elsewhere translated affliction, persecution, trouble, and burdened. Once again, there is no physical pain connotation, but none of these translated words are things you would pray to receive on purpose.

So far, we still have not proved anything conclusively about pain. Let's consider some other Scriptures.

"The sorrows of a travailing woman shall come upon him..." – Hosea 13:13

The word for "sorrows" is translated "pains" or "pangs" in many translations other than the KJV, but we don't have anything conclusive here.

"And they shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth..." – Isaiah 13:8

The word for "pain" has various meanings, but it IS translated "pain" or some variant of it in Psalm 55:4 ("My heart is sore pained within me..."), Isaiah 23:5 ("...so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre"), Jeremiah 30:23 ("...it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked"), Lamentations 4:6 ("And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin [a place name] shall have great pain"), Joel 2:6 ("Before their face the people shall be much pained...") and Micah 4:10 ("Be in pain and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail..."). So now it appears that we HAVE found some support for the idea that there was to be pain associated with childbirth after all.

Isaiah 21:3:

Therefore are my loins filled with pain: pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

Psalm 48:6:

Pain seized them there, Anguish, as of a woman in childbirth.

Jeremiah 6:24:

We have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

Jeremiah 22:23:

O inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

Jeremiah 49:24:

Damascus is waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her: anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail.

Jeremiah 50:43:

The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail.

Micah 4:9:

Now why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail.

1 Thessalonians 5:3:

For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape.

In the case of 1 Thessalonians 5:3, the Greek word odin that is translated travail appears only 3 other times in the Bible. Twice it is translated sorrows and once it is translated pains. The most notable thing is that 1 Thessalonians is in the New Testament, but it still refers to an uncomfortable childbirth. It doesn't specify "upon a sinner with child," but still "upon a woman with child," which would seem to still include Christian women.

Given how often pain and travail (in childbirth) are associated with each other, it seems clear that the understanding under the Old Covenant, at least, was that childbirth does involve pain, travail and anguish. It had started looking like maybe pain wasn't part of the package, but now we have enough Scripture to indicate that it was understood that pain in childbirth WAS part of the package after the earth was cursed.

Now what about Jesus bearing our pains and thus exempting women from labor pains? There are no Bible accounts of women who were ready to deliver coming to Jesus and giving birth without pain. It's hard to draw arguments from silence. Yet it's hard to imagine God saying that all other kinds of pain were taken for you, but one particular kind of pain that only women have must remain. If pain is a curse for sin, and you have been redeemed from sin, why should you have to bear pain of any kind?

As you can see, the problem with this question is that you can come up with a rather convincing argument in either direction!

We never get our doctrine from experiences, whether our own or that of others. Some Christian women say that they had pain-free labor, feeling only strong pressure but not pain. Some doctors have stated that there are tens of thousands of pain-free childbirths every year for whatever reason. There are probably plenty of unbelieving women who also say that they had pain-free labor using blatantly New Age techniques. You do not want to get involved in anything to do with New Age techniques (self-hypnosis to access your inner god, etc.) even if the adherents claim success. After all, there are plenty of voodoo adherents in the Caribbean who claim success, too, and that doesn't mean you should run out and practice voodoo or get a book on "Christian" voodoo! So I would caution Christian women to really look at what they're considering getting into when someone claims to offer "pain-free" childbirth. There are people out there claiming success with "Higher Power" as opposed to JESUS, and you always want to avoid the Higher Power crowd and only go with the Jesus crowd.

Are the Christians who had pain-free childbirth onto something, or are they simply blessed to be in the minority of women who get off easy in childbirth, whether believers or not?

What Does 1 Timothy 2:15 Mean?

1 Timothy 2:15 is surely one of the hardest verses in the Bible to explain; I'd rank it up there with 1 John 1:9. Those who advocate pain-free childbirth interpret this to mean that you are saved from pain and discomfort in the process. Can it really be taken to mean that?

1 Timothy 2:15:

Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

The "they" part is straightforward; it is the husband and wife referred to in 1 Timothy 2:12 (see Notes on 1 Timothy 2:15). So no, 1 Timothy 2:12 does NOT state that no woman can have authority in the church. It is talking about a wife usurping authority over a husband – click here for much more detail on that sometimes contentious matter! The difficult part is understanding what "saved" means. There are all kinds of explanations out there in the church world.

At least one denomination actually believes that women go to hell if they don't have children because they are "saved" in childbearing. (I did not make that up! They did, based on the verse in question!) This isn't quite as easy to dismiss as it first appears because the word in is the Greek word dia, which often does mean "by" or "through" or "by means of." So they assume that Paul meant that women are saved by childbearing or by means of childbearing. However, that conclusion would be at odds with many other verses that do NOT mention motherhood as a condition to be saved. The question is whether dia can mean something different, and we see that dia does have a different shade of meaning in 1 Corinthians 3:15, where Paul talks about being saved, yet so as "by" fire (or through fire, as in Young's Literal Translation). The picture seems to be of someone who is running out of a fire with only his body and no other possessions. However, dia in that context certainly does not mean that a person whose works are burned up are saved by (or by means of) the fire that burns them up. It is clear that believing that Jesus rose from the dead and confessing Him as Lord are the prerequisites to being saved, not bearing children. So we can move on.

Another popular explanation is that women are saved from hell by "the childbearing," which according to this line of reasoning refers to Jesus. This is another honest attempt to make sense of a difficult verse. However, that explanation falls apart due to its condition of continuing in faith and love and holiness with sobriety. If that is indeed the condition of being saved through Jesus, we have just introduced the very Galatian works gospel that Paul so ardently preached against! If we have to maintain a certain love or holiness standard to stay saved, we would lose our assurance of eternal life. How would you ever know if you measured up to that standard? Just how holy would your conduct have to be? The second reason this falls apart is that the condition involves both the husband and the wife doing something. This would predicate your salvation on the action of someone else, which is clearly unbiblical. This is no better than the error preached in certain areas that if you're cremated (something you can't control because it involves the actions of others after you're gone), you go to hell. The Bible is clear that your eternal destination is something that only you can decide; no one else's actions can determine it. The third issue is that the only other place where a similar Greek word appears talks explicitly about widows remarrying and bearing children (1 Timothy 5:14) and it is sure that none of THEM will bear Jesus! The fourth issue is that Paul didn't refer to "the childbearing" to mean Jesus anywhere else, so this is suspect. The fifth issue is that "the childbearing" would be an awkward way to describe someone's labor and childbirth. If a friend delivered a baby, would you ask "How long were you in the childbearing?"

So another explanation came along to sidestep the issues with the explanations above. This one says that a woman finds her fulfillment in raising children, and so she is “saved” in a certain sense by doing that. This solves the issue of the Greek word dia by keeping its meaning in many other places as “by means of” – she is “saved” (fulfilled) by means of raising children. However, this puts the woman in the role of a baby factory and child care provider who has no other fulfillment. What about women who never have children? What about women whose children are grown and gone? Are they now doomed to be unfulfilled for the rest of their lives? That doesn’t seem reasonable. And again, there is the pesky problem of the condition that involves both the husband and the wife. Is she doomed to be unfulfilled raising children if the husband runs off with another woman or lives an unholy, unloving life? Another serious problem is that the Greek word for childbearing, while found only here and in a modified form elsewhere where Paul advises widows to remarry and bear children (1 Timothy 5:14), is a compound word that could roughly be translated child-happening, child-making, child-doing, and so on (one of the words is a somewhat general-purpose word and the other refers to a child). It appears to be a reference to an event (“the child-bearing” in Young’s Literal Translation) and not an ongoing process. So I admire the thought that went into trying to keep the word dia as “by means of” while explaining the verse, but the “saved through (dia) fire” illustration above already demonstrates that we don’t really need to do that. This explanation seems to be grasping for straws and I can’t picture it as being what Paul really meant.

So then another explanation came along that childbearing is a trial, and you are saved “though” it like someone running through a fire – things may not be easy, but you are still saved from hell at the end if you stay faithful to the Lord through it all. But any explanation that “saved” means “saved from hell” comes up against the issue already stated above that someone else’s actions cannot determine your salvation from hell, and the word they is plural so it can’t just mean the woman herself. So again, I’d say “nice try” but I’d move on.

So if the verse doesn't mean any of those other things, what does it mean? I would say that it means that the woman will be healed, preserved, delivered, etc., through the child-bearing process. In other words, she will not die or contract incurable problems by giving birth. This would be consistent with the word sozo found in this verse for "saved" – this word is translated healed as well as saved in the traditional sense. The condition is that she and her husband continue in faith, love and holiness with sobriety. This condition can't affect her eternal destiny, but it can affect her temporal situation when it comes to childbirth. Now, are we back to a works gospel? I don't think so. We aren't talking about works saving anyone from hell. In this life, our works DO determine our destinies to a large extent. Our words bring life and death. If we give sparingly, we reap sparingly, and if we give bountifully, we reap bountifully. If we honor our parents, we will live longer. If we show mercy, we will reap mercy, but if we sow judgment, we will reap judgment. A lot of what we get in this life depends on our works, though going to heaven or hell depends only on the "work" of calling on Jesus to be saved, not any of our own works of righteousness. So I don't think it's inconsistent for God to say, "Here is a promise of making it through childbirth, but here are the conditions." It may not seem fair that the woman's outcome depends on the husband, too, but I don't see any other way to read the "they" in that verse as the husband and wife depicted in verse 12. (One author believes that "they" means multiple females, but that is not the context in verse 12.)

If she is physically preserved in that sense, does that mean that she can have a pain-free delivery? After all, if she has a promise of being delivered and healed through childbirth, wouldn't being free of pain be part of being healed?

At this point I would defer to other New Testament writings concerning pain and childbirth. There is no indication from other Scriptures that the new standard is pain-free childbirth and that only the wicked have to endure it now. We see no reference to "a SINNER in childbirth" – it was still "a woman" who is in travail, even in the New Testament (see 1 Thessalonians 5:3 and John 16:21 above).

My Conclusion

As we have seen, you could build a case on either side of this question, and many people have! If someone wanted to go for "pain-free childbirth" I wouldn't stand in her way to discourage her, but on the other hand, I would not want her to feel like she let the Lord down through lack of faith if she actually DID have pain after all and requested medication to deal with it.

I think I have demonstrated that the curse on the earth, which does include pain in childbirth, is still active on the earth today. Unless you don't have to weed your garden or farm or work for a living or can claim that you will never return to the dust physically, it is quite obvious to me that even you as a Christian are still subject to the curse on the earth even though you are not subject to the curse for breaking the Law of Moses. So my best answer to the question would be, "No."

What tips the scales to move me decidedly onto the “still in effect” side is 1 Timothy 2:15. The fact that childbirth is raised as a particular potential problem area in 1 Timothy 2:15 indicates to me that the curse on the earth regarding childbirth issues was actually not lifted away at the cross. If it were, childbirth should be a breeze for the believer and no special promise should have to be made about it. Paul could simply have said, “Because you’re in Christ, you will be saved through the childbearing process” without attaching any conditions to it. I believe that Paul’s point was that even though the curse on the earth is still in effect, God will guide godly couples through the process of childbirth without any lasting harm.

It’s a tough verse, and if you have a different opinion about it, that’s fine. Maybe you’re even right.

Because I Received Authority by Grace, How Could My Personal Conduct Affect My Ability to Minister Healing to Others?

First, if you're an obnoxious moron, no one will want to listen to you, and that would definitely restrict your ability to minister healing.

Second, Jesus taught that your lifestyle CAN affect your ability to minister. The disciples failed to cast out a demon even though they already DID have the authority to cast that demon out. They let unbelief override their faith because they had not been praying and fasting (Mark 9:17-29).

Third, Paul taught that you're "fit" for the master's use if you'll put aside fleshly things.

2 Timothy 2:20-21:

But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

A more consecrated person will have an easier time doing the works of Jesus than a person who tries to see how much sin he can get away with.

Fourth, certain sins completely disqualify you from functioning in a ministry office. If your kids act like demons and terrorize the local elementary school, or if you're a lover of money or a drunk, you are no longer fit to be an elder or a deacon, let alone any other kind of leader in the body of Christ. While you would still have the legal right to minister healing because of your authority in Christ, having to be removed from a ministry position will certainly interfere with your ability to have others take you seriously and receive from you.

Are Some Illnesses Harder to Be Healed of than Others?

It is no harder for God to heal you if you are a terminal cancer patient who also happens to have AIDS, a missing disc in your back and two kidneys that don't work than to heal you if you have a pulled muscle. It is no less possible for you to receive your healing, because ALL things are possible to him who believes (Mark 9:23). So if you walk by faith and not by sight, no condition is harder than any other.

However, your flesh will not see things that way, and your ability to handle the harder cases will depend on your ability to minister out of your born-again spirit and not out of your unspiritual flesh.

A certain demon was harder to cast out for the disciples than other demons that the disciples had already cast out (Matthew 17:14-21). They already had the authority to cast out ALL demons (Matthew 10:1), so their ability to handle the situation was not the issue. However, their flesh might have freaked out when they saw the demon manifest. So there's no limit based on the Word or based on your authority, but your success with a tougher case will depend on your ability to deal with The Flesh Freakout Factor. (Please read that section for a further discussion.)

When you receive healing for yourself, it's easier to stand in faith for a condition like high cholesterol or high blood pressure where there may not be any severe physical symptoms than it is to stand in faith against a kidney stone that is causing so much pain that you can't sleep and you just want to scream constantly. But you can receive your healing for all these conditions. Again, the difference with something like a kidney stone is that your flesh will constantly provide you with "information" that you aren't healed until your healing manifests. But you can "dig in" and beat a kidney stone (I have) – it's just harder and requires more "considering not your own body" than an ailment that might actually be more dangerous overall but that doesn't cause as much immediate pain.

Is It Easier to Get Healed if I'm a Tither?

Yes, but probably not for the reason you'd think at first.

If you're thinking that your tithe earns you Brownie Points in heaven so that God would be more likely to heal you, you have strayed into Galatian-style works thinking. Healing is based on 100% grace + 0% merit.

Any time that you start thinking that you deserve healing more because you've done more good works, you've strayed from "grace" thinking to "law" thinking.

Under the Old Covenant, you were "cursed with a curse" if you didn't tithe because tithing was a legal requirement under the Law of Moses. The New Testament never teaches a curse for not tithing. However, the blessing for it has never been revoked. I've tithed for decades and I would never even consider stopping. I've "proved God" in this area.

But won't God "rebuke the devourer" for your sake if you tithe (Malachi 3:10-11)? Yes, He still will, because you're not redeemed from the blessings of the Old Covenant – you're only redeemed from the curses! However, these blessings were obviously financial in nature.

You could make a case that if a sickness would cost you a bundle of money, that would be a financial curse, so tithing will help keep you well. If you are already sick, getting healed would be one way to stop Satan from munching your money so that you wouldn't have the financial drain that the woman with the issue of blood had.

However, we never see Jesus make an issue out of tithing or not tithing when He ministered to the sick. Neither he nor the apostles said anything about tithing when they healed the sick. So we would have to conclude that healing is equally available to tithers and nontithers alike.

So this may sound like the real answer should be "No, tithers are not more likely to be healed than anyone else." But I think that the actual answer is "Yes."

If you're a tither, you've learned to do one of the hardest things for people to do – trust God in the area of money! It shows that you have learned to trust God's Word above what you see or feel. It means that you have learned to keep your flesh under when it comes to money. Your flesh can scream, "Hoard! Keep all you can just in case something happens – don't give to your church! What if you lose your job? What if you have unexpected bills? Better play it safe." The fact that you tithe shows that you have experience keeping your flesh under and trusting God's Word more than you trust sense knowledge. That is a valuable trait when it comes to healing, too. So overall, as a tither, you're in a better position to trust God with another area of your life, such as healing.

I Have a Cold. Should I Stay Home from Church?

Just about anyone who attends a decent church has probably had this conversation with himself:

"I have a cold. I know that's probably a bad confession, and I shouldn't claim that I have it, but that's just how it is. Should I stay home from church?"

"Sure. Other people stay home when they have colds. Why shouldn't you?"

"Church is the place to go when you're sick, because the anointing is there. Also, people there can pray with you in faith."

"Yes, but you really don't feel up to going to church. You feel awful. You don't want to be rude to the pastor. You might nod off during his message, and that would embarrass you and annoy him."

"No, people at church love me. They have compassion on the sick because they know that their Lord has compassion on the sick. They wouldn't mind if I sat in the back and brought my Kleenex. Even if I did doze off, they would respect me for making the effort to show up at all."

"Yeah, see how much they love you after they get what you have. You know, I'm almost sure that you got this thing from Sister Van Grippe at the Wednesday night Bible study. Now you're just like she was. You don't want everyone else to get this stupid thing. You should stay home."

"Yes, but God's Word is health to all my flesh. I should be around the Word."

"You can read your Bible at home. You even have a very large document on your computer that covers divine healing from all kinds of angles. You can build your faith by reading that."

"Yes, but God says not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together in one place."

"True, but if you pass out in the car on the way over, you'll never make it to that place."

"But I know that I always feel better when I'm around the anointing. I'd be glad I went."

"Maybe you would be glad you went, but the people sitting within a ten-seat radius of you would not be so glad. They would not appreciate hearing you punctuate the pastor's message every ten seconds with coughs, sniffles and sneezes."

"That's why they make cold medicines, silly. Just take a gulp of Shotgun Panacea, that new long-lasting liquid they pitch on television after they tell you that it's flu season and show you a person in bed next to a pile of tissues that's on its way to getting as high as the Eiffel Tower. It unclogs your stuffy head, dries your runny nose, stops your coughs, numbs your headache, lowers your fever, strengthens your body and cures nausea, diarrhea and dizziness, all in one non-narcotic gulp. If you can finally figure out how to remove the child-proof cap, you can take one hit of that and no one will know you're sick."

“Yes, but you know full well that cold medicine doesn’t heal you. You’ll still have your cold, and you can still pass the thing around. Besides, you’ll give yourself away when you’re singing an octave lower than usual.”

“Okay, but they won’t know where they got it from! Maybe they’ll just assume that they got it from Sister Van Grippe, too!”

“Yes, but you’ll know. How will you stand yourself next week with that on your conscience?”

“It won’t be on my conscience. Those people all have a right to believe God for their health. We do believe in healing, remember? If they come down with this, it's not my fault.”

“You believe in healing, too, and you’re having a struggle with this. Why give other people the same challenge? They might not be up for it either!”

“I’ll try not to spread it around. I won’t hold hands with anyone when we pray. I won’t shake hands with anyone and I won’t hug the greeters, even the ones who don’t ask if you are OK with a hug before they hug you. I’ll sit in the very back as far away as possible from everyone else. If I have to lie on the floor, I’ll do it. I’ll do whatever it takes to be around the anointing.”

“That’s not wise. You’re pushing yourself when you’re already weak. Straining your body by dragging it to church will only make you worse. Your body is telling you that it needs rest. Haven’t you heard about the studies that prove that the more you push yourself when you have an illness, the longer it will last?”

“Yeah, but the last time I stayed home, the Holy Spirit had the pastor call a healing line. Don and Theresa had the same thing I had, and they got healed because they showed up at church. I stayed home and stayed sick. That stunk.”

“Look, skip all the talk about the anointing. You’re obviously not in faith anyway, because you’re still sick. So if you aren’t healed now, what makes you think that you’ll get healed there, even if they have a healing line?”

“It’s just easier to receive something by faith when you’re around a lot of people who are worshipping God. A corporate anointing is there. Maybe that’s the very thing I need. I certainly can’t get that at home.”

“What you need is about 12 more hours of sleep so that you can get rid of this thing. Don’t you know that doctors tell you to get lots of rest when you’re sick?”

“But faith without works is dead. Healthy people go to church. If I really believe that I’m healed, I should act healed and go to church.”

“You’ve been believing that you’re healed for the last 48 hours, so what makes you think you’re suddenly going to feel better just because you get out of your pajamas and drive to church?”

So who's right? At least when you argue with yourself, you know that you are right! The problem is figuring out which "you" is right!

Let me start by saying that you shouldn't get into bondage about this. God will not blot your name out of the Lamb's Book of Life and deny you before the holy angels just because you stay home and rest when you have a cold. Nor will Jesus add unto you all the plagues in the book of Revelation if you go to church and someone else gets the plague that's bothering you.

I don't have a clear-cut "thus saith the Lord" answer for you from Scripture. Really, either option is valid, but there are reasons for choosing one over the other. The answer to this question depends on where you are in faith.

If you have resigned yourself to having the cold, there is no point in kidding yourself that you are in faith. You may be better off just resting your body. You know in your heart whether or not you're really in faith. If you're not sure, read How to Tell if You're in Faith or Not and find out!

In fact, if part of your problem is that you have overworked yourself, even in the ministry, you need to start respecting natural laws and get some rest. Now would be a good time to start.

Don't stay home because of any little ache or pain, though. A good rule would be that if doesn't keep you out of work, it shouldn't keep you out of church.

On the other hand, if you are determined to receive your healing and stay in faith, I would do whatever it takes to get to church. I believe that I have a Biblical basis for this statement. Almost everyone who received a healing from Jesus had to go where He was to receive healing from Him. I understand that He lives in you now if you're born again, but I'm talking about receiving from the anointing through the gifts of the Spirit. At home, you can receive by faith, but you can't pull on someone else's anointing.

Consider the struggle that the paralyzed man and his friends went through to get to Jesus. There was no room in the house, so they lowered him through the roof. That was extreme faith! Consider the blind men who had to do whatever they could to get to where Jesus was. Consider the multitudes of seriously ill people who were brought to Jesus. They went where the anointing was to receive from the anointing. That is the general rule in the Bible.

If you want to receive healing by faith or you believe that you have already done so, go to church. If you have to tank up on medicine and suck on cough drops and breath mints all service, do it. Be around the Word, the anointing, and like-minded believers. If you just have a cold, you don't qualify for a house call from the elders unless you're unable to get out of the house.

Don't be too proud to go up in a healing line. All of us have times when we are "down" and need the support of the Body. Being around people of faith encourages you in your own faith. They can agree with you for your healing. As mentioned elsewhere, even if you're already in faith, you can have people agree with you that you are healed.

What about the moral issue of staying home so that you don't give someone else your cold? I hope that it is safe to assume that you would not deliberately share a cold. We know that people with contagious diseases went (or were brought to) Jesus because He healed EVERY kind of disease. Leprosy was known to be contagious since at least the time of Moses. There were laws about keeping lepers separate from everyone else. There is no place in Scripture where the apostles or Jesus rebuked people for coming because their condition was contagious. If Jesus didn't rebuke people with contagious diseases who wanted healing then, you can be assured that He would not do so today, because He hasn't changed. You are welcome in any service as far as Jesus is concerned.

Especially if you go to a healing service, there will be people with contagious conditions there. That's part of life, both at work and at church. If you can go to work in your present condition, you can go to church. If you have a contagious condition, I believe that most pastors would prefer that you attend church and hear the Word. People may not trip over each other trying to get near you, but most people have been in that position and can empathize with you. Do what you can to avoid giving the cold to others, but not to the extreme where you draw attention to yourself. For example, I suppose you could wear a surgical mask over your face to keep germs in. Some people do that, and I respect that. (If everyone at church is sick, others may don masks to keep the germs OUT!) To be extreme, you could wear riot gear or a chemical hazardous material handling suit with a hood that makes you look like an astronaut. These options would probably be effective in preventing the spread of your illness, but they would also call undue attention to you and look silly. People report for work with colds and don't resort to such measures. If your measure would be mocked at work, don't do it at church.

Perhaps you should not be the first to volunteer to lay hands on others when you have a cold yourself, but you should know that you still have the right to do it. Most healing ministers can tell you stories about how awful they felt at a particular service where God still healed people through the laying on of their hands. The question about ministering healing while you're sick yourself is covered elsewhere.

I understand that having a cold is an awkward condition because of the possibility that it could spread to others. Jesus understands that, too, and He is full of mercy and compassion toward you. He wants you to be healed of that cold, and His healing provision covers colds and other nuisance diseases. The more you feed on Scriptures about healing, the more you will be equipped to stand in faith against such pesky common illnesses.

People in church should be compassionate, too. I attended a faith church where dressing up was the expectation – especially if you were on the worship team. But I had just been in the hospital with a kidney stone. They pumped me up with water and I gained about 15 pounds. I didn't have any pants that could get around me other than my beach pants! So I played the piano in my beach pants! If people are like Jesus, they will be glad you're there rather than sitting at home just because you have no clothing that fits. However, that was the only time I ever wore beach pants on the platform!

Please understand that this topic is about having a cold. It is not about being in the Intensive Care Unit of a hospital. I am not saying that you should rip out all your life-support tubes and run to church if you are critically ill. More serious conditions dictate a visit from the elders to pray the prayer of faith over you.

I Have an Engagement to Preach Healing Somewhere, But I'm Really Sick Myself! What Should I Do?

The devil wants you to accept an image where you stand before a congregation, sick as a dog, seemingly a walking advertisement against the very message you're preaching. Then he wants you to accept the image that you will make people sick by laying hands on them instead of getting them healed! I've been in this predicament. I think every other healing preacher probably has been there at one point or another.

This is another matter that ends up being between you and God. Remember, the fact that you preach healing to others gives you no advantage when it comes to believing for your own healing. You have to practice what you preach!

I know of two people who came to preach at the church I was attending and threw up shortly before preaching! (One had to stop the car on the way over; one had to make a dash for the bathroom.) They preached anyway and you would never have known from their ministry that anything had been wrong. Thank God for the anointing!

Let me tell you what I would do. If the condition were anything that didn't require an immediate visit to the emergency room, I would do anything to drag myself to the service. Chances are, once you get there, the anointing will hit you and you'll be able to preach, lay hands on the sick and feel great. You may not feel good after you leave, but you'll probably feel good during the service!

I was going to a church to preach on healing and a couple of hours before the service, I was so sick that it took me several minutes just to drag myself out of bed. I had believed that I had received my healing, but my condition was getting worse. I could hardly walk or talk. I had a fever, a brutal headache, a cough, and a messed-up voice. I felt rotten all over. I knew I had a decision to make. If I called and said that I couldn't do the service, I know that they would have understood. (The devil wants you to think that the pastor would never want you back to preach healing if you canceled due to sickness, but most pastors are more compassionate than that, and they've probably been in that position themselves.)

I won't preach my personal convictions as doctrine, but let me explain what I did and why. I took some generic medicine for these kinds of things but still did not feel much better. I forced myself to go to that service, knowing that I'd never be able to preach in the condition that I was in. I walked in sucking on a cough drop and trying to hold back coughs and sniffles. After some mercifully short preliminaries, I got up to the pulpit and sure enough, the anointing hit me! I was able to preach a full message, sing, and lay hands on the sick, and a tangible anointing to pray over the sick was present. Thank God, it got on me, too. I doubt that anyone there would have suspected what I had gone through to get there, and I didn't tell anyone. By the way, I felt lousy after the service was over, but not nearly as much as before the service.

One reason I did this was that I am determined to preach healing. I was not about to allow Satan, the author of disease, to stop me. I still had authority over him and ALL his works (Luke 10:19).

One advantage of being married to a preacher is that if worst came to worst, I could have her get up and preach the whole service. But I've never had to resort to that, easy as it might be on my flesh.

I also remembered some past experiences. I was playing the piano with a 103-degree fever one time, and the anointing came on me and God really used the music to minister to people that evening. I was in a similar condition leading worship at another church and saw the power of God move through me in a way I rarely experienced when I was well! I was getting sicker and sicker one afternoon due to food poisoning, and I was supposed to play the piano for another preacher who was frequently used in gifts of healings. About five minutes before the service started, I was in the men's room having things rapidly come out both ends. I had believed that I had received my healing, but my flesh was telling me I would get the runs or throw up in front of everyone and embarrass the other preacher. But I was in the whole service and had no trouble either during the service or afterward. I believed that once I stepped into the anointing, I would be all right, and I was. I was fine afterward, too. Such stories are more fun AFTER the fact than when you are living them out.

You can preach healing when you're sick because it isn't your ability doing the healing anyway! That really becomes obvious to you when you're in a condition like this. You know full well that it's the Word and the gifts of the Spirit in operation and not your personal wonderfulness. God's Word works anyway; it's not limited by your current physical condition!

You aren't sick anyway; your body is sick. That is an important distinction to remember, because the things of God flow from your spirit, not from your flesh. Your spirit isn't sick, so why should anything work any less effectively? The rivers of living water Jesus spoke of come from your belly, meaning your inner being or spirit, through the Holy Spirit. They have nothing to do with your body. Your spirit can minister just fine when your body is sick.

Paul admitted to the Galatians that he was not in good condition when he first preached there (after being stoned at Lystra, which is part of Galatia). Paul did not allow his physical infirmities to stop him from preaching; he preached while he was obviously hurting! I figured that if it didn't stop Paul, it shouldn't stop me, either. I wouldn't want to compare "tough situation" stories with the apostle Paul!

I'm not giving you a pat answer on this question because it really depends on where you stand in your faith walk and how you like to do things. You'll have to make your own decision. I just want to encourage you with the fact that you can get to the service, have the anointing hit you, and have no trouble at all preaching. Of course, this is easier if you are preaching at a church or meeting that is boldly in favor of divine healing, as this place was. They were used to seeing the sick healed and there was a lot of faith as well as a strong pull on the anointing. I suppose that I might think twice if I were going to preach healing in a "dead" place and felt that badly. You can leave some churches feeling "beat up" even if you were doing fine when you went there! Even for Jesus, I'm sure Nazareth was tremendously frustrating.

God can still use you to preach healing and lay hands on the sick even when you feel as if everyone else should be laying hands on you! In fact, you can ask people to lay hands on you before the service. Don't be too proud to do that!

I once was so sick while I was going to the airport to preach healing in another country, I was extremely concerned that if the airline people knew how bad I was, they might refuse to let me onto the plane! I had another one of those difficult decisions to make. I hid my condition as well as I could, and managed to fly to the other country to preach divine healing. I saw a lot of miracles and got healed myself.

We had a preacher come to our church who was having such severe back pain, you could see him wince every time he moved. And this was someone who flows in divine healing! He “toughed it out” and he did get healed of that condition. A friend was in dire shape minutes before preaching a large service, and he called someone he knew who really knew how to pray in agreement with him. The power of God hit him, and once he got out there, he was fine.

Finally, I want to cover a separate moral issue associated with this. If you have a contagious disease, is it wrong to have a ministry line and lay hands on people? If there could be live germs on you, are you to be blamed for possibly allowing your healing service to become a sickening service?

Here’s my answer. Think about it in natural terms. Suppose that you are healthy when you call a healing line. After you lay hands on the first person, there is a risk that there are live germs present on you! Even if you did not walk in with a disease, the sick people who want prayer definitely walked in with diseases! So there is the possibility that a disease could be transmitted from any person with a contagious disease to any other person through you. There is also the possibility that the people in the line could give each other their colds.

Don’t be in bondage about this. If you just look at things in natural terms, no one will get healed anyway and a healing line is a waste of time. A healing line is supernatural. It transcends natural laws. Jesus did spray himself with disinfectant after touching each sick person. He definitely ministered to people with contagious diseases – leprosy is contagious and it is mentioned specifically. He healed ALL diseases, including contagious ones. Because the anointing was on Him to destroy disease, people did not get each other’s diseases – they got healed! Don’t miss God by looking at this from a purely natural viewpoint. Jesus didn’t say, “They shall lay hands on the sick, and the sick will get whatever illness they have.” Nor did He say, “They shall lay hands on the sick, and spread the sicknesses of the sick around.” He said, “They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover!”

Satan tries to work on preachers with thoughts like the following: “You don’t even believe your own message! You’re not working it, so how is anyone else going to work it? If you get up there sick preaching healing, you’re the biggest hypocrite in the room! You have no business getting up there if you can’t even get healed yourself!” Please be assured that that is not God’s language and He will never speak words of discouragement like that because He is FOR you, not AGAINST you (Romans 8:31). I’d just resolve to preach anyway and believe that the WORD will work in people, because it will! I’ve seen people greatly blessed when if I went by my feelings, I would have driven home and crawled into bed – at least at the beginning of the service. We are told to preach the WORD, not our EXPERIENCE, anyway (2 Timothy 4:2).

The most recent case (at this writing) where I had to make this kind of decision was when I was about to start the first of a series of Sunday morning healing classes at the church I attend. I had almost no voice the day before that class, and it just so happened that my wife had to leave that morning to go out of state to attend a conference, so she couldn't pinch hit for me. I was in miserable shape. The thought DID occur to me that I could call the church and have them get someone else to teach the class that morning. That wouldn't have been a problem because our church has a lot of good preachers who could teach a healing class. But who wants to start a healing class by not showing up due to sickness? How much confidence would that have given anyone else to receive what I had to teach about divine healing? When it was obvious that I was struggling Friday night before the class, I had my wife lay hands on me in the name of Jesus and I believed that I received my healing when she laid hands on me. I didn't feel better on Saturday, but I chose to "dig in" and affirm that I HAD received my healing when she laid hands on me and that I WAS recovering, despite appearances. The class went fine and no one ever knew (until I shared the experience in a later week) that I had been in such bad shape the day before the first class. What Satan meant to ruin my healing testimony, God can now use to encourage others that His Word really DOES work – even when it looks at first as if it isn't working!

I Still Need Healing in My Own Body, So How Can I Lay Hands on Someone Else for Healing?

Well, you find a sick person and you put your hands on him! That's how.

I know that the question is how you can minister healing when you still need healing yourself without looking like a hypocrite. So let's apply The SAVED Test. I am sure that you are not walking in sinless perfection. I'm not either, and neither is anyone else. Does this stop you from sharing Jesus with sinners? Does this prevent you from telling people that Jesus gives you power over sin so that it doesn't have to dominate you anymore? I hope not! Are you a hypocrite because you tell others that Jesus gives us power over sin, but you still sin? I don't think that God sees it that way. You're only a hypocrite if you sin without caring about whether you sin or not while you tell others that Jesus gives us power over sin.

If the fact that you still sin would not stop you from sharing that Jesus delivered us from sin by His finished work, the fact that you still need healing should not stop you from sharing that Jesus delivered us from sickness by His finished work.

A well-known faith teacher started out teaching prosperity while he had holes in his shoes. He was preaching the WORD, as we are supposed to do, not his personal experience. His personal experience changed to line up with the Word; the Word did not water itself down to match his experience.

It is ALWAYS right to share what the Word says with people, regardless of our current level of personal success applying it. We don't preach ourselves or our experience – we preach Jesus! Sometimes you will get more revelation of the Word yourself as you share it with others.

Don't let the devil try to beat you up over some healing need in your body. Just about everyone has something he could believe God to be healed of. That should not stop us from ministering healing to others. Paul preached with scars on his body. If other people point out something wrong with you, just see it as another opportunity to prove that the Word is true in your own life rather than feeling disqualified to minister healing.

Can I Get Healed of Alcoholism, Drug Abuse, Pornography and Homosexuality?

No!

You can get healed of illnesses stemming from these things, but you cannot get healed of these things themselves.

Why not? Doesn't Jesus heal ALL diseases? Yes, He does. But these things are not diseases! They are SINS! You can be set free from all these things, but you cannot be healed of any of them!

Jesus has compassion on you if you are involved in any of these snares of the devil. He wants to liberate you from these forms of bondage! He's already paid the price for your freedom. However, He will not excuse or affirm (much less "celebrate") your sinful behavior. You need to see these things for what they are. The Bible never says, "No one with asthma shall inherit the kingdom of God." Asthma is a disease, not a sinful choice. The Bible DOES say that no drunkard or homosexual will inherit the kingdom of God (1 Corinthians 6:10). Being a drunkard or a homosexual is a sinful choice, not a disease, so God treats these things differently from diseases. If these things represent your habitual lifestyle (rather than being mere temptations or areas where you slipped but have repented), you are not really saved and you need to get saved for REAL. Please see How to Be Saved from Your Sins. Trying to beat these sins in your own strength without Jesus' help is unlikely to succeed. You need to have a new nature that doesn't want to indulge in sin. Being born again is the only way to get that new nature. (You can protest all you want, "No, I really love Jesus! I'm a Christian already even though I do these things," but God's Word says you aren't and I will take God's Word over yours any day.)

An important step to being set free is understanding that are not a "victim" of some kind of "disease." You have made a sinful choice. You have failed morally. You have no one to blame but yourself. As long as you try to cast the blame elsewhere, as most people do (Adam and Eve did!), you might never get set free. You have to realize that you have sinned before you can start applying Scriptures that emphasize your dominion over sin. Trying to apply healing Scriptures to beat sins is just as much a mistake as trying to apply dominion-over-sin Scriptures to beat diseases.

The world has been deceiving people for a long time that alcoholism and drug abuse are diseases and that those who sin in these ways are "victims" of addiction. The world tells you that pornography is a victimless habit. The world tells you that homosexuality is just another valid "sexual preference" among many.

However, Satan (“the god of this world”) lies about all these things. You have to CHOOSE to abuse alcohol or drugs to become an addict. No one else can make you do it. These things don’t just jump into your bloodstream from bottles or pill containers one day and “make” you be an addict. Pornography has a lot of victims. If you look at pornography, YOU are one victim (but not an innocent one). I used to look at it before I was a Christian, and I can tell you that all it does is clog your mind with carnal filth. By degrading the way that you see people of the opposite sex, it makes it harder for you to relate properly to them. The people you relate to improperly are the next victims. The first victims were the people who posed for the pictures or videos, whether by force or by choice. Their view of sexuality is degraded by the experience. As far as homosexuality goes, the Bible is clear that it is a perversion of God’s natural plan. The ONLY valid “sexual preference” is for the opposite sex. All sexual activity must be limited to a man and a woman who are married to each other. We are to FLEE anything else.

The good news is that Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), which include alcoholism, drug abuse, pornography and homosexuality! So let’s see what path will lead out of such things.

To get rid of a disease, you get healed. To get sin out of your life, you repent. These are two completely separate things. You don’t have to repent for having the flu and you can’t get healed of being a lesbian. You’ll never repent (and thus get free) until you know that you’re sinning! Once you repent of your sin, you open the door for God to heal you of the physical consequences of your sin. He is perfectly willing to do so, but you’d waste your time getting healed of those consequences if you are going to keep sinning in these ways and continuing to make yourself ill.

People complain about “judging” but that’s nothing new – the original sodomites in Sodom complained about Lot judging their lifestyle (Genesis 19:9)! We judge sin to be sin. We don’t just leave people to wallow in their sin; we let them know that Jesus is their answer! If they reject us, God gives us credit for trying to reach them. However, there is a lie out there that if we just act friendly and never say anything about anyone’s deviant behavior, those who practice it will like us and maybe they’ll want to come to church. Meanwhile, the world aggressively crams its messages down everyone’s throat. The devil wants you to shut up so that he can have a monopoly on public discourse on these issues. This doesn’t mean that we make deviant lifestyles the main issue when talking to sinners – the homosexual’s BIGGEST need is to know Jesus and be saved. There are more heterosexual sins going on in the world than homosexual sins. The heterosexual fornicator’s biggest need is to know Jesus, too. However, this Jesus to whom we lead people is the One who says, “Neither do I condemn you. Go and sin no more.” (John 8:10-11). We’ve become much better at preaching the first half of that than the last half, but we need to do both.

God wants to deliver you from ALL sinful habits, including alcoholism, drug abuse, pornography and homosexuality, so He sent Jesus to pay the price for your freedom! You have the right to be free from being a slave of the flesh to indulge its lusts such as the ones specified here. The principle here is not how to be healed of a disease, and the answer is not simply reading healing Scriptures. The Scriptures you need are those that discuss your dominion over sin. These are every bit as important as “Healing Scriptures” and they are the key to breaking the stronghold of sin in your life. You must deal with the sin problem as well as the physical results. Your redemption gives you authority over both.

If you are addicted to legal prescription drugs taken in the prescribed doses, that’s not a sin for which you need to repent. Jesus wants to heal your body of its dependence on that drug so that you can be “free indeed.” Of course, He also paid for you to be healed of whatever illness or injury made it necessary for that doctor to prescribe the drug in the first place. It is not a sin to take prescription drugs that were prescribed to you, so if that was what got you “hooked” you don’t need to repent. It is a sin to take prescription drugs that weren’t prescribed to you, as that is illegal and the Bible tells us to obey civil authorities (Romans 13:1-2, 1 Peter 2:13-15). If you’re doing that, you DO need to repent.

A disease can come on you without you being personally responsible for it. Alcoholism, drug abuse, pornography and homosexuality cannot come on you without your conscious choice. You chose to get bombed. You chose to get high. You chose to look at lustful literature. You chose to have shameful and unnatural physical relationships with members of the same sex. (Merely being tempted to do so is not a sin – Jesus was tempted in every way that we are according to Hebrews 4:15. That means that at some point, he faced and beat the temptation to engage in homosexual activity.) It was never an accident. It was solely your choice. And because you chose to sin in this way, the only solution is for you to choose not to sin in this way from now on (this is called repentance – literally “changing your mind!”). Only then do you open the door for God’s deliverance. You may not feel as if you have the power to overcome sin, but you don’t have to feel that power to have it. Once you are a Christian and you make the choice to do things God’s way, God’s power kicks in and He will help you stay out of sin.

If you are an alcoholic, you are sinning and you need to repent. God forbids alcohol-induced drunkenness (Ephesians 5:18). You are violating His New Testament command every time you get drunk. Do not attempt to hide behind some excuse that you have a disease of some kind. You are simply indulging in a work of the flesh (listed among such in Galatians 5:19-21). You cannot be healed of the works of the flesh. You must repent of them and live above them by choosing to walk in the Spirit so that you will not fulfill the lusts of the flesh (Galatians 5:16).

Witchcraft is also a work of the flesh in Galatians 5:21, and included in the Biblical definition of witchcraft is drug abuse. (We are not talking about taking medicine because you're sick here.) Lust and other sexual sins are also listed in Galatians 5:21 (adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness). A person who indulges in pornography is a lascivious person. He is ignoring what even Job in a far darker day knew to do: "I made a covenant with mine eyes; why should I then look on a maid?" (Job 31:1), and disobeying Psalm 101:3: "I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me." The pornography addict in many cases gets more and more "hard-core" and starts viewing child pornography. He financially supports organized crime and its victimization of the people in the pictures and videos. With Satan's addictions, what you're doing now is never enough – you crave more and more until you're destroyed or you turn to Jesus and get set free.

Jesus never healed a single person of any of the works of the flesh, and neither did any of the apostles. There is no precedent for being "healed" of them. However, there is certainly precedent for being set free from them in 1 Corinthians 6:9-11! Some of them WERE drunkards (alcoholics) and homosexuals before Jesus set them free!

This flies in the face of everything that modern counselors and magazine articles have to say on the subject. You do not need to get "healed" by a twelve-step plan, even a so-called Christian twelve-step plan. The Biblical two-step plan is simple: REPENT, then RECEIVE the deliverance that Jesus has purchased for you. Don't let society coddle you with its error that everyone who sins is just a sick person with a "disability" or "disease" that needs to be "healed." Unfortunately, we have a habit of renaming sin so that it doesn't seem like sin anymore. It is "politically correct" to say that the sodomite is engaging in an "alternative lifestyle" instead of engaging in an abomination (Leviticus 18:22, Leviticus 20:13), the latter of which is Biblically correct. (Homosexuality is an "alternative" to godliness, that's for sure.) A sin by any other name is still a sin! Some pandering preachers prefer to preach Pablum to pacify practitioners of perversion, but I will never be one of them.

You don't have to wonder if you have a gene that makes you sin. Mankind inherited a sinful nature from Adam, so it was genetic in that sense. But that doesn't excuse it! If it did, God would not judge it and He would not send people to hell for sinning if they're not in Christ. If you're born again, your spirit does not have a sinful nature. It is only your mind and body that can lead you into sin if you let them.

Once you have dealt with the root of the issue by repenting of your sin, you can pray in faith to receive your healing of the physical consequences of your sinful choice. Alcohol and other drugs do produce physical dependencies. Pornography is habit-forming, too. (Ask anyone who's ever been addicted to pornography. Your brain can get "rewired" to crave it.) But God can and will deliver you from all of these self-inflicted problems if you will allow Him to. First you must repent and submit to God. There is no temptation that you cannot overcome with God's help (1 Corinthians 10:13). This leaves you no excuse to continue in your sin.

Also, people tend to engage in addictive behaviors to fill a hole in their lives. You need to open yourself up to the love of God and let God fill the holes in your life. He will do a much better job than a bottle or a joint. Ask God to give you a revelation of His love for you (Ephesians 3:14-19).

Drug addictions, booze addictions, pornography addictions and homosexual behavior are all part of the power of darkness from which you were delivered when you were saved (Colossians 1:12-14). In Christ, the statement, "Once an alcoholic, always an alcoholic" is not true, and no Christian should let that statement pass through his lips. Instead, say, "Once an alcoholic, but now free indeed in Christ, delivered from alcoholism and all the other forms of the devil's bondage!"

Once you realize that you are in sin and need to repent, and that you are not simply sick and in need of healing from a disease, you are most of the way toward being able to be rid of the sin as well as the physical consequences of your sin.

Please understand that these sins are just as much paid for by the blood of Jesus as any others. You are forgiven for them as a believer just as much as you are from more socially acceptable sins like gossip or worrying or complaining or failing to pray for government leaders. It is not a "big deal" to God to forgive you from these; your forgiveness was already purchased and it is credited to you as a believer. Jesus' blood paid for your sins. He was made physically sick in your place as part of the curse for those very sins. There is no need to continue to bear a curse that Jesus bore for sins. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John 8:36).

A lesbian went straight after coming to our church. We cast a demon out of her. You'll find that when you minister to homosexuals, you need to be ready to cast unclean spirits out of them. (There are many other topics related to deliverance elsewhere in this book.) You may have to do that for other people who have really gotten steeped in sin, as well.

I was preaching one day and a Native American alcoholic was in the service. He said that he just felt drawn to the place where we were having the service, so he came. I was preaching as usual, and suddenly he interrupted me and screamed that he just couldn't live that way anymore. He went on to say that he had a spirit in him that pierced him with its talons every time he tried to get free. He had been to counseling sessions where he had described that spirit. They told him that he was a crazy old Indian who needed psychotherapy. But they hadn't managed to "shrink" the demon's influence. You can't get rid of a demon with psychology! I told him that I believed him (which surprised him, because no one else did, and apparently the church he'd been attending didn't practice deliverance), and that furthermore I knew what to do about it. I had him come up and I cast that foul demon out of him. He was a changed man from that moment forward. Many years later, he was still free! And he didn't need to go to "anonymous" meetings to stay free, either. (I wonder how "anonymous" things are when you're supposed to say, "My name is ___ and I'm an alcoholic." I've never heard of anyone saying, "My name is none of your business – I'm an anonymous alcoholic." So much for anonymity! Besides, in the small towns where I've lived, most people would probably know who you were before you named yourself anyway.)

Jesus gave us authority over snakes and scorpions and all the power of the enemy (Luke 10:19). This means that if you are ministering, and you have the other person's permission to do it, you can take authority over these bondages and command them to be broken in the name of Jesus. If you are the one in bondage, YOU can take authority over these bondages and command them to be broken in the name of Jesus! Note that this is different from receiving a healing. If you are involved in these sins, repent first before you command them to be broken. You don't have to "feel like" you can live free. If you wait until you "feel like" you can do it, you'll never do it. Feeling comes after faith, not before it. God's grace will always be there so that you always have a way of escape from any sin (1 Corinthians 10:13). You are not a debtor to the flesh to live after the flesh (Romans 8:12). Sin has no dominion over you as a Christian (Romans 6:14)!

Does Galatians 5:20 Prove that the Use of Drugs is a Fleshly Sin?

No.

This mistake came about because someone looked up the word “witchcraft” used in Galatians 5:20 in the Greek and found that it was pharmakeia. Strong’s first definition of pharmakeia is “the use or the administering of drugs,” so the person concluded that any use of drugs must be a “work of the flesh” along with adultery and all the other things in Paul’s list. Then he probably heard that pharmakeia was the word from which we get the word pharmacy, and he decided that all doctors, drugs stores and drugs must be of the flesh and thus sinful.

Witch doctors do use “potions” and supply drugs to people. The use of drugs with witchcraft is clearly sinful. But what about prescriptions from your family doctor? If Paul were against drugs in general, he would have to have been against doctors, including Luke “the beloved physician.” Paul would have had to describe Luke as “the fleshly doctor of deception” or some such term if he really believed that. It was clear that Paul and Luke were on good terms; they traveled together in Acts. So Paul was not against drugs (the use of them or administering of them) in general. Jesus said that the sick need a physician, so He could not have believed that those who administer drugs are of the flesh and are to be avoided. In fact, if you must avoid all physicians to stay out of sin, you must run away from God Himself, who names Himself Jehovah Rapha (The Lord Your Physician)!

The next thing is that if you’re going to come up with doctrine based on a Greek word, at least have the decency to look it up elsewhere in Scripture. Today’s online tools make this easy. You’ll find that the only other 2 places pharmakeia is used, it refers to sorceries, and no one ever complains about those translations:

“And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.” – Revelation 18:23

You would be hard-pressed to try to prove that prescription drugs deceived all the nations and brought judgment upon Babylon.

The next thing is that if you’re going to quote Strong, at least read the whole citation. Strong’s ALSO lists other meanings as poisoning (something witches might well try), sorcery, magical arts (often found in idolatry and fostered by it) and metaphorically the deceptions and seductions of idolatry. So there is absolutely no “proof” that pharmakeia refers to drugs at all! There is no other Bible passage to support that theory.

So Scripture in general demonstrates that Galatians 5:20 is NOT a prohibition against the medical use of drugs and the prescribing of drugs.

If the Anointing on Elisha's Bones Was Strong Enough to Raise a Dead Man, Why Wasn't It Strong Enough to Heal Him of His Own Fatal Illness?

The anointing for ministry is given for the benefit of others, not for your own benefit. Even in the New Testament, special Holy Spirit manifestations are given for the benefit of OTHERS, not for your own benefit. Thus, the anointing that Elisha carried to do miracles for OTHERS would not be expected to heal him. That is why he could die and yet the anointing that was on him for ministry to others still raised someone else from the dead.

This answers two other related questions:

“If Elisha's anointing raised a man from the dead, why wouldn't it have raised HIM from the dead too?”

The anointing on Elisha was for ministry to other people, not for ministry to himself.

“Why did some healing ministers die when the very conditions that they healed in other people's bodies were in their own bodies?”

In general, the same answer as above applies. The gifts were for others. The anointing probably manifested quite a bit for unbelievers and weak believers for signs and wonders. However, the minister himself would have more expected of him that would be expected of weak believers and unbelievers. If he himself were in one of his own healing lines, he well could have gone away without receiving anything. Healing ministers don't get a free pass when it comes to sickness – we all have to act on the Word just as everyone else does.

In one particular outlying case a long time ago, a minister who was world-famous for having arthritis healed got into pride. He routinely had services where people heard bones snapping as they were getting healed of arthritis. Unfortunately, he got so full of himself that God could not use him anymore, and he died after spending years bound up in a wheelchair – with arthritis!

Why Does 1 Samuel 1 Say Twice that THE LORD Had Shut Up Hannah's Womb?

This question is impossible to answer conclusively because the Bible does not tell us why the Lord shut up Hannah's womb! This was considered a curse and a reproach among the Israelites. We know that the Lord closed the wombs of the people in Abimelech's house as judgment for Sarah being with him. See Genesis 20:18 ("For the LORD had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah Abraham's wife"). But we don't know of any specific thing Hannah might have done that would incur such a judgment. That doesn't mean that there wasn't anything; it just isn't stated.

Can we understand this twice-written phrase to be merely permissive? In other words, did the Lord merely "permit" this situation rather than cause it? Maybe, though "permit" would be too mild a word; it would be more a case of "causing by allowing." The text certainly reads that the Lord caused it, though the evil that "the LORD had brought upon [Job]" in Job 42:11 was explicitly caused by Satan, as stated clearly near the beginning of Job. So there would be precedent for a "causative" phrase to be used to describe passive involvement where God permits something but did not directly cause it. I will note that that in many Bible cases the Hebrew is ambiguous between causative and permissive forms, but in Job 42:11 the Hebrew word is in a "stem hiphil" form which is explicitly causative. Even then, God's "causing" was limited to allowing Satan to do it; otherwise the Bible contradicts itself, which we know that it doesn't.

Can we attribute this statement to an erroneous assumption back in that day that if anything bad happened, God Himself did it? One teacher has explained it that way, but I don't think we can go there. Most people back then had no revelation that there even was a devil. This would cast doubt on almost everything else in the Old Testament if we start claiming that the writer of 1 Samuel made his statement out of ignorance. Some Scriptures reported inaccurate statements made by certain people. However, for the writer of the book to assert that God did something leaves us with no alternative (in my opinion) than to believe that God actually did it unless we make the assumption in the prior paragraph. Otherwise, we are throwing away our belief in the inerrancy of Scripture and making the same mistake for which we criticize liberal theologians when they claim that Paul's writing against homosexuality simply reflected the bias of his day.

The Bible does not explain everything for us. It never tells us why the tribe of Dan is not represented in the 144,000 in the book of Revelation. Why isn't Dan included? I don't know and neither do you, because God didn't state the reason. You don't know where demons came from, either, and neither do I. You only know the facts, but not the background, in Hannah's case. Paul even wrote some things that are not surrounded by enough context to figure out. Why did Paul say that should women have a symbol of authority on their heads "because of the angels" and why were people "baptized for the dead" in Corinth? I don't know, but being baptized for the dead certainly can't mean what the Mormons think it does, that you can get someone saved after they die by being baptized in proxy for them in a Mormon temple. Even God Himself states that there are some difficult passages in Paul's letters – Peter made this comment as part of Scripture in 2 Peter 3:16: "As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they which are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." The secret things belong to the Lord (Deuteronomy 29:29). We'll just have to wait until we're in heaven to find out some things, but such things aren't the important things that we need to know in this life. You can live a great life without knowing why Dan isn't in the 144,000 or why people were baptized for the dead in Corinth. When God doesn't tell us why something is, you have no sure way to know why it is. So I can't tell you for sure what happened with Hannah.

Whatever you believe, you certainly can't use this phrase to prove that God wants some people to stay infertile (even if He has permitted it, as sin on the earth has been permitted to louse up plenty of other things), because Hannah asked for a son and God gave her Samuel! This passage should build your faith in healing for infertility, not take it away! See the section on Infertility for proof that God wants to heal women who can't have children. I know couples who couldn't have children according to their doctors and have children today because God intervened as He did for Hannah when they asked Him for children.

Why Does Exodus 15:25-26 Talk about God Putting Diseases on People?

You could argue that God sent the ten plagues on Egypt and that perhaps this was a reference to them, but that doesn't seem to hold up under scrutiny. There was only one killer plague on one night and it was not caused by a variety of diseases (in the plural). In the case of the killer plague, "the destroyer" actually did it, not God in person (Hebrews 11:28), even if God sent that death angel.

Also, Deuteronomy 28:15-68 also refers to the "diseases of Egypt which thou wast afraid of," which could not refer to the killer plague on the firstborn, which the Israelites were not afraid of because they were protected from it. This was talking about a variety of fearsome diseases that were common in Egypt.

The only answer that seems consistent with the rest of Scripture is that the diseases of Egypt were judgments against those who were mistreating His people. This is spelled out more clearly in Deuteronomy 7:15: "And the LORD will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee; but will lay them on all that hate thee." There were many other cases of God laying sickness on people as judgment in the Old Testament. See Sickness as Chastening and Judgement in the Old Testament for details.

There is also New Testament Scripture for God putting diseases on the disobedient, as proved in the discussion, Sickness as Chastening and Judgment in the New Testament. There is NO New Testament Scripture for God putting sickness on an obedient believer, so drawing the conclusion that God puts sickness on believers based on this verse in Exodus is totally out of harmony with the Bible.

We like to simplify things for people as much as possible, so we like to say things such as, "Jesus would never make anyone sick or kill anyone!" However, that statement is not true, as Revelation 2:20-23 proves! As long as you're not destroying His Church, you have nothing to worry about, but if you try to destroy His Church (which is His temple), God promises that He will destroy you (1 Corinthians 3:16-17)!

For a more general discussion of this entire issue, see Did God PUT Sickness on Old Testament People or ALLOW the Devil to Do It?

Did God PUT Sickness on Old Testament People or ALLOW the Devil to Do It?

Three popular lines of reasoning indicate the latter:

1. "In the Hebrew, the verbs are in the permissive sense rather than the causative sense. Therefore, God allowed the sicknesses, but He did not actually send them Himself."
2. "God is good and the devil is bad. The devil is the one who steals, kills and destroys. So God merely permitted the devil to make disobedient people sick."
3. "God doesn't have any sicknesses to give out. There is no sickness in heaven. He would have to steal sicknesses from the devil. Therefore, any sicknesses must have come from the devil."

However, I will risk possibly contradicting your favorite faith teacher by stating that I believe God actually PUT sicknesses on rebellious people. Moreover, that will continue in the New Testament in the times foretold in the book of Revelation. It can even happen in extreme cases in the Church Age, as we will see. Thus, I don't believe that any of the arguments above hold up upon further scrutiny.

I decided to investigate the first claim myself, not being one to just take someone else's word for anything. One problem with written Hebrew is that it was customary to leave out the vowels. However, it would be these vowels that would allow a distinction. When I looked into individual cases, I found that the same original Hebrew letters in the Bible could indicate either a causative sense or a permissive sense. There was no way to make a clear case either way. I had heard it claimed in faith circles that the Hebrew was definitely in the permissive sense, but I have never seen any credible evidence to back that claim. It sounds nice but my own research demonstrated otherwise. Perhaps modern faith teachers fear that if we really think God DID these things, He would not be "good all the time," and that would wreck half of their messages.

However, please note that I am not claiming that the Hebrew proves that God CAUSED these things either. I cannot see any proof EITHER way just by reading the original text.

Now perhaps someone who knows Hebrew better than I do or has studied more such verses will have a better answer. But I don't see that you can prove anything either way, so your reading of such verses would have to be based on other Bible evidence.

This brings us to the second assertion that it is the devil who destroys. That is an oversimplification when it comes to punishing sin. Jesus warned to fear God who is able to destroy body and soul in hell. Clearly, God is not going to "allow" the devil to destroy people in hell, because the devil will himself be the #1 recipient of the wrath of God in the everlasting destruction of the lake of fire. So it is clearly God who will destroy the wicked in hell. That doesn't mean destruction in the sense of causing something to cease to exist; otherwise it would not be everlasting destruction (2 Thessalonians 1:8-9). This proves that the devil is not the only one who could engage in destruction. Even in the New Testament, God says that HE will destroy anyone who destroys the temple of God (the Church) (1 Corinthians 3:16-17).

Another problem with the “devil did it” explanation is that it turns the devil into God’s faithful henchman, sent to do His dirty work. This would make it appear that God and the devil have some kind of partnership going, and if that were really true (it isn’t), the devil should get a reward at the end of time for faithfully executing God’s judgments rather than reaping eternal torment. But the devil is completely anti-God and has been sinning since the beginning. He hasn’t changed to become a servant of the Most High God since then.

An even more severe problem occurs when you read the Old Testament in its entirety. There are MANY passages where God vows to punish sin with sickness and states that He did so after the fact. (For a typical example, you could start with Numbers 11:33-34.) While it might be nice public relations on God’s behalf to assert that He is only good and didn’t do any of it Himself, you just don’t get that sense when you read of God’s outpoured wrath against various nations in the Old Testament. To me, God obviously caused the judgments to take place. I don’t know how you can believe a multitude of Old Testament judgment prophecies and conclude otherwise.

Just take Deuteronomy 28 :15-68 as one example and see if you still think that God’s relationship to the threatened sicknesses is merely permissive as opposed to causal. I think that you will have to agree that the threatened illnesses are very clearly the Lord’s doing: “The LORD shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee...The LORD shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning...The LORD will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed...The LORD shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart...The LORD shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a sore botch that cannot be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the top of thy head...Then the LORD will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance...Moreover he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee...Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed...the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind.”

We sometimes forget that Leviticus 26:14-39 is also a curse written in the law that parallels Deuteronomy 28:15-68. This contains other similar statements: “I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart...And I will set my face against you...I will punish you seven times more for your sins: And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass...I will bring seven times more plagues upon you...I will also send wild beasts among you...I will also walk contrary to you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins. And I will bring a sword among you...I will send the pestilence among you...when I have broken the staff of your bread...I will walk contrary to you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins...I will destroy your high places...I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries into desolation...I will bring the land into desolation...I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you...I will send a faintness into their hearts...”

God says that vengeance is His (Romans 12:19 and elsewhere). I see no evidence that He has ever subcontracted it to Satan. Isaiah's account of Jesus' crucifixion confirms that God is the punisher of sin. God, not Satan, "made Jesus sick" and it pleased God to bruise Him (Isaiah 53:10). Thus, God, not Satan, is the one who bruised Jesus. Jesus was "afflicted by God" and not "afflicted by Satan" for our sins. If God is the Punisher of sin, it would be inconsistent to have Satan be the punisher at other times. Satan is a thief who wants to steal God's exclusive right to vengeance.

If you hired someone to replace your front door and bedroom window, and that contractor put the door in your bedroom wall and the window in your roof, would you keep using that contractor? You would not want to use an unreliable contractor who goes against your instructions. Neither would God! The devil is the biggest sinner anywhere, meaning that he fails to follow God's instructions more than anyone. God isn't stupid; He isn't going to hire out work to someone unreliable who will fail to follow His exact instructions.

Also, if you believe that only the devil would ever make someone sick, you must not believe Acts 12:21-23, where it is an angel of the Lord who takes Herod out as punishment for accepting the kind of adulation from men that only belongs to God.

The third statement that there is no sickness in heaven is slightly inaccurate. The vials of God's wrath in the book of Revelation will be poured out from heaven, not from hell, and part of the miseries with which the wicked will be judged are sicknesses (sores are mentioned in particular) and intense pain.

These awful judgments will not come from Satan, because Satan will be on the earth at the time, not in heaven.

Because there is no crying or pain in heaven, we know that no one there is sick. So you won't ever have to deal with sickness or pain again once you get there. In that sense, it is correct that there is no sickness in heaven. Given the presence of the vials of God's wrath, it would be accurate to say that there is no sickness in manifestation in heaven. For eternity, once the wrath of God is complete, there will be no sickness either in manifestation or out of manifestation in heaven.

When it comes to your life as a Christian, you do not need to fear God as the Punisher of your sins because they were paid off when God (not Satan) punished Jesus for your sins. So it is indeed Satan, not God, who tries to afflict Christians. (When it comes to hypocrites posing as Christians who try to harm Christ's body, God can and will take such people out even in the age of grace, as is covered sufficiently elsewhere in this book.) The idea that GOD punishes sin with sickness should actually further enlighten you to divine healing, as you realize that you are not under punishment and condemnation when you are in Christ. Any sickness that comes your way is clearly illegal and from the devil, as God has cleared your name in heaven. You do not deserve sickness, so God would not send it to you.

Can I Leave My Sick Child in the Church Nursery Because “By Jesus’ Stripes He Was Healed?”

You church probably has a policy against this, and if it does, you need to follow it.

This may be an inconvenience to you, but it would be an inconvenience to everyone else if you brought little Sneezie in and got the other kids sick. You can check to see if you can sit in the back of the main service with Sneezie.

Unless your child’s healing has manifested completely, in which case there is no question anyway, your child will be considered sick for purposes of contagion. Do not protest that your child was “healed by the stripes of Jesus.” When that manifests, the nursery workers will be happy to take him in. Until then, forget it. If your child is still physically sick, he may well still be physically contagious!

You may protest that you are standing in faith, but if you are, you should soon get to the point where little Sneezie’s nose is no longer flowing like a mighty river, and then you’ll be able to drop him off.

And please, do the workers a favor and don’t try to clean him up and hand him off between coughs and sneezes and make a run for the sanctuary before the workers figure out what’s going on. I worked in a church nursery for several years, and I never liked it when people did that.

Because God Says I am Healed, Can I Assume that I Do Not Need Medical Insurance?

No!

If you aren't really in faith, you will not receive healing directly from God. In that case, if you don't have medical insurance, you will end up staying sick or maimed or even dying prematurely. Few people reach a level of faith that would allow them to avoid all doctor or hospital visits. If you're one of them, that's great. Otherwise, you are wise to carry medical insurance. What if some nut on the road plows into you and breaks some of your bones? You have the right to believe for healing, of course, without a doctor, but are you really ready to do that? (You could answer that no accident will befall you in the first place, in which case you'd better keep your faith active and drive carefully!)

Having or not having medical insurance does not determine whether you will receive divine healing – your faith does!

Jesus said that the sick need a physician (Matthew 9:12, Mark 2:17, Luke 5:31). If you have a serious health issue, you need a doctor – either a human one (who can help you much of the time) or the Great Physician whose ability is unlimited. If you're not ready to receive from the Great Physician, you should go to a human one, the sooner, the better.

If I Cancel My Medical Insurance, Is God Obligated to Heal Me?

If I Cancel My Medical Insurance, Is God Obligated to Heal Me?

Canceling your medical insurance does NOT obligate God to heal you any more than does stomping on your glasses, flushing your medicine down the toilet, throwing your crutches off a bridge or any similar act. Even if you are canceling your insurance because you can't afford it, that still does not obligate God to heal you. In fact, if you asked this question, it indicates that you don't really understand how healing works.

I knew a man who needed to wear glasses but decided that he would "prove his faith" by going to take his road exam for a driver's license without his glasses on, believing that God would have to heal him on the spot as he exercised his "faith." He flunked! God had no obligation to do anything based on his action.

You receive healing as a gift provided entirely by grace – paid for in full by the Lord Jesus Christ apart from your works. If you think that your works will move God, you're mistaken. Stomping on your glasses does not move God. Flushing away your medicine does not move God. Canceling your insurance does not move God. The good news is that you don't need to move God – God is quite fine where He is. God already moved when He bought your healing through His Son's sacrifice; the only moving needs to take part on your end, not His. You simply need to receive by faith what God has already granted you by Christ's sacrifice for you.

The other problem with the thought that canceling insurance makes God have to heal you is that God is not obligated to move just because you have a need. Yes, He knows that you need healing apart from the medical system if you can't pay the medical system. But think about it – if God moved on the basis of needs, no one would ever have any needs! God responds to faith, not needs. There were plenty of sick religious people in Luke 5:17-26 who needed healing, and God's power was present to heal them, but they got nothing because they did not use their faith to receive. If healing were based on needs, they all would have been healed.

So please don't do things that are designed to "move God," and please don't assume that God has to do something because you have a need. Neither is consistent with the Bible. Instead, reach out and take the healing that Christ has already provided for you. Once you are healed, your body will tell you and any doctor that you don't need glasses, medicine, crutches or whatever. That is the time to get rid of them, not before your healing is manifested in your body. Whether or not you have insurance has no bearing on receiving healing by faith, other than the fact that you might be more motivated to receive from God if you don't have insurance.

The Lord is My Physician, So Do I Need Regular Checkups with an Earthly One?

God, who declares Himself to be your Physician, never requires you to see an earthly physician. Jesus said that the sick need a physician (Matthew 9:12, Mark 2:17, Luke 5:31) but the well do not. Are you sick? If so, you need a physician. If you are not sick, the Bible does not order you to see a physician anyway. However, most Christians today DO need an earthly physician because very few have reached the point where they could believe God for healing for everything, no matter how drastic or life-threatening. If there is any doubt in your mind about it, keep seeing your earthly physician.

God won't be upset with you if you go in for routine tests to see if you possibly have any diseases. Going to a physician does not make you sick. If you're sick, your doctor visit only reveals that fact, which could be useful or in some cases could even save your life.

On the other hand, Jesus won't be upset if you're truly in faith and you don't get a regular checkup, as He never said that the well need a physician. In fact, He said that they didn't. However, I can almost assure you that you will have family members who will quite upset with you if you don't get checkups. The matter is between you, God, and your family!

There are two kinds of people who won't go to the doctor as a matter of course. The first kind is the person who is so sure of his faith and so confident in God and His Word that he doesn't see the need to go. The second kind is the person who is in fear of what the doctor might say. Sometimes such a person has been experiencing some kind of symptoms and is afraid that he might have cancer or clogged arteries or some other life-threatening condition. He tells himself that if he has not been officially diagnosed with something, he doesn't have it. That is stupid and possibly life-ending. Going to the doctor does not give you a disease. If you are avoiding the doctor because of how he might diagnose your symptoms, you need to get of fear, then get out of your house and get into the doctor's office.

If you decide that you don't want to have a personal doctor, make sure that you know which of the two categories above describes you!

I have not had a regular doctor at any time in my adult life. I have never been for a routine physical or other periodic tests since I was a minor, much to the annoyance of some relatives who are concerned for me even though I've stayed in good health. That is my choice. However, I have proven on several occasions that I can believe God for healing in severe situations. The fact that I don't go to the doctor doesn't mean that you shouldn't go. And I DID go during a bout with a kidney stone a long time ago. Although I didn't have a family doctor, I did have to talk to specialists at that time. If I ever decided that I was not in a position to receive a healing by faith, or if something appeared to be life-threatening, I would go to the doctor. I was once gouged by a horsefly and the wound got badly infected. I went to a walk-in clinic and got antibiotics. I didn't want to mess with that infection. So I am not against going to doctors when you need them, and neither is God!

Was Paul in Unbelief in Galatia?

Paul had some kind of “infirmity of the flesh” in Galatia, which almost certainly refers to the results of his stoning at Lystra just before he went to Galatia. Paul was not instantly healed of all the results of his stoning when he was left for dead. So the question is, was Paul in unbelief because he did not believe and receive an instantaneous miracle?

Critics of divine healing like to use Paul’s experience in Galatia as a “proof text” against healing being provided by Christ’s atonement. This, of course, is ironic, because Paul’s issues were only “at the first” based on Paul’s own account, so Paul did get healed of his health issues. It is strange to use a passage where someone gets healed as an argument against healing!

So in an effort to provide some kind of comeback, the theory was introduced by a faith teacher that Paul was in unbelief. He could have gotten completely healed, but he was not exercising his faith enough. The question is, is that a reasonable conclusion?

It would be nice if I could tell you that I have always received instant healings, but that isn’t the case. In one case, my hand got mashed in a car door and hurt a lot. I was standing on the Word but I did not receive an instant healing. Then someone whom God used in gifts of healings laid hands on me, and my hand was INSTANTLY restored as if nothing had ever happened. The swelling vanished on the spot in front of my eyes. That was a memorable “wow” moment! I have been on the other end of such “wow” moments for others, but I will have to say that gifts of healings were involved in those cases as well, not just normal everyday faith in the Word.

Seeing instant healings is a worthy goal to shoot for, even if we fall short.

While I’ve studied the topic of Biblical healing for decades, I am not at a point where all healings that I see are instantaneous, whether for me or others. It does not seem that Paul was at that point either. I don’t see that as something wrong with Paul. One could argue that Jesus Himself was not at that point because He had to lay hands a second time on someone with eye trouble, and someone else “began to amend” when He spoke, and some lepers were healed “as they went.” I don’t think it’s fair to “tag” Paul with unbelief just because the healing he received wasn’t instant. Would you accuse JESUS of being in unbelief?

To be healed AT ALL after the brutal treatment Paul endured was amazing, even if it wasn’t instantaneous. Sometimes we have to stand in faith for things rather than getting immediate miracles. If we didn’t, there would be no need for patience so that by faith and patience we inherit the promises (Hebrews 6:12) – all it would take would be faith! (Please note that I refer to Biblical patience, which determines to never let go of something, not the world’s version of patience, which is often better defined as hopeless resignation.) So it goes too far to say that because Paul’s miracle was not instantaneous, he was in unbelief.

In fact, being healed like that against all odds so that his temporary trial was only “at the first” (as he wrote to the Galatians) shows me that Paul WAS in faith and WAS NOT in unbelief. If Paul were really in unbelief, he would have kept whatever “trial” was “in his flesh” rather than being healed from it.

Finally, I’m sure that Paul was a work in progress like the rest of us. The man who wrote the great love chapter got into such a tiff with Barnabas that the two of them wouldn’t work together anymore despite having planted many churches together. Do we throw out the love chapter because Paul had a struggle at one point? Well, neither should we throw out what the Bible says about healing just because Paul’s healing, which he DID receive, was not instantaneous.

I Have a Headache. Therefore, I Am Sick. Should I Call for the Elders of the Church, as James 5 Says?

No. This could end up being a real headache for the elders! The elders cannot come visit you every time you have a headache. Read the following two verses in James carefully.

James 5:14-15

James 5 does not say that you should call for the elders if you have a headache. There are four proofs of this within the passage in James.

First, James said to let him call for the elders of the church. If you have a headache, you do not need to call for them to come to you. You are perfectly capable of going to church yourself unless you are in such pain that you cannot possibly get to church. Go and have those who are mature in faith pray for you at church!

Second, James said that the elders who had to travel to the person were to pray over him, implying that the sick person is confined to a bed because he is so disabled by his illness. If you're bedridden by your headache, you can call for the elders. Otherwise, you should just get hands laid on you at church to get rid of that headache.

Third, James said that the Lord shall raise him up. This is further proof that the sick person is bedridden. If you simply have a headache but you can make it to church, the Lord does not need to "raise you up." You can raise yourself up.

Fourth, the Greek word for sick in James 5:14 is astheneo, which refers to a condition involving weakness. It is sometimes (correctly) translated "weak" and in places where the "weak" (astheneo) were healed, we see them being brought to Jesus or having someone go to them. This would imply that they are too weak to get somewhere for help without assistance. The word in James 5:15, interestingly enough, is not the same word, but kamno, a word that appears only 2 other times in the Greek New Testament and refers to weakness and faintness. Again, this is not someone with hay fever who can drive himself to church. It is someone who is too weak to get to church on his own.

Thus, it is clear from the context in James 5:14-15 that James is talking about the believer who is so seriously ill that he cannot go to church on his own. If that does not describe you, you should not call for the elders of the church to come to you.

How Can the Leaves of the Tree of Life in Heaven Be for the Healing of the Nations If There is No Sickness in Heaven?

First, the word used for healing in that verse is not the Greek word ioamai that is used to indicate healing in many verses. Rather, it is the word therepeia, which is used in Matthew 24:45 and Luke 12:42 to indicate ruling over a household, and in Luke 9:11 to indicate healing where Jesus healed those who had need of healing.

Still, almost all translations render this word as healing; the one standout is Young's Literal Translation, which uses the word service. The Greek root word can refer to service, though it is used extensively to mean healing in the New Testament. Young's use is not due to an obvious error in the other translations; it is more a matter of preference given the Greek word used. Perhaps Young was aware of the seeming contradiction posed by the question being answered here. So it is possible that the leaves are somehow for the service of the nations, though it would be hard to imagine what kind of service they would provide. Then again, heaven is rather hard to imagine for us too. The most obvious service, food, would seem to have been stated if it were case, in other words, John would just have written that the leaves would serve as food for the nations. So despite the facts above, it would still seem that healing still makes sense as the meaning.

So will there be sickness in heaven? If not, why would you need leaves that can heal it?

The very next verse states that there will be no more curse, and sickness is clearly defined as a curse in Scripture. Therefore, there will definitely be no sickness in heaven.

So now we seem to have reached a conundrum. It seems that there are leaves for healing for people who don't need healing! This is an apparent self-contradiction, like having multiple competing auto insurance companies all boast that people saved hundreds of dollars when they switched to them. (Wouldn't only the cheaper ones have saved people money and it would have COST people to switch to the more expensive ones?) But as is the case with the auto insurance companies, an apparent contradiction is not always an actual contradiction. In the auto insurance case, multiple companies give you a cheap rate when you first switch to them, but then they keep methodically jacking up the rates as much as you will tolerate before you "cry uncle" and shop around for another company that will give you a low initial rate to switch to it. So people switching from Company X to Company Y save money, but people switching from Company Y to Company X also save money, and both claims of savings are true – at least at first! We've played this merry-go-round for some time, bopping back and forth between companies that will give us cheap rates to switch, and saved a LOT of money on auto insurance in the process! So it was profitable to see the difference between an apparent contradiction and an actual one.

As you could expect, there are opinions all over the map from people who have tried to explain this particular healing “contradiction” – which can’t really be a contradiction because the entire Bible is the Word of God. Some say that the tree represents Christ rather than being a literal tree, though that doesn’t really solve the contradiction being addressed regarding a healing tree for those who don’t need healing. Others say that the tree is something present during the 1000-year rule of Christ, but that doesn’t make any sense, because people can still die during that time, whereas death will be abolished in the New Jerusalem.

Then we could ask ourselves if a tree could ever make some kind of spiritual difference. And the answer is YES! Adam and Eve ate from the TREE of the knowledge of good and evil and thus ruined the earth, causing a new one to become necessary in the future! In fact, God then had to guard the way to the Tree of Life to prevent Adam and Eve from living FOREVER in a sinful state! There is no reason to believe that either of these trees were merely symbolic. So we must assume that this tree of life is also a literal tree that has special properties.

So what difference would a Tree of Life that provides healing make in heaven, where no one can die anyway? One “obvious” suggestion would be that people from nations that were at war with each other and hated each other’s guts would be reconciled after eating from this tree, thus providing “healing for the nations.” But that’s impossible because there’s no SIN in heaven. So no one in heaven could hate anyone else’s guts because of his ethnic background (or any other reason) even prior to eating a certain tree’s leaves!

Another possibility would be that once you eat of this tree, your body becomes immortal just as Adam’s body would have been immortal if he had gotten to that tree and eaten from it. But your body was ALREADY transformed “in the blink of an eye” to be incorruptible instead of corruptible before you set foot in the New Jerusalem. So you ALREADY have an immortal, incorruptible body before you ever get to see this tree, so the tree cannot be what provides immortality.

So it seems that our backs are against the wall with this one. We need to look at other statements made about heaven and the New Jerusalem to see if just maybe there could be a hint somewhere about how to solve this dilemma without dismissing the translations made by everyone except Young.

Well, at first it seems that all we find is another apparent contradiction! But this is a helpful one, as it could give us the key to explaining the first one:

Revelation 21:4

Here God wipes all tears from people’s eyes in a place where there is no crying! How can that make any sense? This is the same kind of “contradiction” we’re already dealing with concerning the healing leaves.

And the answer is obvious – the tears must be ones from crying the people did before arrival based on what they had gone through BEFORE they got there. Since there is no crying there, there cannot be any NEW tears, so they have to be OLD tears from prior crying.

One could speculate that the tears could be from a rough life on earth or speculate that they are from sorrow after having stood at the Judgment Seat of Christ and having the majority of their works burned up, to receive no credit or eternal heavenly reward. We don't know because the Bible doesn't tell us the source of the tears. All we know is that they were from crying before arrival because no new crying goes on after arrival.

So that "heavenly contradiction" is solved, and it makes sense to me that we could apply the same logic to the original "heavenly contradiction." In other words, there is something therapeutic about those leaves that causes people who arrive broken to be made whole. It couldn't be their immortal bodies that are broken, as they can't break. Besides, the word iaomai, which would more specifically denote physical healing, wasn't the word used to describe the healing that the Tree of Life provides. It couldn't be people's spirits that are healed either, as they were already made perfect on the earth, created after God in righteousness and true holiness (Ephesians 4:24). So the "healing" would have to be in the soulish realm. Apparently this life-giving tree would be for therapy or medicine for anyone dealing with soulish issues when he gets to heaven.

Was the Healing of the Crippled Man in Acts 3 Based on Peter's Authority or on a Special Manifestation of the Spirit?

The key verse that raises this issue is Acts 3:16, where the issue is, what does “the faith which is by Him” mean? Does it mean that this a case of “special faith” given by Jesus as a gift of the Spirit in this particular case?

I've heard that conclusion proposed, particularly with the reasoning that they must have passed this beggar before and not done anything, though that is speculation because the Bible never states that. I can't say that I could rule it out, but some other features of the passage in question would tend to make me conclude that this action was based on known authority rather than on a particular manifestation of the Spirit.

First, Peter told the man to look at himself and John. This would indicate that he was acting based on something that he knew he had rather than on the possibility of a special manifestation of the Spirit. Peter was already expecting something to happen. It wasn't a case where they had to wait until they actually touched the man to see if a special gift would manifest.

Second, Peter said that he gave the man such as he had. We never “have” the gifts of the Spirit in the sense that we can control their operation, so the “special manifestation” conclusion would not seem to fit what Peter said.

Third, Peter did not attribute the miracle to special one-time faith given by the Holy Spirit, but rather to Jesus' name, through faith in His name. Faith in His name is something that CAN be exercised at any time without waiting on the Holy Spirit. The church has the right to use His name. For example, in Mark 16:17, Jesus did NOT say that believers would pray and ask God to cast out demons. He said that they would cast out demons in His name, implying that He had already given them the pre-approval to invoke His name at will when a need presented itself.

Fourth, if this were a spiritual gift, Paul's depiction of the gift of faith is faith given by the Spirit. But Peter did not say that “the faith that is by the Holy Spirit” had given the man soundness, but rather “the faith that is by Him (referring to Jesus).” This would indicate faith that belongs to everyone as opposed to special faith by the Holy Spirit. But if this faith were “by Him,” wouldn't that mean that it WASN'T Peter's normal faith? That is the basis for concluding that it was a special manifestation, but I don't see that as proof because Jesus is, after all, “the Author and Finisher of our faith” (Hebrews 12:2), which I think is how Peter meant it.

Do Jesus' Post-Resurrection Scars Prove that You Will Still Have Disabilities or Disfigurements in Heaven if You Have them Now?

No.

The fact that Jesus bore your sicknesses and diseases to purchase you healing is unopposed by Satan in heaven. You will have a new body anyway that is not subject to pain or disease. You will not need a walker, crutch, wheelchair or oxygen machine in heaven because you will not have any infirmities or disabilities.

Jesus was marred and disfigured "more than any man" when He was punished for our sins.

Isaiah 52:14:

As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:

If you still had to keep your earthly disfigurements, Jesus would still have been a physical mess after He rose from the dead. But He wasn't. John described His appearance in the book of Revelation, and there was nothing to indicate that He was bruised and scarred all over. He was bruised for our iniquities but nothing indicated that His resurrected body had bruises on it. So you should not expect any bruises or other disfigurements to be in YOUR resurrected body in heaven.

Jesus' bodily injuries that He showed to Thomas were not evidence that He had any disease or disability that had to remain, but rather that He had paid the price for us so that we don't have to have them!

Should a Transgender Person Believe to Be Restored to His/Her Original Gender?

As the question is asked, no.

Shocked you with that answer, didn't I? Here's the reason – that person never changed gender in the first place!

Believing to be “restored” to the opposite gender implies belief in the lie that the person's gender ever changed. That is unbiblical. God created us male and female. Who He made you is what you are. The only difference would be in the gender in which the person expresses himself or herself – if the person has only X chromosomes, she should stop pretending to be a man, and if the person has Y chromosomes, he should stop pretending to be a woman.

Say that I decided one day that I identify as female and that I should now be addressed as Stephanie. Say that I now wear dresses and other female apparel. Then say that I get hormone treatment so that my features change to be more feminine. Then say that I allow my male organs to be surgically removed. Then say that I live somewhere where the devil has convinced the government that it's OK to issue me a new driver's license and birth certificate that both say Stephanie Young. Then I get saved and realize my error.

I would not have to believe to be changed from female back to male because I am simply a cross-dressing, drugged, mutilated man with a phony ID and birth certificate. At no point did I stop being male. I was born with X and Y chromosomes and those are all I ever had. At no point was I a woman with only X chromosomes.

A person with X and Y chromosomes is male. A person with only X chromosomes is female. That is the end of the discussion as far as that goes. The XY person should use male facilities and the XX person should use female facilities.

Obviously the transgender person should talk to the doctor about stopping the use of the hormones of the opposite gender and anything else related to acting as his or her birth gender. The surgical thing was a tragedy. The person has the biblical right to believe to be fully restored. It is not God's will for someone to act unnaturally. This was even true back under the Law (Deuteronomy 22:5). I look forward to seeing these kinds of miracles for these people whom the devil has deceived.

Someone is sure to bring up the issue of someone born with parts of both genders. In this day and age, someone's real gender should be determinable from his or her chromosomes. In the rare case that someone was taken to be the wrong gender based on chromosomes, the person should stay in the gender that reflects his or her chromosomes. Any other abnormalities are fair game for receiving from Jesus. You would have every right to say, “Lord, when You said that You made them male and female, you didn't mean that the same person should be both” and to claim healing on the same basis as any other birth defect.

Is “Seeing Yourself Healed” a New Age Visualization Technique?

No.

Seeing yourself healed is a CHRISTIAN concept because it involves renewing your mind to God’s Word, which says that you WERE healed (1 Peter 2:24). You SHOULD see yourself the way God sees you despite outward circumstances.

Proverbs 23:7:

For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

The way you REALLY are is how you THINK. If your thoughts are contrary to the Word, you will live and act contrary to the Word. If your thoughts agree with the Word, you will live and act based on the Word, which is far better.

The fact that MANY cults practice “visualization” scares off many Christians from the idea of seeing themselves well when their bodies are still sick. But seeing yourself well is NOT denying reality. It is having a mental picture of reality changing to line up with the Word as God hastens His Word to perform it (Jeremiah 1:12) and His Word works mightily in you who believes (1 Thessalonians 2:13). As you renew your mind with the Word (Romans 12:2), you will see yourself acting on the Word instead of contrary to it.

The occult kind of visualization generally consists of relaxing and emptying your mind before you do any other steps. That is NOT Christian “meditation,” which consists of FILLING your mind with God’s Word.

The woman with the issue of blood (Matthew 9:18-25) said “within herself” (in Matthew’s account) that if she touched Jesus’ clothes, she would be made well. This shows me that she was imagining herself being healed when she touched Jesus. She went and got the very thing that she imagined. Now suppose that she imagined herself touching Jesus and having NOTHING happen and being disappointed by yet another person who could not heal her. She wouldn’t have been healed!

Imagination has unlimited potential, as shown by this verse in the account of the Tower of Babel:

Genesis 11:6:

And the LORD said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do.

If these people could do anything they imagined – even if it was evil – surely a Christian today can do what HE imagines and have nothing restrained from him.

A long time ago (before we met), my wife had to walk kilometers in 30-below-zero weather in Newfoundland to do ministry visits because she didn't have a car. One day she went out and bought a key chain. That seemed odd, given that she had no car and no keys. But that was her step of faith – she bought that key chain because she would need it to hold the keys to the car that the Lord would provide. And He did provide that car! But that was after she SAW herself with a car that the Lord had provided on the inside – before she saw it on the outside.

Then, when the Lord called her to go to Bible school, she saw herself going there even though she had no money to pay for it. She was broke. A social worker assured her that the government would NEVER send her to Bible school. But she already had her things packed up and she had given her notice to her landlord because she was going to Bible school the next week. She told the social worker, “The Bible says that the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the just, and I'm the just!” (She agreed with Proverbs 13:22.) She had gotten a revelation of that. The social worker called back later that afternoon and said, “Go to Bible school! We'll pay for everything.” And the government paid for ALL her Bible school expenses. I've never heard of the government there or anywhere else paying for someone to go to Bible school; that's one of those things that “just doesn't happen.” But it happened to her!

However, she didn't even have enough money to get on a bus to GO to Bible school the next week. Then people started driving to her apartment and just handing her money, and it was enough for a bus ticket. While on the bus, where no one had to give his name to get a ticket, the bus driver called her name and said that there was a message that a package for her was waiting at the next stop. She got the package, and it had a lot of cards with money in them from people whom she had never met!

She didn't allow the circumstances to paint a mental picture of never being able to go to Bible school because she was broke. She saw herself going! The revelation of that ONE Scripture sent her to Bible school when she first SAW herself walking in the light of it on the inside. THEN she was able to see herself literally walking in it on the outside.

“Meditating on the Word” can involve you imagining your life lining up with the Word. We see that God is FOR this practice in Joshua 1:7-8 and Psalm 1:1-3, and He declares you BLESSED when you do it! God would never put His stamp of blessing on a truly New Age technique!

Seeing yourself with what the Word says you have is part of renewing your mind. The fact that New Age people have tried to corrupt the idea of imagining where you are going does not detract from the fact that it is a GODLY concept.

Can Satan Heal?

Satan is a spirit being who does have a certain amount of power on the earth among the unsaved. He is able to do “lying signs and wonders” to deceive, if possible, even Christians. Since Satan is the instigator of sickness, in some cases he can “call it off” when a person goes to a witch doctor or Spiritualist “healer.” He will always leave you worse off – instead of being just sick, you could end up demonized by opening the door to his power. However, Satan is not all-powerful like God, so he cannot always help the sick person.

The witches of Egypt were able to duplicate some impressive demonstrations by Moses and Aaron. (You can read these accounts in the early chapters of Exodus.) They turned rods into snakes after Aaron’s rod turned into a snake. (The Hebrew word for snake does not denote some cute little garter snake, either. It was some kind of land and sea monster, possibly a crocodile.) Yes, Aaron’s snake ate their snakes, but you can see that the Egyptian witches, with the help of the devil, were able to do “signs and wonders.”

The Egyptian witches duplicated the first two plagues that Moses pronounced. They were unable to duplicate the last eight. Satan’s power is limited and does not begin to compare with God’s power. Also, his specialty is destruction, not creation. The magicians copied the plagues, but they could not copy their removal! Pharaoh had to go to Moses to get rid of the plagues.

Given that some ailments are described in the New Testament as being demon-induced, and demons are in Satan’s kingdom, clearly Satan could order one of his own to leave a person alone for a season to work a “miraculous healing.” However, Satan has no compassion for people. He would provide this “benefit” only to ensnare people into one of his false cults. This provides profitable repeat business for witch doctors because people who use them will get sick again and have to go back. The more the people submit to the devil, the more the devil can use sickness in their lives to control them.

I used to be involved in the occult and I noted that many leading occult practitioners paid a lot of lip service to God. Some teach that God gives “you” the power to do occult things. But change the topic to Jesus Christ instead of God and that is another story. All leading occultists agree that Jesus was not God in the flesh. This should come as no surprise because 1 John 4:1-4 gives us this “litmus test.” Spirits that are not of God may talk on and on about how wonderful God is and how wonderful heaven is, but they will not confess Jesus Christ. If you wonder who is doing the healing, find out what the person in charge of the gathering says about Jesus Christ. If the person does not teach that He was God in the flesh, stay as far away as possible, even if the group calls itself “Christian.” To save yourself some trouble, let me point out that Mormons, Christian Scientists and Spiritualists incorporate miraculous metaphysical healing into their religions, and all three of these are false cults that lead their adherents straight to hell while appearing “Christian” on the surface. Their healing testimonies prove only that Satan does have limited power to heal.

Satan’s ability to do signs and wonders proves that you cannot certify a ministry as credible just because signs and wonders follow it. Consider these passages:

Matthew 24:24:

For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

Mark 13:22:

For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

2 Thessalonians 2:8-9:

And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming:

Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders,

Revelation 13:13-14:

And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast...

Revelation 14:14:

For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles...

Revelation 18:23:

...for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

This should be ample warning that God is not in a ministry just because signs and wonders follow it. Some signs and wonders can be demonic, and others can even be mere sleight of hand or other trickery. (I have heard of at least two ministers who had quite a following until it was shown that their "signs" were phony. I'm sure that there are more. I was even at a non-Christian meeting where "plants" in the audience gave "testimonies"; don't think that an unscrupulous minister could not have his own "plants.")

Healings are not mentioned explicitly in these signs and wonders, but I think the Scriptures above are ample proof that Satan can do "miraculous" healings when it suits his purposes.

How Can I Know that It's God and Not the Devil Doing the Healing?

There is much talk today about the devil doing lying signs and wonders. Some of the very people being most mightily used of God are considered agents of Satan by some top-selling authors. How can we know?

When God does the healing, He gets the glory. When Jesus healed the sick, God was glorified, not the preacher, even though Jesus was the preacher! If the devil is doing the healing, God will get no glory and man or even the devil is glorified instead.

Does the man preaching say that Jesus was God in the flesh? If not, stay away because 1 John 4:1-4 tells you that an antichrist spirit is at work. If the man does say that Jesus was God in the flesh, he is not of an antichrist spirit.

Your mind might not appreciate this answer, but you will know on the inside if something is of God or not. The Holy Spirit will give you an uneasy feeling about things that are not of God and but He will give you peace about things that are of God. The writer of Hebrews talks about having your senses exercised to discern both good and evil (Hebrews 5:14). Experience will build this in you. The anointing abides in you and teaches you the difference (1 John 2:27).

Of course, you need no special discernment if anyone other than Jesus Christ is getting credit for being the source of the power. If anyone else (living or dead) is presented as the one whose power is doing the healing, you don't need to be "led by the Spirit" to know to stay away! Note, however, that when Jesus worked miracles through people in the Bible, the Bible says that "they" did them. However, "they" were preaching Christ when they did them. (See YOU Can Do Miracles for more on this nuance.)

Plenty of New Age trash out there promises "spiritual healing" through "spiritual" means. Some of it is positive thinking, which is not inherently bad though it's a poor substitute for faith. A lot of it is doctrines of seducing spirits. If someone says that his spirit guide told him that he got his healing power from an amulet in a prior life, you should have enough sense to recognize his "ministry" as demonic.

If the healing is based on reiki, juju, voodoo, santeria, obia, white witchcraft, etc., you KNOW it is demonic – God has nothing to do with these occult practices, which are all basically synonyms for each other depending on where you are. He does not "use" these practitioners – the devil does. For example, to become a highest-level reiki person, you must completely sell out your life to reiki – not to Jesus! Christians should have enough sense to avoid these things like the plague. I knew a Spirit-filled woman who went a for reiki "treatment" and said that she was so moved that she cried for 3 days after it. I'd probably cry for 3 days if I had demonic power channeled into me to if I didn't know what to do about it. Satan isn't wise, but he's a shrewd enough spiritual businessman to realize that it's a favorable transaction for him to lift your sickness off for a season if it means that his demons can get access to your body with your ignorant consent.

My wife and I like pretty rocks, but I DON'T like the claims that are made at some New Age rock shops that certain crystals have certain powers over your life. Need to get better at long division? AHA, you should buy a Congolese Tiger Sapphire! Okay, I made that up, but the actual claims in those stores are just as farfetched. From a BIBLE perspective, the only time when rocks conferred any kind of supernatural benefit was when they had the Ten Commandments written on them!

Ten criteria for distinguishing real and false ministers are listed in the discussion, All about Healing Services. See that topic for further comments.

Is All Sickness Demonic?

Clearly not.

Jesus cast demons out of some people with certain ailments, such as deafness and lameness, while He healed others of the same ailments without casting out a demon. Therefore, we cannot say that all sickness is due to the direct action of a demon in your body. However, all sickness does have its origin with Satan, regardless of how it comes to you.

In Mark 7:32-37, Jesus healed a deaf man without casting out a demon. In Mark 9:17-29, Jesus healed a boy with a deaf spirit in him. So you cannot say that deafness always is or always isn't caused by an evil spirit.

The crippled man at the gate called Beautiful was healed in Acts 3:1-16 without any reference to a demon being cast out. However, the crippled woman in Luke 13:11-16 was bound by a spirit of infirmity. Again, this can go either way.

The women in Luke 8:2 were healed of "evil spirits AND infirmities," which would indicate that not every woman who had an infirmity had an evil spirit.

You are not necessarily having a personal visitation from the devil just because you are sick. But sickness is called the oppression of the devil in Acts 10:38. Sickness is part of the devil's kingdom, not God's. You have been redeemed from Satan's kingdom (Colossians 1:12-14). Sickness was not part of God's original creation, all of which He declared to be good or very good. Sickness will not exist in heaven or the new earth where Satan is not present. That should tell you right there who the author of sickness is.

Suppose I put a rock on the accelerator of my car and aim it at your house. My car plows into your house and demolishes your living room. You say, "I'm not mad at the guy who wrote that healing book. It was a car that wrecked my living room, not a person." That is no different from saying, "It's just a virus going around. It's not the devil." Who do you think invented viruses, which steal, kill and destroy? Satan is the author of sickness, regardless of whether or not he personally puts it on you. Thus, in a sense, all sickness is satanic. However, not all sickness is caused by the direct action of demons. Sin brought trouble, including sickness, into this world. Sickness will be here until Satan is banished. It is part of life on Planet Earth. However, you do not have to have any of it yourself – sickness does not have to be part of your life on Planet Earth.

Do Mentally Ill People Need to be Delivered from Demons?

Some do, some don't. There were people with severe conditions in the Bible who would be called "mentally ill" today. They would probably be diagnosed with some condition named after someone and prescribed psychoactive drugs when the real problem was a demon that was urging the person to cut himself or throw himself into the water or fire. You can't drug out a demon and you can't psychoanalyze out a demon. Some well-meaning people go too far and state that the mentally ill always need a psychiatrist. But unless it's a Spirit-filled one who is ready to deal with demons, some people will never get set free by going for such treatments. Visit a mental hospital sometime (I have) and you are almost sure to encounter demonized people.

On the other hand, some mental problems are not caused by demons. For example, a person who was in the middle of falling bombs in combat might still jump up in horror in the middle of the night if he hears any kind of loud noise. This would fall under the category of a conditioned reflex, not demonization.

Someone else could have a chromosomal or neurological disorder that causes unusual behavior. Trying to cast a demon out of someone who doesn't have one is degrading and harmful. However, ALL such people have the right to divine healing because of what Jesus did for them. We have seen serious mental illnesses healed as well as serious physical illnesses.

As I say multiple times in this book, it is an error to assume that ALL conditions are demonic just as much as it is an error to assume that NO conditions are demonic.

Also, it is not fair to a mentally ill person to say, "Well, just get over yourself!" or "What's wrong with you? Stop being so negative!" How would you like it if you got a cold and someone said to you, "What's wrong with you? Stop allowing that cold to exist in your body!" There are mental illnesses as well as physical illnesses. They are all subject to the name of Jesus, but we need to approach people with compassion and show them what Jesus offers them rather than coming across as judges who rule that the person's illness is his own fault. Even if someone has been disobeying the Word by dwelling on negative things rather than focusing on what is good, virtuous, praiseworthy, etc., Jesus' message is that he can be free, not, "You're stupid for dwelling on negative things. Of course you're depressed!" That is not any nicer than saying, "Your cold is your own fault because you should have washed your hands 60 times a day at work and stayed away from other people who sneeze their germs all over the office, and besides, you should have been eating healthier food to build your immune system."

How Can You Tell if a Certain Condition is Demonic?

Obviously, if the person you are ministering to suddenly starts writhing on the floor like a snake, screaming, “Don’t say that name (Jesus)!” you have a good indication that a demon is involved. I saw this just after I got saved. By that I mean I faced the situation; I was not the one on the floor. I had been involved in the occult and a certain girl and I were trying to organize a Ouija board party for our dorm floor. But that week I gave my life to Jesus, and I knew that Jesus and the Ouija board were not friends. (I had asked a Ouija board if Jesus was real and it said “no.”) So I informed that girl that I was calling off the Ouija board party because I had given my life to Jesus, and she shrieked, “Don’t say that name!” Being the contrary sort (my mind hadn’t had time to get renewed with the Word much at that point), I said “JESUS!” She screamed, “Don’t say that name!” So I said, “JESUS! JESUS! JESUS! JESUS! JESUS!” Although she was a big girl who probably weighed twice what I did, she fell to the floor and started writing, still screaming, “Don’t say that name! Don’t say that name!” This was my first introduction to the power in the name of Jesus. I hadn’t had time to read about it in the Bible yet – I was Biblically illiterate, having been a militant atheist for years.

An old woman who went around trying to burn people with lit cigarettes said to me, “You can’t cast me out – you don’t have enough experience!” Someone else blurted out, “You can’t have him! He’s mine!” It’s kind of a giveaway when something like that happens that you’re dealing with a demon.

In general, people in countries where Christianity is prevalent hardly ever exhibit true demon manifestations outside of mental institutions. However, there still are such manifestations. All the ones I just mentioned happened in the United States. Many weird people are just totally in the flesh and that’s all there is to it. They are doing adultery and fornication and divorce and abortions because those are fleshly things. You will hardly ever meet anyone truly driven by demons. But I’ve been places where I’d be surprised if DIDN’T see some form of demonic manifestation.

It is hard to put into words how you tell if a demon is present if there is no outward manifestation. Maybe it is trite to say that you just know, but that’s about the best way to put it. If you spend time developing your spirit through prayer and time with God and His Word, you will pick up things like that. Some people who are used in the gift of discerning of spirits pick up on this kind of thing very quickly.

Never assume that there is a demon present unless you are sure there is one. You can do untold damage by attempting to “cast out” a nonexistent spirit. When nothing happens, the person may still think he has a demon! In the majority of cases, there is nothing explicitly demonic going on, and you are always on safe ground to act as though there isn’t. Never assume that there is a demon present just because the person has a certain condition. (See Is All Sickness Demonic?.) I’ve been around people who think that just about everything is caused by a demon. It seems like anytime they pray for someone, they’re trying to cast a demon out. That’s spiritual immaturity. It confuses people and makes demons look more prevalent than they really are, which just magnifies Satan’s kingdom.

Some people would immediately hop on anyone who has a seizure and try to cast a demon out, but some people have physical conditions that cause seizures without a demon being present. The devil is the ultimate source of all sickness, but that doesn't mean that you try to cast a demon out of every epileptic you encounter. The NKJV uses epileptics in place of lunatick, which appears in the King James Version, so you could look at Matthew 4:23-24 and try to build a case that epileptics and those "possessed with devils" are two separate classes. However, that "proof" fails because Matthew uses the same word lunatick (it's the same in Greek, too), to describe the boy with the demon that often threw him into water or fire to try to kill him. That notwithstanding, there are medical problems (for example, encephalitis) that cause seizures as well as demons that cause seizures, and you don't want to be in the position of "casting out" a nonexistent demon!

Other people use demons as excuses, as if to say, "The devil made me do it." They will ask you to cast out a demon in them that isn't there! One man wanted prayer because he said that a spirit of adultery would come on him and he'd just have to commit adultery when that happened. I told him that adultery is a work of the flesh (Galatians 5:19) and that he just needed to keep his flesh under. He got mad! He insisted that a demon was responsible, and he didn't like it when I told him that he was responsible. Demons can't make you do anything. If 2,000 of them couldn't stop the madman of Gadara from running to Jesus and worshiping Him, they can't "make" anyone else do anything. Don't get your theology from horror movies – get it from the Word!

What Do You Do When You Don't Know if Someone's Condition is Demonic?

NEVER try to cast a demon out of someone unless you are SURE that you are dealing with a demon. Otherwise you will cause all kinds of trouble and confusion; the person you're ministering to could assume that since no demon left, he still has a demon when he really doesn't. Do NOT get into presumption thinking that you just KNOW a person's epilepsy must be a manifestation of a demon, for example.

The good news is that you don't really have to know if an illness is being directly caused by a demon that needs to be cast out. What I would do, and what I'd urge you to do, is to just take authority over that sickness and command it to be gone in the name of Jesus. For example, "Cancer, leave her in the name of Jesus!" That will cover things. If the cancer wasn't caused by a demon, it has to leave and obey the name of Jesus. If a demon IS causing the cancer, it has to leave and obey the name of Jesus, and once it's gone, the cancer it's causing will be gone too.

We sometimes get the impression that God is a lot more technically nit-picky than He really is. I've seen people cast out what I was sure were nonexistent demons and people have still gotten healed – not because the minister prayed right, but because God honored his faith and met him where he was. If you're commanding sickness to leave in the name of Jesus, Jesus will back His name and He won't nit-pick over causes.

You can see this principle in Acts 19:11-12. The anointing drove out both sicknesses and demons. There was no need to make a distinction. There was no need to have a pile of certain cloths with a healing anointing and a pile of separate cloths with a different cast-out-demons anointing.

I also look at it this way – if I NEED to know that a demon is present (rare), the Holy Spirit will reveal that to me. Otherwise, I will just go ahead and command sickness to leave in Jesus' name. I've had times that the Lord has shown me demons when I needed to see them, but it certainly hasn't been the rule.

In other words, assume that a condition is NOT demonic unless (1) the Holy Spirit shows you otherwise or (2) there is an obvious manifestation like a growling voice telling you that he remembers when you cast him out of someone else in some other country. But even on (2), let me give you a word of caution. In some cultures, people have been "trained" well to "manifest" demons and sometimes they'll go ahead and "manifest" something that isn't really there. The risk in such places is that the people involved may actually end up with demons they didn't have when they walked in because they opened themselves up to having demons mess around with their bodies. This can happen in those unbiblically-based churches where they think that have to puke up demons into fried chicken buckets. And I'm not making that up; I went to one place like that and saw what was going on. In a word, yuck. (I didn't know in advance that they were going to pull that stunt.) A similar issue occurs in places where they've been taught incorrectly that ALL sicknesses are caused by demons and they try to cast demons out of EVERYONE who is sick. The result is a Satan-exalting mess, even though I've had people insist very adamantly that ALL sickness is demonic. They're clearly wrong, as you can see by reading this book.

Must We Fast and Pray to Make Certain Demons Leave?

Fasting does not make demons leave. Praying does not make demons leave. The name of Jesus, used in faith, makes demons leave.

But we'll see that you may not succeed in casting out some demons if you don't fast and pray.

Matthew 17:14-21

Jesus said, "This kind goeth out but by prayer and fasting." What did He mean by that? At least five possibilities come to mind, and we need to determine which fits best with the rest of Scripture:

1. Some demons are really big and bad and praying and fasting is the special way to make them go; merely commanding these kinds to leave in the name of Jesus won't work.
2. Some "more wicked" demons will put on big displays that will scare you and get you into unbelief if you're used to walking by sight and not by faith. The solution is to pray and fast so that you're not moved by physical phenomena and the flesh but are moved by the Word.
3. Jesus meant that this kind of FAITH would only come forth from you if you pray and fast.
4. Jesus meant that this kind of UNBELIEF would only come out of you if you pray and fast.
5. The whole "prayer and fasting" thing isn't even biblical because some original manuscripts do not include Matthew 17:21 at all.

The last one can be dealt with by checking Mark's account of the same incident, particularly Mark 9:29, and seeing if it is missing from some manuscripts like Matthew 17:21. It isn't, so option 5 can be immediately dismissed. We will have to deal with this verse!

Option 1 is probably the most accepted explanation in the church world, but it is clearly wrong. Jesus gave His disciples authority to cast out ALL demons (Luke 9:1) before this incident (which in Luke's gospel is later in chapter 9). ALL demons would include any "big" ones. Jesus was exasperated with the disciples because they didn't believe they could do what He said that they could do. Jesus didn't handle that demon any differently than He handled other ones, and the disciples did not have to handle it differently, either.

Jesus did not say, "This is a really bad demon that you don't have enough power to cast out unless you pray and fast to get that power." That would have been a lie. The disciples did have the power and authority to cast that demon out. In Matthew 10:1, we read that Jesus had already given them "power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease." Luke makes it even clearer. The story of the demonized boy is in Luke 9:38-42. Before this incident, in Luke 9:1-2, Jesus had already given them "power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases." If they had power and authority over all devils, they had power and authority over the one in that boy. It was not a power issue; it was an unbelief issue. They had the right and the ability to cast it out, but their unbelief prevented them from doing it.

Jesus said to cast out devils, not fast out devils. He never once prayed one of those modern, ineffective, “Devil, I come against you” prayers. Demons don’t care if you “come against” them as long as you don’t cast them out, as Jesus said to do! You don’t harangue them. You don’t “come against” them. You command them to leave in the name of Jesus! You don’t have to scream at them about the blood of Jesus. You don’t even have to be loud. You just have to use your authority in faith. Jesus said that in His name believers would cast out devils (Mark 16:17). We have a right to make them leave in the name of Jesus.

If we accept Option 1, we’ll have to proclaim a fast-a-thon “against” the demon (I’ve seen this done!), pray endlessly to “come against” it, and do many other ineffective things. But Jesus did not need to schedule a prayer marathon or go on a fast to get rid of the demon. He used His authority and spoke to it, and it left. We have no indication that He even knew about the situation before the boy’s father approached Him. There wasn’t time to pray and fast for that specific case! Therefore, Jesus could not possibly have meant what some say He did – that if you come across a really bad demon, you have to fast and pray “against” it until it comes out. So Option 1 is “out.”

So the remaining three options come down to what “this kind” means – this kind of demon, this kind of faith, or this kind of unbelief.

At this point, I have some very bad news for your flesh. These remaining options all require praying and fasting! The only question is whether fasting helps keep your flesh from being moved by creepy manifestations, or fasting produces enough faith to cast out an evil spirit, or fasting gets rid of enough unbelief so that you can cast out an evil spirit. But in any of these cases, fasting and prayer are necessary to handle tougher situations. Your flesh hates fasting. So does mine. But I dislike being bossed around by my flesh even more than I dislike fasting, so I fast at times. I can’t afford to have my flesh in control when a serious situation arises that requires me to really flow in the Holy Spirit.

There is no question as to why the demon did not leave when the disciples tried to cast it out. Matthew, who wrote the most complete account of this incident, recorded Jesus’ direct answer to the question “Why could not we cast him out?” That answer was, “Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say to this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.”

Option 3 (“this kind” of “faith” comes forth) has been taught in “faith circles,” which is surprising, given that such teachers emphasize correctly that faith comes by hearing the Word (Romans 10:17). However, that Scripture contradicts the idea that you could get more faith to come out of you by prayer and fasting. The Bible never teaches that either prayer or fasting increases your faith. So it looks like Option 3 is on its way to the dumpster.

But it might have one last gasp. Could it really be that their faith was too small, and faith “big enough” to cast out that demon could only operate in people who pray and fast? We check out other Bible translations, and we find that according to about half of them, Jesus said that the problem was their little faith instead of their unbelief. Now how can that be? The Greek has to say either little faith or unbelief, and those two terms would be based on different Greek words! So who’s right? A little more digging brings us to an interesting discovery – this verse is one of the relatively few cases where “the original Greek” differs depending on which ancient manuscript you’re reading! One says little faith while others say unbelief!

So now we have to analyze the context to see which actually fits better. Perhaps it will become obvious which is a copyist error and which is consistent with the passage. Upon further examination of the verse, we realize that Jesus contradicted the idea that “little faith” was the problem with His very words! He said that if you had super-SMALL faith (like a mustard seed), that NOTHING (including casting that demon out) would be impossible to you. So the issue COULD NOT have been that they had not prayed and fasted enough to have really big faith come forth out of them to cast that demon out.

So the problem had to be unbelief, not too-little faith. And with that, we bid goodbye to Option 3.

This leaves Option 2 (prayer and fasting will keep you out of unbelief when casting out “this kind” of demon) and Option 4 (“this kind” of unbelief will come out of you if you pray and fast). These two options pretty much lead to the same place when all is said and done, but it would be unsatisfying not to delve deeper until we can declare a clear winner.

So we have to consider whether it could be true that some demons are harder to cast out than others. This is similar to asking whether some illnesses are harder to heal than others. While faith can take care of ANY demon or ANY illness, in practice, your flesh could freak out more if you are dealing with a more severe case. So in practice, some cases are harder than others. This is subject of a separate discussion called The Flesh Freakout Factor.

As far as demons go, we can prove that some are harder to cast out from a practical perspective even though Christ’s disciples have authority over ALL the power of the enemy (Luke 10:19), which would include ALL demons. You see, in Mark 6:13, which precedes the incident in question, the disciples had already cast out “MANY devils.” So the disciples certainly knew how to cast out a demon. They struggled with this particular one despite having had many past successes. Could it be that some demons are just nastier to deal with than others? Yes. In both Matthew 12:45 and Luke 11:26, Jesus referred to demons that were more wicked than a certain demon. So there are degrees of wickedness among demons, just as there are many angels that are not in a class with Michael or Gabriel. Thus, saying “this kind” could plausibly refer to “this kind” of demon – a more wicked one.

Mark's account, which makes no mention of unbelief, certainly reads at face value that it is "this kind" of demon that Jesus refers to. The passage makes no sense otherwise. In Matthew's account, "this kind" has before it faith, unbelief and the demon, so you could justify any of these at face value. However, I think it stretches the text a bit to force "unbelief" or "faith" to be what "this kind" refers to, as even here, "this kind" of demon still flows better with the passage. Given that "this kind" GOETH OUT, the idea of "going out" seems like a better fit for a demon than unbelief. No other Scripture discusses unbelief "going out."

The question was "why could we not cast him out?" The reply, "This kind of demon goes out only by prayer and fasting" makes more logical sense than saying "This kind of unbelief goes out only by prayer and fasting."

So it's time for a Greek word study. We already determined that the word used for "going out" is never used together with unbelief, but if we can show that it is used elsewhere to describe a demon going out, we will have basically an airtight case that Jesus was talking about kinds of demons. Unfortunately, that word is never used anywhere else to describe a demon departing, either. So the "going out" round ends without a definitive conclusion.

Some situations are worse than others. A man who needs to be healed of a cold and a quadriplegic are different. The same promises apply to both, but your flesh will not get in your way as much when a condition is minor. I have precedent for this reasoning. At Nazareth, where faith was at a premium and unbelief was the norm, people got healed of a few (apparently minor) problems, but no one got a major miracle. The disciples had success casting out demons elsewhere but had trouble in this case. These are two similar situations where unbelief was the problem – more minor circumstances were not hindered by unbelief the way that major miracles were hindered.

So what about prayer and fasting? Why would this kind of demon not leave unless you prayed and fasted? The answer is obvious from the passage once you put religious tradition aside. Unbelief was the problem. Prayer and fasting was the antidote. What Jesus was saying was, "Unless you spend time praying and fasting, you won't overcome your unbelief and use your faith as you should, and you will fail to cast out this kind of demon."

You will not overcome some circumstances unless you pray and fast. But be sure that neither praying nor fasting changes God's mind about anything, and neither one gives you additional power. They couldn't give you more power when you already have all the power you need! It is a case of training yourself to use what is yours.

So is there anything else we can look at to determine if we're talking about "this kind" of demon or "this kind" of unbelief? As we saw above, we have Scripture to back up that there are different "kinds" of demons. However, there are 2 different Greek words for unbelief, apistia (the usual) and apeitheia (which appears only in Hebrews). Thus, one might think that Jesus WAS talking about different kinds of unbelief. However, looking at the passages where these words are found, there doesn't seem to be much difference in how the words are used. Also, Jesus couldn't really have meant "this kind of apistia" if He were trying to make a distinction between apistia and apeitheia.

One could then consider that perhaps Paul's "unbelief of ignorance" was a different "kind" of unbelief from unbelief that knows God's Word and won't act on it. However, the only place where we can find that is 1 Timothy 1:13, and even then, Paul had to know what Christianity was so that he knew whom to persecute. Also, ignorantly is a separate word from unbelief; he didn't just say he had acted solely in ignorance or solely in unbelief. So it doesn't seem that there are different "kinds" of unbelief, though there may be degrees – but Jesus didn't say that this degree of unbelief came out only by fasting and prayer. So the "this kind of unbelief" interpretation seems extremely doubtful at this point.

So we should at least look at the Greek word used for kind as a final clue to see if we learn anything from it. We find that it is the word genos. We then check all the other verses where genos is found in the Greek. We see that it can refer to kindred, relatives, offspring or generation in Acts 4:6, Acts 7:13, Acts 7:19, Acts 13:26, Acts 17:28, Acts 17:29, 1 Peter 2:9 and Revelation 22:16, nationality or regional origin in Acts 4:36, Acts 18:2, Acts 18:24, 2 Corinthians 11:26, Galatians 1:14, Philippians 3:5, and type (a more traditional meaning of kind in English) in Matthew 13:47 (kinds of fish), 1 Corinthians 12:10 and 1 Corinthians 10:28 (kinds of tongues) and 1 Corinthians 14:10 (kinds of voices).

So genos doesn't seem to offer an ironclad conclusion, but I would say that it would at least lean more in the direction of a kind of demon rather than a kind of unbelief based on its Biblical usage. I spelled out the usage above, but you are free to disagree with my conclusion from the word genos.

An argument to go the other way toward Option 4 would be that a demon does not go out directly "by prayer and fasting" anyway but "because of prayer and fasting – that drives out unbelief when casting a demon out. After all, we don't pray out devils and we don't fast out devils – we cast out devils. Thus, Jesus' use of the term "by prayer and fasting" could point us back to unbelief being what has to come out.

So both Option 2 and Option 4 seem like solid conclusions that have some possible drawbacks, and you can make a decent argument for either of them. Fortunately, they both lead you to the same place – you need to pray and fast so that you're ready to cast out certain demons without being tripped up by unbelief.

However, I go with Option 2 over Option 4 for a few reasons.

First, it seems to me like too much of a stretch to assume that Jesus meant "this kind of UNBELIEF" in the context, especially because that would be tantamount to saying that Mark's version (Mark 9:17-29) is misleading! In other words, I believe that Jesus did mean "this kind of demon." However, we must be careful to realize that demons of ALL "kinds" must bow at the name of Jesus (Philippians 2:9-11), so prayer and fasting do NOT give us some kind of extra power or authority needed to cast out "big" demons. Prayer and fasting simply help us stay out of unbelief and in faith, believing that ALL demons must go when we command them to leave in Jesus' name.

Second, the question was "why could we not cast HIM out?" so as I stated above, talking about this kind of DEMON is more consistent with answering the question than talking about "this kind of UNBELIEF," which the disciples didn't ask about. A demon could be a "him" but unbelief could not.

Third, if casting out one demon is the same as casting out any other, it would not make sense that their UNBELIEF stopped them from casting out that particular demon because their UNBELIEF would have stopped them from casting out ANY demon. The Bible shows that they cast out MANY demons before they encountered this particular one, as proved above. So some demons are definitely more difficult than others.

Fourth, we don't see "kinds" of unbelief the way we see "kinds" of demons (one could be more wicked than another) and "kinds" of faith (little faith, dead faith, great faith). I don't see references to "little unbelief" or "dead unbelief" or "great unbelief." So I think it's going too far to say that Jesus meant "this kind of UNBELIEF" when the Bible really doesn't talk about different "kinds" of unbelief but it DOES talk about different kinds of demons.

From a practical perspective, Option 2 and Option 4 BOTH leave you with the conclusion that lack of prayer and fasting can result in failure with some demons. In the case of Option 2, it would be because some "kinds" of demons will produce a greater Flesh Freakout Factor that must be prevented by prayer and fasting as part of your lifestyle (BEFORE you encounter a demon). In the case of Option 4, it would be because some "kinds" of unbelief are harder to get rid of than others, and a lifestyle that includes prayer and fasting is again the solution (again, BEFORE you encounter a demon).

So it's not that prayer and fasting "make" certain demons leave, but you aren't going to cast out certain demons unless you involve yourself with prayer and fasting for the reasons stated above.

Should We Plead the Blood when Dealing with Demons?

It's unnecessary. Telling them to be quiet and come out in the name of Jesus suffices.

We don't see anyone in the Bible saying, "I plead the blood!" when dealing with a demon. This would more typically be what you'd hear from a Christian who is afraid of a demon and who is trying to stop the demon from "getting" him, which should be of no concern anyway, given Jesus' statement in Luke 10:19 that none of the enemy's power will hurt you. You should never fear a demon – that demon is extremely afraid of YOU! It might try to sass you and say, "I won't come out!" but it knows that it HAS TO leave at the name of Jesus – it just hopes that you aren't convinced of that.

Saying "I plead the blood" does not confer any additional authority – but you don't need any additional authority beyond what Jesus has already conferred on you – "In my name they shall cast out devils" (Mark 16:17).

Actually, no one in Scripture ever prayed an "I plead the blood" prayer for ANY reason. So you can live a successful Christian life without ever doing it yourself. If "pleading the blood" had ANY benefit, Scripture would encourage Christians to do it, and there is no such verse as "Brethren, remember to plead the blood."

I've heard the idea that Jesus' blood was shed but now we have to apply that blood as they applied the blood to the doorframe during the first Passover. I suppose that you'd have to apply the communion "fruit of the vine" to someone to imitate that, which would stain the person's clothing and waste his money buying new clothing. But the truth is that when you received Jesus, His blood was applied to your life at that instant!

Simply "pleading the blood" would not have saved your firstborn in Exodus. Blood had to be shed and applied. A sinner could say "I plead the blood" but remain unsaved by not receiving Jesus who shed that blood.

I have no problem with keeping in mind what the blood of Jesus purchased for you, part of which is redemption from the power of darkness. However, the idea that you must "plead the blood" as either a defensive or offensive weapon against the devil is a Christian superstition, if you'll pardon the oxymoron. Your armor listed in Ephesians 6:10-18 does NOT include the blood itself – it includes what the blood BOUGHT you.

Now what about overcoming Satan "by the blood of the lamb?"

Revelation 12:11:

And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

This verse doesn't say that they overcame the devil by APPLYING the blood of the lamb or by PLEADING the blood of the lamb. I think it's clear when you give it a little thought that it refers to faith in what the blood provided – they were saved by the blood and by the word of their testimony (of Jesus as Lord), as opposed to having each believer scream, "I plead the blood!" You become an overcomer in the New Testament the instant you confess Jesus as Lord, not some point after that in which you say, "I plead the blood!" This is proven by 1 John 4:4, where you have already overcome antichrist spirits by the mere virtue of being saved. The blood bought you the right to be saved, which in turn got you victory over the devil through the One who lives in you who is greater than the devil who is in the world. Satan is already under your feet (see Ephesians 1:22 and Ephesians 2:6). He and his hordes are ALREADY defeated (Hebrews 2:14, Colossians 2:15). It is unnecessary to "plead the blood" to win a victory that has already been won for you! So the recommendation in some faith circles to "plead the blood" every day does not have to be followed on ANY day for you to walk in victory. Just believe what the Bible says about Satan's defeat and save yourself the time!

Is Deliverance a Dangerous Practice Best Left to Trained Exorcists?

No.

Deliverance is only dangerous to you if you happen to be a demon. As believers, we TREAD on snakes and scorpions and over ALL the power of the enemy and NOTHING shall by any means hurt us (Luke 10:19). If you're afraid of demons because you've watched too many horror movies or been to a Bizarre Unbiblical Deliverance Seminar, you need to get your mind renewed with the Word! You are seated with Christ in heavenly places, FAR above all principalities and powers (Ephesians 2:6, Ephesians 1:15-23). Does that sound like you should be afraid that they will "get" you?

The DEVIL wants you to think that deliverance is dangerous so that you won't do it! He would love to have you think that unless you are specially prayed up, he will eat your lunch. He is a liar. He is also a DEFEATED liar. But if you don't know the Word, he will torment you with incorrect thoughts like, "You didn't do enough prayer and fasting about that particular demon to cast it out!"

The whole idea that only specially-trained deliverance ministers should minister deliverance is no more intelligent or biblical than saying that only trained evangelists should spread the good news or that only trained healing ministers should minister healing. Jesus said that believers, not just specially-trained exorcists, would cast out demons in His name (Mark 16:17). Thus, deliverance is part of the ministry of EVERY believer!

Jesus said that he who believes on Him will do the works that He did and greater (John 14:12). Jesus definitely cast out demons. You can read a lot of accounts where He did it in the gospels. Thus, YOU as a believer are to do it as well.

Some believers may be like Philip and have an unusual number of successful deliverance cases (Acts 8:7), and there will also be ministries that have an unusual number of salvations or healings. But every believer should be ready to minister deliverance, the plan of salvation and healing as needed at a given moment.

Now what about the sons of Sceva who were thrashed around by a demon (Acts 19:13-17)? Doesn't that account show that demons are dangerous? No, it doesn't for you as a believer. The sons of Sceva were not believers, they were "vagabond Jewish exorcists." They would probably be called Gypsies today. They had no personal faith in the name of Jesus. They were just trying to mimic Paul's actions without Paul's faith. When PAUL cast out a demon (Acts 16:16-18), he didn't get beaten up! Now an unbeliever who had faith in the name of Jesus COULD cast a demon out, as proved by Mark 9:38, which was during a time when no one was born again yet, including the disciples who cast out many demons (Mark 6:13). Yet there is no record that the unnamed man or the disciples were ever beaten up by a demon! Demons do have power but you have something a lot better – authority! Your authority in the name of Jesus can stop their power in its tracks.

There are offices of apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor and teacher in the New Testament (Ephesians 4:11), but there is no office of exorcist! NOTHING in Scripture indicates that deliverance ministry is only for SOME believers who are called to it. Paul never conducted a special deliverance seminar to train exorcists.

The idea that deliverance is dangerous and best left to trained exorcists is propagated by Christians whose heads are puffed up after going to one of those Bizarre Unbiblical Deliverance Seminars. They think that they have knowledge no one else has, and that if anyone has a demon, you'd best call them because they're the demon experts that you're so "fortunate" to have in your church. They will urge you, "You just HAVE to read 'Everything's a Demon' by D. Monica Grandizer – it's so anointed!" These are the annoying people that you have to stop in the act as a pastor because they will try to cast nonexistent demons out of people in your church behind your back because they think that just about everyone has a demon.

Successful dealing with demons can be summed up in fewer than 10 useful words: "Be quiet," "Come out," and "in the name of Jesus." Sometimes you'll get a chatty demon that you need to command to be quiet. Jesus told them to be quiet and you as a believer have the right to do the same thing in His name. You have the right to make them leave in the name of Jesus, who Himself made demons leave.

Do Demons Produce Strong Physical Evidence that They Are Leaving?

Not always or even most of the time. You must NEVER rely on a physical manifestation to prove that a demon has left. In both the Bible and my personal experience, there are plenty of cases where there was NO manifestation – they just hit the road in the name of Jesus because they had to. I've had cases where I discerned spiritually that a demon had left or saw it leave through Spirit-granted vision when there was nothing in the natural to indicate that it had left, other than that the torment of the person stopped and the person suddenly felt "lighter" instead of feeling beaten down. The Bible makes it clear that it is POSSIBLE that someone could fall over and stiffen up such that people think the person is dead (Mark 9:26). However, in the MAJORITY of Bible cases as well as ones I've seen myself, there is NO "manifestation" at all.

In fact, I can also answer the question by saying that sometimes the evidence of their departure is the CESSATION of strong manifestations! For example, people who are slivering on the floor acting like snakes (you'll see this in some countries) suddenly STOP manifesting a demon when it leaves. When Paul cast out the spirit of divination out of a certain slave girl (Acts 16:16-18), the girl's fortune-telling business came to an abrupt end, and that was obvious to her masters:

Acts 16:19:

And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers,

The erroneous teaching that you HAVE to see some manifestation has led to counterproductive and dangerous services where people are taught that they have to vomit up demons into what appear to be Kentucky Fried Chicken buckets with the labels taken off. I had the misfortune of being in such a service when no one warned me in advance that the church in question practiced that. If you've never been to such a disgusting, revolting service, consider yourself blessed. The more a church does that kind of thing, the more similar "manifestations" it will see, convincing the people even more that this is a God-given revelation of how to deal with demons. What REALLY happens in those services is that well-meaning Christians actually yield their flesh to demons and ALLOW them to make them sick. Satan is always OK with the idea of making people sick, and I imagine that he appreciates the unwitting cooperation. If you didn't even HAVE a demon when you came in, you could have a demon mess with your flesh in such a service through your ignorance. I've stuck to dealing with demons biblically and have never at this writing had anyone throw up when I cast a demon out. But then again, no one was EXPECTING to throw up as they did at the weird service I mentioned.

Should We Ask Demons Their Names Before Casting Them Out?

Definitely NOT!

Demons lie anyway. This appears to be the case in Mark 1:23-26, where it appears that a solitary demon implied that there was more than one of him. Jesus said to cast out demons, not have conversations with demons. Neither Jesus nor His followers ever asked an evil spirit for his name, or any other information, in the New Testament. On many occasions, Jesus told demons to be quiet. That was the extent of Jesus' dealing with them – “Be quiet” and “Come out!”

NO ONE in Scripture EVER asked a demon for his name! And in case you immediately think of the case of the madman at Gadara, this idea of asking demons their names comes from a very sloppy reading of Luke 8:28-30:

When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God Most High? I beseech thee, torment me not.

(For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion: because many devils were entered into him.

This last verse proves that Jesus could not have been speaking to the demon. After Jesus asked him (the man) what his name was, he (the man, and the person being asked the question) said “Legion” because many devils were entered into him. If Jesus had been asking the demon, this would have to read: “The demon said, ‘Legion,’ because many demons were entered into the demon.” This would introduce a new doctrine – that a demon could have a demon!

The demon is referred to as it.

The man is referred to as him.

“For oftentimes it had caught him...”

“And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name?”

Jesus didn't ask the demon what his name was. Jesus asked the man, “What is your name?” The man said “Legion” because many demons were in him and one of them was talking through the man.

The man cried out in verse 28, and it was obviously a demon talking through him.

If Jesus were talking to the demon, Jesus would have asked it the question. This would be inconsistent with every other New Testament encounter with a demon.

If it were really necessary to ask demons their names before casting them out, Jesus could have been there all day and all night asking a couple thousand demons one by one for their names before He cast them out! “What is YOUR name?” “Sickening Water.” “Okay, Sickening Water, go into that pig over there. Next! What is YOUR name?” “Sleazy.” “Okay, Sleazy, go into that pig over there.” Obviously, that did not have to happen.

Besides, demons take after the devil, and the Bible explicitly refers to lying spirits (1 Kings 22:22-23, 2 Chronicles 18:21-22). So why would you ask one for information? You could ask for their names only to find out later that Sickening Water’s real name was Foulbreath and Sleazy’s real name was Butch.

We can learn three things from this. First, don’t ask demons questions, because Jesus didn’t. Second, attempt to talk to the person, not the demon. Third, you do NOT have to ask demons for their names to cast them out!

I Just Commanded a Demon to Leave, But It Is Still There. What Do I Do Now?

What would you do if you spoke to your sickness and commanded it to leave, but you still felt symptoms? Would you keep commanding it to leave until you felt better?

I hope not. I hope that you would believe that the name of Jesus works, and that the disease IS leaving no matter what it looks like.

Likewise, if the demon is still there, you need to believe that the name of Jesus works. That means that the name of Jesus, spoken ONCE, makes demons leave.

You would not want to get tricked into “repraying” the prayer of faith over and over for a sickness if you don’t feel instantly better. Likewise, you would not want to get tricked into “repraying” the prayer of faith to make a demon leave. Demons are subject to you in Jesus’ name (Luke 10:17), and that doesn’t mean that you have to keep using the name of Jesus over and over. That name, used ONCE, is enough to force a demon to leave. Even if it mocks you and says, “I’m not leaving!” it has to leave anyway – as long as you stand your ground and believe that the name of Jesus that you already used was enough to force the demon to go.

NO demon, no matter how “wicked,” has the right to stay when you command it to leave in the name of Jesus. Expect Jesus to back His name and expel that foul thing even if you don’t say another word to it. You might want to explain to people who are around that the name of Jesus has power and only needs to be used once. You don’t want to let a demon drag you into some long conversation, as it may try to do.

Always act like the Word is true, because it is. Jesus said that in HIS NAME we would cast out demons (Mark 16:17). He did NOT say that in His name we would command demons to leave, but they would stay put. Believe Jesus, not some lying demon!

Can a Christian Have a Demon?

As a Christian, you cannot have a demon cohabit your perfect born-again incorruptible spirit man that is created after God in righteousness and true holiness (Ephesians 4:24). Your spirit could not be in a state of righteousness and true holiness with a demon polluting it. The “best” a demon can do is work through your flesh and your unrenewed mind. Unfortunately, some Christians allow demons to keep speaking unscriptural thoughts to them while putting up no resistance. These Christians end up in bondage. Rather than running them off with the Word, they continue to entertain their thoughts. “You married the wrong person, so that gives you the right to get a divorce so that you can marry the RIGHT person.” “Your life is going nowhere and you’d be better off dead. Kill yourself.” “You will always be broke because you are just a failure.” “Your father died from this and now it’s your turn to die from it.” “You NEED this booze or illegal chemical to help you cope with your rotten life.” “Your life is in hopeless ruins and there’s no way to rebuild it. Give up on all your dreams.”

The New Testament definitely does NOT teach that believers need to go around casting demons out of themselves or others, only to do it again next week when there are new “pigs in the parlor.”

On the other hand, Christians can be “demonized” in the sense of being influenced or tormented by demons when they don’t know their authority in Christ to run them off. They can even unwittingly yield their mouths to voice what a demon wants to say, as Peter did when he told Jesus that He was never going to be killed and raised on the third day. Jesus recognized the true source of the statement and said, “Get behind Me, Satan!” (See Matthew 16:22-23 and Mark 8:31-33.) I daresay that many preachers unwittingly yield their mouths to demons when they tell people, “God doesn’t do miracles anymore, so you can’t get one.” There are times demons might try to speak through other Christians to discourage you.

The Bible tells you how to handle Satan. You are to RESIST him (James 4:7, 1 Peter 5:8-10), not try to “cast him out of yourself.” You already have legal authority in the name of Jesus to force any demon to leave you alone (Luke 10:19). You do NOT need to be delivered from Satan, his demons and his kingdom because you already ARE legally delivered (Colossians 1:13) from them just as much as you ARE legally healed! You do not need to GET the right to be far from oppression and free from fear (Isaiah 54:14); you already HAVE that right as a Christian – you just need to enforce it.

What Is the Difference Between Demonic Possession and Demonic Oppression?

If you look up the word possessed in the Greek, only 2 instances in the New Testament seem to indicate that a demon “had” someone, and even then that meaning is a problem with the translation of Greek into English, leaving no actual passage where what people think of as “possession” was indicated.

Acts 16:16 says that a girl was “possessed” with a spirit of divination (literally a spirit of Python), and the Greek word translated possessed is echo, which means had. So it would appear at first that she was “had” by a spirit, but the word with is not found in the Greek. So the correct reading is that she had a spirit of Python, NOT that the spirit of Python “had” or “possessed” her.

In Acts 8:7, unclean spirits came out of many who were “possessed” (echo again, “had”) with them. However, there is no word “with” in the Greek here either. The Greek basic reading is that they came out “(of) many had.” In other words, spirits came out of many who had them, not of out of many who were “had” by spirits.

By the way, many translations of these verses other than the King James Version simply state what I contend is the correct reading – that the people HAD spirits (rather than being “possessed” or “had” by them).

If you believe that there is a level of possession where a demon just takes over someone completely, YOU are the one who has been “had” – by Hollywood silliness! No such case exists in Scripture. Even the demoniac with the LEGION of demons ran to Jesus and worshiped Him – something that the demons would certainly not have been good with, as it led to their expulsion. Demons don’t have the power that Hollywood wants you to think that they have. No one on earth ever gives up his free will, which is why even the most extreme demon cases can be resolved. I have seen services where a demonized person suddenly shouted out, “I can’t stand living this way anymore! Help me!” In one case, the person was taken to a back room where the demon knocked over a row of chairs on his way out, but even a demon like that can’t stop someone who wants to be set free from getting set free in the name of Jesus.

In the many other passages, including the worst case (the Gadarene demoniac), the Greek does not actually say that the people were “possessed” – it merely says that there were “demonized” (the actual word in all these other cases is daimonizomai and it refers to the entire phrase “possessed of devils” or something similar).

So the bottom line is that Biblically speaking, there is NO Biblical distinction between “levels” of possession or oppression. Either you’re demonized or you aren’t, and if you are, deliverance is available to you in the name of Jesus!

No one ever loses free will. When I was a baby Christian, I prayed, “Holy Spirit, just POSSESS me so that I only do what you want!” But of course, the Holy Spirit could not answer that prayer. Neither God nor the devil will ever “possess” you in the sense that you lose your free will – even if you ask!

But what about those rock stars who supposedly sold their souls to the devil? Those were meaningless transactions! They weren't Christians, so the devil already HAD their souls anyway! They retained their free will and could get saved the way anyone else could if they called on Jesus.

Of course, anyone who is sick is oppressed by the devil in one regard, as Acts 10:38 shows, but that would be an example where someone could have an illness but not have a demon at all, which still is not a "lesser" case of having a demon.

Must We Cast out Demons “in the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth Who Came in the Flesh?”

I’m sure that works, but you can just cast them out in the name of Jesus or the name of Jesus Christ and get the same results with less speaking.

However, people who use this whole phrase probably went to a certain Special Weird Deliverance Seminar where people are taught to glorify the devil and demons with 100 hours of unbiblical teaching that just puts people into bondage while puffing their heads, making them think that they are now some kind of super-qualified deliverance experts with their notebooks full of silly ideas.

If you want to be a deliverance expert, know this: Demons have to leave when you command them to leave in the name of Jesus. There, I just spared you the “need” to go for 100 hours of nonsense in order to cast out demons.

What flabbergasted me was that none of the material being taught at the Special Weird Deliverance Seminar (not its actual name) was in the Bible. I pointed that out to an attendee when she started telling me some wonderful “truths” she learned. She told me to my dismay that the first thing you’re told in that seminar is that what was being presented isn’t in the Bible. That’s why you have to go to the Special Weird Deliverance Seminar – the information isn’t available anywhere else! Now anyone with any sense would have bolted out the door immediately, especially if he realized that 2 Timothy 3:16-17 says that the Word thoroughly furnishes you unto ALL good works, which includes deliverance. It’s nice to have someone explain to you what the Word says, but you do not need special training BEYOND the Word – according to the Word itself! (What on earth did people do for a couple millennia before Special Weird Deliverance Seminars showed up?)

Anyway, the ridiculous logic goes something like this, at least as this attendee understood it:

1. Some demons go by the name Jesus just like some Spanish people do. So you have to specify Jesus Christ.
2. Some demon got clever and decided to call himself Jesus Christ, so you have to specify that this Jesus Christ is the one from Nazareth.
3. Some demon got even cleverer and called itself Jesus Christ and moved to Nazareth so that it would be Jesus Christ of Nazareth, so you have to specify that you mean Jesus Christ of Nazareth who came in the flesh – which no demon would ever acknowledge.

However, there was no hair-splitting in the Bible when Paul simply said, “I command you to leave her in the name of Jesus Christ!” (Acts 16:18). It left. So I’ll stick with the Bible. I’ve cast out enough demons over the years in the name of Jesus to know that His name (without embellishments) makes every knee bow (Philippians 2:9-11).

Must We Cut Off Means of Demons Communicating with Each Other When We Cast One Out?

NO!

This foolishness isn't in the Bible. You'd only hear it at a Special Weird Deliverance Seminar. There are NO cases in the Bible where ANYONE "cut off communications" between spirits in or out of someone when one or more spirits was being cast out. If they didn't need to do it in the Bible, neither do you.

Is There a Danger that a Demon that Has Just Been Cast Out Will Go into Another Person Who is Present?

There is NO case in Scripture where this happened, and Jesus cast out a lot of demons. Jesus did not see this as a problem. He cast out demons publicly and He was obviously not concerned that a demon would enter someone else. This question is typical because so few people know much about what the Bible says about deliverance. Along with the areas of prayer and revival, I think the area of deliverance has some of the worst teaching in the Body of Christ. There are a LOT of weird ideas about deliverance that have no basis in the Bible, so you need to be careful what kind of teaching you listen to. The bad teaching actually magnifies Satan and demons.

This question assumes that demons have all kinds of power and can just enter a person at will. That might be the premise for a horror movie, but real demons need someone to yield to them. Scripture teaches not to give place to the devil – not to give him an opportunity (Ephesians 4:27). That means that it is up to you as an individual not to give an opportunity to the devil. If you don't do something to give the devil an opportunity, he can't get a foothold in your life. A demon can't just break down your back door and barge in.

Now you may be thinking, "Yes, that's true for a believer, who has authority over the devil, but what if there are unbelievers present, who are still under the sway of the wicked one? Aren't they in danger?" Apparently Jesus didn't think so, because not a single person in the crowds to which He ministered was born again and had authority over the devil the way that we do! They were ALL unbelievers, yet there is no indication of a demon jumping into someone else in the crowd, requiring Jesus to minister deliverance to the second person.

So I am totally unconcerned about this issue, and I consider it safe to say that you don't have to worry about it either. I have NEVER seen anything like this happen myself.

If a Demon Is Cast Out in a House, Is There a Danger that It Will Go into a Pet?

I had cast a demon out of someone in a certain house, and someone there was wanted to know if the demon could have gone into a pet when it left the person. This might seem like a possibility given that a lot of demons entered pigs on one occasion, moving them to commit suicide.

However, they had to ask Jesus' permission to enter those pigs! Jesus explicitly gave them permission to do it. I assured the person that I had NOT given that spirit permission to enter one of the pets, so the spirit was not going to enter a pet! There is NO case in Scripture where someone got delivered and ended up with a possessed household pet.

So Fido and Fifi are quite safe – they are not going to get demonized if a demon gets cast out.

Can I Cast a Demon out of a “Haunted” Location?

Yes.

We have authority over ALL demons (Luke 10:19), whether they be in a person or hanging out in a “haunted” house or some other place.

This does bring up the issue of whether demons can “hang out” somewhere if they are not IN an individual. The Bible indicates that the answer is YES:

Revelation 18:2:

And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

Let’s be clear about something – there are no departed people hanging around the earth as ghosts. All deceased people are now in heaven or hell (Hebrews 9:27). ALL “ghosts” (except that Holy Ghost!) are EVIL SPIRITS, which in some cases try to impersonate a dead person.

These evil spirits may speak to people in creepy voices, cause unnatural creaking, appear in “human” form, make people think that they are being choked, and even move objects. This is not something new; the disciples on the boat one night thought that Jesus was a ghost! Sometimes they appear in pictures as images of a dead person when there is no actual person there. Who ya gonna call? A CHRISTIAN!

While I’ve seen “dead person images” in someone else’s pictures, the devil’s showing off doesn’t scare me. I have the greater One within me (1 John 4:4) and I have ALREADY overcome ALL evil spirits! I know it and evil spirits know it. Those defeated show-offs duck and run when my wife and I show up. They don’t dare do anything to point themselves out. They are petrified of Christians who know their rights, because they know that they HAVE to submit to the name of Jesus.

There is really nothing special about casting out a demon that is haunting a house. You command it to leave in the name of Jesus. That’s all. It has to go.

Having said that, you are wasting your time casting out a demon if the people in the house are just going to invite it back by playing with Ouija boards, Tarot cards, and so on. It's DEMONS moving that Ouija board pointer. Ouija boards are sold in toy departments, but they are NOT toys. When you consult such a thing, you are literally inviting a demon into your house. I used to play with Ouija boards and tarot cards before I got saved. Did you know that it is written right in the instructions for Ouija boards that you must never ask it who is making it work? I know someone who did, and Satan showed off by spelling his name on the Ouija board. The person ran away from it and never used a Ouija board again. No one else would either if he knew who was answering the questions he was asking the Ouija board! We were asked to cast a demon out of an apartment where they watched gruesome horror movies all the time. Watching that junk all the time is asking for trouble. It is not the way to experience a joy-filled, Spirit-filled life! We made the demon leave, and the woman renting the house got saved, but we did speak to her about the horror movies!

Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8). Evil "paranormal activity" is the work of the devil, so it is included in the things that Jesus came to destroy. You can destroy what the devil is doing wherever he is doing it in the all-powerful name of Jesus!

Where Did Demons Come From?

The Bible does not say where demons came from. Some preachers are quite sure of their answers to this question, but it's difficult to be dogmatic about something when the Bible is silent.

This is like asking, "Is buying a lottery ticket a sin?" Personally, I think it's a stupid waste of money because the math is against you, and that you'd be better off putting that money into an offering, in which case God guarantees you multiplication. So I've never bought a lottery ticket, but I've given in a lot of offerings. Then again, I've made financial investments, and someone could say that doing so is just another form of gambling. The Bible does not discuss lottery tickets, so you can't preach that the purchase of one is sinful unless the buyer's reason is that he doesn't trust God to prosper him and thus puts all his hope in the "luck system" instead. My opinion is just my opinion, and you are free to disagree because neither of us has Scripture to back us. I'm aware that many churches preach that any form of gambling is a sin, unless you are buying a raffle ticket to benefit the youth group, in which case it's OK. (I wonder how they justify that.) It's the same with many "Is it a sin?" questions. If the Bible doesn't discuss the matter, you risk being like the Pharisees who added a lot of their own laws to God's laws. Some Christians do the same with "no golfing on Sunday, no swimming on Sunday, etc." man-made rules that are not imposed anywhere in the Bible.

Because there is nothing explicit on the matter of the origin of demons in Scripture, we can ask ourselves if there is anything in Scripture that would HINT at their origin.

One popular theory is that demons are fallen angels who rebelled with Lucifer. However, demons seek to inhabit people and angels never do that anywhere in Scripture. So it is hard to accept that a demon is just a bad angel. Besides, Jude 6 says, "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." One could debate whether this was all angels who rebelled or just a certain class of angels who "left their own habitation." Some might conclude (as I would) that these were the angels in Genesis 6 who interacted with people. We know that there are spirits kept in prison because Jesus preached to the spirits in prison, and as mentioned elsewhere in this book, "prison" would not have been an apt definition for Abraham's Bosom, which was described as paradise, not prison. So I will allow that perhaps some of the other fallen angels are now the "principalities and powers" described in Scripture that are NOT in chains yet. But demons are not spoken of interchangeably with these principalities and powers, so even if principalities and powers are fallen angels (and the Bible doesn't tell us that explicitly either), that wouldn't prove that demons are fallen angels. Nothing in Scripture equates demons with fallen angels.

We can immediately brush aside the speculation that a demon is the spirit of an evil dead person, because it is appointed for a man to die once, and after that the judgment (Hebrews 9:27). Thus, any deceased person is now in heaven or hell – he is definitely NOT floating around as a "ghost" or a demon. ("Ghosts" are actually evil spirits, not departed people. Cultures that believe that dead ancestors hang around their houses unwittingly welcome these evil impostor spirits, with horrible consequences.)

But we seem to be running out of possibilities. If demons aren't dead people or fallen angels, what are they?

Certain famous preachers have advanced the idea that demons are disembodied holdovers from a "Pre-Adamite creation" that was wiped away by a flood between Genesis 1:1 and Genesis 1:2. This presupposes the so-called "gap theory" that there is a big "time gap" between Genesis 1:1 ("original creation") and Genesis 1:2 ("re-creation"). This theory was originally proposed to try to "reconcile" science (particularly fossils of dinosaurs) with Scripture. So we need to look into this and see if perhaps their theory holds water and that demons could be pre-Adamite beings held over from the days of the dinosaurs.

On the surface, Genesis 1 certainly seems to describe an original creation done in 6 days. Is there any possible Bible evidence that this wasn't the case?

Isaiah 45:18:

For thus saith the LORD that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the LORD; and there is none else.

The words in vain above are translated from the Hebrew word tohu, which is also translated without form in Genesis 1:2. It basically means waste. So is God saying that He didn't create the earth without life when He first made it? If so, whatever life was there would have had to have been wiped out to get to the tohu state in Genesis 1:2.

Jeremiah 4:23-26:

I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.
I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.
I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.
I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

Could this be describing a past civilization that had to be wiped out? Initially one might have the impression that Jeremiah was describing a judgment that happened while man was here, but if that were the case, it doesn't seem possible that the earth was empty and there were no sun, moon and stars. So let's pursue this some more.

One popular Pentecostal reference Bible states that the word "was" (the earth was void) in Genesis 1:2 really should be translated became, which would indicate that a non-void earth became void when some form a judgment made it void. So I browsed through a number of modern translations to see whether perhaps some translator had picked up on this and translated Genesis 1:2 to read that the earth became void as opposed to was void. My efforts were "in vain" because not one translation I could find (including Young's Literal Translation) offered any support to the idea of that word meaning became.

So now it's time to really dig in and see whether the Hebrew word hayah in Genesis 1:2 is ever translated become or became anywhere else. We find that 2 Samuel 7:24 reads, "...and thou, LORD, art become (hayah) their God. A slightly different variant of the word reads "thou art become" in Deuteronomy 27:9. So yes, it CAN be translated become. However, when you look at the dozens of passages where the Hebrew word hayah appears, not only does it NOT mean become most of the time, but it can be used for a number of meanings, including being, fainting, following, accomplishing, committing and coming. So building a castle on this rather rudimentary Hebrew word would be inadvisable, as the main use of the word would still leave Genesis 1:2 the way it is in all our Bibles. We'll have to look elsewhere.

2 Peter 3:5-7:

For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water:

Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:

But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

So here the "world" perished. But in Noah's flood, there was still vegetation left, so could this be speaking of a different flood? Peter talks about the "heavens and the earth which are now," so doesn't that indicate that there were PRIOR heavens and earth before the ones that are now? Food for thought, it would seem, but there is still the nagging suspicion that this verse really is talking about Noah's flood. Isn't there ANY other verse that could nail down this "recreation" theory more convincingly? Suddenly, we remember this verse:

Genesis 1:28:

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

Aha! God said to replenish the earth, and the only case in which you could REPLENISH anything would be if it had already been "plenished" to begin with.

We then find in Genesis 9:1 that God commanded Noah to replenish the earth using exactly the same Hebrew word!

Genesis 9:1:

And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth.

There the word replenish obviously fits, so to be consistent, it would seem that we have to apply that same meaning in Genesis 1:28!

So it seems that we have finally nailed this down, and that the famous preachers, who surely researched all of this before we did, actually figured out this mess before we did – demons must be holdovers from a pre-Adamite creation.

How could anyone logically argue with the airtight case we've just made?

Then we happen to read the following verse:

Revelation 21:1:

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

Uh-oh. The "gap theory" presupposes that there was a first earth and a first heaven that were wiped out and that we live on the second earth, to be replaced by a third earth. But the verse above is clear that the first earth is the one being replaced by the final earth. So there could not have been a first and second earth, and our interpretation of 2 Peter 3:5-7 cannot be correct after all. Thus, it must really have been talking about Noah's flood after all, which is what most people would assume when they read it.

Well, at least we have Genesis 1:28 to fall back on, right? We should revisit it just to make sure. Looking at many other translations, we can only find a couple other non-mainstream translations that follow the King James Version's translation replenish. Notably, even the NKJV translates that word fill, as does almost every other translation in use today. It seems that most translators disagree with the King James rendering. As always, we should do our own research. So let's see where the Hebrew word male that is translated replenish in the King James is used. The very first occurrence is in Genesis 1:22, "Be fruitful and multiply and fill the waters in the seas..." Even the King James Version goes along with the word fill here instead of replenish, even though it's the same word in the same chapter describing creation. A quick word count check shows that the word is translated fill 107 times, full 48 times and replenish only 7 times in the King James Version. Hebrew words are often tricky because of somewhat vague meanings – there are several other meanings associated with the same word, including consecrate and accomplish.

So the odds seem "stacked" against the word really meaning replenish.

Certainly the most thought-provoking of the 7 places where male is translated replenish is used in the King James Version is Genesis 9:1 above. If it could really mean replenish there, why couldn't it mean that in Genesis 1:28? So let's browse through translations on THAT verse and see what we find. The results are that the translations are EXACTLY the same as in Genesis 1:28 – almost no one translates the word as replenish even in Genesis 9:1, and everyone translates the word the same way in both verses.

We get to thinking that fill would be a logical meaning for the word in both cases, but perhaps not so in the case of replenish the first time, given that the gap theory version of Genesis 1:28 now seems to run afoul of Revelation 21:1. Maybe this whole thing isn't as clear-cut as we thought.

Then we consider the creation of the sun, the moon and the stars AFTER Genesis 1:2. Did God create an original earth without a sun, a moon or stars to light the place up? Perhaps His glory made them unnecessary for lighting purposes, as will be the case on the new earth. But that's a place where there will be no sin. If there was sin on a Pre-Adamite earth, wouldn't everything be dark and need illumination as the present earth does? Did the plants get their energy from the glory of God because photosynthesis would be impossible without the sun? Is that even possible? We look into this and find that Biblically, not only is it possible, but it HAPPENED, because plants were created on the THIRD day, one day BEFORE the sun, moon and stars were created! There was LIGHT before then, but it was not coming from the sun, moon and stars. So that argument against the "gap theory" fails and we're still uncertain about the merits of the gap theory.

We read notes by "gap theory" proponents who have been challenged with this very thing, and their answer is that the earth was dark because the sun, moon and stars were hidden, and their "creation" was just a re-revealing of what was already there. But wait a minute! God said that He made two great lights in Genesis 1:16, and when we look up that Hebrew word (asah), it does NOT carry the connotation of revealing something that has already been made. So either there was a sun-moon-and-star-less first earth (which really seems to be a stretch), or the gap theory has to be wrong.

So what about 2 Peter 3:5-7, which seemed clear-cut? Maybe we should reconsider it in the light of Peter's statement that men are willfully ignorant about the flood in question. Thus, they must have heard about it but rejected that account on purpose. Given that the "gap theory" was never proposed until recent times, how could anyone back then have been willfully ignorant of something that the Bible never even spells out explicitly and that no one was preaching back then? Even today, people might say, "I don't believe in Noah's flood," but I doubt that any sinner ever went around saying, "I reject the Bible account of a flood before Adam that wiped out the pre-Adamites!" In fact, why would such a flood even bother them? It didn't wipe out PEOPLE anyway! Noah's flood, which DID wipe out people, would have been a warning to humanity in a way that a pre-Adam flood would not be.

Also, Peter said in that passage that it was by "the word of God" that the heavens and earth of old stood out of the water and in the water. It would seem that this would have to refer to what God spoke into existence in Genesis 1, as He would not have had to speak them into existence after Genesis 1:1 if they already existed.

So what about Jeremiah 4:23-26? Is there any clue in the context about what he meant in the verses in question? Let's read back a verse to find out:

Jeremiah 4:22:

For my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

So in context, this is a judgment on PEOPLE who are already on the earth, not on mysterious pre-Adamite beings.

Now let's check what comes after the verse, at least after we're done kicking ourselves for not looking at the context of a passage before drawing conclusions earlier:

Jeremiah 4:27-29:

For thus hath the LORD said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end.

For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.

The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein.

Now it is clear that Jeremiah was prophesying about FUTURE events of judgment during a time when men will be on the earth, not PREVIOUS events of judgment before mankind was even around building cities. So Jeremiah's prophecy in context doesn't really support the gap theory, either.

But what about there being no light? That would still be the case if God sent thick clouds; Jeremiah didn't say that there were no sun, moon or stars – only that there was no light. Go somewhere on an overcast night away far from any towns or cities and you'll see no light, either. In fact, as I write this, I'm in such a location on an overcast night – and I'm looking out the windows at pitch blackness.

But what about the earth being without form or void? The part of the earth Jeremiah was describing would fit that description, but that doesn't mean that he was prophesying about the whole earth. The idea that MAN was already around is indicated by the fact that he saw "no man" and the cities (which we could reasonably assume were man-built) were broken down. We see similar prophetic imagery in Joel 2:1-11, which certainly does not describe a pre-Adamite condition because it refers to a coming judgment. That passage says that the sun and moon will be dark and the stars will withdraw their shining, but it certainly doesn't mean that the sun, moon and stars will cease to exist – it will just be "a day of darkness."

We're getting on really thin ice with this gap thing – can Isaiah 45:18 bail us out? When Isaiah said that God didn't create the world empty, but rather to be inhabited, it occurs to us that this "creation" COULD refer to the totality of creation in Genesis 1, rather than parsing a pre-Adamite creation and a later one. In fact, if you read this verse without a prior bias toward the gap theory, that would seem to be all that Isaiah was saying.

So now let's ask ourselves why the earth would have been wiped out, and the clear answer is that it would have to be judgment. Judgment only happens when there is sin. So how did sin get into the earth?

Romans 5:12:

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:

Now our “gap theory” seems to have not just a gap but a large crevasse in it! While Satan, who was sinful, was on the earth manifesting himself through a snake, sin would never have taken hold here if Adam had done his job and resisted Satan’s rebellious thoughts. The verse above says that sin entered into the world by one man, who was clearly Adam. Thus, we would have to conclude that before Adam’s sin, there was no sin on the earth. But then there would be no cause for judgment on the earth and an initial pre-Adamite flood!

Okay, but wouldn’t a flood have purged the earth of sin? NO! Noah’s flood did not purge the earth of sin and force sin to re-enter the earth through Noah and his family. Noah was already a fallen man because he had inherited Adam’s sinful nature. So a flood would not purge the earth of sin and its consequences. Thus, if there were sin in a pre-Adamite earth, sin would still be here after a flood and before Adam was created. That idea directly contradicts Romans 5:12 as well as the established fact that only blood, not a flood, can remove sin (Hebrews 9:22).

So the “gap theory” appears to be a bust after all, leaving a literal six-day creation, as traditionally believed, intact as the only alternative.

It would be possible to write a thousand-page book just about all the pseudo-science out there involving “evolution” and fossils and the like. In fact, someone already did that and I have the book, so I don’t need to duplicate that kind of work here. To me the biggest nail in the coffin of evolution is that a morally accountable, eternal spirit being could not “evolve” from non-morally accountable soul-and-body beings that don’t live forever. That’s just plain stupid.

When I pastored, we had a weekly event one year called Evolution Revolution where we invited local high school students to come and hear “the other side” of evolution theory. I mentioned to the students that someone had written a book proposing that bears started spending more time in the water and evolved into whales. Their reaction was something like, “That’s crazy, dude, how could anyone believe that?” I informed them that the man’s name was Charles Darwin and the book was called The Origin of Species. It was fun to watch their reactions. The idea was so ludicrous that Darwin himself took it out of later versions of his own book, though he replaced one silly conjecture with another as his views “evolved” (at least what he was willing to state publicly). Darwin’s foolish writings are the very kind of false “science” or “knowledge” that Paul warned about in 1 Timothy 6:20-21.

I also challenged them to get their earth science teacher to debate their chemistry teacher about what happens to hydrogen atoms in a vacuum. After all, an earth science teacher would probably tell you that they coalesce and form stars, while the chemistry teacher would probably tell you that they fly apart as much as possible in a vacuum to fill available space.

Now what are we left with? If these explanations for the origin of demons all have problems, where DID demons come from?

I don’t know and neither do you. The Bible doesn’t tell us.

Did Jesus Take 39 Stripes to Redeem Us from 39 Classes of Diseases?

I'm a preacher, not a doctor, so I can't vouch for there being 39 (not 38, not 40) classes of diseases. The Bible never states that Jesus took one stripe for each major disease.

It does appear that the Jews would generally give out 39 stripes, or "40 stripes less 1," as they did to Paul on five occasions. (2 Corinthians 11:24: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one.") The giving of more than 40 was expressly forbidden by God Himself (Deuteronomy 25:3: "Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed: lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee.") However, it is not stated explicitly how many times Jesus was whipped by the Romans. It's not unreasonable, at least, to assume that it's 39, as that would seem to be the most LIKELY number based on what we see in Scripture.

If there are indeed 39 main disease categories, this may be more than a coincidence, but my faith would not suffer if a medical journal were to declare that we now know that there are actually 38, or 40, or 17, or 113 different types of diseases. Men put diseases into categories. The Bible never tries to make a point using the number of lashes Jesus received.

It is sort of like saying that there are seven mountains of culture. This may be helpful for identifying different areas of influence in society, but the only time I read about seven mountains in Scripture is that they are the "seven heads" of the beast on whom the Great Prostitute in Revelation 17 rides. So if someone else says that there are only six mountains of culture and someone else comes along and says that there are eight or nine of them, it won't shake my faith because it's an observation, not a Bible doctrine. We may all find when we get to heaven that there were indeed exactly 7 cultural mountains and that Jesus took exactly 39 stripes for 39 diseases, but there is no proof directly from the Bible of these.

The main reason I would not present to people that Jesus took 39 stripes for 39 disease categories is precisely because someone could come along and claim that there are more or fewer disease categories, and if I've preached "39 stripes for 39 sicknesses," someone's faith could then be undermined. I don't want that to happen.

You have to be careful about things you read online. A hoax has circulated for years that the "fact" that men have one less rib than women proves the book of Genesis. But actually, men and women have the same number of ribs – Adam was the only man whose rib count changed. The purported "proof" is not a fact at all but rather a hoax to make Christians look ignorant when they pass it along to others.

Another "healing hoax" is that you get new blood the day you are born again, and doctors can (supposedly) tell the difference. Actually, your body is the same before and after you are born again – it is your spirit that was born again, not your body. Your physical DNA does not change and your blood does not change.

If you read a statement in the Bible, you can take it to the bank. If you read a statement online that isn't in the Bible, you can't be as sure.

Have Free Internet Teachings Made Traveling Teachers Obsolete?

No.

Getting the word out by any means possible is not a new thing. Teaching ministries have used books, direct mail, movies, radio, television, Internet videos, Internet streaming, reel-to-reel tapes, 8-track tapes, CD's, DVD's, thumb drives, web pages, social media and the like to get the good news out. Yet in every new generation, there are new teachers. That HAS to be the case, because all five ministry offices were given until we're all perfect after Jesus comes back (Ephesians 4:11-16).

When it comes to online content, someone has to CREATE it. So there will always be a need for teachers. Now the question is, do we need the traditional traveling teachers who go from church to church, or are we more resource-efficient if we just let teachers teach over the Internet?

A flesh-and-blood teacher should bring some important things to the table (not just the book table, either) when he visits a church.

First, a Spirit-anointed teacher should be able to bring forth the truths that an individual local church needs to hear. Rather than leaving everyone to search the Internet, he can bring forth a word in due season that will bless that particular church.

Second, a Spirit-anointed teacher can flow in the gifts of the Holy Spirit. The particular ones may differ by ministry, but EVERYONE is to flow in the Holy Spirit in one way or another. It's hard to flow that way over the Internet.

Third, a Spirit-anointed teacher just has a certain aspect to his gifting that can make local pastors jealous if they're not "teaching gifts" themselves – the "Aha Factor!" A teaching gift can sometimes show up in a church and suddenly the people get excited because they "see" what they've never seen and "get" what they've never gotten. The pastor may note in exasperation that he had been teaching on the same subject for the last six months and people didn't seem to "get" it. (I had a pastor say that to me as well as people who go to good churches where the Word is taught well.)

Fourth, a Spirit-anointed teacher can take and answer questions (if he dares). It's one thing to have to hunt for things online, but it's nice to be able to ask someone in person a question that's been bothering you for a long time and get an immediate answer. Usually there are others present who wanted to ask the same question, but perhaps didn't dare.

Fifth, adding on to the fourth point, a Spirit-anointed teacher will sometimes answer people's questions before they ask them! The Holy Spirit can show him what to say within his message that will answer those questions. Then people will come up afterward (as they have with me) and say, "I wanted to ask thus-and-such, but you answered it before I could ask it!"

So no, I don't think traveling teachers are obsolete.

And while I'm at it, I will also say that Internet churches and multi-campus churches that simulcast messages have not made local pastors obsolete either! I don't see anything wrong with having a multi-campus church that runs the mother church's simulcasts – as long as there is LOCAL pastoral help available. Such churches have pros and cons – the people typically get really good messages at the expense of having a local person there who might even get to answer questions in a smaller setting. Sunday mornings probably seem less personal. However, if there is no LOCAL pastor there to take care of the sheep, it is really no better (in my opinion) than people just being "e-members" of a far-away church. I can understand someone in a home wanting to be an e-member somewhere, but wouldn't it be even better if that person could receive personal ministry from a local pastor? I don't care how good a pastor is – he can't lay hands on you over the Internet! I know that God does work through gifts of the Spirit over media in some cases. I've seen speakers with words of knowledge for people who were not in the physical service but who were watching over the Internet. Still, there is no replacement for a pastor who can counsel you confidentially in person. When I was a single pastor, I would counsel ladies over the phone. When you can't see each other's body language, it makes it harder, though.

In short, technology is great, but I don't think that it will ever replace a local flow of the Holy Spirit through physically present people.

Will God Heal My Pets or Livestock?

Yes.

Deuteronomy 7:12-15 explicitly extends the blessing upon you to your livestock.

We often take Deuteronomy 28 figuratively to apply to our business endeavors, but it still can be taken literally as well: “Blessed shall be...the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.” God blesses the livestock of the man who fears Him. Now let’s look at the flip side, which is part of the curse for breaking the Law: “Cursed shall be...the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.” It is not explicitly stated how your livestock would be cursed, but having your animals get sick and die is surely a curse, not a blessing.

Sickness is the work of Satan whether it affects your animals or you. You have authority over the works of Satan. Satan, not God, killed Job’s animals (Job 1:16). You have authority to tread on snakes and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you (Luke 10:19). You are redeemed from Satan’s kingdom (Colossians 1:13), so he has no right to afflict you OR your animals.

You animals were not healed “by the stripes of Jesus,” so you cannot use that scripture to claim their healing. However, it does make sense that because you can lay hands on “the sick” and have them recover that you could lay hands on a sick animal in the name of Jesus and expect it to recover. Sickness is still Satan’s work whether it is in you or in an animal, and Jesus was manifested to destroy Satan’s works (1 John 3:8). We do not have any Scripture where a New Testament believer laid hands on an animal, but then again, we don’t have any Scripture where there was a worship team in the New Testament, either, and I’ve served on worship teams for many years. We have to make some conclusions based on the general themes of Scripture where there is no explicit statement. I will admit that I would not be willing to be burned at the stake before denying that God would heal your cat, but I believe that having the blessing of healing available to your cat is consistent with the spirit of the New Testament. Of course, if anything happens, it will be by your faith, as your cat cannot exercise faith in the Word, no matter how many Bible verses you read to it.

There is further Bible precedent for believing that your animals will do better than sinners’ animals. In Exodus 9:3-6, we see one of the plagues of Moses: “Behold, the hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain [plague or pestilence]. And the LORD shall sever [distinguish] between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children’s of Israel. And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land. And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Israel died not one.”

When the ark of the covenant was brought into Obed-Edom's house, notice what happened in 1 Chronicles 13:14: "The ark of God remained with the family of Obed-Edom in his house three months. And the LORD blessed the house of Obed-Edom and all that he had." If Obed-Edom had any animals, which isn't explicitly stated, they would have been blessed along with Obed-Edom. If God's presence could bless everything Obed-Edom had, why shouldn't God's presence, which is now IN YOU, bless everything YOU have under your better covenant? That seems reasonable to me.

A friend and I were sharing the gospel with a sinner, and we couldn't get him to allow us to lay hands on him for healing, even though he needed it. Under my breath, I was asking the Lord what we could do. I felt that He answered me, and we asked the man if we could lay hands on his dog that had been hit by a car and was going around with only 3 legs on the ground. He at least agreed to that! So we did. God healed the dog, and it was running around like any other dog the next day.

I am not suggesting that you bring Fido to the next healing meeting in your city for prayer. (In fact, please don't.) However, you should exercise your authority against the work of Satan. I don't want dogs running around a service (or doing worse things); it could be very distracting and dangerous. As a decent compromise, I did offer to pray for a dog in the parking lot, and God saved it from being "put to sleep" the next day. In another case, we just agreed for the healing of Sammy the Cat in the service without Sammy being there, and Sammy was healed. I successfully agreed with someone else over the phone for the healing of her dog.

Someday Rover and Fifi will die, and no amount of prayer will prevent that. But in the meantime, if something concerns you, it concerns God, so you have the right to take it to Him in prayer.

Do I Have the Authority to Cast Out Computer Viruses?

Nothing in Scripture says that you do. Even though the word virus is associated with a disease, a computer cannot get sick by being oppressed by the devil. A computer virus is a set of computer instructions that makes your PC lose data or malfunction, or perhaps encrypts the data and demands a ransom payment in untraceable currency to get it back.

I share in this book some neat testimonies of times when the Holy Ghost supernaturally fixed computer equipment, but these would all fall under the category of manifestations of the Spirit. You can't claim any Bible promise to cast out computer viruses by faith. This goes right along with sound system problems at church. As one preacher said, you don't need to cast the devil out of your sound system – you need to fix it! (Or get someone who really knows how to run it, in some cases.)

If you are a technical person, you can believe God for wisdom according to James 1:5-8 to find out how to solve seemingly impossible computer problems. I have worked this out on a daily basis and had many, many answers to such prayers!

If your machine has a virus, there is virus-removal software out there, though it won't work with some ransomware. (Ransomware is malicious software that encrypts your files so that you can never use them again unless you pay the hacker his ransom, usually in some kind of untraceable currency.)

If you can't do it yourself, some companies will remove most (but not all) types of viruses for you for a considerable price. Computer viruses are not going to go away just because you speak to them in the name of Jesus. I realize that with God all things are possible, and I'd love to hear a testimony of some ransomware victim being delivered by the name of Jesus, but I've never heard of one. God COULD work a miracle along those lines, but you have no Scripture that guarantees you such a miracle.

Of course, you can take common-sense precautions to prevent viruses from getting onto your machine in the first place. If you practice "safe computing," you're unlikely to get electronically-transmitted viruses. A Christian is sinning when he violates a software license agreement by making or using illegal copies of software. You have yourself to thank for your trouble if you're a thief. I am flabbergasted by the number of Christians who think nothing of violating copyright laws, whether dealing with computers or music. Especially preachers. One church lamely and FALSELY claimed to me that it was exempt from copyright laws because it was non-profit. That's just as dumb as saying that your church has the right to shoplift at the local department store because it's non-profit – it's stealing either way! I refuse to help preachers (or anyone else) with pirated copies of software on their PC's. Doing the work of God doesn't justify doing the work of the devil to get the software you need. Learn to believe God for the money to license it legitimately! Of course, you already have my permission to copy this book and give it to everyone in the world for free, so go ahead!

God Is Far More Interested in Your Character than in Your Comfort

God Gets Glory from Our Patient Endurance of Sickness

God Sometimes Has an Older Person Get Sick to Make That Person Want to Come Home to Heaven

God Could Use So-and-So Powerfully because She was Paralyzed When She Was Young

God Only Heals Some at Healing Crusades, Thus Proving It Is Not His Will to Heal
All

Jesus Did Only What He Saw the Father Do. He Only Saw the Father Heal ONE Person at the Pool of Bethesda.

Jesus Told a Greek Woman NO When She Came for Deliverance for Her Daughter

Jesus Himself Pointed Out that There Were Many Lepers in Israel in Elijah's Day,
Yet Only Naaman the Syrian Was Cleansed (Luke 4:27)

God Sometimes Heals You Only after He Has Let You Suffer a While (1 Peter 5:10)

Suffering Glorifies God (Romans 8:17)

You are Called to Suffer (Philippians 1:29)

Jesus Suffered and That Is The Example for You to Follow (1 Peter 2:21)

Long Life is Not a New Testament Blessing

James Said to Say, "If the Lord Will, We Shall Live." This Proves that We Cannot Claim Long Life.

We Are Not Promised Tomorrow

Psalm 41:3 Proves that God Permits Sickness but Gives You Grace to Bear It

It Is Presumption to Think that Life and Death Are in Your Power

Jesus, Not the Devil, Now Has the Keys of Death, So HE Is the One Who Makes People Die Today

Healing Is a Side Issue that Does Not Deserve to Be Emphasized So Much

We Need to Fulfill What Is Left of Christ's Sufferings in the Earth (Colossians
1:24)

Vine's Expository Dictionary Says that AFFLICTIONS in Colossians 1:24 Are "Afflictions of Christ from Which His Followers Must Not Shrink, Whether Sufferings of BODY or Mind"

We Should Expect, as Paul Did, to Always Bear Jesus' Dying in Our Own Bodies
(2 Corinthians 4:10)

Disease Viruses are Part of God's Creation and Are Therefore Good, Even Though We Often Don't Think So When We Catch Them

As Many Doctors Can Tell You, Many People Make Themselves Sick – It Has Nothing to Do with the Devil

To Preach that Jesus COULD NOT Do Miracles at Nazareth Is to Deny His Deity and God's Sovereignty. Therefore, the Only Reason He Could Not Would Be that People Did Not Bring the Sick.

The Only Reason Jesus COULD NOT Do Miracles at Nazareth Is that They Drove Him Away before He Could Do Anything

Mark 16:9-20 Was Not in Some Early Manuscripts

God's Healing Covenant in the Law of Moses Was Only for the Jews

The New Testament Emphasizes Spiritual Blessings, Not Material Blessings

Exodus 15:26 Only Applies to You if You Keep the Whole Law of Moses

Galatians 3:13 Means that Christ Redeemed Us from the Law, Which Was a Curse, Not the "Curse" in Deuteronomy 28

The Curse of the Law Was Given to Israel, Not to Us. We Cannot be Redeemed from It Because We Were Never under It.

Galatians 3:13's "Curse" Speaks of Spiritual Death, Not Sickness or Poverty

Christ Did NOT Actually Bear the Deuteronomy 28:15-68 Curse Himself because He Could Not Have "Borne" Our Mildew, Droughts, Bad Crops, Children Sent to Captivity, and Other Things Mentioned in That Curse

The Only Sense in which Jesus Was Cursed Was that He Died a Cursed Death by Being Hung on a Cross

The Curse Was Corporate, Not Personal, So You Cannot Be Personally
Redeemed from It

The Law's Curse Pointed Only to Israel's Corporate Exile

It Makes No Sense to Say that Jesus Bore Our Sins but Only ONE of Their Consequences (Sickness)

Lawbreakers Are under "A" Curse (Damnation), not "THE" Curse in Deuteronomy 28

The Curse of the Law Was Not Curses (Plural) – It Was Simply that No One Could Keep the Whole Law

God Called Deuteronomy 28:15-68 CURSES in the Plural, So Galatians 3:13,
Which Says that Christ Redeemed Us from THE Curse, Can't Refer to Those
There Was Only One Curse (Singular) in Galatians 3:13, So Not Every Sickness
Could Be a Curse

Jesus Could Not Literally Have BECOME SIN because Sin Is a Thing, Not a Person
Jesus Was Not Really PUNISHED for Our Sins; He Just Shed Blood to Atoner for Them

Christ Gave Himself for Our Sins, Not Our Sicknesses (Galatians 1:4)

Greats of Faith Were Stoned, Sawn Asunder, Slain, Destitute, Afflicted and Tormented. Therefore, We Can Be Too, Even if We Have Great Faith Like Theirs.

Hebrews 11:39 Proves that You Can Have Faith and NOT Receive the Promises

Faith Does Not Always Overcome – God Can Give Both OVERCOMING Faith and ENDURING Faith

God Manifests Himself as Healer to Some and as Comforter to Others

We Know that God Did Not Heal Paul, Because He Said that He Bore Marks in His Body (Galatians 6:17)

God Heals in His Own Way in His Own Time

Jesus Literally Said to “Keep On Asking.” Therefore, We Should Bug God Like the Widow in Jesus’ Parable.

Sometimes God Bears Long before He Answers His People’s Prayers, Though They Cry Day and Night (Luke 18:7)

Paul Said that the Entire Creation (Which Includes YOU) Groans and Travails in PAIN (Romans 8:22)

The Context of I SHALL NOT DIE, BUT LIVE (Psalm 118:17) Is Military Protection, Not Healing from Disease

We Cannot Say that We Can Do the Acts that the Apostles Did, Because We Cannot Write Scripture, and They Did

God Works in Mysterious Ways, His Wonders to Perform. We’ll Never Know Why God Lets Some People Stay Sick.

You Never Know What God Will Do

Everything Happens for a Reason

Many Are the Afflictions of the Righteous

Just As We Will Never Have Victory over Sin in This Life, We Will Never Have Victory over Sickness

We Are Promised Tribulation in This World

It Is Unbalanced to Teach that Life’s Problems Are Due to a Lack of Faith

We Are Supposed to Glory in Tribulations and Count Them All Joy (Romans 5:3, James 1:2-4)

My Trials Only Come to Make Me Strong

The Crosses in Life Must Precede the Crowns

If God ALLOWS Sickness, He Must Have a Purpose for It

God ALLOWS Sickness, But Never More than He Gives You Grace to Endure

God Gives Us More than We Can Handle to Make Us, like Paul, Rely on Him, Not on Ourselves (2 Corinthians 1:8-10)

God Gives and Takes Away

Sometimes God Wants You to Be Afflicted so that You Can Empathize, Not Just Sympathize, with Others Who Are Afflicted

You Should Not Try to Hurry out of Trials (Like Sickness), Because They Are More Precious than Gold (1 Peter 1:7)

God Sometimes Withholds Healing to Test Your Faith

It Rains on the Just as Well as the Unjust (Matthew 5:45)

We Should Never Teach that Jesus was Cursed because No One Speaking by the Holy Spirit Can Call Jesus Cursed (1 Corinthians 12:3)

God Creates Dumb, Deaf and Blind People (Exodus 4:11)

The LORD Stopped Sarah from Having Children (Genesis 16:2)

God Afflicted Jacob with a Hip Problem (Genesis 32:25, 31)

You Can't Say that God Never Puts Sickness on the Righteous. He Killed David's Child.

Rather Than Claiming Healing, We Should Just Have "the Faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego"

We Should, Like Paul, Learn to be Content in Every Situation

We Are Supposed to Thank God for Everything, Which Would Include Sickness (1 Thessalonians 5:18)

Lazarus Was Sick for the Glory of God (John 11:4)

Lazarus's Faith Could Not Have Raised Him from the Dead

God Does Not Heal All Because He Didn't Heal Isaac or Jacob of Bad Eyesight

Throughout Scripture God Heals Those Whom He CHOOSES to Heal

God Has Mercy upon Whom He Wills (Romans 9:15)

God Creates Both the Day of Prosperity and the Day of Adversity (Ecclesiastes 7:14)

Jesus Bore Our Sorrows and Griefs, Not Our Sicknesses and Pains, on the Cross

The Healing Part of Isaiah 53 Does Not Refer to the Atonement

If Healing Is in Christ's Atonement, Sick People Must Be Unsaved

We Don't Have to Keep Getting Saved the Way We Have to Keep Getting Healed, So Healing Can't Be in the Atonement

Old Testament Animal Sacrifices Were Never Made Sick

ALL Who Come to Christ for the New Birth Receive It, But Not All Who Come for Healing Receive It

Healing Is a Secondary Benefit of the Atonement, Not a Primary One

Atonement Means Cancellation of Guilt, So by Definition, Healing Cannot Be "in" the Atonement

Christ's Sin-Bearing Is Repeated throughout the New Testament, But Healing Is Almost Never Mentioned with It. If Healing Were in the Atonement, It Would Be Mentioned Consistently.

If Healing Were in the Atonement, Anyone Who Got Saved Would Be Healed
Instantly

Healing Is in the Atonement, But It Is up to God How to Dispense It

Faith Teachers Teach a Potential Atonement, Not One Christians Already Enjoy

Jeremiah 17:9 Literally Means That the Heart Is SICK, So Jesus Came to Heal the Sickness in Our Hearts, Not in Our Bodies

Jesus Could Not Have Borne Both Hypoglycemia and Hyperglycemia on the Cross

Jesus Could Not Have Borne Female-Specific Illnesses in His Own Body on the Cross

Jesus Could Not Have Borne All Birth Defects; His Body Would Have Lost Limbs and He Would Have Fallen off the Cross

Jesus Could Not Have Borne Broken Bones on the Cross because Not One of His Bones Was Broken (John 19:36)

Old Testament Sacrifices Were NOT Made Sick Before They Died, But They Still Covered Sins

We Cannot Expect to Heal As Jesus Did Because We Are Not the Son of God

We Cannot Heal as Jesus Did Because He Had the Spirit without Measure, While We Have the Spirit Given by Measure

1 Corinthians 12:10 Says that Today Only SOME Receive Dunamis (Power)

Teaching that YOU Can Heal is Heresy that Deifies You – Only GOD Can Heal

Christ's Healings Were Mostly Instantaneous; We Cannot Claim to Be Able to Do His Works When We Have So Few Instantaneous Miracles

John 14:12 Does Not Mean that We Can Heal As Jesus Did because NO ONE Has Ever Duplicated His Ministry

John 14:12 in the Greek Is Collective – We Collectively Do His Works But No One Person Will Do Them

Christ's Disciples Were Told to Heal EVERYONE. No One Does This Today, So We Cannot Say We Have the Same Authority They Did.

THIS MOUNTAIN in Mark 11:23 Refers to the Temple Mountain and Symbolically
the Jewish Worship System

If We Really Had Authority over Sickness, We Would Not Need GIFTS OF HEALING

Only Some Receive GIFTS OF HEALING; This Proves that Healing Is a Gift Bestowed as God Wills

Only Those with Gifts of Healings Receive the TEMPORARY Right to Speak Directly to an Illness

Healing is a GIFT (1 Corinthians 12:28), Proving that It Is Not Earned by Our Works or Our Faith, Which Would Be Pelagianism

The Mere Fact that There Are So Many Objections to Divine Healing Shows How Flimsy That Doctrine Is

Any Other Objection Not Specifically Covered in This Book

Objection: God Wouldn't Heal Paul's Thorn in the Flesh

This is the granddaddy of all objections to divine healing. The whole objection generally goes like this:

PAUL'S THORN IN THE FLESH: SICKNESS

by Dr. David Duntz, PhD, DoD

The early church fathers stated that Paul's thorn was a disease, and that is also the overwhelming consensus among famous Bible scholars. God gave Paul a disease so that he would not get puffed up in pride. Paul called this disease his thorn in the flesh. We know that it wasn't a spiritual thing because Paul specifically said that this thorn was "in the flesh." Your flesh is physical. This was what he meant when he said that he preached in Galatia because of an illness, which he said plainly in Galatians 4:13. We can safely assume that this was a painful eye disease, because Paul talked about what an awful trial was in his flesh (Galatians 4:14) and that the Galatians would have plucked their eyes out and given them to him (Galatians 4:16). This disease ruined Paul's vision so that he had to write in big letters (Galatians 6:11). In fact, he had Tertius write down Romans for him (Romans 16:22)! Furthermore, when He was before the Sanhedrin, he couldn't even see which person was the High Priest, who surely was clothed differently, which Paul as a Pharisee would surely have known (Acts 23:3-5). His outer man was truly perishing (2 Corinthians 4:16). No wonder Paul took a doctor (Luke) with him (Acts 20:6, 20:13, etc., Colossians 4:14)! His bodily presence was weak (2 Corinthians 10:10). Paul begged God three times to take away this disease, but God told Paul that he was better off being sick, because God's strength is made perfect in our weakness (2 Corinthians 12:9). Moreover, the Greek word used for weakness in this verse is the same word translated sickness in John 11:4, diseases in Acts 28:9, and infirmity or infirmities meaning sickness in Matthew 8:17 (that verse so often quoted by faith-maniacs), Luke 5:15, Luke 8:2, Luke 13:11, Luke 13:12, John 5:5, and one of my favorite verses, 1 Timothy 5:23! So we know that Paul meant sickness. Sickness is even on Paul's list of sufferings in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27, despite what the faith teachers say. Paul listed painfulness as one of his afflictions! Having studied Greek extensively in seminary, I know that Thayer's Greek Lexicon says that the term "messenger of Satan" can be used figuratively of an illness and that Strong's Exhaustive Concordance says that the word "thorn" can be used figuratively of a bodily annoyance or disability. Then Paul said that he would glory in this sickness so that the power of Christ might rest upon him (2 Corinthians 12:9). Furthermore, he even said that he took pleasure in being sick (2 Corinthians 12:10). You can see plainly that Paul could not see plainly. In fact, writers in the centuries just after Christ wrote that Paul had the horrible Oriental eye disease ophthalmia. If the great apostle Paul took pleasure in his sickness, so should you. When God chooses not to remove your sickness, you should rejoice in your weakness, knowing that you are strong in God. God will give you "sufficient grace" (2 Corinthians 12:9) to deal with your illness, and you can even, like Paul, take pleasure in your sickness.

The argument above is very convincing if you don't bother studying out the Scriptures carefully. It sounds so Biblical that many fine Christians have swallowed this dogma, to their own hurt. There are plenty of Scripture references, right? So what if there is nowhere else in the Bible where God was unwilling to heal someone who was right with Him? Maybe this is the exception that busts the idea of divine healing conclusively. Maybe we should believe Dr. Duntz, stay sick, and write him nice testimony letters. ("Dear Dr. Duntz, I was on the verge of believing God and getting healed when I read your wonderful book. I want you to know that I have given up on being healed. I am determined to glory in my sickness just like Paul. Thank you so much. Love, Steve")

This is a very important objection, so I have devoted a disproportionate amount of electronic space to it. If you believe this reasoning about Paul's thorn, you will have doubts in your mind even as you read Scriptures about healing. Your faith will be hindered until you settle in your heart that the "Paul's thorn" argument for accepting sickness is unscriptural nonsense.

Dr. Duntz's argument sounds rock solid, but it's actually full of holes. Once you see what Paul really said, you will never again struggle with doubts that either Paul or you could ever have a disease that God would not heal.

I will keep referring to the main "proof text" used:

2 Corinthians 12:7-10:

And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then I am strong.

What Was Paul's Thorn in the Flesh?

Paul states in unmistakable terms exactly what his "thorn in the flesh" was. His thorn in the flesh was the messenger of Satan. It would be impossible to refer to a sickness as a messenger. Yet, to believe in the Paul's-thorn-was-sickness deception, you must consider sickness to be that "messenger." The only "out" here would be an Isaiah 53:4-type problem where the translators picked the wrong word. Was messenger really the right word to use here? Let's see.

The Greek word translated messenger in 2 Corinthians 12:7, angelos, appears 186 times in the New Testament. (There is at least one case where a derivative is used; I'm only counting the main word.) In 179 of these cases, it is translated angel. In 7 cases, it is translated messenger. It is never translated as anything else.

Out of these 186 cases, there is not one single case where the context could apply to something other than a sentient being. Just so you that don't have to take my word for it, I have included in this book every passage in the New Testament where this word was used in the original Greek. I defy you or anyone else on the planet to prove that a disease, or a tool, or any other thing could be described by the word angel or messenger in ANY of these verses. Go ahead and try.

Click here on “Messenger” of Satan Defined if you want to see these passages. I would encourage you to browse through them a little even if you don't think that I'm lying. It will reinforce the point to you that this messenger was a living being, not a thing or a disease.

But what about the Greek lexicon and concordance mentioned by Dr. Duntz? It is true that Thayer's Greek Lexicon states among other errors that the term “messenger of Satan” can be used symbolically of an illness and that Strong's Exhaustive Concordance says that the word “thorn” can mean a bodily annoyance or disability. But they are both starting with an erroneous conclusion and working backward. You see, the only place in the entire Bible where the Greek word skolops (a thorn or other sharp object) is used is the one in question in 2 Corinthians 12:7! There is literally no other New Testament usage with which you can compare it. So Thayer and Strong started with a conclusion and assumed a certain meaning, and then people who use these study aids assume that the writers must have had some kind of special knowledge of Greek to reach their conclusions – and they didn't! A thorn is simply a sharp object in the Greek. There is nothing that denotes any meaning beyond that. Anything else is something “being read into it” by the reference book authors. I used to wonder why people who go to seminaries and study Greek could ever reach the silly conclusions they do and be so out of harmony with the Bible and God's character. Now I know why. They read books like this and just accept them as gospel truth. Please do your own mini-Greek study by clicking on the topic in the previous paragraph and draw your own unbiased conclusions about what “messenger” means. The famous Greek reference works are just plain wrong on this point. You can't just assume a traditional conclusion and then say, “The Greek says it because So-and-So says that the Greek says it.” Assuming the conclusion is NOT scholarly, though many scholars have done it when it comes to Paul's thorn.

Will the Circular Logic Go Unbroken?

The seminary students are victims of circular logic. That is the kind of logic that says that cell B2 in a spreadsheet must equal cell C2 and that cell C2 must equal cell B2. The difference is that the spreadsheet program will point out this error, while the seminaries will not. Here's how the “logic” works:

1. We assume that Paul's thorn must be a sickness.
2. We look for any other references in Greek that could indicate that a “thorn” could mean a sickness.
3. There aren't any other references. We have only 2 Corinthians 12:7.
4. Therefore, the only case where “thorn in the flesh” appears MUST refer to a sickness.

The problem with circular logic is that it can be used to “prove” anything. For example, we can use the same logic to prove that Paul’s thorn was a swarm of African killer bees that followed him around:

1. We assume that Paul’s thorn must be a swarm of African killer bees.
2. We look for any other references in Greek that could indicate that a “thorn” could mean a swarm of African killer bees.
3. There aren’t any other references. We have only 2 Corinthians 12:7.
4. Therefore, the only case where “thorn in the flesh” appears MUST refer to a swarm of African killer bees.

Circular logic is popular in the secular world as well:

1. This rock must be 200 million years old because it contains fossils that are 200 million years old.
2. We know that the fossils are 200 million years old because they are in a rock that is 200 million years old.

Clearly Unclear

Just to point out to you how “clear” the “thorn equals sickness” idea is, here is a list of conditions that different scholars have come up with as possibilities for Paul’s “disease:” Epilepsy, hysteria, periodic depressions, headaches, severe eye trouble, chronic ophthalmia, malaria, Malta fever, convulsive attacks, leprosy, a speech impediment and others! That’s just crystal clear, isn’t it? Even the “scholars” who think it was an illness can’t agree on what it was. It doesn’t sound as if they have any convincing proof. Otherwise, there wouldn’t be so many silly theories. (Last I knew, eye trouble was the current favorite.)

Departure, Not Healing

Paul sought the Lord that it would depart from him, not that he would be healed of it. Anyone who says that Paul prayed to be healed is reading something into this passage that is simply not there. God said that his strength was made perfect in weakness, not in sickness. And because we know that the thorn was a messenger of Satan, we know from the context that Paul prayed that the “angelic” messenger of Satan would depart from him. The word depart is the same Greek word used in Acts 12:10 to describe the fact that an angel (the same word translated messenger in 2 Corinthians 12:7) departed from Peter. Why should angel and depart mean one thing in 2 Corinthians 12:7-10 and another thing in Acts 12:10?

Paul said that in his infirmities, the power of Christ would rest upon him. We know that the power of Christ heals the sick. You can find many New Testament references to power coming out of Jesus and healing the sick. It is hard to picture an eye disease lasting very long in someone on whom the power of Christ rests!

As far as I'm concerned, we have already killed the idea that Paul's thorn was sickness. But let's just beat it into the ground from some other angles because so many people are caught up with it.

Thorns in the Flesh in Scripture

There are three places in the Bible other than 2 Corinthians 12:7 where there is a figurative "thorn in the flesh." (There is also a case in Proverbs 26:9 comparing a literal thorn going into the hand of a drunkard to a parable in the mouth of fools.) Read these and you will see that in these cases, the "thorns" are terms for sentient beings and not diseases or any other things, including literal thorns:

Numbers 33:55:

But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it shall come to pass, that those which ye let remain of them shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

Joshua 23:13:

Know for a certainty that the LORD your God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye perish from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you.

Judges 2:3:

Wherefore I also said, I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be as thorns in your sides, and their gods shall be a snare unto you.

If we are going to say that Paul's thorn was literally "in his flesh," we should also take the statements above literally. The only problem with this reasoning is that the inhabitants of the land were giants, and it would be difficult to fit them into your sides, much less your eyes.

No, "thorns in your sides" and "thorns in your eyes" are obviously figures of speech used to describe living beings (in this case the Canaanites), not diseases. Paul said that this messenger of Satan was irritating, not that it was literally "in his flesh." A modern-day equivalent would be, "People who make dead, traditional statements about Paul's thorn and fight you on healing can be a pain in the neck." This does not mean that you experience neck pain whenever you meet such a person. It is a figurative expression, although not a very nice one, just as "thorn in the flesh" is a figurative expression.

If you take in and flesh literally, you must conclude that Paul had a demon, because he would have had a messenger of Satan in his body. That is clearly not the case, because the messenger buffeted him, which is act that must take place from the outside, never the inside. (More on this shortly.)

People have made a big deal about the words in and flesh, but if that is fair, I demand an equal right to make a big deal about the words thorn and the!

If you're going to take flesh literally, it seems to me that you must also take thorn literally. This would explain Paul's thorn: Paul's thorn in the flesh was a thorn in the flesh! He sat down in a briar patch or leaned against a cactus somewhere and got a thorn in his flesh. He couldn't get rid of it, and God wouldn't remove it for him. Timothy couldn't help him because he didn't have any tweezers with him. Sound reasonable? No, that would hardly be "the messenger of Satan."

Paul did not say that he had a thorn in his flesh. He said it was a thorn in the flesh. Therefore, you cannot take the word flesh as proof that the "thorn" was "in" Paul's flesh. If you were sick, would you say, "The throat is sore," or "The head hurts?" No, you would refer to "my throat" and "my head," wouldn't you? Why should you assume that a "thorn in the flesh" means a "thorn in my flesh" when that isn't what Paul said?

Paul said that Epaphroditus and Trophimus were sick, but he never attributes those situations to a thorn in the flesh. When Paul meant sick, he said sick. He didn't couch it in spiritual terms. He never used either "thorn in the flesh" or "the messenger of Satan" to refer to anyone else's sickness.

What Paul's Thorn Did to Him

Paul said that the messenger (angel) of Satan was sent to buffet him. The Greek word used for buffet (kolaphizo) means "to rap with the fist" (by implication, dealing repeated blows). This is consistent with Paul's experience, as he was frequently beaten up and tortured in various ways for preaching the gospel. The idea is that this demonic being was behind the incidents where crowds were stirred up to stone Paul and mobs traveled from city to city to harm him physically. You would not say that a disease "buffets" someone, since by definition buffeting takes place from the outside, not the inside. You have probably never heard anyone say, "This eye problem is really buffeting me. My uncle is being buffeted with cancer." Here are the other places in the New Testament where this same Greek word is used:

"Then they did spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands" – Matthew 26:67.

"And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say to him, Prophecy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands" —Mark 14:65.

"Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwellingplace" – 1 Corinthians 4:11.

"For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." – 1 Peter 2:20.

Buffeting in the New Testament clearly relates to being physically beaten, not to being sick.

Paul's Infirmities

Paul explicitly enumerates his "infirmities." Let's look at what Paul said in context so that we can debunk the notion that Paul was glorying in and taking pleasure in his diseases.

Paul lists his trials, which do NOT include illnesses, in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27. If this thorn in the flesh were a terrible illness that he had begged God to take away, surely he would have listed it among his sufferings. He mentions just about everything else you can think of, but there is no reference to illness.

But what about painfulness, which is included in his list of sufferings? Couldn't that be from a sickness? No, it couldn't. The Greek word translated painfulness is mochthos, which is translated travail in the other places where it appears. The word denotes toil, not physical pain. This should be clear from the other places where the same Greek word was used in the New Testament (the translated word is italicized below):

"For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God."—1 Thessalonians 2:9.

"Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:"—2 Thessalonians 3:8.

Paul was talking about hard work. The word simply does not mean physical pain, illness or sickness.

Now let's see how Paul continues in 2 Corinthians 11:28-33:

Beside those things that are without [Paul said all those trials came from the outside. A disease would come from the inside!], that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches.

Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?

If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

Here Paul is glorying in his infirmities. His example is how he had to be let out of a city in a basket. This is not an example of illness. Paul did not say that he was a basket case; he said that he was lowered in a basket. He went through a window, not through this year's flu strain. He is referring to his human weakness and inability, not a disease.

From the context in verse 10 (infirmities, reproaches, necessities, persecutions and distresses), it would seem that Paul's problems were coming from the outside, not the inside, and that they were related to preaching the gospel. Paul had just spent a good deal of space enumerating his suffering for the gospel in Chapter 11, and he nowhere mentioned sickness.

It is a fact that the same Greek word astheneia that Paul used for weakness is translated sickness in John 11:4, diseases in Acts 28:9 and infirmity or infirmities in a few others. (Dr. Duntz mentioned them all, of course.) But this does not prove that Paul was talking about sickness, because that word, and others derived from the same root, are actually translated weak (or a related word) more often than sick (or a related word). Hebrews 4:15 tells us that Christ was touched with the feeling of our infirmities (astheneia) being tempted as we are, and this clearly does not mean that He walked the earth sick while He healed everyone else. I have included a study of the use of the Greek word astheneia in the next section where we deal with Paul ministering through infirmity of the flesh in Galatia; this will prove my point further. You may refer to Strong's Concordance or your favorite online Bible tool to verify my claims. Moral: Don't base your convictions on someone's interpretation of Greek until you study it out for yourself! Dr. Duntz's Greek argument sounded impressive until you read this, didn't it?

But what about Paul in Galatia?

Paul was stoned and left for dead at Lystra, Galatia. The disciples gathered around him, and he got up! However, we can assume that his body was in less than perfect shape after such an incident. Paul does indeed say that he preached in Galatia at the first "through infirmity of the flesh." But he never mentioned preaching through "infirmity of the flesh" anywhere else, including Galatia when he returned there later. This proves that God healed Paul of whatever physical problem he had in Galatia the first time.

Another proof is in Galatians 4:14: "And the temptation which was in my flesh...." If it was in his flesh, it was not still in his flesh when he wrote this letter, so Paul was not having eye trouble or any other kind of trouble when he wrote to the Galatians. Thus, his problem could not have been a chronic, ongoing thing throughout his ministry as his "thorn in the flesh" was.

Therefore, whatever physical issue Paul was talking about in Galatians 4:14 could not have been his "thorn in the flesh."

Also, it is going out on of a limb to claim that Paul said he preached because of a disease. The word infirmity is also used to denote weakness or incapacity not related to disease, and Paul was probably weak after his stoning. One would suspect this shade of meaning because Paul said that he preached through infirmity of the flesh, not through an infirmity of the flesh. In fact, the word through used here does not often indicate a causal relationship, although there are some verses where it does. Paul did not say that he preached because of infirmity of the flesh, although "infirmity of the flesh" is something he went "through" in Galatia. You can't make an open-and-shut case out of the Greek words in this verse, but you should be aware that there are other shades of meaning that would be consistent with usage elsewhere in the New Testament. In other words, Paul may well have been saying, "I preached to you in weakness," not "I preached to you because of weakness."

The Greek word translated infirmity is also used in the verses below. It is used to describe illnesses in other places, but the point is that it can refer to weakness instead of illness:

“For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity...” – Hebrews 7:28. Surely there was no law requiring high priests to be sick, as there was one requiring them not to be sick (Leviticus 21:16-23)!

“For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: Who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity.” – Hebrews 5:1-2. This did not mean that all high priests had to have high fevers.

“We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak...” – Romans 15:1. (This word is closely related, but not identical, to the main Greek word in question.) Paul was not saying that we should bear weak Christians’ colds for them!

“For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.” – Hebrews 4:15. Jesus is touched with our capacity to be tempted, being a Man Himself.

“The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself [Himself] maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered” – Romans 8:26. The Spirit helps us with our inability to pray right, not our sicknesses, although He will help you overcome your sicknesses by leading you into the truth about healing.

“I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.” – Romans 6:19. Paul did not speak as he did because of the sickness of their flesh.

Here is a count of how many times this and related Greek words are translated certain ways. The words in question are astheneia, astheneo, asthenema, and asthenes.

| | |
|--|------|
| Weak, weaker, weakness | 35 |
| Feeble | 1 |
| Without strength | 1 |
| | ---- |
| TOTAL “WEAK” | 37 |
| Sick, sickness | 26 |
| Impotent | 3 |
| Diseases, diseased | 2 |
| | ---- |
| TOTAL “SICK” | 31 |
| TOTAL “INFIRM” OR “INFIRMITIES” | 18 |
| (Only 7 of these clearly signify sickness) | |

Therefore, although the word could mean sickness, you cannot prove that Paul meant sickness. He could simply have been saying that he preached in weakness, which Scripture would affirm given that Paul never listed sickness as part of his many sufferings for the gospel.

What does “Exalted above Measure” Mean?

This phrase, used twice in 2 Corinthians 12:7, could be taken two ways. Either way, it leads to another argument against your sickness being Paul’s thorn in the flesh. I personally believe that there is only one correct way to interpret the phrase. Exalted is translated from a Greek compound word that literally means “over-lifted.” Some have interpreted it to mean that Satan did not want Paul’s ministry to be exalted, while others have interpreted it to mean that God did not want Paul to become conceited.

The ambiguity comes from Paul’s use of the passive phrase, “There was given to me a thorn in the flesh,” together with the reason, “lest I be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations.” Was Satan trying to stop Paul’s ministry from being exalted, or was God permitting Satan to buffet Paul to prevent him from becoming conceited because he knew so much? I don’t think you can prove either interpretation from that Greek word alone.

But from the fact that his thorn was a messenger of Satan, it is clear that the passive “sender” in the phrase above was Satan, not God. It would make no sense to think that his thorn was a messenger “from Satan from God.” It couldn’t be from both! Paul states explicitly that Satan was the source of his problems, so this had to be a case where Satan was trying to stop Paul’s ministry from being exalted and recognized more widely than it already was, not a case where God was trying to stop Paul from being “exalted above measure” in his own conceits.

Would God Humble Paul?

Given what the balance of Scripture says about humility, it would be inconsistent for this passage to say that God wanted Paul to be buffeted so that he would stay humble. God tells us to humble ourselves. He never says to let Him humble us. He never even offers to humble us! Surely God is a better parent than you are. Would you physically abuse your children to keep them humble?

The Scriptural perspective on both humility and exaltation is found in these verses:

1 Peter 5:6:

Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.

Luke 14:11 and Luke 18:14:

He that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

James 4:10:

Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

God wants you to be exalted as long as you do things His way! “Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land” (Psalm 37:34). We just read in 1 Peter 5:6 that when you humble yourself in the sight of the Lord, He will exalt you! Therefore, we must conclude that God wanted Paul to be exalted in that sense. It would be Satan, not God, who would not want Paul’s ministry to be exalted. Surely you cannot think that God wants to put preachers in jail. In fact, you can read about how God did miracles to get preachers out of jail (Acts 5:18-20, Acts 12:3-10) Jesus said that it was Satan, not God, who would throw some believers into prison in Revelation 2:10.

Thus, the only consistent interpretation of this word is similar to the King James rendering, exalted above measure, where exaltation is a positive thing, not a negative thing.

However, if you still insist on interpreting it the other way, it makes an equally compelling argument why you do not have a “thorn in the flesh!” If Paul needed it to stay humble despite his great revelations, you must have great revelations to qualify for a thorn in the flesh. Have you had any world-shaking revelations? I doubt it. If you really had the revelations that Paul did, you would be out doing what Paul did, not arguing against divine healing! Like Paul, you would be getting healed yourself and going out and getting lots of other people healed.

Who Gave Paul His Thorn in the Flesh?

It was Satan’s idea, not God’s, to give Paul a thorn in the flesh. Satan was the one who sent Paul’s thorn in the flesh, as is clear from Paul’s words. Satan certainly did not send it to keep Paul humble! Why would Satan do something to help keep Paul out of pride? He would have wanted Paul to get into pride!

Paul did not beg the Lord three times to remove something that he thought the Lord had put on him. Paul begged the Lord that it would depart from him. There is a difference! It is true that God allowed it. He does allow persecutions on the earth. You are not redeemed from persecution for righteousness’ sake; you are guaranteed it if you want to live a godly life! But if Paul were convinced that his thorn were from God, he would not have asked God to have it depart from him. Would you want anything that is of God to depart from you, given that all good things come from God?

This leads to another question. If Satan gave Paul his thorn, and Paul taught that we reign in life, seated with Jesus in the heavenlies far above Satan, why didn’t Paul take authority over Satan and make him stop the persecution? Again, the servant is not above his master. Jesus was persecuted. He did not “believe away” or “confess away” His persecution. God protected Him from those who wanted to kill Him until it was His time to die for our sins, but God did not make the devil stop sending people to criticize and harass Jesus and even try to kill Him. The devil has a right to be here, and God will permit people to speak their minds even when their minds are full of garbage.

The bottom line is that God's grace was sufficient for Paul. God's grace allowed Paul to finish his course with joy. God's grace enabled Paul to fulfill his ministry despite what Satan did through his messenger. You should expect God's grace to be sufficient for you, too. If sickness cuts you down in mid-life, you cannot finish your course, and you have not partaken of this grace that is sufficient to give you victory in every trial. Paul had more trials than many of us put together, yet because of the grace that was sufficient for him, he was able to report in the same book (in 2 Corinthians 2:14) that God always caused him to triumph in Christ! God's grace was always greater than Satan's attacks, so Paul lived in victory regardless of his immediate circumstances. He did not go through life defeated by a "thorn in the flesh," so neither should you.

Paul Preached Healing!

We know that Paul preached that healing was available because of the account in Acts 14:7-10. Paul did not heal the man. The man received faith to be healed listening to Paul preach the gospel. Paul just told him to act on his faith. Faith comes by hearing God's Word, so Paul must have preached healing to the man. It was not Paul's doctrine at Lystra that sickness is a thorn in the flesh to be patiently endured. So it was certainly not his doctrine later.

Paul did not tell the multitudes that sickness was a thorn in his flesh when cloth items were brought from his body to heal sicknesses (Acts 19:11-12). He did not tell all the sick people on the island in Acts 28:8-9 that they had to endure sickness as a thorn in the flesh – he got them all healed. Wouldn't it have been ridiculous for Paul to heal ALL the sick people on that island and be the only remaining sick person out of them all? You can be sure that Paul's doctrine did not include being sick to stay humble. How would these people have been healed if Paul told them that he himself was sick for some purpose? That would not build faith in anyone. The minute you tell someone the lie that God makes sovereign exceptions to healing, people will assume that they are in that exceptional category. The flesh will receive unbelief more readily than truth. So if you give people an excuse, they will generally take it.

Would the same Paul who taught that the same price paid at Calvary bought both our bodies and our spirits, and that our bodies belong to God (1 Corinthians 6:19-20), believe that his own body was exempt from this? Would the same Paul who said that the Lord was for the body (1 Corinthians 6:13) conclude that the Lord was against his own body?

Paul Preached that Sickness Can Be Judgment for Sin

Paul talked about homosexuals receiving just recompense in their bodies for their sin in Romans 1:26-27. Illness is obviously implied here. On the average, homosexuals DO die younger than sexually moral people. (That is a sad fact of life that the homosexual community doesn't like to admit. You don't need to be around them long before you hear stories of their "partners" dying prematurely.) So Paul's theology is that sickness is a curse, not a normal part of Christian life. Paul said that many in Corinth were weak and sickly and many were prematurely dead because of bad attitudes toward the things of God and the body of Christ when it came to the Lord's Supper (1 Corinthians 11:27-32). We must conclude that Paul taught, along with the rest of Scripture, that sickness is a curse and a consequence of sin, not a normal part of Christian life. He said the Corinthians were sick and dying for a cause—their sin. Paul was not mistreating his brothers and sisters in the Lord or treating the Lord's ordinances lightly. He had no cause to be weak, sick, or prematurely dead. If Paul were sick, how would the Corinthians (to whom he wrote 1 and 2 Corinthians!) take him seriously when he said they were sick for a reason? They would have wondered what Paul did to deserve the judgment of sickness himself!

A Pipe Carrying Water Gets Wet!

When you are used as a channel of blessing to others, that very blessing will manifest in your life. It is inconsistent with the gospel that everyone else would be healed, but that the man "sowing" healing would have to remain sick and not "reap" healing himself! This would contradict Galatians 6:7 ("Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap") and Ephesians 6:8 ("Whatsoever good any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord"), to say nothing of 2 Timothy 2:6 ("The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits") and Deuteronomy 25:4 ("Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn"). According to this principle, if you are providing benefits for others, you are entitled to enjoy some of that harvest yourself. Paul, laboring in God's harvest and bringing healing to multitudes, could not be excluded from being healed himself because of this principle. As some like to say, a pipe carrying water gets wet!

What about All Those Scriptures Proving that Paul Had an Eye Disease?

What Scriptures? Not a single verse in the Bible proves that Paul had an eye disease. And there are many good reasons to believe that he didn't. This "eye disease" myth arose from making unwarranted conclusions from a few verses.

Galatians 6:11:

Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand.

From the Greek words for large and letter, this could either mean, “See what big print I used” or “See what a long letter I wrote to you.” The latter would seem to fit the context better, although you cannot conclusively prove one translation or another by reading the Greek. Also, there is a manuscript issue – at least one Greek manuscript has letters in the plural, and at least one puts it in the singular. It appears that the King James Version was translated from one that put it in the singular. (This raises an important point to consider when people tell you that the original Greek says something. There are different Greek versions in circulation based on different manuscripts, just as there are different English editions. However, the differences are very minor.)

The Greek word for letter can mean either a letter of the alphabet or a letter written to someone, just as in English. It is used both ways in the New Testament, so there is no conclusive proof either way based on this word. The word for how large is also inconclusive given its other New Testament use in Hebrews 7:4, where it talks about how great Melchisedec was. Based on the words alone, “how large a letter” could mean either how long the epistle was or how large the letters were. Of course, if you use certain Greek manuscripts, you would have to go with the second option. It is beyond the scope of this book to get into why certain manuscripts have been preferred over others. (I have read Greek “proofs” that the word for large must refer to the epistle and not the letters, but I am not convinced. Size is the issue whether it is the size of the epistle or the size of the letters. Perhaps you Greek experts out there can make a case proving that Paul meant the size of the letters. I can’t prove it, and I’m not going to parrot someone else’s argument that I cannot prove myself.)

One commentator points out that all Greek writing of the day was fairly large, and if Paul had to write any larger than that, he would probably have been blind. I was not around then and cannot vouch for that, but it is an interesting point.

I would not claim conclusive proof either way, but I would lean toward the “long letter to the Galatians” interpretation because it can fit into the context in a way that the “big letters” interpretation cannot. In the verses that follow, Paul compares himself to the fake apostles who just want to make a show in the flesh. You could read the “long letter” interpretation in context to mean, “Look how much I care for you, as shown by the effort I put into writing you this long letter myself with my own hand. Some preachers don’t care about your well-being at all, but just want to glory in your flesh.” That would at least flow into the next verses, while I can’t find a reasonable way that “Look at the big letters I used when I handwrote this letter” would flow into the next verses.

If you want to weigh this one yourself, the next verses are: “As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ. For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh. But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world.”

I am not claiming conclusive proof for either interpretation; I don’t believe that there is firm proof either way. Given that this is the case, opponents of healing cannot use this as a concrete “proof text” that Paul used big letters. I believe that the evidence leans the other way.

Even if Paul did use big letters, that still does not prove that he did so because he had an eye problem!

Now what about the fact that Paul dictated letters (as he dictated Romans to Tertius)? That does not prove that he could not see straight. If the chairman of a big corporation dictated a letter to his secretary (back in the days when people like that had secretaries, before they were renamed administrative assistants, before the administrative assistants were “downsized” out because the boss could just use email), was that proof that he couldn’t see straight? It is probable that Paul dictated most of his letters, given Galatians 6:11 above. He may have had to. Paul spent a lot of time in jail. I don’t know how jailers then felt about giving Paul a pen and paper to write notes to his friends, but it is possible that the jailers did not want Paul to write escape plans or use a pen as a weapon as modern survival manuals show you how to do.

But what about Galatians 4:15, where the Galatians would have plucked out their own eyes and given them to Paul? This is possibly nothing more than a simple statement of affection. Even if Paul had temporary eye trouble at the first from his stoning (also very possible), he surely did not keep it. Since the trouble Paul had in Galatia was only “at the first” and not ongoing, we know that this definitely could not have been a lingering eye problem that was a “thorn in the flesh” to Paul. Paul’s thorn was an ongoing problem throughout his ministry, not anything that he only had “at the first,” so whatever it was he dealt with in Galatia could NOT have been his thorn in the flesh because his problem at Galatia was healed and didn’t come back.

What about Paul’s inability to even see well enough to even recognize the High Priest? Let’s look at the passage in question ALONG WITH the 3 verses that precede it and the one after it, without which we might lack insight into the verses that Dr. Duntz likes so much:

Acts 22:30-23:6:

On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?

Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

Paul was appearing before the chief priests (plural) as well as the council. We read explicitly that Paul made a statement while he was earnestly beholding the council. It does not say that he was looking at the high priest or any of the chief priests at the time. Therefore, Paul probably did not know whose voice it was that commanded him to be struck, and that was why he didn't recognize that it was the high priest who had said it. We can also see that Paul could tell that some were Pharisees and some were Sadducees, which was probably a visual thing because there was no audible comment up until that point that would have shown Paul that fact. (I suppose Paul could have perceived it supernaturally, but there was probably no need for that given what he saw.) Furthermore, there at least isn't anything in Scripture to indicate that the high priest would dress differently, so that is bringing in an extra-biblical argument. We should not assume that it had to be the case. A recent picture of the United States Supreme Court at this writing (as high a judicial "council" as you'll find anywhere) shows that the Chief Justice wears exactly the same style and color of robe as the Associate Justices.

Why did Paul take Doctor Luke with him? To help him preach the gospel, of course. Luke may have been a doctor, but his authorship of the gospel of Luke and the book of Acts demonstrates that he was no mere hired nurse to take care of Paul's medical problems! There is no indication anywhere that Luke was around for the purpose of practicing medicine on Paul. See the answer to the objection Paul Did Not Believe in Faith Healing because He Had a Doctor \(Luke\) Accompany Him for more elaboration on this particular issue.

What about Paul talking about the outward man perishing? He means that our bodies are mortal. We will all die eventually unless Jesus comes back soon. Paul could not have meant that a disease was killing him before he could finish his course for God, because Paul did finish his course. Although the Bible does not state it explicitly, historical tradition is that Paul was martyred. He did not die of any kind of illness.

What about his bodily presence being weak? Paul was simply saying that he was accused of not being much of a Hollywood act when he was ministering; his appearance and speech were unimpressive. See the next section for a good rebuttal of the idea that Paul was physically weak.

If Paul had eye trouble, why did he "set his eyes on" the sorcerer in Acts 13:6-12 while saying something fairly lengthy? How could he "steadfastly behold" the man at Lystra? Why would the man at Lystra get faith to be healed looking at someone who was suffering from a terrible eye disease? For that matter, why would anyone else in Paul's ministry receive faith to be healed while listening to a man with an obvious, chronic problem?

If Paul's eyes were so bad, then why, near the end of his life, did he ask Timothy to bring him books and parchments (2 Timothy 4:13)? I don't imagine that they had special large print editions of everything back then. Paul would not have asked for things that he couldn't read!

If Paul's eyes were bad, wouldn't it be ironic that God used him to heal all the sick people on an island, but he had to stay sick himself? (The Greek word translated others in the phrase, "Others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed," means the remaining ones in Greek, not simply some other people.) Why would people throng to a visibly sick man and expect healing? If they saw Publius well and Paul sick, they probably would have figured they had a 50/50 chance of being healed. Also notice that Paul didn't tell anyone to keep his illness because it was a thorn in the flesh. They all were healed. Paul certainly didn't preach "thorn in the flesh" theology when it came to sickness!

The anointing on Paul was so strong at Ephesus that handkerchiefs and aprons that had touched his body caused diseases to depart from those they touched (Acts 19:11-12). Since Paul was the source of these cloth items, it would be unreasonable to think that any illness would have survived in Paul's body with that same anointing on it! Besides, if Paul had an eye infection or some other obvious disease, the people would have avoided touching anything that had touched Paul, rather than touching others with items that had been on Paul's body! In fact, people should have been bringing anointed cloths to HIM if he had a disease. Of course, Paul could simply have taken one of the anointed cloths and laid it on himself if he were sick and he would have been healed too!

If Paul were sick, he could not have said to Agrippa, "I would to God that not only you, but also all who hear me today, might become both almost and altogether such as I am, except for these chains" (Acts 26:29). It is obvious that Paul did not want anyone sick, as he kept getting the sick healed in his ministry. If Paul were chronically ill, he would have had to tell Agrippa, "I wish you were completely like me, except for these chains and this stinking disease that God won't take away because it's my thorn in the flesh."

If Paul was sick, why did he tell the Romans, "And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ" (Romans 15:29)? It was common knowledge that Paul brought healing when he preached the gospel and that this was part of the gospel of Christ. When Christ Himself came and preached the gospel, healing was a notable part of it. In fact, the Bible pattern is that this part of the gospel should attract the attention of sinners. If Paul were sick, he would not be coming in the fullness of the gospel as it was known then. How sad that anyone today could think that "the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ" does not include physical healing now as it did then!

The Bible does not even insinuate that the apostle Paul had an incurable eye disease, or any other ongoing disease, for that matter.

But interestingly, Paul did have eye trouble when He first encountered Jesus – he went completely BLIND and was then healed when Ananias laid hands on him! It would be ridiculous to think that God's will would be for Paul to recover from total blindness back then, but later to be stuck with partial blindness! He was healed of temporary blindness when he received the Holy Spirit. Given that he had the Holy Spirit from that point forward, it would make no sense that the same Holy Spirit that cured total blindness at first would then be unable or unwilling to heal him of partial blindness!

Compare Your Health to Paul's!

If you think Paul was sick, read 2 Corinthians and compare what his body endured to what you think you could endure. He walked all over the map to preach the gospel. He was often poorly clothed, poorly fed and cold during his journeys. He was often sleepless and fasting. He was lashed 39 times on 5 different occasions, beaten with rods 3 times, stoned and left for dead once, and shipwrecked 3 times. This man was amazing! How do you think you would have held up under these circumstances? Would people today who think they have to endure a thorn in the flesh be able to keep up with Paul in his travels, and "faint not" (2 Corinthians 4:1)? Why do people think they have to live with their illness instead of expecting that "the life of Jesus might be made manifest in our body...the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (2 Corinthians 4:10-11), as Paul did?

If anything, Paul's physical survival despite these tortures and problems is a testimony to the ability of the Holy Spirit to "quicken our mortal body," as Paul wrote (Romans 8:11).

Paul told Timothy that he had finished his course (2 Timothy 4:7), so his "thorn" did not shorten his life. How could Paul have labored more abundantly than the others at Corinth (2 Corinthians 11:23) if he was such a sick, weak man? Paul worked day and night in secular labor to pay for his preaching expenses at Thessalonica (2 Thessalonians 3:8), and then he preached on top of that! Not bad for someone who was likely stoned to death and raised to life at Lystra! He says in 1 Corinthians 15:32 that he fought with beasts at Ephesus. (It does not seem that this would refer to people, since the disciples would not let Paul into the theater when there was an uproar, and there is no account in Acts 19 that Paul actually got into fights with anyone at Ephesus; he avoided fights with men there.) How would you like to fight with wild animals while in perfect health?

Can you see the utter stupidity of thinking that cancer that confines you to a sickbed in pain could possibly be your "thorn in the flesh?" Would you be able to live as Paul did with his thorn in the flesh? No! Then what you have is not what Paul called his thorn in the flesh! If you cannot "labor abundantly" as Paul did for the Gospel's sake, your condition has nothing on earth to do with Paul's thorn, because Paul's thorn didn't stop him from finishing his course and doing everything that God wanted him to do.

Strength in Weakness

Does God make you strong while He supposedly makes you weak with sickness? The fact that God strengthened Paul in his weakness should show you that God is into strengthening His saints, not weakening them. It was the people who beat Paul who weakened him, not God. God is our strength, not our weakness! If you don't believe that, check out the section Condition: Weakness to see a huge list of Scriptures about God being your strength! According to Romans 8:11, part of the real Holy Spirit's job is to STRENGTHEN your mortal body, not WEAKEN it!

Paul rejoiced because of God's strength that manifested itself in his weakness. How can anyone who has nothing but weakness in his body think that he is in Paul's condition? If God's strength is not manifesting itself in you, you aren't like Paul. Paul was made strong in his weakness. This is yet more proof that God is the Healer and not the Sickener. If you aren't made strong in your weakness, you certainly aren't in Paul's position.

Sufficient, Not Insufficient, Grace

God said that His grace was sufficient for Paul. How can people stay sick and think that they have Paul's thorn in the flesh? They must think that God's grace is insufficient for their healing. God kept Paul alive until he had accomplished all that God wanted him to do. God healed Paul every time his persecutors beat him up. Compare this to alleged "thorns in the flesh" that cut good men down in the prime of life, leaving the will of God in their lives largely undone. That can't be the same thing.

If the Church Fathers and Famous Bible Scholars Believed Paul's Thorn Was a Disease, They Were Wrong

Many great historical church figures did not know about the baptism with the Holy Spirit or many other things that we take for granted today. We can admire them for the work they did. But the only valid test of doctrine is Scripture itself, not the opinions of church leaders. It does not matter if all great figures in church history believed that Paul's thorn was an illness. If they did, they were all wrong. Paul said it was a messenger of Satan, not an illness. Besides, Martin Luther and John Calvin, to name two, did not believe that Paul's thorn was a sickness, so it is an overgeneralization to say that "all" historical teachers taught that.

As far as the early church writers go, the fact that someone wrote that Paul had ophthalmia a long time ago does not prove that it was so. You had people writing that Jesus changed the color of a woman's dress as a child and other nonsense. There is a whole body of "early centuries" works known incorrectly as the "lost books of the Bible." It is too bad that they were not actually lost! There are entire books full of nonsense, speculation, and anti-Scriptural content. There were good reasons that they were not included in the canon of Scripture even though they were circulating at the time. The fact that they were written a century or two after Christ died does not mean that they were right!

What if someone in the future said, "Back around the start of the third millennium, writings had been good for quite a while. Look, we just found a book from that era claiming that Joseph Smith will help judge the world, and another book that says that Jesus was "a god." Because they're from that era, they must be right." That would be rather silly, wouldn't it?

It is puzzling how many people whose rallying cry is, “Only Scripture!” make arguments like this one that are based on a majority consensus, which has nothing in itself to do with Scripture. Divine healing must be proven right or wrong based on Scripture, so any “overwhelming” consensus is meaningless unless that “consensus” can point you to SCRIPTURE to prove that Paul had a disease. Remember, the overwhelming consensus in the wilderness was that Israel could not take the land as God had commanded! The crowd is often wrong, as Scripture shows repeatedly. People made idolatrous golden calves, whined about how Egypt was better, demanded a king, and so on. I agree with the “Only Scripture!” admonishment, so any evidence needs to be based on Scripture. Many of the famous commentators knew nothing about being baptized with the Holy Spirit, either, but their general position against it does not mean they were right. Scripture is the ONLY arbiter of what is correct.

Paul’s Thorn Didn’t Stop Anyone Else from Getting Healed through His Ministry

As a famous healing minister asked a long time ago, if Paul’s thorn in the flesh didn’t stop anyone from getting healed in his ministry, why should it stop anyone TODAY from being healed? Think about it. Given Paul’s success in healing the sick, he couldn’t possibly have been preaching the “God wouldn’t heal me,” “Put-up-with-your-sickness-through-God’s-strength” version of 2 Corinthians 12:7-10 cited so often by critics of divine healing. If Paul himself really believed what unenlightened Christians say today – that God lets some people stay sick as a thorn in the flesh – Paul surely would have made some exceptions instead of healing all the sick people on the island of Melita. Paul did not practice what some people accuse him of saying in 2 Corinthians 12:7-10 .

A Thorny Point about Jesus

Jesus is the same today as He was when He walked the earth (Hebrews 13:8). There is NO account when He walked the earth that He ever told someone to keep an illness because the illness was that person’s “thorn in the flesh” to keep him humble or some such nonsense. In fact, He didn’t even choose who got healed in many cases. ANYONE with ANY illness (which would have included Paul if he had been present then, which we know he wasn’t) could have been healed just by touching Jesus’ clothes, without Jesus even knowing who touched Him! Since He is the same today, ANYONE can receive healing from Him today. No one has to be stay sick. Thus, Paul would not have had to stay sick either.

In Conclusion

God didn't heal Paul's thorn in the flesh because it was not an illness! It was an angel of Satan sent to get Paul beaten up everywhere he went. Although we are redeemed from sickness, we are not redeemed from persecution for the gospel's sake. If you are being tortured for your faith, we might listen to you talk about a thorn in the flesh buffeting you. If you are simply sick, your condition has nothing to do with what Paul was discussing. Sickness is not, and never has been, a "thorn in the flesh" that God will not remove! God could not legally require Paul – or you – to endure something that Jesus bore for you and redeemed you from!

“Messenger” of Satan Defined

This section is additional backup for the objection reply about [Paul’s thorn in the flesh. You can skip to the next section if you’re reading the book straight through if you want. This is supplemental information to prove that Paul’s thorn was a sentient being, not a sickness, in case you’re interested.]

If we are to believe that Paul’s thorn in the flesh was an illness, we must believe that the word messenger in the phrase, “the messenger of Satan sent to buffet me” refers to a disease or a thing, not a being. Given that the Greek word used for messenger (angelos) appears often in the New Testament, let’s look at all the places in the New Testament where this same Greek word is used, and see what conclusion we reach. I have underlined the word into which angelos was translated in each verse below. I have left out one case where a related word that means angelic was translated “as the angels.” The summary statistics are shown at the end.

This should be proof to even the most stubborn healing critic that Paul's thorn in the flesh, a messenger (angelos) of Satan, was a sentient being, not a disease.

“Healed” Defined

The Greek word for healed in 1 Peter 2:24 is iaomai. The Hebrew word for healed in Isaiah 53:5 is rapha.

Places Where the Greek Word iaomai Is Used

Here is a complete list of places in the Bible where the Greek word iaomai appears. Once you go through this list, it should settle for you the fact that Peter refers to physical healing, not forgiveness, your relationship with God, or anything else. If it means healed elsewhere, we need to interpret it as healed in 1 Peter 2:24 as well.

“The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed.” – Matthew 8:8

“And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour.” – Matthew 8:13

“For this people’s heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.” – Matthew 13:15

“Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.” – Matthew 15:28

“The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,” – Luke 4:18

“And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judaea, and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.” – Luke 5:17

“And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judaea and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;” – Luke 6:17

“And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.” – Luke 6:19

“Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.” – Luke 7:7

“And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.” – Luke 8:47

“And the people, when they knew it, followed him: and he received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.” – Luke 9:11

“And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon’s, greatly wondering.” – Acts 3:11

“And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.” – Acts 9:34

“How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.” – Acts 10:38

“For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.” – Acts 28:27

“And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed.” – Hebrews 12:13

“Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.” – James 5:16

“Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.” – 1 Peter 2:24

There are 3 instances connected with the same prophecy where at least at first, one might conclude that it really refers to some kind of spiritual healing, but even then, it would be hard to prove that the word does not mean refer to physical healing that would result if Israel turned back to God. For those who say that it would be a spiritual healing, let me remind you that a person who is born again does not get spiritually healed; he gets spiritually reborn – raised from the dead! He doesn't get a spiritual healing; he gets a spiritual transplant. So that can't be what it's talking about there, either.

And given that these 3 instances all refer to the same prophecy that Isaiah gave, would it not makes sense to ascertain whether the original prophecy itself referred to physical healing? The word used in Isaiah is rapha, which also refers to the kind of healing a physician would do – in fact, rapha happens to be the exact Hebrew word for physician! (See the section below for more on this.)

So far, based on the uses of iaomai above, any unbiased reader should be able to determine that the word iaomai does indeed refer to physical healing every time it is used, not any kind of “spiritual” healing.

The only other place where there could even be any question would be where Jesus said that He was anointed to heal (iaomai) the brokenhearted. But the word brokenhearted in the Greek, while it could include emotional brokenness, is certainly not restricted to it. The word syntribo is translated brokenhearted only once in the New Testament – in the verse just mentioned (see Luke 4:18-19). The word is also translated as follows in these other New Testament verses:

“A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.” – Matthew 12:20

“Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.” – Mark 5:4

“And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.” – Mark 14:3

“And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him.” – Luke 9:39

“For these things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.” – John 19:36

“And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.” – Romans 16:20

“And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.” – Revelation 2:27

There is nothing emotional about the meaning of this word anywhere else in the New Testament. The real meaning of the word is bruised or shattered. While an emotional distraught person could be thought of as “crushed” in popular parlance, it is clear that this word is not restricted to emotional issues, though it probably does include them. Anyone physically crushed by Satan is someone Jesus is anointed to heal as well, as proved in Acts 10:38.

Other than the three Isaiah-related verses and the Luke 4:18-19 passage above (all of which we just proved could still point to physical healing), all other verses very obviously refer to physical healing.

Conclusion: The word iaomai in 1 Peter 2:24 means physically healed.

“What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?” – Lamentations 2:13

“The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.” – Ezekiel 34:4

“Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed. And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.” – Ezekiel 47:8-9

So we see that the word rapha used in Isaiah 53:5 is also translated physician. Given its usage in the Bible, there is no question that it refers to healing the way we normally would think of it. Although there are a few references to healing a thing (backsliding, an altar, waters), there is no question that when it refers to healing a person, it means healing a person as we would understand it! So again, an unbiased reader should conclude that healed in Isaiah 53:5 means physically and emotionally healed. So Peter does well to quote Isaiah using a similar Greek word for healed, which interestingly, is also similar to the Greek word iatros that also means physician.

Objection: Job Was a Godly Man, Yet God Let Him Get Sick

I am being charitable in my statement of this objection, and at least giving the objector credit for realizing that it was not God who made Job sick. Some people think that God did it, for one of two reasons. One would be because they have not read the explicit statement that the devil, not God, made Job sick (Job 2:4-7). The other would be that they are confused because Job 42:11 appears to teach that the LORD brought evil upon Job by letting Satan attack Job. In either event, Satan was the direct agent of the calamities and God was definitely the one who healed Job (Job 42:10) and undid Satan's work in Job's life.

From this, we should learn that it is the devil who makes people sick and God who heals them, not the other way around.

The main thing to know is that you cannot be "Job 2" under the New Covenant because you have authority over the devil, which Job did not have. You have a healing covenant with God, which Job, living in the time before even the Law of Moses, did not have. You really could stop reading this answer right here if you're worried about being another Job, but you can read on to dig a lot deeper.

You don't need to avoid the book of Job for fear that hearing that part of the Word of God will take away your faith. Faith comes by hearing the Word of God. The Word, including the book of Job, produces faith! You don't have to worry that reading Job will get you into unbelief. I got healed of allergies I'd had all my life by reading the book of Job, so I get quite passionate about that book! Faith came by hearing what the Word really had to say, not by what many people think it says who haven't read it carefully.

Let's examine the typical arguments that say that you could be another Job:

JOB: YOUR EXAMPLE OF PATIENT SUFFERING

by Professor Kranken Heitlieber

Job was a perfect and upright man who feared God and eschewed evil (Job 1:1). God's plan was to have Job be sick to prove his character. So perfect Job got sick as a dog. You name it, he had it. Job humbly and lovingly resigned himself to the will of God, saying, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked I shall return thither: the LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD." In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly (Job 1:21-22). After all, the Word of God tells us that Job's siblings and acquaintances "comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him" (Job 42:11), and we know that Job spoke of the Lord the thing that was right (Job 42:8). We can't wriggle out of Job 42:11 by saying that God only passively permitted it, because the Hebrew verb is causative in that verse. GOD destroyed Job without cause when Satan moved Him to do it (Job 2:3).

Regardless of what simplistic and uneducated faith preachers say, it was not Job's fear or any other shortcoming that was the cause – Job 2:3 says that there was no cause! The only reason God allowed Satan to beat up Job is that He considered Job his trophy to show off to Satan, that no matter how miserable Job got, he would not curse God and die because he was such a great guy.

Rather than pestering God for healing as some so-called faith Christians do today, Job humbly accepted that the LORD had taken everything away from him, despite his perfect walk with Him. If Job's statement were wrong, he would have been sinning, so Job must have been right. Although our flesh rebels at the thought, it was the perfect will of God for his life that his animals and servants should be killed and kidnapped, all his children killed, and his body tortured with a lingering, wasting illness. The will of God can be mysterious to us at times, but He has a purpose for bad things. He works all these things to our good (Romans 8:28). We must accept that God brings calamity into our lives for a higher purpose.

Job said, "What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips" (Job 2:10). Job understood the precious lesson that God gives us both good things and bad things. You, like Job, must learn to contentedly receive evil from the hand of God. Job was not sinning when he said this, so we know that this is a correct statement that bears the same force as any other doctrinal verse in the Bible. We can receive evil from God. Job did not try to undo the will of God in his life, but suffered patiently, realizing the great truth we see elsewhere that there is "a time to weep... a time to mourn...a time to lose" (Ecclesiastes 3:4, 6).

Job proved that he did not just serve God for the money, as some shallow Christians do today. Satan thought that Job did, but Job proved otherwise with his patient endurance. He was willing to serve God no matter what God brought on him. Here we find some of the most touching, beautiful words in the entire Bible, and my personal favorite verse, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him" (Job 13:15).

God gave Satan permission to afflict Job, so He may choose to give Satan permission to afflict you, too. Don't complain as Job did about the sickness that God allows you to have; just praise your loving heavenly Father who may see fit in His wisdom to have Satan steal from you, destroy you and even kill you when a higher purpose is served.

So next time you're sick, remember that you could be another Job. Endure your trial with patient, satisfied resignation to the perfect will of God, as Job did, rather than presumptuously bossing Him around, ordering Him to heal you. Job resisted that temptation, and so should you. Receive evil from God cheerfully when "the Lord who giveth and taketh away" taketh away from you.

Job was Wrong

We know that it was Satan, not God, who was responsible for all of Job's calamities. "So Satan went forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown" (Job 2:7). Job was obviously wrong about it because he said that we receive evil from the Lord, not from Satan. So how could he not be sinning or making foolish charges against God? Because he didn't know any better! He had no way to know that the devil had made him sick. People back then were unaware of the existence of a personal adversary, so they tended to attribute everything to God. Job had no way to know God's true character. Sin is not imputed where there is no law (Romans 5:13) and that is why God wasn't upset. Job could not have known what was really going on, so God did not consider Job's charges foolish.

It is a fact that Job said the words that he did about the Lord hating taken away and his hating received evil from God. But these words were not the truth. Right before he said that the Lord taketh away, he said that he would return naked to his mother's womb. Job couldn't possibly return naked to his mother's womb! It is true that Job said that, but that doesn't make it true. The Bible has plenty of quotations in it that are true quotations of things that are not true! The Bible records what Goliath said to David, but Goliath's quotes were not true statements, though they are truly recorded in the Bible. David's flesh was not fed to the birds. Other enemies of Israel came and made dire and explicitly vulgar predictions that are recorded in the Bible, but which were not true statements either.

Job said that He would trust God even if God killed him, but he failed to realize that it was the devil, not God, doing the bad things to him. Job didn't even know that there was a real devil! (Many Christians today are not much better; they don't seem to believe in a personal devil either. When bad things happen to them, they blame God just as Job did. That is far less excusable when we have the light of the New Covenant and more Bible translations than we'll ever be able to read.)

Now what do we say about Job 42:11, where "the LORD" brought evil on Job, when earlier it was clearly stated to be the work of the devil? We can see that the Lord was obviously permitting the devil to do certain things, but not doing them Himself. However, we can check out the Hebrew and find that our dear professor is correct that the Hebrew used in Job 42:11 IS causative, so it looks like God had a part to play in it by "causing" Satan to be able to do it. But how can that be true when Satan is explicitly the one who afflicted Job? One explanation would be that God and Satan could share responsibility in the way that Matthew says that a centurion said things to Jesus while Luke says that he sent Jews and friends to say things to Jesus. Both are biblically correct. This would be an example of "indirect responsibility." Thus, it could be correct to say that the Lord did it and that Satan did it, if indeed God wanted Satan to do it. There would be precedent for this if we wanted to interpret it that way.

Is there any way that Job 42:11 can be interpreted to NOT indicate that the LORD brought evil on Job, given that it comes out and says it? Actually, there is. John 5:18 says that Jesus broke the Sabbath, and it does not directly quote someone else. However, Jesus made it clear that it WAS legal to heal on the Sabbath, which means that He did not actually break the Sabbath. If He had, He would have sinned and ruined the entire plan of salvation! The verse seems to be saying quite clearly that the Jews sought to kill Him because they THOUGHT that He had broken the Sabbath. Thus, Job 42:11 could be a parallel case where the INTENT of the people in the verse was indicated, not the TRUTH. They THOUGHT that the Lord had brought evil upon Job.

Thus far, Job had not made any railing, unfair accusations against God. Job was wrong, but he was not accusing God of wrongdoing. However, as you continue in the book of Job, Job makes more and more foolish and untrue accusations against God. For these, God rebuked him (see Job chapters 38 through 41), and Job had to repent (Job 42:6). Basically, Job ranted against God for all the things that God supposedly did to him, and finally God got tired of the slander and told Job to shut up! God said, and Job had to admit, that Job had “darkened counsel without knowledge” (Job 38:2, Job 42:3). Job said that he had “uttered that I understood not, things too wonderful for me, that I knew not...Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes” (Job 42:3, Job 42:6). Once Job repented of his false accusations against God, God healed him.

Now the part that is funny (not in the humorous sense, though) is that JOB admitted that the things he said were wrong and GOD said that the things Job said were wrong, but many CHRISTIANS want you to believe that these statements of Job are RIGHT: “The LORD giveth, and the LORD taketh away (Job 1:21)...Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? (Job 2:10)...For he breaketh me in a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds without cause (Job 9:17)...the Almighty (hath) vexed my soul (Job 27:2).”

The objectors usually stress the statements at the beginning of Job that say that he was perfect and upright, that he feared God and eschewed evil. However, Job did have to repent at the end of the book for speaking things about God that were not right. The fact that Job lived a morally pure life does not mean that his theology was correct. If Job were right about everything, he would not have had to repent of his ignorant babblings.

By the way, the book of Job should prove to you that damages from lightning and windstorms are not “acts of God,” no matter what your insurance company says. They were expressly acts of Satan in the book of Job. Besides, if God sent all storms, Jesus sinned by rebuking a storm, because He would have been undoing the works of God!

Satan’s Diminishing Rights

Of course, we must now meet the next objection, which is, “Yeah, but God allowed it! Maybe He didn’t do it, but He was complicit in it, as He explicitly allowed Satan to make Job sick.”

Obviously He did. Based on Job 1:10, it appears that at some point God had put a hedge around Job, and it is implied that the devil could not get at him because of it. Why did God choose to remove the hedge of protection? Is this not tantamount to committing these acts himself, leading us back to Professor Heitlieber's argument that God did them? After all, God seemed to grant Satan permission to do evil to Job. This is amplified by the fact that God seemed to take down part of the hedge in two phases. At first, Satan was allowed to destroy a lot of things except for Job's body, but later, he was allowed to destroy Job's body as long as Job was not killed in the process.

However, "allowing" Satan to do things in a general sense does not implicate God. If it did, God would bear the guilt for every act of stealing, killing and destroying that Satan does on the earth today. God wasn't really the one of "allowed" it – man was. Adam's sin allowed Satan into the earth. He has had the right to be here and try to hurt people ever since then. That was never the perfect plan of God, but man messed up God's perfect plan. Thank God, Jesus came and we will live on a new earth in the future where things are perfect again.

Job was not under a covenant with God that excluded Satan from afflicting him. The promises of healing and protection had not yet been given to man. Thus, Satan had a legal right to afflict Job. When you think about it, Satan still has the legal right to try to afflict you. Unlike Job, however, you have a covenant that you can stand on to make Satan flee. Job did not have any promise that he could claim to make Satan stop hurting him. He did not have a healing covenant with God as you do. He did not have authority over the devil.

However, God was not unjust the way you might think He was when he "let down" the hedge around Job. In fact, if God NEVER gave Satan access to Job, given Job's lack of covenant as a fallen man on a fallen earth, God Himself could be accused of being unfair – to Satan! That seemed to be Satan's complaint, actually – that God had hedged Job in such a way that Satan had no access to Job, despite the fact that Job had no covenant that denied Satan access to Job, and despite the fact that Job lived on a fallen earth where Satan was allowed to walk to and fro seeking whom he could devour.

Let's look at a similar case that was also before the Law of Moses. God allowed the Egyptians to afflict Israel with cruel servitude for many generations. The Law of Moses showed that you did not have to be slaves of another nation if you served the Lord because you would defeat your enemies every time (Deuteronomy 28:7). However, the Law and its corresponding Old Covenant had not yet been given, so the Israelites in Egypt could not claim any promise to be delivered right away. The only promise that was theirs to claim was that at some point God would visit them and bring them back to their own land because God had promised it to Abraham (Genesis 15:13-16).

Also consider that you could not be born again under the Old Covenant. No matter how much faith you had, the new birth simply wasn't available back then. You could not live in New Covenant rights and privileges under the Old Covenant. Likewise, you could not walk in the blessings of the Law of Moses before the Law of Moses was given. Job had neither the New Covenant nor the Law of Moses to stand on.

Satan was “allowed” to afflict Israel in Egypt. He had a right to do it then. Once God gave His Law through Moses, Satan’s rights were restricted. He could only bring Israel into bondage if Israel forsook the Lord. If Israel walked with God, God’s promise was that they could not be brought into subjection like that again.

Over time, as God gave additional promises, Satan’s rights diminished. Under the New Covenant, NONE of Satan’s rights is left. He has no business dominating you in any area. There is not a single case in the New Testament where Jesus told a sick person, “God has given Satan permission to afflict you. Bear it patiently.” No, Jesus was manifested to DESTROY the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), not DEPLOY the works of the devil. The only time that Satan seems to have the “right” to destroy anyone’s flesh is if that person is being subjected to church discipline for gross, unrepented sin (1 Corinthians 5:1-5). Even then, as proved elsewhere in this book, that is not a true “right” – NOTHING Satan does is legal in God’s eyes in the New Covenant. He lost everything when Jesus died for our sins and rose again.

Job is Commended for His Patience, Not for His Faith

Job is not listed in Hebrews 11 with those of great faith! Job’s patience is no laughing matter; he did not give up when he had lost everything, his body was in tatters, his wife told him to curse God and die, and his friends accused him of all kinds of wrong things that he had never done. His patience truly was extraordinary. Let’s give the guy a break; he didn’t have a basis for faith based on the Law of Moses, let alone the New Covenant. He may not have known what was going on, but he still honored God most of the time and he maintained his integrity throughout all his trials by never cursing God.

We should not belittle the patience of those who are unenlightened concerning their redemptive right to be healed. I’m sure that there are many good people who are terribly sick and yet exhibit more patience than most Christians who know that healing was in Christ’s atonement. Let Job be a lesson that God will honor the patience of the unenlightened. Yes, God would get much more glory if they got healed and rose from their sickbeds. However, we should admit that God does get some degree of glory from sick saints who manifest the fruit of the Spirit. Of course, the fruit of the Spirit glorifies God, not the sickness! But it sure beats having them fuss and complain all day, as so many sick people do. It isn’t God’s best, but it isn’t the devil’s worst, either. Even if the devil seems to win by robbing them of their lives, they’ll never be sick again! That beats being in perfect health and spending eternity in the lake of fire, doesn't it?

Job's Sickness Was Temporary, and God Healed Him

It is not stated exactly how long Job was sick, but it appears to have been less than a year. Job talked of possessing months of vanity, not years (Job 7:3). It may seem like forever as you trudge through the chapters of ignorant poetic ramblings from Job's "comforters." (But aren't these Bible verses, too? Yes, it is a fact that the statements were made, but God Himself said that Job's so-called comforters had committed folly, and not spoken of him that which is right [Job 42:8], so while those words were said, they are not necessarily reliable sources of doctrine.)

It appears that Job was sick for less than 1% of his life (discussed below) and we know that God healed Job. So you have no excuse for saying that someone who died of cancer was another Job. The real Job was healed and was not sick for years on end. The real Job did not die of cancer. If you stay sick or die, you are definitely NOT another Job!

Why You Cannot Be "Another Job" under the New Covenant

Job did not have the New Covenant, which was the first and only covenant to give its adherents direct power over the devil himself. Even the giants of faith in the Old Testament could not command the devil to stop doing anything. Job could not have spoken to Satan himself. But you can!

Since we know that Satan is the author of sickness, and we know that we have authority over him, we can command him to take his hands off our bodies. Job couldn't do that, so he wasn't expected to do it. But as a New Testament believer, you do not have to sit there and let the devil beat you up! The devil must bow his knee when you command him to leave in the name of Jesus.

Jesus gave His followers power over all demons, all sicknesses and everything the devil has to offer (Luke 10:19). Job did not have this power.

Job did not know the Mediator ("daysman"). We know that there is one mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus (1 Timothy 2:5). Job seemed to know that if he had had one, he would not have been sick so long:

Job 16:21:

O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour!

Job 9:32-35:

For he is not a man, as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgment.

Neither is there any daysman betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me:

Then would I speak, and not fear him; but it is not so with me.

Job 19:25:

For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.

Even Elihu understood – and told Job – that if there were a ransom (an atonement), it would be cause for sickness to be removed! What an amazing insight for someone of the day! Read Job 33:19-25. Someone who didn't know the Old Covenant let alone the New Covenant understood something that most New Covenant believers today don't even know yet!

Job never had that ransom paid for him during his lifetime. But under the New Covenant, we have the ransom Elihu talked about in the person of Jesus Christ! Thus, we should expect to be delivered from going down to the pit, for God has found a ransom. Our flesh should be fresher than a child's. We should return to the days of our youth. In other words, we should be healed!

How Do You Read Job?

If you get the idea from the book of Job that God is a meanie who will tear apart your life to test you, you are reading Job incorrectly. Thus saith the Lord. That's not just my opinion – it's God's opinion. Here is what the Lord "thus saith" in James 5:11: "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." You are supposed to see God's pity and tender mercy when you read Job. Otherwise, you have not read it the way the Holy Spirit wants you to read it! The context here is that Job (along with the prophets that James has just mentioned) was an example of patience in suffering affliction, even though he was not an example of faith or spiritual knowledge. And God, in His pity and mercy, forgave Job for the bitter statements he made about Him while he was in pain.

I will now return to my personal testimony of how I was healed of lifelong (until then) allergy problems after reading the book of Job! Once I saw that the devil sickens and God heals, I realized that God would undo the devil's works in my body, as he did for Job. I also realized when Job spoke of a Redeemer that I knew my Redeemer! Job believed that if he could just meet his Redeemer, he would be free from his illness. I had met my Redeemer, and I realized that I should therefore be free from my illness. Elihu said that if there were an atonement, someone's flesh could be like that of a child – he could be healed! I realized that the atonement of which Elihu spoke had already been made for me. I knew the very Redeemer of whom Job had only a fleeting glimpse. I saw that if there were only a mediator, Job would have been spared his trials, and I realized that I have the one Mediator between God and man – the man Christ Jesus! Thus, NONE of Job's trials have any right to happen to me! I saw that I had it way better than Job ever did. Armed with this knowledge, I believed that I received my healing when I prayed, knowing that it had to be God's will for me. Now I used to go through a box of tissues every 3 days or so at work, and the day after I believed that I received, those allergies acted up in probably the worst way I had ever experienced. My nose was just running like a faucet. But I would not back down and lie and say that I hadn't received when I prayed. I went to the park next door to spend some time with the Lord during my lunch hour, and those allergies disappeared during that lunch hour. They never came back!

I'm not suggesting that you sit and read the entire book of Job to a terminally ill person, but the fact is that faith comes by hearing all of the Word of God! So if you think that reading Job takes away your faith, you're reading Job incorrectly. Remember that Job's trial was a matter of months, not years. If you are sick for as small a percentage of your life as Job, you are doing very well!

The Time to Weep, Mourn and Lose

There is a time to weep, mourn and lose. Everyone you know will die unless Jesus returns soon, and you will no doubt weep and mourn when you lose friends and relatives. But you do not have to be robbed by the devil. You do not have to lose a single thing that God provided for you in Christ. It is NEVER the time to lose in the sense of not having the victory, because God always gives you the victory (2 Corinthians 2:14) and you can reign in life (Romans 5:17). (See You Win for a lot more proof of that.)

Use Job as an Encouragement Rather than an Objection!

Why is it that the people who make a big deal about the fact that Job got sick do not make a bigger deal out of the fact that God healed Job completely, and that there is no record of him ever getting sick again for the rest of his life? Anyone who thinks he is another Job should prepare to get completely healed and blessed with twice what he had before (Job 42:10)! Also, prepare to live another 140 years after you get healed without sickness or loss, as Job did (Job 42:16-17). If you do not get healed, stay healed, and get back twice what you lost, you are not another Job. If you stay sick more than a year, you are not another Job. If you experience this kind of trial for more than 1% of your life, you are not another Job. Expecting to have to patiently endure sickness forever is contrary to the book of Job! God healed Job!

In Closing

People will probably argue until Jesus returns about some of the particular nuances in the book of Job, but one thing about Job should be beyond argument – you can't be another Job today because you have authority over Satan and all his works. Job did not have that. Be glad that you live in a far better day than Job did! If Satan tries to do to you what he did to Job, you have God-given authority to stop him!

Because Job is such a difficult book for many people – including almost all preachers – I have written a large discussion in this book that I encourage you to read, entitled Job Explained.

Objection: Paul Told Timothy to Drink Wine Instead of Believing God for Healing

1 Timothy 5:23

Here we have several apparent problems: Paul told Timothy to use natural means to treat his stomach, and apparently, Timothy was often sick. Also, Paul didn't just "heal him," as some people say he could have done if healing were for all. The objector usually adds that Paul did not tell Timothy to believe for his healing or to speak to his body, believe that he received his healing, or anything else that we might tell people to do today.

The water could indeed have been the cause of Timothy's tummy trouble given Paul's exhortation to not drink it. (Some translations say "Drink no longer only water" instead of "Drink no longer water," but this is only someone's interpretation because the word only does not appear in the original Greek text.) I don't know whether this variety of wine was alcoholic or not; I'll let others debate that. However, he was assuredly not telling Timothy to go around all day with a buzz to avoid stomach trouble while causing liver trouble.

Many places on the earth today are known to have bad water, and people often get sick when they travel there if they drink it. This is not a curse that comes on them for sinning. The water just happens to have certain microorganisms or minerals in it. Instead of telling people to drink up and believe God, better counsel would be: "Drink something other than water. If you drink this water, you'll have frequent health problems!" Why get sick and believe God for healing when you can avoid the sickness in the first place? Why have recurring health problems like Timothy did if they're avoidable through natural means?

I went to such a place myself. Others warned me about the water before I went there, but certain drinks were made using local water, and I ended up feeling quite shaken up inside after drinking them, even though I wasn't drinking water by itself. So I figured I'd learned my lesson, and the next time I went there, I got other drinks that were NOT made with local water. But I still had issues because I had those drinks over ice, and you guessed it, it was ice made from the local water! I guess I figured that if it was frozen, it wouldn't affect me, but I was wrong. I was okay after the experience, but I can attest that it is better to just avoid certain conditions rather than believe to be healed! I believe that is the point of Paul's advice. I am very much in favor of divine healing, as Paul was, but if you were going to that country, I would definitely warn you away from the water (liquid or frozen!).

So what about Paul not exhorting Timothy to believe for his healing? Remember that this is the same Paul who wrote that our bodies were paid for (1 Corinthians 6:19-20), that the Lord is for the body (1 Corinthians 6:13), that we always triumph in Christ (2 Corinthians 2:14), that we reign in this life (Romans 5:17), that every knee bows when the name of Jesus is spoken (Philippians 2:9-11), and that all things are under Christ's feet and thus under ours (Ephesians 1:22-23). This same Paul described sickness at Corinth as a judgment for carnality (1 Corinthians 11:27-32), not the will of God. This is the same Paul who preached and had a man receive "faith to be healed" listening to his gospel (Acts 14:7-10). Paul must have preached healing for this man to have gotten faith from listening to him because faith comes by hearing God's Word.

This is the same Paul through whom special miracles were done, so that cloths that had touched him were taken to the sick, and they recovered (Acts 19:11-12). This same Paul healed all the sick people on a certain island in Acts 28:8-9. This same Paul raised a man from the dead (Acts 20:9-12). This same Paul chided so-called "apostles" who had no power and said that the kingdom of God is not only in word, but in power (1 Corinthians 4:19-20). Paul said that he had fully preached the gospel after saying that signs and wonders were done (Romans 15:18-19). He obviously considered Holy Spirit miracle power to be a normal part of the preaching of the gospel. It is sad that today sickness is so normal among church people that James might have to ask, "Is any among you NOT sick?"

So there is no way that you can say that Paul did not believe in healing. How could he not, when his body was abused frequently, and he always went on to the next place and preached some more! He was stoned and left for dead in Lystra (Acts 14:19-20), yet he got up and went back to that town the very next day after the believers prayed over him. Although this obviously caused a physical trial for him (Galatians 4:13), this trial was only "at the first," and then Paul was back to normal again!

Of course, the objection is based on the alleged "fact" that Paul did not tell Timothy that he had any power to do anything about it. That is a somewhat dubious proposition, since Paul did tell Timothy that God had given him the Spirit of power (2 Timothy 1:7). He also made a promise (which mothers should believe today) that God will preserve the physical life of the godly mother in childbirth (1 Timothy 2:15). That is a health promise, and it's in the same book as the verse about Timothy's stomach! Paul also told Timothy in the same book that men (this would include Timothy) should pray without doubting (1 Timothy 2:8), so Paul would not turn around and say anything to Timothy that would fuel doubt. (The Greek word for doubting could also correctly be translated as reasoning or even disputing, though this would not detract from the idea. Getting into reasoning instead of faith is how you can get into doubt, and any reasoning contrary to the Word would be disputing.) In short, you cannot truthfully say that Paul never said anything to Timothy about health or faith.

Paul was a father in the faith to Timothy, so Timothy had to know Paul's teachings on healing. Paul told Timothy to have nothing to do with fables and genealogies, but to minister "godly edifying which is in faith" (1 Timothy 1:4).

There is no reference to Timothy's stomach ailments in Second Timothy! So for all you know Timothy took Paul's advice from First Timothy and he didn't have any more trouble! Contrast that with people in the hospital, able to do little or nothing about world evangelism, thinking that this verse about Timothy's stomach proves that they have to stay stuck in an expensive hospital bed week after week.

Whatever was wrong with Timothy, it could not have been very serious. Timothy was still able to preach and minister to his congregation. He was not bedridden. Paul would be appalled if he could see how far some people have run with this one verse about ailments that could not have been major.

Paul told Timothy that Scripture makes you perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. How could you be perfect and furnished unto all good works if you were out of circulation because of illness? Keeping you healthy is part of what Scripture will do. Anyone even in the Old Testament could have known that from Proverbs 4:20-22.

It is surely a wrong assumption that Paul told Timothy to use wine instead of believing God for healing. Given the ministerial track record of the apostle Paul, it seems unlikely that Paul would never have counseled him to believe God for his healing. You can't prove an argument from silence either way. However, given Timothy's apparent trouble staying healthy, Paul gave him some natural advice. It is a good thing for Christians to do what they can in the natural to stay healthy. That is not unspiritual. Bodily exercise does profit a little (as Paul also told Timothy in 1 Timothy 4:7-8, although here the point is that exercising yourself unto godliness is far more important). You don't throw common sense out the window just because you're saved.

You can just read the verse in question (1 Timothy 5:23) and realize that Timothy was not constantly sick. Paul did not tell him to drink wine because of his illness. He said to do it because of his frequent illnesses. If you just stayed sick, that would be an illness, not illnesses in the plural. To have illnesses, you must first have an illness and then be healthy and then get another illness. Timothy could not have been ill all the time. Paul said the opposite. He gave Timothy some advice about what to do about the fact that he seemed to keep getting sick again after recovering from his sicknesses. Perhaps there was a water problem there, and Timothy needed to stop drinking the water because it was making him sick. Paul definitely did not tell Timothy, "Just accept that it isn't God's will for you to be healed of this supernaturally," as many today would think.

Since Timothy had recurring illnesses, for all you know Timothy did use his faith when he got sick to get rid of the illnesses and Paul was just trying to help Timothy not get sick in the first place!

This verse is a good answer to all who wonder if taking medicine is okay. It surely is if Paul told Timothy to use natural means to help him get healed. Why not do all you can to be in the health that is the known will of God (3 John 2)?

This is not the only time that Scripture refers to eating habits and health. Proverbs 25:16 gives us some natural advice against making yourself sick by pigging out on sweets: “Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.” (Side note: Solomon did not say not to eat sweets at all; he just said to do so in moderation.) You need to respect natural laws concerning eating to stay healthy. As any doctor can tell you, you can make yourself sick (without any help from the devil) simply by eating poorly. On the other end, do not become like some “health food nut” Christians who are busier promoting the gospel of brown rice, unbleached flour and tofu than the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ! This was not Jesus’ message and it is not our message. The only dietary advice Jesus ever gave was to eat His flesh and drink His blood! Paul even warned Timothy about people who commanded others to “abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.” (1 Timothy 4:3-5). So don’t let anyone tell you that you have to be a vegetarian to be healthy. If you want to avoid meats, that’s your privilege, but don’t try to force your preferences onto other people.

You should see the Biblical balance of neither eating unhealthily nor getting preoccupied with food.

So why didn’t Paul just “heal” Timothy? If healing was for Timothy, why did Paul give him natural advice instead of just laying hands on him and healing him? The answer to this question is obvious from First Timothy itself. Paul was writing from Macedonia to a man in Ephesus. Get out your map and you’ll see that Macedonia is not exactly around the corner from Ephesus! A personal visit to Timothy would have required a very long trip. Paul couldn’t lay hands on a man in Ephesus from Macedonia! If Paul were anywhere near Timothy, he could have just gone and visited him instead of writing him a long letter! That is the simple reason why Paul did not just “heal” him when he wrote First Timothy.

Anyone using this verse “against” healing should note that Paul’s advice to Timothy was explicitly so that Timothy would be healed. Paul did not say that Timothy’s “often infirmities” were his cross to bear and that he should accept them. As always, Paul’s view on illness was that it was something to be avoided, not accepted. This should be your view as well.

Acts 27:33-34 shows us another case where Paul gave people natural advice for their health.

The objector usually adds something about how Paul didn’t tell Timothy to “stand in faith” for his stomach. Paul did tell Timothy to follow after faith (1 Timothy 6:11), to “fight the good fight of faith” (1 Timothy 6:12) and to “hold faith” (1 Timothy 1:19). He was exhorted to be an example in faith (1 Timothy 4:12). He stressed the importance of “unfeigned faith” (1 Timothy 1:5), avoiding foolishness that was not the godly edifying which is in faith (1 Timothy 1:4), and that men were to pray without doubting (1 Timothy 2:8)!

Today, many people use this one verse to justify praying while doubting – doubting God’s willingness to heal, figuring that in His sovereignty, God may make an exception like as supposedly did for Timothy! That is NOT how Paul told Timothy that prayer should be done!

Because the faith exhortations were not in the context of Timothy's stomach, some people will consider them irrelevant to the subject. But actually, there is no real context to the verse about Timothy's stomach. The surrounding verses are totally unrelated.

Because Timothy was in church leadership, he was obligated to pray over the sick himself (James 5:14-16) since he would be in the class of "elder" described by James. God did not have one standard for Timothy's church and another for other churches, so Timothy had to believe in and practice the laying on of hands for healing himself.

2 Timothy 4:20:

Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

If Trophimus's experience "proves" that God wants some people to stay sick, then Demas's experience ten verses earlier in 2 Timothy 4:10 ("For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia") "proves" that God wants some people to forsake the ministry and love this present world. This is the classic mistake of letting experience decide doctrine. Things are not necessarily God's will just because they happen. Going to hell "happens" for many people, but that is never God's will. Walking out of love is never God's will, but it happens all the time, too. Even if an experience happened to someone in the BIBLE, that still does not mean that it should be used to determine doctrine. Judas betrayed Jesus and Peter denied Jesus three times. It would be awful to decide that we should also do those things because their experiences are recorded in Scripture.

The objector wants you to ignore the multitudes of people who were healed in the New Testament and build a doctrine on this one snippet of Scripture, where no doctrine is being put forth and an experience is related. This is truly letting the tail wag the dog. You never let someone's experience determine your doctrine – you get doctrine from passages that actually put forth doctrine!

If you want to know Paul's doctrine, you should look at verses such as 1 Corinthians 6:19-20, where Paul clearly states that your body and your spirit were both bought with the same price. He clearly lived out this doctrine as special miracles were done by his hands in Asia (Acts 19:11-12) and he healed everyone who was sick on the island of Melita (Acts 28:8-9), to cite only two cases.

People have used the verse in question as proof that the righteous must suffer illness. But we are not even told why Trophimus the Ephesian was sick, let alone whether or not God healed him later. As a gospel worker with Paul (Acts 20:4, Acts 21:29), he may well have had the problem that Epaphroditus did in Philippians 2:25-30 – suffering from overwork in the ministry. (Some ministers today also fall into this trap.) It is also entirely possible that Trophimus was recovering from a beating or other abuse he got for preaching the gospel. We know that Paul certainly endured a lot of that. We don't know why Trophimus was sick, but Paul definitely did not say that it was the will of God for him to be that way. He simply reported a fact. Even Paul himself ministered in Galatia "through infirmity of the flesh," but it is evident that God healed him because this condition was only "at the first," not an ongoing problem that Paul had to live with (Galatians 4:13).

Given the conditions under which the apostles had to minister, to say nothing of their beatings, it is truly amazing that more of them were not left somewhere sick. The fact that Trophimus is the exception should highlight the rule. God continued to restore His workers to health when they needed it.

What if we agree with the objector that because Trophimus was sick, that must have been the will of God? Following this “logic,” it must have been the will of God for the Corinthians to be carnal, for the Galatians and Colossians to be legalistic, for Alexander the Coppersmith to do Paul much harm, and for Demas to love this world and forsake Paul. It must have been God’s will for Judas to betray Christ and hang himself, too, and for David to commit adultery, and so on. After all, the Bible records these historical incidents, too. The fact that history was recorded honestly does not mean that God’s will was being done. Paul’s statement about Trophimus was not a teaching, only a statement of fact. You cannot use a mere statement of fact as a teaching.

Another angle some objectors take is that Paul should have healed Trophimus if healing is for all. There is certainly reason to suspect that Paul would have ministered to Trophimus. Why did Trophimus fail to receive his healing right away? We don’t know. There are many reasons why people can fail to receive their healing (see the Mistakes to Avoid section). Given that several other of Paul’s fellow workers lost their zeal for the Lord and deserted him or failed to stick up for him when he was greatly withstood by Alexander the Coppersmith (2 Timothy 4:14-16), and that this account is a few verses away from the Trophimus verse, it is possible that Trophimus had gotten himself out of the will of God for some reason. You cannot simply lay hands on a person who fails to do the known will of God even if you believe that it is the will of God for the person to be healed. We’ll never know for sure what happened in Trophimus’s case was because we don’t have the details. Thus, it is ridiculous to trot out a doctrine that God wants some people to stay sick because of a few words that report a fact.

If it is fair to blame Paul for Trophimus not walking in the light of his healing, we must also blame Paul for the failures of Demas and John Mark to continue with him in the ministry. Neither is fair to Paul. We don’t have authority over human wills and neither did Paul. While we’re at it, we could blame Jesus for not getting having any mighty miracles at Nazareth and be unfair to Him as well.

No one can prove that Trophimus stayed sick a long time or did not recover. Basing anything on that one verse is truly a paper-thin anti-healing doctrine.

Yet people build a castle on this verse. “Paul had a healing ministry but couldn’t heal Trophimus!” Watch out! Paul’s Lord could not heal the sick at Nazareth, either. This proves nothing other the people’s unbelief, which is stated as the reason for their failure to receive healing. The fact that Jesus left many sick at Nazareth does not prove that God wanted them sick and was unwilling to heal them supernaturally. Therefore, the fact that Paul left Trophimus sick at Miletum does not prove that God wanted Trophimus sick and was unwilling to heal him supernaturally.

Saying, “Paul had a powerful ministry, and Paul didn’t get Trophimus healed – that shows that healing is not God’s will for everyone” would lead to another miserable conclusion that going to heaven isn’t God’s will for everyone! Jesus didn’t get Judas to go to heaven. So we could say, “Jesus had a powerful ministry, and Jesus didn’t get Judas saved – that shows that salvation is not God’s will for everyone.” I hope that you can see the faulty logic in such a position.

One “Trophimus objector” pleads that Paul did NOT say that there was anything unusual about Trophimus’s case, so that shows that Paul accepted sickness as a normal part of life. I don’t know how anyone can believe that in light of Acts 28:8-9, where Paul got everyone who was sick healed on an entire island. If sickness was a normal part of life to be accepted, why didn’t he tell the people on Melita that instead of healing them all? I would also add that Paul did NOT say that there was anything unusual about Demas forsaking him in the same chapter, so that “shows” that Paul considers unfaithfulness to Jesus to be the norm that others should be expected to follow – if we follow the objector’s logic.

It is also possible that Paul prayed over Trophimus and that Trophimus followed Jesus’ instructions to “believe that he received” when he prayed, but his healing had not yet manifested in his body, just as the tree that Jesus cursed did not appear dead on the outside right away. Again, we can’t prove whether or not this is true. The eight words about Trophimus’s condition are not enough to prove anything.

What Little We DO Know about Trophimus from the Bible

Trophimus only appears three times in Scripture – in the verse in question and in these two:

Acts 20:4:

And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

Acts 21:29:

(For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

From Acts 20:4 we know that Trophimus accompanied Paul on his missionary journey that ended up taking him to Jerusalem. From Acts 21:19 we know that Trophimus had been in Jerusalem with Paul. However, it seems that this event had to have taken place on a PRIOR visit by Paul to Jerusalem. If you believe that it was the SAME visit that Paul made after he had been in Miletum bidding farewell to everyone, the healing objection has just disappeared in a puff of smoke because it means that Trophimus was healed so quickly that he was able to make up lost time and join Paul in Jerusalem! However, my take is that it was a PAST visit, and that Trophimus was unable to go with Paul on the last visit he made to Jerusalem before being sent to Rome, where he wrote 2 Timothy. I consider it too unlikely that Paul would write that he had “left” Trophimus sick at Miletum if Trophimus had immediately caught up with him. It would nice to assert that he did to kill the objection outright, but I couldn’t defend that explanation.

One could also square this by positing that the maps in the back of their Bibles are wrong (which is possible – they are not part of the divinely inspired writing), and that Paul made a mysterious fourth missionary journey after being in Rome and then returned there after visiting Miletum again. I consider that dubious even though it would be a “logical” explanation because of the mention of Trophimus as one of Paul’s companions above.

Conclusion

Why build a doctrine on one exceptional case, where we are never told why the man was sick, or if he remained that way? Wouldn’t it make more sense to build a doctrine on the rule rather than the exception? Rather than groping for some silly excuse to stay sick, build your doctrine on the crowds of people in the New Testament who were healed and the statements made by the Lord and His disciples under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit! No Scripture says that you cannot be healed, but plenty of them say that you can be healed. Base your doctrine and your believing on those Scriptures!

Get your doctrine from verses that actually teach doctrine, not from those that share someone’s experience. You’ll be on much steadier ground!

Objection: If You Could Always Get Healed, You Would Live Forever

I have probably heard as many objections along the line of “If you were redeemed from sickness, you would never die” as I have about Paul’s thorn, Job’s trials, Timothy’s stomach and Trophimus! This has become a very popular objection. The objector may go on to assert, “You don’t die of old age; you die because of some sickness!”

God did not promise you eternal life in a mortal body. He did promise you long, sickness-free life in your mortal body. Read Exodus 23:25-26. Here in the same promise, God said that He would take sickness away from you and that He would fulfill “the number of your days.” He did not promise that you would live forever, but He did promise that as long as you are here fulfilling your days, He would take sickness away from you.

You must realize the difference between the curse on the earth in Genesis 3 and the curse for breaking the Law in Deuteronomy 28. You are redeemed from the curse of the Law (so says Galatians 3:13), but not from the curse on the earth. You still have to work for a living, women still have labor pains – and you still die (“return to dust”). You are not redeemed from that. The curse of the Law, from which you ARE redeemed, covers all sicknesses, including every one you can think of that isn’t mentioned explicitly (Deuteronomy 28:61). Therefore, you must DIE, but you redeemed from ALL SICKNESSES and ALL DISEASES until you die.

Your current body will not last forever. You will die at some point unless Jesus returns soon. However, you do not need to be evicted from your body by sickness! God’s promise of healing lasts for your entire life, and your entire life should be satisfying. What good is long life if it isn’t satisfying? See Psalm 91. Time spent laid up in a sickbed with a wasting disease is surely not satisfying.

It is not true that only sickness or martyrdom will end your life. Moses simply went up on a mountain, following God’s command. God told him to die there, and he did! “And Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated” (Exodus 34:7). Moses was obviously not sick before he died; sick people don’t climb high mountains at the age of 120!

Others simply “gave up the ghost” after living a long life:

Genesis 25:8:

Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was gathered to his people.

Genesis 25:17:

And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, an hundred and thirty seven years: and he gave up the ghost and died; and was gathered unto his people.

Genesis 35:28-29:

And the days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore years [180].

And Isaac gave up the ghost, and died, and was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days: and his sons Esau and Jacob buried him.

Genesis 49:33:

And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people.

Jesus Himself “yielded up the ghost” (Matthew 27:50), or “gave up the ghost” (Mark 15:37, Mark 15:39, Luke 23:46, John 19:30).

Stephen, when he was being martyred, asked the Lord Jesus to receive his spirit (Acts 7:59).

The Biblically preferred way to die is to “give up the ghost” after a long, satisfying life.

If an Old Covenant man could experience this, why not a New Covenant man? Even the much-cited Job lived 140 years after his trial and no mention is made of any illness in his life after his trial, which apparently lasted less than a year. (See Job 7:3, Job 42:16-17.)

Paul said that he had the choice of whether or not he wanted to die! He said in Philippians 1:22-24, “For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.” This is how the Christian should die! You choose to depart and be with Christ. This beats being forced to depart and be with Christ by an illness. God can simply “take your breath” that keeps you alive and let you die. Consider these Scriptures:

“And [God] breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.” –Genesis 2:7.

“[God] in whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind.” – Job 12:10.

“If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall return again unto dust.” – Job 34:14-15.

“He that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:” – Isaiah 42:5.

“And the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified.” – Daniel 5:23.

“Neither is worshipped with men’s hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;” – Acts 17:25.

Although this verse applies to animals in context, you can see that God can take away your breath and have you die:

“Thou hidest thy face, they [animals] are troubled: thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust.” – Psalm 104:29.

Think for a minute about the idea that you have to get sick to die. If that is true, it means that there comes a certain time when the Lord Jesus Christ says to you, "I won't heal your illness. You need to die from it." If you are going to claim that He would say such a thing, you need to find somewhere in the Bible where He said it. Find one place where the Lord Jesus Christ told a sick person, "Sorry, you're too old. You're supposed to die now. I won't heal you." Surely there were some aged people in the multitudes who brought "all" the sick people to Christ to be healed. If He did not leave the elderly sick to die then, He does not want to do so now, either, because He is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8).

Instead, Scripture is plain that Jesus healed all types of sickness. This would include any old-age-related sicknesses, including so-called incurable and terminal ones and ones that are based on organ failures.

Someone once said that sickness is God's way of making us want to die and go on to the afterlife. No, that's the devil's way of making you want to die and go on to the afterlife. The devil wants you out of here and into the afterlife, and sickness is one of his tools. You are no threat to him in the afterlife. No Christian needs to let any work of the devil decide when he leaves the earth. You are redeemed from Satan's authority. You are now under the authority of God's Son. You and God can decide when you want to leave. Don't allow the devil to make that choice for you by evicting you from your body with sickness.

See the discussion Don't Get Sick When You Get Old for related ideas. Also see Objection: God Won't Heal Your FINAL ILLNESS that He Uses to Take You Home.

Objection: God Won't Heal Your FINAL ILLNESS that He Uses to Take You Home

Jesus is the same today as He was in the four gospels (Hebrews 13:8). So suppose that the objector is right. There would be cases in the Bible where Jesus told someone, "I WON'T HEAL YOU. That illness you have is God's way of taking you home." When multitudes came to touch His clothes, surely He would have told at least one of them, "Sorry, but that's your FINAL ILLNESS. You have to die from it because God gave it to you to make you go to heaven soon. So get your hand off Me." But there is not one case where anything remotely like that happened. There are plenty of cases where ALL who came to Him were healed. So there are NO cases today where God will refuse to heal you because He wants you to die.

Consider what God thinks of sickness. Man thinks of it as a normal part of being on the earth, but God, whose thoughts are higher than our thoughts, has declared all sickness to be a curse (Deuteronomy 28:61). So in effect, the objector is saying, "God will put a curse on you to make you die." This makes God sound more like a Voodoo priest than a loving heavenly Father.

I realize that by definition, if you die of an illness, it was your FINAL ILLNESS. That does not mean that you had to die that way. It certainly does not mean that "The Lord Your Physician" "who heals all your diseases" has changed His mind and wasn't willing to heal you of whatever was wrong. The fact that Jesus paid for your healing by His stripes shows that you can be healed of ANY illness at ANY time. You don't have to die from sickness!

Objection: If You Could Always Claim I SHALL NOT DIE BUT LIVE (Psalm 118:17), You Could Live Forever

This is very similar to the objection If You Could Always Get Healed, You Would Live Forever, so you can refer to that answer for comments on this objection.

However, I will make a comment specific to this one. Like Paul, you may find yourself at some point just wanting to go home to heaven because you realize that you've done all that God had for you in this life. Paul wanted to depart at one point, but he decided to stay around for the good of the church. However, he did get to the point that he could say that he had fought this fight, finished his course, and was ready to leave:

2 Timothy 4:6-7:

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.
I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

Once you realize that you've finished your mission on the earth, there is not much point in hanging around far worse surroundings here when you could be in eternally better surroundings.

Until you are ready to go, you SHOULD agree with the Word and proclaim that you shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord (Psalm 118:17)!

I knew a woman who raised godly children who in turn raised godly children. She was well into her 90's when she told her family that she had really done all that she wanted to do in this life and that she was ready to go on heaven. The next day they found her out in her porch swing, and it was apparent that she had died praising the Lord! Now that's a much better way to go than gasping for your last breath in an intensive care unit or slipping away in a morphine-induced fog at a hospice home. The way that this woman went is the way that God would like all of us to come home. Besides, it avoids giving preachers the opportunity to say that God "called you home" with one of the devil's diseases! They will probably have to cite something as your official cause of death (for example, your heart stopped), but at least those around you can know what really happened.

God does not promise you immortality in your current mortal body, but even in the Old Testament, He promised to satisfy you with long life (Psalm 91:16)! If you're not satisfied, keep on declaring that you shall not die, but live, and keep going until you're satisfied. You will get to that point eventually.

Objection: Isaiah 53:4 (Matthew 8:17) Was Fulfilled in Jesus' Earth Ministry and Cannot Be Claimed as a Promise by Christians Today

For starters, these verses don't promise anything anyway! They are statements of fact, not promises. A promise would require God to perform additional action to fulfill the promise, whereas these statements of fact declare a situation that you can act on immediately with no additional intervention on God's part.

Two obvious questions arise from Matthew's statement: (1) If it Isaiah's prophecy was fulfilled, doesn't it mean that it was fulfilled here and not during Christ's whipping or crucifixion later? (2) If Christ's atonement involved suffering for us, how could this have been accomplished in His ministry before that happened? These are perfectly legitimate issues, and the answers may not be immediately obvious. However, once you see the answers, you'll wonder how you missed them. Some people who say they know Greek claim that the verb tense in Matthew 8:17 proves that the fulfillment was completed at that moment. That claim is also disproved below.

Christ Took Away Sicknesses on the Basis of His Future Atonement

If we object to Christ's healing of the sick based on His future atonement, we should also object to His forgiving of sins, which was also based on the same future atonement! He stated that He had authority on earth to forgive sins. (See Luke 5:17-26 and its accompanying notes.) In fact, in this passage, He proved His authority to forgive sins by removing one of the curses for sins – physical sickness! Jesus Himself cited the healing as proof of His authority to forgive.

No one can dispute that Jesus forgave sins during His earthly ministry. Given that He could do that (based on His future atonement), He had an equal right to remove part of the punishment for sin (sickness) along with the sin. Sickness is one of the punishments for sin, so when sin is forgiven, sickness should be healed.

Anyone who would argue that God's chronology was mixed up will have to take this matter up with God Himself, in whose eyes Jesus was "the lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8). That Jesus would succeed in His mission and fulfill His role as our sacrifice was already known to God from the beginning. Because of this, mere symbols of Christ produced physical healings in the Old Testament – even though He had not yet atoned for our sins at Calvary by our time line! In effect, the people who were healed in the Old Testament by symbols of Christ were healed on credit. Since God already foreknew that Christ would die for all and bear mankind's diseases, Christ's credit was good!

The bronze serpent and the Passover were symbols of Christ before Christ's atonement. They brought physical healing to the people, so much so that when they came out of Egypt there was not a single feeble person among all the tribes of Israel (Psalm 105:37)! This is probably the most notable mass healing in the history of mankind. Where since then has God simultaneously taken away all feebleness from 2 million or so people? When Hezekiah honored the Passover, God healed the people (2 Chronicles 30:18-20). When anyone looked intently at the bronze serpent that was lifted up on a pole (symbolizing Christ), he was both forgiven and healed (Numbers 21:5-9). Yet this was based on a symbol of Christ's future atonement. So yes, it was possible to receive healing based on a future atonement! If mere symbols of Christ could bring physical healing, how much more Christ Himself in person – unless you want to suggest that the symbols of Christ were more powerful than the Christ that they symbolized! If you could get healed by the symbols of Christ and not by Christ Himself, God is guilty of false advertising. He would have presented healing in the “promos” but then given only spiritual salvation without physical healing in the real product. God would not do such a thing.

As proved in the discussion Healing and Atonement, when atonement was made for the people in the Old Testament, healing was then available to all for whom atonement was made. Plagues were stopped in their entirety – everyone was healed. Why should the final atonement to end all atonements result in the healing of some and not all? If all could be healed during atonements in the Old Testament, surely Christ's atonement has made healing available to all in our day.

How Could He “Bear” the Diseases of the Multitude?

Now we have the issue of how Jesus could have borne sickness as a substitute early in His ministry. Actually, He didn't. That happened only during His whipping and crucifixion. Jesus was never sick until He was laden with the sins of the world. It is impossible to say that Jesus bore anyone's sickness while He was in Capernaum healing the multitudes. He was not sick Himself at the time, yet He would have had to have been sick Himself if the prophecy was fulfilled in its entirety that night, because that is the clear context of Isaiah's statements. Isaiah said that He would surely bear our sickness and carry our pains, but we would consider Him smitten of God and afflicted. This is all stated in one sentence. No one considered Jesus to be smitten of God and afflicted that evening in Capernaum. Therefore, the prophecy was not fulfilled in any final sense that night. The healings confirmed that He would bear our sicknesses later when he was smitten of God and afflicted.

A little study into the Hebrew word used for borne in Isaiah 53:4 shows that the word can be used in the sense of taking something away, not just enduring it. In other words, Jesus did not simply bear our sickness Himself. He bore it, and by so doing, took it away from us. He removed our requirement to bear it. Matthew's quotation in Greek uses the word lambano, which also means to “take” or “receive,” to indicate that He “took” our sicknesses. That is important, because it doesn't mean that He merely “took away” our sicknesses – He “took” them and had to endure them Himself.

Some objectors say that the “fulfillment” in the original text points to a one-time fulfillment. I agree completely; but the one time was Calvary, not Capernaum.

So how could His healing of all who were sick in Matthew 8 “fulfill” the prophecy that He would personally bear sicknesses for us as our substitute? Isaiah’s prophecy was fulfilled in Matthew 8:17 because Christ healed all the people on the basis of His atonement that Isaiah had prophesied about. The people were healed because of what Christ would do on the cross. The fact that the people could all be healed was confirmation that Christ’s coming atonement would cover everyone. We’re not talking about going through time warps to make this happen. You can get a better understanding of what Matthew meant when you study his use of the phrase “that it might be fulfilled.” You will find that it does not mean “this is over and done with, fulfilled in its entirety on the spot.” I will now prove this to you by citing every case where Matthew used that particular phrase. Then I will make the point from a Greek perspective.

Matthew’s Use of the Phrase “That It Might Be Fulfilled”

Let’s look at the other places where Matthew used the phrase “that it might be fulfilled” and notice how he uses it. After all, one would expect the same author to be consistent in his use of a certain phrase throughout his book. This will shed light on the phrase and demonstrate what Matthew really said.

We find out that Matthew’s use of the phrase “that it might be fulfilled” speaks of actions that will set up a future fulfillment, or ongoing fulfillment of a prophecy, with only one exception. This phrase does not necessarily mean that a prophecy was at that moment fulfilled once and for all. Matthew’s use of “that it might be fulfilled” applies to cases where a prophecy now must surely be fulfilled in the future, even though it has not technically happened yet. If the prophecy was actually completed, Matthew used the phrase “was fulfilled” instead.

Matthew 1:20-23:

But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

At this time, Jesus was not yet born or named, but Matthew uses the phrase that it might be fulfilled because this action set up the future fulfillment of this prophecy. It was not over and done with at the time; it happened in the future.

Matthew 2:14-15:

When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt.

And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son.

Jesus went into Egypt, not out of it, here. Yet Matthew uses the phrase that it might be fulfilled because it assured the future fulfillment of this prophecy. It was not completed at that point.

Matthew 2:16-18:

Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men.

Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying,

In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

In this passage, the event fulfilling the prophecy is over. Matthew says then was fulfilled instead of that it might be fulfilled. Matthew was specific enough to distinguish between prophecies that were fulfilled once and for all and those that were not.

Matthew 2:23:

And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

At this point, no one was fulfilling the prophecy by calling Jesus a Nazarene. But when Jesus moved to a place that would later result in His being called a Nazarene, Matthew uses the phrase that it might be fulfilled.

Matthew 4:13-17:

And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:

That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles;

The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.

From that time, Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Jesus had not started preaching when he moved to Capernaum, but this is the point where Matthew uses the phrase that it might be fulfilled. It had not happened yet, but Jesus' move to the area set up a certain future fulfillment of the prophecy.

Matthew 12:15-21:

But when Jesus knew it [that the Pharisees were plotting a council against him], he withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all;

And charged them that they should not make him known:

That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles.

He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets.
A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment into victory.
And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

Matthew used the phrase that it might be fulfilled to describe a prophecy that was PARTIALLY fulfilled at the time, but which continues to be fulfilled today. (Gentiles are still trusting in His name today, and Gentiles only started trusting in God in significant numbers after Acts 10.) You could not say that this prophecy was finished once and for all at the time described by this verse.

Matthew 13:13-14:

Therefore I speak to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand.

And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive:

Although Matthew uses the words is fulfilled here, even this had an ongoing fulfillment, not a one-time fulfillment. (As we will see later, this prophecy was also consider fulfilled many years later in Acts 28.)

Matthew 13:34-35:

All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them:

That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world.

Jesus was doing what the prophet said, but He continued to do so. Jesus told other parables after that verse. Matthew used the phrase that it might be fulfilled to describe this situation.

Matthew 21:1-7:

And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

And if any man say ought [anything] unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them.

And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

Matthew used the phrase that it might be fulfilled again to describe a situation that set up the fulfillment of the prophecy but did not complete it. Jesus could not sit on the donkey before it was brought to him! So this was another indication of a prophecy that WOULD be fulfilled, but wasn't fulfilled yet.

Matthew 26:54-56:

But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

At this point, there were plenty of scriptures about to be fulfilled, but they were not fulfilled yet. The acts leading up to the crucifixion were done to set up their fulfillment, but they were not fulfilled in any final sense at the moment that Matthew describes.

Matthew 27:7-10:

And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day.

Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy [Jeremiah] the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value; And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

This prophecy referred to an act that was fulfilled in its entirety when it was quoted. Notice that Matthew used the phrase was fulfilled instead of the phrase that it might be fulfilled to describe a prophecy that was now fulfilled in its entirety.

Matthew 27:35:

And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

In this one case, the phrase that it might be fulfilled refers to an event that seems to have just been fulfilled and it does not have an ongoing fulfillment.

Now consider again Matthew 8:16-17:

When the even [evening] was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick:

That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

Isaiah's prophecy stated clearly in its context that Jesus took our infirmities and our sicknesses, not just the ones of the people that evening. The final fulfillment of this had to take place later, as is clear from the context. Everyone acknowledges that everything else in Isaiah 53 refers to the Atonement. You cannot justify taking half of one sentence and saying that it refers to one night in Capernaum while the rest of the chapter, and indeed the rest of the same sentence, refer to Christ's atonement that was accomplished later!

So we see that the use of the phrase that it might be fulfilled does NOT have to refer to a final fulfillment of prophecy.

Jesus' Ongoing Healing Ministry Disproves a Total Fulfillment in Matthew 8:16-17

The fact that Jesus continued to minister healing to multitudes of sick people shows that this prophecy could not have been fulfilled in its final sense on the evening of Matthew 8:16-17. If it were fulfilled in a final sense, Jesus would not have healed any more sick people after this. Therefore, we must reject the argument that this scripture was finally fulfilled on that day and that it does not apply to what Jesus did for us later. Because the Messiah did take away illnesses, you could think of it as a partial fulfillment of the prophecy, but certainly not a final fulfillment. What changed in Jesus' ministry that night? Nothing, as far as we can see. He continued to have times when He "healed them all." If this prophecy was totally fulfilled that night, something would have had to be different from then on. But that isn't the case.

In Acts, we see that Jesus continued to remove diseases from people through His Church; His acts in the gospels were only what He began to do and teach (Acts 1:1-2).

Jesus Did Not Get Sick at Capernaum

Isaiah said that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains, but it is clear that Jesus did not get sick or experience pain that evening in Capernaum. This also proves that what happened that night could not have been considered a final fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy, as Jesus had not yet been punished for our sins, which was the only time when He experienced sickness or pain in His own body. He did not "take away" sicknesses in Capernaum by transferring those sicknesses to Himself, which is strictly what Isaiah prophesied. This fact alone is sufficient proof that Jesus was healing on the basis of what He was going to do, not on the basis of what He did that evening. The complete fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy would require that He take on sicknesses in His own body.

This is further underscored by the Greek words that Matthew used for took and bore. The Greek word translated took is lambano, which indeed means to take or receive. Indeed, it is the same word used in Mark 11:24 where Jesus told us to believe that we receive when we pray. The Greek word translated bore is bastazo, which indeed means to bear or carry. Matthew and Isaiah are in complete agreement on this matter. Thus, the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy requires that Jesus actually took and bore our diseases, suffering them Himself, which He did not do at Capernaum.

Multiple Fulfillments of Prophecy

Although I would contend that Matthew 8:17 is a confirmation of Calvary, there is another aspect we can consider for those who want to think that Isaiah 53:4 was fulfilled that night in Capernaum. Many Scriptures have a dual fulfillment. They are fulfilled in a partial sense at one time and in a more complete sense later. Even prophecies that are stated to be fulfilled at a certain time can still have application past that point! This is no speculative argument, but one that I will prove from Scripture.

Hosea 11:1 says that God called His son out of Egypt, and in the context, He is obviously talking about Israel. So this was already fulfilled and was history, and not prophecy, except that Matthew 2:14-15 (cited above) says that Jesus' stay in Egypt fulfilled this prophecy. So there was a former and a latter fulfillment of the same prophecy.

Isaiah 6:9-10 says: "And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, and perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed." In Matthew 13:14, Matthew said that the people's inability to hear and understand Isaiah's prophecy was fulfilled. (This passage is quoted above.) However John 12:40 also quotes this prophecy as being fulfilled, and it seems obvious that this prophecy had an ongoing fulfillment during Jesus' ministry. Then at almost the very end of the book of Acts, Paul says this (Acts 28:25-27): "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esia[s] [Isaiah] the prophet unto our fathers, saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." This proves that a prophecy in Isaiah that Matthew said was fulfilled could continue to be fulfilled after that point.

Matthew 13:34-35, quoted above, says Jesus spoke in parables that a prophecy might be fulfilled. Yet He continued to fulfill that prophecy by speaking in parables after that point.

Matthew 12:15-21, also quoted above, indicates that "in His name shall the Gentiles trust" had a minor fulfillment during Jesus' earth ministry when a few Gentiles believed Him, but there is surely a more complete and ongoing fulfillment in this day as millions upon millions of Gentiles put their trust in Jesus Christ. It was not "completed" in Matthew 12!

Joel prophesied that God would pour out His Spirit upon all flesh. Peter said in Acts 2 that the apparent drunkenness and supernatural linguistic ability of the apostles was what was spoken by the prophet Joel. However, there is no question that God continues to pour out His Spirit today, especially because Peter said that this promise was for all believers in Acts 2:39. Of course, Jesus continued to baptize with the Holy Spirit throughout the book of Acts and He continues to do so today.

Psalms 22 may well have described David's condition at the time, but any serious student of Scripture realizes that this psalm was also a prophetic foretelling of Christ's sufferings at Calvary.

Jesus quoted Isaiah's prophecy concerning Himself in Luke 4:18-19, but can anyone doubt that Jesus continues to heal the brokenhearted and set at liberty those who are bruised today? Yet Luke 4:21 says, "And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." If we use similar logic to this objection, Jesus was only anointed on that day, which is obviously not true. Although that day witnessed a fulfillment of this prophecy, the fulfillment was obviously ongoing. In fact, this prophecy is still being fulfilled today through His Body, the Church.

In light of these verses, which I do not claim to be a complete list of dual-fulfillment or continuing-fulfillment prophecies, it is not Biblically accurate to claim that a prophecy which is "fulfilled" at a certain point in time cannot have either a fulfillment at a later specific point in time or an ongoing fulfillment over time. Since these prophecies were not "one-shot deals," it is inconsistent to conclude that Matthew 8:17 could not have a later and more complete application. Jesus continued to remove sicknesses from the people after Capernaum, and He provided for it for all people once and for all at Calvary.

When ISAIAH that Said Jesus Bore Our Sicknesses and Carried Our Pains

If we want to know what Isaiah meant when he said that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains, wouldn't it be a good idea to at least look at the rest of the verse to see what Isaiah's context was?

Isaiah 53:4:

Surely he hath borne our griefs [literally sicknesses], and carried our sorrows [literally pains]: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

When could people say that Jesus was stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted? Certainly NOT in Capernaum, where healing objectors claim that this prophecy was completely fulfilled. He was only afflicted and in pain at the end of His life when He atoned for our sins, which is definitely what the rest of Isaiah 53 discusses. The entire chapter is about His death for us! The only correct context of the prophecy is that it refers to Jesus' substitution for us when He bore our sins.

Because Matthew only quotes the first part of Isaiah 53:4, people might think that they are free to speculate about its context. However, God Himself provides the context as clearly as possible in Isaiah 53. He bore our sins, sicknesses and pains at the same time.

The very next verse continues the same explicit thought:

Isaiah 53:5:

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

The previous verse (Isaiah 53:3) calls Him a man of pains and acquainted with sickness. This too has to refer to the end of His life, because He had no physical pain or sickness until then.

Thus the peace and the healing go together, and it all refers to Christ's atonement. When was He wounded, bruised, chastised and striped? Definitely not in Capernaum in Matthew 8! So again we have proved that this reference is to the atonement, meaning that in Matthew 8:16-17, He healed the sick due to His coming atonement.

The people who always admonish faith people, "A text without a context is a pretext" should follow their own advice concerning Isaiah 53:4 and its place within the same verse, the next verse, and Isaiah 53 in general. Then they would have to conclude that it is ALL about Christ's atonement!

The Aorist and Errorists

Now what about those intimidating arguments about the Greek verb tense in Matthew 8:17? The people who make them say that they know Greek. Because you probably don't, you are just supposed to back down and take their word for it. I've even seen one of the arguers use a mistaken Greek word that isn't even the one in Matthew 8:17. It pays to do your own research rather than to take other people's word for everything.

The argument usually states that Isaiah's prophecy was "completely fulfilled" that evening because the Aorist tense of "fulfill" is used in the verse, and the Aorist tense indicates momentary action. But the statement that the Aorist indicates momentary action is an oversimplification, as I will prove below. The Aorist is actually not time-specific and in some cases it can even be used to describe a future action as well as even ongoing action. A Bible example follows below of even the indicative form of the Aorist describing future action, but the verb in Matthew 8:17 is in the subjunctive form, not the indicative form, anyway.

If you think I'm making all this up, you can download a public-domain book called "A Grammar of the Greek Language, Volume II – Syntax" by William Edward Jelf. I downloaded Jelf's book after seeing a reference to it in T. J. McCrossan's book, "Bodily Healing and the Atonement," and I read this for myself on page 71 of Jelf's book: "The Aorist is used, like the [perfect] to express future events, which must certainly happen. The absence of any notion of time expresses yet more forcibly than the [perfect] the inevitable, and as it were actual development of that which yet is future...". Then I read page 72 where Jelf cites John 15:6 as an example of the Aorist pointing to a future event. John 15:6 says, "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." "Is cast forth" is an Aorist-tense verb, which I also verified for myself rather than taking Jelf's word for it. Yet this supposes future action that has not yet been taken, which is Jelf's point. The Aorist is time-indefinite – the point is the CERTAINTY of the action rather than the TIMING of it.

The Greek verb form used in Matthew 8:17 is the Aorist passive subjunctive, which is the same form used in all the other passages where the phrase that it might be fulfilled appears. As we just saw, the Aorist can indicate future action that is guaranteed to happen. The idea of a future action being guaranteed to happen by current events is borne out by the other passages above. In God's eyes, the actions were as good as done even though they had not happened yet by our timeline.

If these Greek scholars are right about the Aorist (in particular the Aorist passive subjunctive) always describing momentary past action, we must believe the following, because the verses quoted in the previous section use the Aorist passive subjunctive of "to fulfill" in the Greek – exactly the same Greek word used in Matthew 8:17:

- Mary completed the act of bringing forth and naming her Son when the angel stood before her telling her that she would conceive.
- God completed the act of calling Jesus out of Egypt as soon as He got to Egypt.
- People called Jesus a Nazarene as soon as He arrived at Nazareth, many years before His ministry began.
- The people of Zabulon and Nephthalim saw the light as soon as Jesus arrived there.
- The Gentiles trusted in Jesus during His earthly ministry, and He "sent for judgment into victory" during His earthly ministry.
- Jesus sat on the donkey before it was brought to Him.
- All the prophetic Scriptures about Jesus were completely fulfilled when He was arrested in the garden.

Any standard Greek grammar reference you can find should indicate that the subjunctive Aorist is time-indefinite, but you should already be able to figure this out from the English arguments above.

The New Testament is a Greek book. English does not always have the exact equivalent of Greek verb tenses, so we will run into trouble sometimes if we insist on an English translation being the final authority of what was written when we are unaware of the underlying Greek. I am certainly not claiming that you need to get an advanced degree in Greek to study the Bible for yourself. However, if you want to make bold public statements about what a verse means, you should at least check out the Greek before you do it. This is far easier to do today than it used to be given the great number of online tools available.

This is also why it is silly for anyone to claim that only a certain English translation "IS" the Word of God and nothing else qualifies – a tradition that persists in some circles today. I've had some of these folks want to argue with me on the street about this when I'm trying to get sinners saved and they should be too (rather than provoking arguments that the 1611 version of the KJV, which is almost unreadable by modern people, IS the only true Bible). If you ask what people who speak other languages are supposed to do, they'll tell you that they must learn English so that they can read the 1611 KJV, which is the ONLY real Bible. So did no one have any true Scripture until 1611? That's their conclusion, though Peter had no problem calling Paul's Greek writings Scripture. But the truth is still that the original New Testament was written in Greek, and some translations are better than others at rendering the Greek words into modern English. The King James Version and New King James Version do a good job for the most part.

Next we have someone's objection that the Aorist passive indicative would be spelled the same as the Aorist passive subjunctive, and that therefore Matthew 8:17 could just as well be translated that Isaiah's prophecy was completely fulfilled. That simply isn't true; it's only a "scare-the-non-Greek-student" argument. The Aorist passive indicative in the Greek text in Matthew 2:17 (then was fulfilled what was spoken by Jeremiah the prophet) DOES refer to an "over and done with" fulfillment of prophecy, and it is NOT spelled the same as verb used in Matthew 8:17, which you are welcome to verify for yourself with your favorite original Greek text reference. The word in Matthew 27:9, where Jeremiah's prophecy was fulfilled is closer but still not exactly the same as the word in Matthew 8:17, and it is still identified as an Aorist passive indicative, which is appropriate because the particular prophecy was "over and done with" at that point. Greek is precise, so if Matthew wanted to state that Isaiah 53:4's prophecy was "over and done with" in Matthew 8:17, he knew how to state that.

Even an English-only Bible reader can see the difference, which is backed up by the Greek. In the two cases above where a prophecy met its final fulfillment, Matthew used the word then. When he said then it was fulfilled (as translated into English from the Greek word tote in Matthew 2:17 and Matthew 27:9 cited above), it was a momentary past completed action. When he said that it might be fulfilled, he referred to something where the time of complete fulfillment was not necessarily the past. Where he says "that," it is a translation of the Greek word hopos, not tote. Even in English, that indicates a subjunctive mood, not a statement-of-past-fact mood.

Because the Aorist subjunctive is used, and the Aorist subjunctive is never time-definite, the word in Matthew 8:17 cannot be construed to prove a past fulfillment. Now because the Aorist is time-indefinite, you could argue that I can't PROVE that it's NOT a past action from the word alone, and you'd be right. However, you can prove that it isn't past at the time of Matthew 8:17 from the context of Isaiah 53:4, which is most definitely an atonement Scripture in the great atonement chapter.

By the way, you can quote Greek grammar "experts" who say that the Aorist must always refer to "momentary" (or "punctiliar") action, but even that statement is contradicted by Scripture, which supersedes Greek grammar books. Consider the following uses of Aorist verbs. Acts 1:21 refers to men which have companied with us all the time. In Mark 1:11, God says that Jesus is His Son with whom He is well pleased. One would hope that this was not a one-time condition in Jesus' life! In Matthew 27:8, the potter's field "was called the field of blood unto this day," which does not sound like a one-time event given that it was "unto this day." In Acts 10:38, Jesus went about doing good and healing, but it's interesting that "doing good" and "healing" are in the Imperfect tense, not the Aorist. In Acts 14:3, "long time abode they." It couldn't have been a one-point action if they did it for a long time. In Acts 28:20, Paul "dwelt two whole years in his own hired house." Two years could hardly be considered a one-time event. In John 2:20, the temple was 46 years in building, which HAD to be ongoing, as it didn't just go up in a single moment of time. In Jesus' prayer in John 17:11, "keep through thine own name" cannot be considered a one-time thing for God to do for Jesus' followers, and it wasn't a past action, either! Nor was the command in Luke 9:23 for the one who comes after Jesus to deny himself and take up his cross daily (!) If you do something daily, it cannot be definition be a one-time event, nor can it refer to past action.

In short, anyone who says that the Aorist passive subjunctive must refer to completed past action is an Errorist.

Conclusion

While I respect people who make this objection, as they at least try to appeal to Scripture, the evidence is clear that the objection is invalid. Jesus' removal of sickness that evening was a confirmation of Isaiah's prophecy being fulfilled during His future atonement, just as His forgiving of sins during His ministry was proof of His future atonement. The Atonement was Jesus' basis for continuing to heal the sick, in further confirmation of this prophecy.

Objection: Sickness is a Blessing in Disguise

This has to be the king of “false comfort” bromides for the sick.

Nothing in Scripture indicates that God disguises His blessings. If something looks like a curse, it's because it IS a curse, not a curse disguised as a blessing. The Bible describes sickness as captivity (Job 42:10), bondage (Luke 13:16), oppression (Acts 10:38), evil (Deuteronomy 7:12-15) and a curse (Deuteronomy 28:15-68). Sickness is NEVER referred to as a blessing of any kind, with or without a disguise. I realize that God can work things for good in bad circumstances, but that does not make Him the author of the bad circumstances. It definitely doesn't mean that it was God's will for the bad circumstances to happen.

I don't know if I've ever met anyone who REALLY believes that being sick is a blessing. I doubt that you do, because you're probably using drugs and doctors to alleviate your “blessing.” If you REALLY think that sickness is a blessing, you should to go a sick person's trash bin and stuff all his Kleenex in your mouth to attempt to get an increased blessing for yourself. If you REALLY think sickness is a blessing, you would never want to resort to any natural measures to take away this wonderful blessing. Instead of taking things to make yourself feel better, why not go eat some poison sumac to make yourself even sicker and increase your blessing-in-disguise level still more?

If sickness is good, they should be selling products that are guaranteed to make you sick so that you can be in on this good thing if you're currently missing out on it. Can't you see it now? “Infirmium caplets combine a histamine, a congestant, a throat irritant and a depressant to ensure a maximum illness experience. Take Infirmium, especially if you're allergic to Infirmium, and start feeling rotten in less than half an hour!”

If sickness is a blessing in disguise, then Jesus went about doing BAD, REMOVING people's blessings every chance He could! The disciples and the people in Acts followed suit. Jesus only did the will of God, so His removal of sickness was ALWAYS God's will. You never see Jesus, who is the same today as He was in the four gospels (Hebrews 13:8) ever telling someone, “Keep your sickness – it's really a blessing in disguise, and it's good for you!” Only deceived religious people think that sickness is good for you.

If sickness is a blessing, there should be sickness in heaven! And there isn't.

Objection: Healing and Miracles Are Not for This Current Dispensation

This requires a belief that we are in a different “dispensation” than the one that applied to the “Early Church.” Yet since those days, there have been no new covenants, no new doctrines, and no change in the way that God deals with men. We are in the same “dispensation” now as the people in the book of Acts, whether we take advantage of it or not. The Bible nowhere indicates that miracles would cease “when the last apostle died,” as is commonly said today.

Those who make this argument somehow believe that God changed the way that He dealt with men after the “last apostle” died. Supposedly, the signs and wonders were to convince men that Jesus was the Messiah, but now we supposedly don’t need these proofs because we have the New Testament. The usual “proof-text” quoted in connection with this is 1 Corinthians 13:8-10: “Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when the perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.” This is often used to “prove” that the manifestations of the Spirit are not for today. The false assumption is that the completion of the New Testament was when the perfect came.

Well, let’s see what else will happen when the perfect comes. See verse 12: “For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.” Do you know everything now? Is everything clear to you? If so, I’d like to meet you, because I’ve never met anyone who knows everything as well as God knows him. If we do not know even as we also are known, the perfect has not come yet. And if the perfect has not yet come, prophecies, tongues, words of knowledge, miracles, healings, and so on, are still for us today.

Also, please note Paul’s words in verse 12: “Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known.” Paul said he would know fully when the perfect had come! (He was known perfectly by God, so to “know even as he was known” means to know perfectly.) Although Paul wrote a little under a third of the New Testament (based on words), even he did not know perfectly! If Paul’s writings of the New Testament were the “perfect” coming, Paul should have known most things, if not everything, since he wrote so much of it! So Paul said that even he knew imperfectly.

Because Paul said that he would know fully when the perfect came in verse 12, we cannot set the date of the “perfect” coming with the settling of the New Testament canon, which did not take place during Paul’s lifetime! That alone proves that Paul could not have meant the completion of the New Testament and agreement upon its constituent books. Paul had to have been referring to a future time in glory and not his present lifetime. Just think about this for a minute. If Paul could know everything when then New Testament was completed, He would have been in heaven a while without knowing everything, but suddenly, when the New Testament was completed on the earth, he instantly knew everything! That’s ridiculous. This matter alone completely settles this issue!

The fact that Paul did not know fully doesn't mean that anything he wrote is wrong. It just means that there are things that he didn't know that we won't know until the perfect comes. Paul talks of a man who went to heaven and heard things that it is not lawful for a man to utter. We don't know what things these are, so we can't know perfectly in this lifetime. If we could, we would know these things that are not lawful for a man to utter, too. But how can you know them if no one can say them?

A man with some Greek skills stated that Paul could not have been talking about Christ's coming because "the perfect" is a neuter construction instead of a masculine one. He said that if Christ had been the subject, a masculine construction would have been used. I agree with that, but disagree that Christ is the subject. The subject is "the perfect" or perfect things, not Christ Himself, and "the perfect" would also be correctly written as a neuter construction in Greek. You cannot prove any distinction from it.

The Corinthians obviously did not believe that the moving of the Spirit would pass away before Christ returned, as 1 Corinthians 1:7 reads, "So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:" If miracles were to pass away before Christ's return, Paul would have had to revise his language to, "Ye should have abandoned spiritual gifts because ye believe that the coming of Christ is nigh, for we know that the gifts will cease before He returneth."

The Bible never states that anything would change when the "last apostle" died. That is a pure fabrication of men, the sort that the Pharisees made up, that makes the Word of God void by man's tradition. We are in the same Church Age today as the people in the book of Acts!

To say that divine healing is not for today is to slice the Great Commission in half. The Great Commission becomes only "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The part about "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" becomes the Great Omission. This means that Jesus wants you to preach to the unsaved under tougher conditions than the apostles, since you won't have any signs following you. It takes more faith to believe that the Great Commission could be bisected than it does to believe for healing!

If divine healing is not for today, how will you explain the many documented healings that are still going on today? Incurable diseases are still being healed through faith in Jesus Christ. How are these sick being healed if this is not available today? How are they getting from God something that He no longer offers in this dispensation? (The objector's usual explanation is that SATAN is doing the miracles today.)

It is just plain wrong to assert that miracles stopped with the last apostle. There are accounts of large numbers of healings and people being raised from the dead from the time of Christ up through the 400's, and from the 1700's on. (You may even find some cases between those times if you delve into church history more than I have done.) It is a simple fact that they did not stop with the apostles in Acts. The history books alone disprove this claim. Besides, the last apostle isn't dead yet, because God is still commissioning apostles today, although not in the sense of the 12 original Apostles of the Lamb, a group to which even the miracle-working Paul did not belong.

If you don't believe that God still commissions apostles, consider this passage:

Ephesians 4:11-13:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

Since their goals have not been accomplished yet, they are still necessary. Paul mentions other apostles who were not in the original 12 either. There are still apostles today as well as the other 4 “ministry offices” mentioned here. (Some people prefer to say 3 others, since the wording indicates to them that pastors and teachers are the same people, though there were certain “prophets and teachers” in the church in Acts 13:1, which would seem to indicate that teachers are a separate office. Still others like to invent new ministry offices that aren’t in the Bible, such as “intercessor,” “psalmist,” “minstrel,” and so on, that are really “helps” ministries, not ministry gift offices.)

I read a secular historian’s account of the things that happened during the Great Awakening in New England. Everywhere, people were contracting a new “disease” called “the jerks” – shaking uncontrollably and usually falling over when the gospel was preached with power by heaven-commissioned evangelists. This historian noted that the most violent opponents of the gospel were often the first to contract this condition! Psychologists invented explanations for it, but it was the power of God!

To say that healing is not for our day is to accuse both God and Jesus of changing – something that neither can do (Malachi 3:6, Hebrews:13:8, James 1:17). God has always been willing to heal His people, and Jesus did only the will of God on the earth. If they have not changed, their ability and willingness to heal have not changed.

Many of the healings in the New Testament occurred because of a person’s faith, not because of special manifestations of the Spirit. For proof, read the discussion, According to YOUR FAITH Be It unto You! Galatians 3:5-6 says that God does miracles through the hearing of faith. If healing and miracles are not for today, we must conclude that faith is not for today, since faith produces healing and miracles.

Jesus said in Matthew 7:21-23 that men could cast out devils and do works in His name without even knowing Him personally! There is no indication that this statement applies only to a certain generation back then.

The claim that we are in a different, harder-to-be-healed-in dispensation is absolutely unsupported by Scripture and is clearly contradicted by it. You will not find one Scripture to support this absurd idea.

Objection: By Jesus' Stripes We Were Spiritually, Not Physically, Healed

This objection is flawed for MANY reasons, despite the fact that it is used so often to “disprove” your right to divine healing! Any one of the sections below would be enough to disprove the objection, but let’s look at a number of different “disproofs” and put this old lie to rest once and for all.

You Were Not Spiritually Healed by Jesus' Stripes!

Your spirit was not healed when you were saved! When you were born again, you received a new spirit and become a new creation (2 Corinthians 5:17, Galatians 6:15) – the old passed away and all things became new (2 Corinthians 5:17 again)! This is speaking of your spirit – you have the same soul and body you had before you were born again.

Jesus told Nicodemus, “Ye must be born again” (John 3:3-7). In verse 6, He explained, “That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.” In other words, the first birth is a natural birth, but the second birth is a spiritual birth. Your spirit is born of the Holy Spirit when you are born again. Your spirit is not “healed” – a new spirit is born inside you, replacing the old, sinful one. Spiritually, you are a new creation – one that never existed before you were saved!

Read what Ezekiel prophesied that God would do:

Ezekiel 11:19-20:

And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh:

That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

Ezekiel 36:26-27:

A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

When you are born again, your spirit is not healed – you get a new spirit. It’s the difference between having an old beat-up car and having someone “heal” it so that it rides like a newer car, versus trading in your beat-up car for a brand-new, nice one!

A sinner does not have to cry, “Dear Jesus, come and heal my broken spirit.” (His response would probably be, “Actually your spirit doesn’t need to be healed; it needs to be replaced. But I’m merciful and I know what you mean. I won’t keep cast you out on a technicality because you did come to Me.”)

People talk about going to a lost and dying world, but that is inaccurate – anyone who isn’t in Christ is already dead! We go to lost and DEAD people who need to be spiritually made alive in Christ.

The Context of the Verse Itself Refers to Physical, Not Spiritual Healing

1 Peter 2:24 opens with the statement, “Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree...” Jesus did bear our sins in His spirit as well, but that isn’t what Peter discusses in this verse! Jesus bore the punishment for our sins in His BODY. That punishment had to include sickness because He was cursed in our place. Part of “the curse of the Law” included every sickness in the world (Deuteronomy 28:61). His body had to be racked with pain to redeem us from that pain. Peter reminds us of Jesus’ bodily suffering, not His spiritual suffering, in this verse. This is further evident when you consider that Peter was quoting Isaiah, as we will now see below.

Peter Quoted Isaiah’s Prophecy, Where Physical Healing Is the Context

To say that Peter only meant spiritual healing is tantamount to saying that Peter misquoted what the Holy Spirit said in Isaiah 53. Isaiah speaks of Jesus’ physical suffering for us before announcing that with His stripes we are healed. He was wounded (that’s physical) for our transgressions. He was bruised (that’s physical) for our iniquities. He literally has “borne our sicknesses and carried our pains” (that’s physical, see Isaiah’s Prophecy of Redemption for proof). Isaiah says so in the verse just before the one where he says that we are healed with His stripes. Literally Isaiah says (in verse 10 of the passage) that God “made Him sick” (that’s literally what being “put to grief” means in that verse). Isaiah announces that with His stripes (again, that’s talking about physical, not spiritual punishment) we are healed. Isaiah makes it clear that Jesus was punished physically with pain and sickness to redeem us from the physical punishments of pain and sickness that sin deserves – OUR sicknesses and OUR pains. We must conclude that all the physical torture that He endured for sin was done to provide physical healing for us. That is what Isaiah says. Peter quotes Isaiah, so Peter must also refer to physical healing as a benefit that Christ suffered for before the cross.

We enter the Holy of Holies by the blood of Jesus, not by the stripes of Jesus (Hebrews 10:19). His shed blood was enough to buy access to God for us. The cross bought us incalculable benefits. However, it was His bodily suffering that gave us the right to bodily healing. That’s why He had to go to the whipping station before He went to the cross. It was a separate, but very important, act. This is especially evident when you consider the context of what Isaiah said. When Isaiah said that Jesus was bruised, it would seem that he must have referred to the whipping station, not the cross. Jesus had already been bruised at the whipping station. We don’t see any evidence that He acquired any further bruises while hanging on the cross; He was out of reach to anyone who would want to bruise Him anyway! He could be considered “wounded” or “pierced” on the cross, but it’s hard to see where bruising would come in. He was bruised for our iniquities when the Romans lashed Him before He went to the cross. The Lord’s Supper celebrates His body that was broken for us as well as His blood that was shed for us.

In case for some unfathomable reason you're still not convinced that Peter referred to Isaiah's prophecy, consider that the very next words he said continued with Isaiah's theme. Right after he said, "by whose stripes ye were healed" he said, "For ye were as sheep going astray..." That's what Isaiah said in the same passage that we've been dealing with! Right after Isaiah said "with his stripes we are healed" he said, "All we like sheep have gone astray." It couldn't be clearer that Peter referred to Isaiah's prophecy!

Isaiah, Whom Peter Quoted, Said that Jesus Bore Our Sickness and Our Pains

It is clear from Isaiah's prophecy that Jesus took OUR sickness and OUR pains, not just those of certain people back in His days on earth. He bore them as our substitute so that we would be redeemed from having to bear them ourselves. WE are healed. Peter's audience (YOU, and all other readers of his epistle today) were healed. No reasonable conclusion exists other than the plain fact that His stripes were for OUR physical healing. Physical healing is the obvious context when Matthew quotes this passage. Perhaps people can misapply Scripture, but surely Matthew, writing Scripture under the Holy Spirit's inspiration, could not have misinterpreted Isaiah's prophecy! If anyone knows what Isaiah meant, God does! It is clear from God's own quotation and context of the prophecy in Matthew 8:16-17 that Isaiah's prophecy of Jesus taking our sicknesses and pains meant that we could have physical healing. Because Peter quoted Isaiah, if Isaiah meant physical healing, so did Peter! (See "Healed" Defined if you're still not convinced that both Isaiah and Peter spoke of physical healing.)

Jesus' Bruising Did Not Buy Us the New Birth

Scripture is clear that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin (Hebrews 10:19). So the wounds that Jesus acquired when the Romans flogged Him COULD NOT have caused us to be "spiritually healed!" We could only be spiritually redeemed to God by the shedding of innocent blood. While Jesus may have shed some blood while He was being whipped, we do not have conclusive proof of that in Scripture. The Bible emphasizes that we have peace with God through the blood of His cross as opposed to blood that may have been shed while He was being whipped:

Colossians 1:20:

And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

It should be clear that there would be no spiritual reconciliation to God without His bloodshed on the cross. Without the cross no one would have the ability to receive the new birth. Isaiah mentions being healed by His stripes (not by His crucifixion). So we must conclude that healing was purchased for us in a separate act from the cross. Our spiritual relationship with God was reconciled by what He did on the cross, so that CANNOT be what Isaiah meant when he said that we are "healed" by Jesus' stripes.

Because Peter quotes Isaiah, we know that because Isaiah referred to physical healing, Peter must also have referred to physical healing.

The Greek Word healed (iaomai) Refers to Physical Healing

The Greek word iaomai used in 1 Peter 2:24 is used in many places in the New Testament to refer to obviously physical healing. Thus, we would be wrong to conclude that the word means something different in 1 Peter 2:24 than it means all over the New Testament. For further proof of this, I have provided a separate subsection, “Healed” Defined, in which you can see for yourself all the passages in the New Testament where the word iaomai appears so that you may verify my claim for yourself.

This word is similar to the Greek word iatros, which means doctor. Jesus did for you what a doctor would try to do for you – get you healed physically.

Peter Quoted Isaiah’s Prophecy, Where the Hebrew Word rapha Also Denotes Physical Healing

While the Greek iaomai is similar to the Greek word for physician, the Hebrew word rapha quoted by Peter (“with his stripes we are healed”) actually IS the Hebrew word for physician, and it is translated physician at times! This word also refers to physical healing, a fact that you can verify for yourself in the “Healed” Defined section.

Peter Believed In, Taught and Practiced Physical Healing

There is no question that Peter believed that physical healing was part of the gospel. His shadow alone brought healing to the masses (Acts 5:12-16). He was used in notable miracles of healing. Of course, he had been there in person when Jesus said that His disciples would lay hands on the sick in His name and they would recover (Mark 16:18). (It is generally accepted, though not proved in Scripture, that Mark’s gospel was based on Peter’s recollections of Jesus’ life and teaching.) God used Peter during Jesus’ ministry to bring healing where he preached the gospel.

In Acts 3:1-16 and Acts 4:7-10, Peter (with John) healed a crippled beggar and attributed the act to faith in the name of Jesus Christ and to Jesus Christ personally. Peter was obviously convinced that he had the authority to heal in the name of Jesus.

In Acts 4:29-33, the apostles, including Peter, clearly knowing that miracles and healings are the will of God, prayed for them and for boldness to preach the Word.

In Acts 5:12-16, people were healed when even Peter’s shadow fell on them. The people of Jerusalem laid the sick in the streets so that they would be healed through the anointing that was on Peter!

In Acts 9:32-35, Peter raised up a man who had been paralyzed for eight years, attributing the healing to Jesus Christ.

In Acts 9:36-42, Peter raised Tabitha from the dead.

In Acts 10:38, Peter preached how Jesus Christ healed all who were oppressed of the devil. This was Peter's doctrine on the matter.

It should be indisputable that Peter believed in, taught, and practiced physical healing through Jesus Christ. It should not be a surprise that Peter would include a statement about "by whose stripes (bruise) you were healed." Peter, who wrote 1 Peter 2:24, obviously understood that physical healing was part of the gospel of Christ.

Objection: Jesus Healed and Did Miracles to Prove His Deity

This is a half-truth. Some of Jesus' miracles are called signs, implying that they were proofs of His claim to deity. While that was part of the purpose for His healings, it was certainly not the sole purpose. Even one healing of a blind man would have established that. Jesus healed primarily because God is compassionate and He wanted to heal the people! Jesus said that He always did what pleased God (John 8:29), so God was pleased to heal those people.

Jesus Was Moved with Compassion, Not Desire to Prove His Deity

Jesus did not put on a circus. He told many that He healed not to tell anyone what had happened. If His motive were proving His deity, He would have said, "Go tell JNN (Jerusalem News Network) to let everyone know that I just proved that I'm God!"

Jesus' motive for healing the sick was compassion. Yes, the miracles did prove something, but His motivation was not publicity. At times, He wanted to be alone and get some rest. But because of His compassion, He healed the sick who came to Him anyway. For many Scriptures about the Lord's compassion, see God's Mercy and Compassion.

Jesus walked on water, turned water into wine, multiplied food, and did many other signs that had nothing to do with healing. Even one such event would have been sufficient to establish His credentials. Jesus did not need to continue to heal the sick everywhere to prove something. Healing "all who were sick" on a few occasions would be enough to prove that God was backing His claims of deity. Jesus continued to heal the sick throughout His ministry. When the sick came to Him, He healed them, even when He was tired and He must not have felt like ministering to the sick.

Many Who Came Were Healed by Their Own Faith

Jesus told many people, "According to your faith be it done unto you." Many came to touch Him and receive healing. It was their faith, not Jesus' faith, that produced the results. It was Jesus' power coupled with their faith. This still works today. You can believe that Jesus is the Anointed One (the word Christ means Anointed, after all) and receive from His anointing. It was not up to Jesus who got healed. It depended on which people believed and went and touched His clothing and received from the anointing that was upon Him.

For a list of cases where Jesus attributed healings to the recipients' faith, see According to YOUR FAITH Be It Done unto You!

Jesus Did Not Minister as Deity

Jesus was not anointed because of His deity. (See the answer to the objection, We Cannot Expect to Heal as Jesus Did because We Are Not the Son of God for a complete proof of this.) Jesus was anointed by the Holy Spirit just as any other human minister would have to be anointed. Before He was anointed, He could not do miracles. His first miracle was performed after the Holy Spirit came upon Him just after John had baptized Him (John 2:11). Jesus emptied Himself of every divine advantage and lived with the constraints common to man. (This concept is put forth in Philippians 2:5-8). Therefore, He did nothing at any time because of His deity, even though He still was and always will be the second Person of the Trinity.

Since Jesus ministered as a Man anointed by the Holy Spirit, His ministry is an example for ministers today. That is why we can do the works that He did, as He promised that we would (John 14:12).

It seems strange to some that “God could anoint God,” but the Bible is plain that God anointed Jesus with the Holy Spirit and power (Acts 10:38). Jesus had to be anointed before He could do any miracles. That could not be true if Jesus ministered as deity, as deity would not need to be anointed.

Did Jesus Prove He Was Not Deity at Nazareth?

If Jesus did His works to prove His deity, He proved that He was not deity when He went to Nazareth! His inability to do miracles there (Scripture says He could not do them – see Mark 6:1-6) would represent a failure to prove His deity. See the answer to the objection mentioned above (We Cannot Expect to Heal as Jesus Did because We Are Not the Son of God) for more on this matter.

Jesus Was Deity before His Ministry Started, Yet He Did No Miracles for Those Roughly 30 Years

Despite what some fairy-tale “lost books of the Bible” say (which never were in the real Bible and never should be in it because they contradict the real Bible), Jesus did NOT do any miracles before the Holy Spirit came upon Him after John baptized Him. John’s gospel is clear that Jesus’ first miracle was changing water into wine at a wedding celebration in Cana of Galilee (John 2:11). Any claim that He did a miracle before then must be false.

This leads to an obvious point. Jesus was deity throughout His life, including the part of it (over 90% of it!) before the Holy Spirit empowered Him to do miracles. If Jesus could do miracles because He was deity, He could have done miracles throughout His life. Therefore, simply being deity could not be the reason that He performed miracles.

Others Did and Will Do the Works Jesus Did without Being Deity Themselves

Another solid proof that Jesus did not heal as deity is that He promised that those who believe in Him, who are NOT deity, will do the works that He did and greater (John 14:12). Thus, it is not even necessary to be deity to do the works of Jesus.

I remember from my grammar school days when my well-meaning but ignorant Sunday school teacher said, “Jesus walked on water. Only GOD could do that. That shows that Jesus was God.” But if she were right, Peter would be God too, because Peter walked on water! There would be a Quadity instead of a Trinity – God, Jesus, the Holy Spirit and Peter. That’s ridiculous. Peter wasn’t God just because he was involved in a miracle. He wasn’t God when multitudes sought to get under his shadow to get healed in Jerusalem either. This makes it obvious that deity is not a prerequisite to doing miracles. And if deity is not a prerequisite to doing miracles, doing miracles does not prove anyone’s deity, so the objection at the head of this article has fallen apart.

Don’t People Still Need Proof Today?

Were the people of the apostles’ time any different from those in our time? If the people then needed proof that Jesus was God in the flesh, why shouldn’t God continue to prove Jesus’ deity today? God’s gospel plan has always included confirmation of the preached word with signs following. This is one reason why miracles still happen today. There is plenty of skepticism going around, with more people believing in God-less evolution than believing the Bible. The need for proofs of the resurrection today is as strong as it ever was.

Expedient or Not?

Jesus said that it was expedient for Him to go away so that He could send the Holy Spirit (John 16:7). Here was the greatest healing minister who ever lived saying that it would be GOOD for Him to go away! How could that be “expedient” for humanity? The obvious conclusion is that by sending the Holy Spirit, His ministry could be multiplied through Spirit-filled believers doing His works. If Jesus had a monopoly on spectacular healings because He is God, it is hard to see how it would be “expedient” for Him to leave humanity with no chance of ever seeing ministry the way He did it again.

This Objection Slanders God's Character

What kind of God would do special healing miracles at a certain point in time for certain individuals in a certain country just to show off His power, but would then refuse to use that same unchanging omnipotence on behalf of sick people in other countries at other times? He would be nothing more than an egotist who wanted to show off but had no real concern for the suffering of people. To hear some talk, God is that way. They believe that God would make people sick and then heal them to show off His power. Be honest, would you make your children sick and then heal them to show off your power to their friends? No, you wouldn't. God is nicer than you are, so why would you accuse Him of mean acts that not even you would do?

Objection: Jesus Healed and Did Miracles to Authenticate His Messiahship

This objection is a little different from the one that He healed to prove His deity, but it is just as false. The assumption made by the objectors is that miracles have been done away with, but they were needed right at the time to show the world that Jesus is the Messiah. As there will never be a need for that again (supposedly), signs and wonders ceased with the last apostle. (This also assumes falsely that apostles will not be around until the church is complete, as Paul taught in Ephesians 4:11-13).

I don't question that His miracles pointed to His Messiahship, but the Bible never teaches that Jesus was moved by a desire to authenticate His Messiahship. He was moved with compassion and He healed the sick. (See God's Mercy and Compassion.) Why is that so crucial? His earth walk, culminating in His atonement, resurrection and ascension, is over. If He only healed to prove His Messiahship, given that no one else is the Messiah, we would not expect miracles today. But if He healed out of compassion, we MUST assume that He is just as willing to heal today because He is just as compassionate today. Jesus is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), so if He was compassionate toward the sick then, He is compassionate toward the sick today. The Bible affirms that He is our merciful and faithful High Priest (Hebrews 2:17). His mercy has not diminished since His earthly healing ministry in person, when you could cry out in faith, "Son of David, have mercy on me!" and get healed. Therefore, His healings and miracles are to continue today. As Luke said after all the events in the Gospel of Luke, his gospel was a record of all that Jesus BEGAN to do and to teach, not a record of His doings and teachings that were now stopped (Acts 1:1). He now "does and teaches" through His Body, the Church.

Jesus' compassion is evident by cases where His motive for healing wasn't to authenticate His Messiahship. He told some people not to tell anyone what had happened! That would be consistent with His motivation being compassion, but totally inconsistent with a motivation to shout to the world that He was indeed the Messiah.

Various Scriptures assure us that His healing ministry was to continue after His death, burial and ascension. The world still needs authentication that Jesus is the Messiah, perhaps now more than ever. His church will lay hands on the sick and they will recover (Mark 16:18). Believers will do the works that He did and greater (John 14:12). If you're going to do the works Jesus did, you have to do miracles as well. Moreover, gifts of healings will continue until the perfect has come, at which point you will know everything. But that point hasn't come yet because we don't all know everything. If we did, we'd know better than to object to divine healing!

Objection: The Man in John 9 Was Born Blind, and That Was God's Will

John 9:1-7

Jesus declared, "The works of God should be manifest in him" (verse 3). He then proceeded to do "the works of God" by anointing the man, who followed Jesus' instructions and was healed.

What was "the work of God" in this man's life? His healing. His blindness was not referred to as the work of God.

The objection here is that God supposedly made the man blind so that Jesus could heal him and show off His power or deity. This does not make the least bit of sense, but neither do most objections to divine healing. The idea that God would cause someone to be blind for years just so that He could do a miracle in his life to show off His power is an insult to Him, a denial of His compassion and slander of His character. Jesus was motivated by compassion, not by a desire to show off power, as evidenced by the fact that He told many of the healed people not to tell anyone what had happened. He healed people because God wants to heal people, not because He wanted to show off.

Since Jesus declared that healing was "the work of God" in this man's life, it is preposterous to think that "the work of God" earlier in his life was making him be born blind. Jesus did not attribute this to God (read the verses carefully!) and neither should we. God does not have two wills concerning healing. He is "The Lord our Physician" but not "The Lord our Sickener."

This is first and foremost another account of Jesus healing someone, and it is silly to try to use it as an excuse why God "wants" some people to be born with birth defects. Even the ignorant folks who lay the lie on us that children with birth defects are "God's special children" given to "special parents" should have to admit from these verses that God wants to heal birth defects. He does not simply want to give everyone in the family special grace to deal with the birth defects!

Also, notice a possible grammatical problem with verse 3. Taken alone, this does not seem to make a rational sentence: "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." You would expect a comma, not a period, at the end of this phrase, followed by an explanation of what Jesus would do. If you continue to verse 4, this alternative punctuation seems to me to fit better: "But that the works of God should be manifest in him, I must work the works of him who sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." It is likely that the Greek text (which we must remember was not punctuated at all in the original manuscripts) was simply mispunctuated by the translators here, and verse 3 should end with a comma. Interestingly, I have never seen a Bible that used a comma there, but all punctuation, like verse numbering, has to be added based on the translators' best efforts. Of course, you should ask whether it is just the English text where the order is ambiguous or the original Greek text as well. The ambiguity is identical in both languages. I checked this one out myself with a Greek interlinear Bible.

However, I am not fond of making points exclusively with Greek punctuation issues. I maintain that there is enough in this passage to overcome any objection without having to resort to discussions of Greek punctuation. The works of God were healing. The works of God today to anyone with birth defects should be healing also. That was the will of God then and that is the will of God now.

Even if Jesus meant that the man was born blind so that the works of God would be manifest in him, this would have to be taken in the same light as his comment two chapters later that Lazarus' sickness was for the glory of God. He did not say that God made Lazarus sick for His glory, nor did He say that God caused the man to be born blind. If you believe that God did it, you are reading something into these verses that is not there. God was glorified when the works of God (healing) were manifested in the lives of the blind man and Lazarus. That is the point. Jesus did not attribute their original problems to God.

In fact, Jesus would have had to undo the works of God to heal anyone that God had made sick. Jesus said that He was doing the works of God (verse 4 in the passage in question), not undoing the works of God! The Son of God was manifested to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), not the works of God! The fact that Jesus destroyed the work of sickness in these lives and others should be proof enough to you that sickness is the work of the devil, not God.

If that's not enough for you, read Acts 10:38. Jesus healed those who were oppressed by the devil, not oppressed by God! Sickness is attributed to the devil, not God!

Objection: We Cannot Demand Healing from God Because God Is Sovereign

People often use God's sovereignty as an excuse not to receive healing from Him. Worse, it often becomes a pathetic catchall for everything bad that happens. I don't know if you've seen things like the following, but I've seen enough along these lines that it almost makes me sick! (If it did make me sick, of course, I would believe God for my healing rather than "trusting in His sovereign will in the matter.")

OUR GREAT SOVEREIGN GOD

by Kay Lastima

Oh, how I love God and His sovereign will for me, even when I don't understand it. I just trust in His sovereignty, because He knows what is best for me. Even sickness, which seems to be of no value, is part of His sovereign plan. I know this because of my favorite verse, Romans 8:28. God heals those whom He chooses to heal in His sovereignty. If He chooses to have me suffer, I will gladly submit to His loving sovereign will, which will always be best for me. I know that Psalm 115:3 says that God has done whatever He has pleased; therefore, sickness must please Him when He permits it. I know that when Jesus opens and shuts doors, man is powerless to do anything about it because Revelation 3:7 says so; therefore no one can resist God's will. I know that God works everything after the counsel of His own will because Ephesians 1:11 says so. Therefore God works sickness after His own sovereign will. After all, Lamentations 3:37-38 says, "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not? Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good?" Therefore, I gladly receive evil as well as good from my sovereign Father. I love our great sovereign God and I will never fuss with Him over the circumstances that He sovereignly permits to befall me. My aunt lost her baby in His sovereign will. My brother-in-law died a painful death from pancreatic cancer in His sovereign will. My brother went bankrupt and lost his business, and his wife ran off with the guy who rides the back of the trash truck in His sovereign will. God had a reason for all these things because He permitted them. Because God is sovereign, He could have stopped any of these things from happening, but it was not His sovereign will to do so. He controls everything, so I will never question His will or attempt to boss my sovereign God around. I just accept whatever happens and continue to love my sovereign God who permitted it to happen.

If you think this is exaggerated, you should read some of the things people say about God's sovereignty today. (Well, actually, you shouldn't read them.) They write whole books that seem like an elaboration of the paragraph above.

If God just does whatever He sovereignly decides to do, prayer is a waste of time, as you would have no hope of overriding God's sovereignly-decided actions anyway. Jesus spent a lot of time teaching on faith and prayer. Why would He bother if everything is up to God's sovereign will anyway? It would be a waste of time to bring any petition before a God who just does what He wants anyway.

Watch the news tonight and you'll see that the will of God does not automatically get done in the lives of sinners or saints. All kinds of things happen all the time that are contrary to His will.

If you believe that the will of God just automatically gets done, consider that 2 Peter 3:9 and 1 Timothy 2:3-4 (among other places) say that God wants all men to be saved and to come to a knowledge of the truth. Not all men get saved or come to a knowledge of the truth, so the will of God is not done in their lives. Therefore, the will of God does not automatically get done. God is willing to heal all diseases, too, but that will is not automatically done. The ones who get saved are the ones who believe for it. The ones who are healed supernaturally are the ones who believe for it. The principle is the same.

The argument in the paragraph above is so airtight that the only way the objectors can argue with it is to say that Jesus had a "limited atonement," i.e., that He died for only the sins of "the elect" and not everyone. Then it could still be true that God's will always gets done, because He only was willing to save some people and not all. That is actually their response when you bring this up! They will tell you that 2 Peter 3:9 "in context" was written to people who were saved, who must be in "the elect," and that God is not in fact willing to save all men because Jesus did not die for all men. This concept, known as predestination or Calvinism, does not agree with John the Baptist's declaration that the Lamb of God takes away the sin of the world (John 1:29). It certainly does not agree with John's statement in 1 John 2:2: "And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." The idea that Jesus did not die for all men is not even held by a majority of those who do not believe in divine healing, for what should be obvious reasons. It would make God a respecter of persons, which He declares multiple times that He is not, and it would make all the precious promises addressed to "whosoever" (John 3:16, for example!) meaningless. It leads to the inevitable logical conclusion that free will does not really exist in regard to salvation, because no one can resist God's will. (Because this is the logical extension, most who teach "predestination" do teach that no one can resist God's will. Nothing comes between them and their Calvinism.) So much for choosing life or death yourself. This also paints God in a bad light, since it means that He damns many who have no chance to ever be saved. They are in effect damned from the womb.

If you think you are sick because that is God's predestined good will for your life, you might want to ask yourself how all the sick people in Jesus' day (as well as all the sick people on the streets of Jerusalem in Acts 5 and all the sick people on the island of Melita in Acts 28) managed to get out of God's predestined good will for their lives – with help from Jesus and the apostles! Otherwise, you must believe that it was God's good will to heal everyone who came for it back then, but that it is not God's will to do so today. Now you are saying that God has changed and His healing mercies are no longer new every morning. You are saying that He was moved with compassion back then, but that God no longer extends this compassion to the sick today. This has a number of unanswerable problems, such as the fact that God does not change (Malachi 3:6, James 1:17), and that Jesus said it was expedient that He go away so that He could send the Holy Spirit (John 16:7), who enables us to do His works in His name, and the fact that He is our merciful High Priest today (Hebrews 2:17). Surely His mercy, including His mercy on sick people, has not decreased. You also would have to defend the position that we are somehow in a different dispensation even though it is the same Church Age. (This is covered elsewhere in more detail.)

God does indeed do as He pleases (Psalm 115:3), but the devil does things that do NOT please God. The Son of God was manifested to destroy the devil's works (1 John 3:8). This verse proves that things happen that are the will of Satan and not the will of God. For example, billions of people will end up in hell. That isn't God's will. The idea that just because something happens, it's God's will, is ludicrous. Just wait until you get sick next time and see if you really think it's God's will.

The context of Ephesians 1:11 is that God predestinated us to have an inheritance in Christ. This general statement does not apply to all the minor incidents of life. Not all incidents are God's will, because the sicknesses in the people Jesus healed were obviously not God's will – the healing Jesus gave them was God's will.

Yes, there are verses such as the one about opening and shutting doors. In the grand scheme of things, God's will cannot be thwarted. There will be judgment upon the earth, Jesus will come back, there will be a new heaven and new earth, and the devil and his angels will burn in the lake of fire. Nothing can stop that. However, these verses cannot apply to a sick person! I have heard people quote Ephesians 1:11 and other verses as proof that God just does what He wants on the earth. If you think the will of God is always done on the earth, read today's headlines and consider how much the will of Satan is getting done instead.

The use of the Lamentations passage is lamentable, since the context of God sending evil is clear from the very next verse (Lamentations 3:39): "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" God is talking about sending evil to the sinner, not the righteous man! It has nothing to do with a righteous man receiving evil from the Lord!

Thank God, Jesus did not have this hyper-religious attitude. If He had walked in this attitude, when the storm arose and the boat started filling with water and the disciples woke Him up, He would have said, "Let's just trust God's sovereign will in the matter. If we sink and drown, that's His will. I will not speak to circumstances or boss my sovereign God around."

Can you picture His response to the father of the demonized boy? Instead of exhorting him to believe, He would have said, "Just leave the matter up to our sovereign God. It might be His sovereign will for your boy to remain demon-possessed."

Thank God, James did not have this hyper-religious attitude. If he had walked in this attitude, he would have said, "Is any among you sick? Let him sing praises to his supersovereign God and just put the matter into His hands." No, faith doesn't put anything into God's hands – it receives something that's already provided from God's hands!

The Bible is full of people who prayed and changed things. Israel would have been destroyed if Moses had not stood in the gap. Thank God, Moses did not just say, "Okay, Sovereign I AM, you said that you would destroy them in an instant, so let Your sovereign will be done." God extended Hezekiah's life 15 years after a prophet of God prophesied his immediate death – because of Hezekiah's prayer!

You cannot read the Bible much without seeing numerous instances of prayer changing not only things but also changing how God was going to deal with a group of people. God would have spared Sodom for the sake of 10 righteous people just because of Abraham's prayer! This is totally contrary to the whole idea of a "sovereign God" who is little more than the Greek mythological Fates sitting up there determining who gets lucky and who gets unlucky today.

God is not actually sovereign in the sense that He can do everything! There are things God Himself cannot do! He cannot change (Malachi 3:6). He cannot lie (Numbers 23:19, 1 Samuel 15:29, Hebrews 6:18, Titus 1:2). He cannot alter the word that has gone forth from His lips (Psalm 89:34). He has exalted His word above His name (Psalm 138:2). God is literally bound by His promises. For God to refuse to keep just one promise to one person who has met its conditions would give Satan the right to order God to leave His throne.

God has bound Himself to honor His statement about Jesus "by whose stripes you were healed" (1 Peter 2:24). He has bound Himself to honor His statement "I am the Lord your Physician" (Exodus 15:26). He has bound Himself to "forgive all your sins and heal all your diseases" (Psalm 103:3). God is no longer "sovereign" in such matters in the sense that He can make a new choice because He cannot break His promises. This is the main point that the "sovereignty" crowd misses.

"The heaven, even the heavens, are the LORD's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men." – Psalm 115:16. (That is in the same Psalm whose third verse is part of this objection!) Man has authority here. That is why God needs us to pray – to authorize Him to move in the earth! This idea bothers people because it's easier not to pray and just think that God will run everything the way He wants. I have even had barrages of Scripture quoted at me that supposedly indicate that God can do, and does do, whatever He wants in the earth. While His ultimate will (the judgments of Revelation, the renewal of the earth, the Millennium, etc.) will be done regardless of men's wishes, many aspects of this present life have been left to man. This is why God does not stop the abortions and other murders, wars, corruption in government, and so on. If God truly does His will in the minutest details on earth, He is sadistic, allowing women to be battered, children to be abandoned, and men to become slaves of lust and chemicals. No, God gives man free will to choose good or evil. You cannot blame your cold on God's sovereign will. Besides, if you think it's God's will, quit taking that medicine to get out of His will, and just suffer your sovereignly sent sickness.

Objection: God Uses Sickness to Teach You Things

The only thing sickness has ever taught me is that it stinks to be sick. Get real. God didn't teach you anything through your sickness because He had NOTHING to do with your sickness to begin with. God has not entered into a partnership with Satan where He steals Satan's goods and puts them on you to teach you lessons.

What have you ever been "taught" from a sickness? One preacher I heard in person (sadly) said that God sent him a heart attack to "teach him to slow down." What actually happened is that he wore himself out like Epaphroditus – he didn't learn from Epaphroditus's example. If you push your body too hard, your BODY will "teach" you to slow down, but please don't blame that on God! You can't show me anywhere in the Bible where God sent a heart attack to slow someone down, or where He sent any illness to "teach" anyone anything.

God's actual methods of teaching you things have nothing to do with sickness, and He tells you what they are!

2 Timothy 3:16-17 shows us that SCRIPTURE is profitable for doctrine and instruction in righteousness, among other things.

John 14:26 as well as 1 John 2:27 say that the "Holy Spirit" and "the anointing" teach you "all things."

Ephesians 4:11 shows us that God has put anointed teachers in the body of Christ to teach us things.

So expect to learn things the way GOD says you will, not through some junk that the devil wants you to suffer with.

Objection: It's up to God – God Will Heal Me If He Wants to

Not only does He want to, but as far as He is concerned, He did something about your healing already (1 Peter 2:24)! Healing is available on the same basis as salvation from hell – it is a gift from Jesus Christ. He paid for it, and anyone can receive it from Him at any time.

Receiving Healing is Your Responsibility

Would you tell an unsaved person, “It’s up to God – God will save you if He wants to,” rather than telling him how to receive salvation by faith? Were you born again because God just made a sudden new decision to save you? No!

God made the decision to save you before He sent Jesus. You are the one who made the decision to be saved. God did not make a new decision to save you when you came to Jesus. Jesus already did everything that He will ever need to do about your salvation. He did not need to do anything new – it was your move. You did not receive the gift of righteousness until you did something.

God’s other blessings are available to you on the same basis. He has already given you all things that pertain to life and godliness (2 Peter 1:3-4)! It is up to you to act on what you already have.

God made the decision to heal you before He sent Jesus. Now you are the one who makes the decision to be healed. God will not make a new decision about healing when you come to Him for healing. Jesus already did everything that He will ever need to do about your healing. He does not need to do anything else – it is your move. You will not receive the healing that He paid for until you do something.

Doubt or Faith: It's up to You!

When Peter walked on water in Matthew 14:28-31, the wind, the waves and the command of Jesus were all the same when Peter was totally above the water as when he started to sink. The difference had nothing to do with God or Jesus. It had nothing to do with the circumstances. It had only to do with Peter’s faith (at first) and doubt (as he considered the circumstances more than Jesus’ word). It was up to Peter, not Jesus, whether he walked on the water or started to sink. (Thank God, this story also shows the mercy of God when our faith is not what it ought to be. We don’t want to be too hard on Peter – he didn’t have a New Testament to read, and he was the second person in the world (after Jesus) to walk on the waves. Who knows how WE would have fared in the same situation?)

God Wants You to be Healed

To say that God will heal you if He wants to is to question His will for your healing. It is the same as saying, "I do not know whether or not it is God's will to heal me. I have not taken the time to read His Word and find out."

Jesus said that if you saw Him, you saw the Father (John 14:9). He went everywhere healing the sick. He did not please Himself, but He always pleased His Father. Therefore, God's will was healing for all of the sick who came to Him.

A certain leper was the only person who ever questioned Jesus' will to heal in Scripture. Jesus' direct answer was, "I will." Read Matthew 8:2-4, Mark 1:40-45 and Luke 5:12-15. The Bible says that God is no respecter of persons; He does not play favorites (Acts 10:34, Romans 2:11, Ephesians 6:9, Colossians 3:25, 1 Peter 1:17). If it was His will to heal the leper, it is His will to heal you.

Jesus bore your sicknesses and pains (Isaiah 53:4). There would be no point in that unless it were His will that you should receive the healing that He provided for you. He surely didn't intend to suffer for nothing.

"It's up to God" at best demonstrates lack of instruction. At worst, it is a religious cop-out to avoid having to develop your faith or assume personal responsibility for your healing.

Objection: Sickness Can Be the Chastening of the Lord

This is actually a correct statement, as proved by 1 Corinthians 11:27-32, where God allowed unruly believers to get sick because they did not reverence the Lord's Supper. Sickness can be outright punishment for the blatantly ungodly and disobedient. See the discussion Sickness as Chastening and Judgment in the New Testament for vivid details.

The problem occurs when we apply this to everyday believers who are not in extreme sin. The usual "proof text" that God sends sickness as chastening on regular believers is the passage below, which we must examine critically to see if that is really what it says:

Hebrews 12:5-13:

And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:

For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees;

And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed.

The usual conclusion reached here is that chastening must refer to bodily affliction because the last two verses refer to physical problems. Also, the word scourging refers to physical punishment. If this is so, all of us should expect to get sick as part of God's divine training. In that case, God is using something from which He says we are redeemed (Deuteronomy 28:61 with Galatians 3:13) to train us. He is putting something on us that Jesus already bore for us (Isaiah 53:4, Matthew 8:17). This is ridiculous, but we should answer this objection on its own territory, which is the passage quoted above. The critical issue is what chastening refers to here.

First, we are not to faint at His chastening or when we are rebuked. Rebuke is a verbal warning, not a physical punishment. God rebukes us through His Word. In fact, the same Greek word for chastening above is translated instruction in 2 Timothy 3:16 (“All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for...instruction in righteousness”). Paul did not say that Scripture was profitable to make you sick. The same Greek word is translated nurture in Ephesians 6:4: “And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.” Paul did not tell the Ephesians, “Fathers, make your children sick to teach them lessons.” Yes, chastening refers to training, which can include punishment (and the word is used that way in some Scriptures), but it does not imply sickness.

James gave instructions on what to do if (!) any (!) among you is sick! Thus, chastening cannot be sickness, because according to the verses above, we are all partakers of God’s chastisement. If sickness is God’s normal method of chastisement for a believer, there would be no question about whether there would be sick people. James could well have asked, “Is any among you not sick?” It would also introduce a new wind of doctrine that you don’t have to repent of sins for God to stop correcting you; you just call for the church elders to pray the prayer of faith over you to stop God from correcting you with sickness. Can you see how ridiculous that is?

According to the passage in question, God chastens everyone that He loves. If He doesn’t chasten you, you aren’t really a believer. If chastening is sickness, we have yet another new wind of doctrine – if you don’t get sick, you aren’t really saved! In fact, you might be healthier serving the devil because some unbelievers live normal lives and do not get seriously ill. Should we persuade them to get saved by telling them that our wonderful God will make them sick because He loves them, and they can enjoy poorer health so that they can learn God’s ways? Yeah, right. Just see how many people want Jesus if you tell them that!

You know that you are supposed to discipline your children. Would you put cancer on your child to punish him for talking back to you? Would you kill your child with AIDS because he didn’t do his homework last night? That would be considered child abuse, not nurture, discipline or instruction. God is not a child abuser.

The fact that the last two verses of the passage refer to healing has led people to conclude that God refers to getting healed of the sickness with which you were chastened. This is clearly not the case when talking about hands hanging down and feeble knees being strengthened. This verse is quoted from Isaiah 35:3-6, which clearly refers to fear, not illness! The hanging hands and feeble knees are due to fear, not polio or anemia. This goes along with the exhortation at the beginning of this passage to not faint when God rebukes you. In other words, do not get into a fretful kind of fear of God just because He corrects you. Pick yourself up and run your race! Be glad that He loves you enough to correct you.

As for the verse about lame feet, there is no clear indication that this is literal. It would seem not to be, given that most of Hebrews 12 is exhortation to continue running the race (Hebrews 12:1). God is not exhorting you to literally run in the next 5K race in your town, although that would not be a sin. It would seem to me that the allegory has continued into the verse about the lame feet, and that God is still talking about running the race set before you, as He is elsewhere in the chapter. The immediate context is that you make straight paths for your feet, which would be an unusual way of getting literally healed. If that worked, every physical therapy center could have a “straight path” and tell patients to walk on it so that they will be healed.

It is sad that any sick person could use these verses as an excuse to go on a “witch hunt” for “secret sins” when he knows of none, thinking that sickness is God’s punishment on him. These verses say that God rebukes you and corrects you with His chastisement. When God chastises you, He tells you where you’re off and He tells you what to do! He doesn’t dump a disease on you for no apparent reason. Why should God use the devil’s trash when He has His Word to rebuke and correct you?

Besides, we all know that unbelievers catch the same diseases that are going around at church. There is nothing special or godly about unbelievers! If sickness is God’s method of training His children, what purpose do these sicknesses serve in unbelievers who aren’t His children? After all, it is clearly implied in the passage above that it is only His children that He corrects as described in the passage. That makes sense because Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would convict the world of the sin of not knowing Him as opposed to other individual sins (John 16:8-9). What good would it do to tell everyone where they’re sinning and still leave them on their way to hell without the power of God in their lives to overcome those sins? (Now God and Jesus WILL talk to BELIEVERS about individual sins, as Hebrews 12:5-13 and various passages in Revelation chapters 2 and 3 make clear. Some preachers have confused what God will convict the WORLD of and what He will convict BELIEVERS of.)

Diseases are not God’s method of training you. The only lessons I have learned from getting a cold are that I don’t like colds and that I need to be more diligent in believing God’s healing covenant! Now I almost never get anything like that; a scratchy throat I had a couple weeks before writing this was gone in less than 20 minutes and I didn’t come down with whatever it was even though sickness was making the rounds in town. You can get proficient after a while in rebuking such nuisance ailments. You have as much right to be healed of nuisance ailments as you have to be healed of terminal cancer!

If you say that God uses sickness to chastise you, you should tell us exactly what sins you are being chastised for when you are sick. At the first sign of a sore throat, please explain to us exactly what God is speaking to you about through it. No decent earthly father would “scourge” his child without explaining what was being punished! God would not “punish” you without telling you why either. If you’re arrested, the officer has to cite the charges against you. So cite to us your sin and the lesson you learned, or quit saying that God uses sickness to chastise you.

Apparently NO ONE in the crowds whom Jesus healed was under “chastisement” from the Lord for sin because Jesus never told anyone to keep his illness because he was under the chastisement of the Lord.

The explicitly stated results of God's chastening are the peaceable fruit of righteousness and being a partaker of God's holiness! Was that the result the last time you got a stuffy nose? Did having to breathe through your mouth and use up boxes of tissues and keep your spouse awake half the night make you holy and give you the peaceable fruit of righteousness? If what you're going through doesn't produce those results, it definitely isn't the chastening of the Lord, because the chastening of the Lord produces those results!

God tells us how He really reproofs us – and He doesn't use sickness to do it:

2 Timothy 3:16-17:

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness:

That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

God wants us to grow by feeding on His Word (1 Peter 2:2), not by getting sick! Are you totally furnished for every good work if you're stuck making emergency bathroom runs all day? I don't think so.

Before we leave this topic, I will say emphatically that some people think that it is "grace teaching" to contradict Hebrews 12:5-13 by saying things like, "God will never deal with you about your sins; only your conscience does that" or "God doesn't even know if you're sinning because all He sees is the blood" or "We don't even have to care if we're sinning under grace" or "We don't need to repent because we already have right standing with God." No one should be able to take Hebrews 12:5-13 seriously and agree with any of those statements. We DO have right standing with God even when we sin but we still need to repent to get sin out of our lives to stop its negative impact on our lives.

Objection: Many Do Not Get Healed after Prayer Is Made for Their Healing

You cannot base your doctrine on other people's successes or failures! You can only base your doctrine on God's Word.

Many people have the gospel preached to them. Many reject the message and go to hell anyway. Should we therefore conclude that the doctrine of salvation from hell is wrong because many do not receive it? It is equally senseless to conclude that the doctrine of divine healing is wrong because many do not receive it.

The disciples' failure to heal the demonized boy in Matthew 17:14-21 did not prove that healing isn't for all. It proved only their unbelief. Jesus Himself said it was because of their unbelief. We don't like to hear that, but if this was the case then, we must suspect that many healings today do not happen because of our unbelief.

When it came to salvation from hell, Jesus promised that some would receive and some wouldn't, and He explained the consequences of both courses (Mark 16:16). This is evident in Acts 28:23-24 when Paul spoke to the Jews who visited him. There was nothing wrong with Paul's message. The fact that some of them did not receive anything did NOT prove wrong doctrine then, nor does the failure of some to receive something today prove wrong doctrine.

There are many reasons why people do not receive their healing after being prayed over. See the Mistakes to Avoid section.

You don't need to take your Bible to the local dump just because Uncle Phil died without receiving his healing. After all, you wouldn't throw your Bible in the trash just because Aunt Mary never believed the gospel and died and went to hell.

The failure of some to receive healing no more disproves the universal availability of healing any more than the failure of some to repent and believe the gospel disproves the universal availability of forgiveness.

Rather than explaining away our lack of results by tampering with "the faith as it was once delivered," we should strive to bring our experience in line with the Bible. If we are not seeing people healed as we would like, we need to bring our experience up to the Bible's standards, rather than trying to bring the Bible's standards down to our experience.

Besides, what about the people who do get healed after prayer is made for their healing? How are they getting it? If you say that the failure of some to receive proves that healing is not for all, what special trick did the healed ones use to get it? (Answer: Faith!)

Objection: If We Have This Faith and Authority, We Should Go Empty Hospitals

Jesus didn't. He left all but one sick at the Pool of Bethesda. A servant is not greater than his master. Yet Jesus had all the faith and authority you could hope for.

If we have authority over sickness, why can't we go empty hospitals? Actually, we can, but not the way that the objectors think. We cannot just go from room to room raising up one person after another.

Jesus did prolific healing miracles, but the people He healed came to Him or were brought to Him by their friends. He did not go to the local infirmaries and heal all that were sick there. They had to go to Him or be brought to Him! Consider all the Scriptures in the New Testament where they brought the sick to be healed by Jesus, Peter, Paul, etc.. That is the New Testament pattern. People need to go where the gospel is being preached.

Of course, you can preach the gospel to someone who is in the hospital, including the healing part. If the person believes the gospel, he can rise up healed. However, a little thirty-second dissertation on healing is not going to do the job in most cases. People need more time to soak up the Word concerning healing. The most important thing is for the person himself to develop faith to be healed because your faith receives for you, not for someone else. God may heal someone through your faith, but the person needs faith of his own to keep his healing and repel sickness in the future. Only hearing of the Word will bring this faith.

It takes time for people's faith to grow. People need teaching. That is why Jesus not only healed, but He preached and taught everywhere He went. At Nazareth, where they would not receive His healing ministry, He did not wave a magic wand and cure everyone instantly.

Now if you could get everyone in the hospital to hear good teaching on healing for long enough, you could probably get most of them out. (Not everyone wants to be healed, and not everyone wants Jesus, who is the Healer. Some people want to serve a dead philosopher or one of the 300 million Hindu gods, and you can't MAKE them want Jesus.)

People ARE being released from hospitals after being healed by the power of God. We've seen plenty of that. As more people realize their privilege of receiving healing from the Lord their Physician, we should expect to see more of this. Actually, I know of a testimony from a reputable ministry in which most of the people in a certain hospital in Africa got out as Jesus healed them. Perhaps we will see more such instances before He returns.

A close relative of this objection, not worth covering separately, is: "If healing is for all, you should go empty hospitals." This is the equivalent of saying, "If eternal life is for all, you should go empty strip clubs." That makes no sense at all in the light of Jesus' parable of the sower, where it is clear that the Word will fall on different kinds of ground and produce different results. It is our job to spread the good news of eternal life and healing. It is largely up to the people who hear it what happens. People decide for themselves what kind of ground they will be.

If someone objects that those who preach that healing is for all should be emptying hospitals, you can retort that if that person really believes that salvation is for all, he should go empty crack houses in the nearest slum! Can't all the drug addicts receive eternal life? Yes, if they hear and believe the gospel. But every individual is at a different place. That is why you can't necessarily go into a crack house and get everyone saved in a day, and that is why you can't necessarily go into a hospital and get everyone healed in a day. Some people are in a position to receive right away and some are not.

The fact that you cannot get all the drug addicts and lust junkies downtown saved tonight does not prove that they could not all receive forgiveness and eternal life. The fact that you cannot get all the sick people in the local hospital healed tonight does not prove that they could not all receive healing from God. Like most objections, this one falls apart when you apply it to the receiving of eternal life (see The SAVED Test for more illustrations).

Objection: Mark 16:17-18 Was Only for the Early Apostles, Not All Believers

Mark 16:15-18

A careful reading of this passage is all that it takes to refute this objection, though there are other ways of disproving it.

Jesus did not tell the apostles whom He commissioned that the signs of Mark 16:15-18 would follow them. He said that they would follow those who believe.

Read the context. Jesus commanded them to preach to everyone. He divided their hearers into two classes: (1) Those who would believe and (2) Those who would not believe. The ones who believe would be saved. The ones who did not believe would be damned. And certain signs would follow the ones who believe.

The ones who believe in verse 16 are the same ones who believe in verse 17. The context flows directly from one verse to the next. The ones who believe will be saved and certain specified signs will follow them.

If you are a Christian (one who believes), you are in the category of person eligible for verse 17 (and then verse 18).

Do you believe that first two verses in the passage are for today? Should we preach the good news to sinners even though we are not Early Apostles? Of course! No decent church would deny that. The Great Commission is still in force today, so we should expect ALL FOUR verses of it, not just the first two verses, to continue to be true.

Acts 11:19-21 demonstrates that “the hand of the Lord” (referring to His supernatural power) flowed through ordinary believers. (See Notes on Acts 11:19-21 for further proof of this.) Ananias (the good one, not the liar or the mean high priest) prophesied to Saul (Paul) and laid hands on him so that he could be baptized with the Holy Spirit and receive his sight. Ananias is never mentioned as being in any ministry office, either at that time or later. Philip was not yet referred to as an evangelist when he started a revival in Samaria. Stephen, one of seven men who made sure that everyone got enough to eat, did “great wonders and miracles” among the people despite never being set apart to any preaching ministry.

No one today is an Early Apostle, but mighty signs and wonders are still being done in the name of Jesus all over the world today by people who believe the promises in this passage. May you be one of those people!

Objection: Signs Were Only to Follow Those Who Were There to Hear the Original Apostles

When Jesus commissioned the original apostles, He told them to go tell everyone the good news. He said that there would be those who believe and those who would not believe, and that those who believe would cast out demons, speak in tongues, be immune from poisoning (by man or snake) and lay hands on the sick and have them recover (Mark 16:17-18).

Someone out to disprove that laying hands on the sick is for today may then point out that these people who would lay hands on the sick were those who heard the original apostles. In other words, once the original apostles were gone, people could no longer hear them, so laying hands on the sick couldn't be for us today because we weren't around to hear and believe the original apostles.

First, we ARE around to "hear" many of the original apostles because they wrote quite a few books of the Bible!

Second, Jesus said in John 14:12 that those who believe on Him – not just those who believe His original apostles – would do the works that He did, which obviously include healing the sick.

Third, the elders of the church are COMMANDED to pray the prayer of faith over sick people who call on them. The Word says that the Lord will raise them up (James 5:14-15). This is surely a Church Age instruction, not just one for the so-called Early Church.

Fourth, people who apparently had NO direct contact with Jesus or the original Apostles of the Lamb went out and cast out demons in His name anyway (Mark 9:38-39). Casting out demons was in the same list of things that those who believe would do.

Fifth, Jesus said in that same passage that "those who believe" would speak with new tongues. Who were these tongue-talkers? According to Acts 2:39, the gift of the Holy Spirit is for ALL believers, not just those who were around to hear the original apostles! The whole statement goes together, so those who can speak in tongues (ALL believers) MUST be the same believers who can lay hands on the sick and see them recover. That completely clinches the matter. ALL believers are authorized to lay hands on the sick!

Objection: Mark 16:17-18 Was Only for the Early Apostles, Not All Believers

Objection: Jesus Didn't Heal Everyone in His Earthly Ministry; He Left Many Sick at the Pool of Bethesda

Yes, Jesus did leave the rest of the sick people there. The man who was healed was healed by a manifestation of the Holy Spirit, not by his own faith. The man argued a good case for staying sick, in fact!

Why didn't Jesus heal all the other sick people at this infirmary? The gifts of the Spirit were not in manifestation to do so. Remember that Jesus ministered as a Man anointed by the Holy Spirit, not as God. He could not heal the others unless the Holy Spirit moved in a special way.

This does not prove that God did not want to heal the others. No one else at the pool asked for healing! No one else believed that Jesus would heal him. Almost all the people who got healed in Jesus' ministry heard about Him, believed in Him, and came to Him or were brought to Him to receive their healing. Jesus did not go around looking for people to heal. The case in John 5 is an exception.

This is why you can't just go through a hospital and raise up every person in succession. Every person there could be healed if he heard God's Word and believed it. But a servant is not above his master, and you will not do what Jesus Himself could not do.

Rather than making a big deal about the fact that there were people at this pool who did not get healed, we should make a big deal about the fact that multitudes did get healed when they came to Jesus for healing! Jesus turned no one away who came to be healed.

Jesus could not do miracles at Nazareth, either (Mark 6:1-6), and it is safe to say that there must have been those who needed miracles. Jesus had to leave them without healing them because of their unbelief. Jesus did not heal the religious leaders when the power of the Lord was present to heal them, either (Luke 5:17-26). So, no, Jesus did not heal everyone. He did heal everyone who came to Him in faith. It is the same today. Jesus heals all who come to Him in faith, but many today are not healed because they do not come to Him in faith. This does not prove that God and Jesus do not want everyone well any more than failure by some to receive the new birth proves that God and Jesus do not want everyone to get saved!

A variant of this objection simply states that sometimes Jesus healed "all" and sometimes He did not heal "all" but only healed "many." I thought you would enjoy the following statistics from the gospels. The incident counts are open to interpretation, but you will get the general idea. Multiple citations of the same incident are counted as separate incidents.

| | |
|--|----|
| Times Jesus healed ALL who came to him | 16 |
| Times Jesus healed MANY but we know from the context that it was ALL | 1 |
| Times Jesus healed FEW or NONE present | 4 |

| | |
|--|----|
| Times Jesus healed an individual who was present | 45 |
| Times Jesus healed an individual who was not present | 3 |
| Unclear how many healed | 1 |

We know that in the cases where few or none were healed, no one came to Jesus in faith. All who came in faith were healed.

As you can see, the claim that “many” were healed instead of “all” on any kind of regular basis does not stand up to scrutiny. It sounds good until you count the incidents for yourself. Jesus went about healing all who were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38), so Peter said that all, not many or some, was the rule. Peter should have known – he spent 3 years walking with Jesus in person!

Objection: All Christians Are Clearly Told that They Will Suffer in This Life

Yes, that is true. But they are never told that they have to suffer sickness! The suffering talked about for the New Testament believer is always persecution, not disease. You cannot find one Scripture in the Bible promising a righteous child of God that he will have to get sick in this life. You will find plenty that tell you that you don't have to get sick! Preachers sometimes use certain verses in First Peter to prove that we have to suffer sickness, despite the fact that Peter did not mention sickness as a suffering. Remember, Peter said that you were healed by Jesus' stripes (1 Peter 2:24)! First Peter deals in great detail with suffering persecution as a Christian. That kind of suffering is the clear and obvious context for all statements made about suffering in that book.

All who want to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution (2 Timothy 3:12), but nowhere do we read that all who want to live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer sickness. Suffering persecution is real and no amount of faith makes you exempt from it. Sickness is another matter. So yes, you will suffer in this life. But don't suffer something you don't have to suffer!

See the discussion, Suffering for more proof of this. Also see the specific objection based on 1 Peter 5:10.

Objection: 3 John 2 Is a Greeting and Cannot Be Claimed as a Promise

3 John 2

If God wished above all things for Gaius to be in health and prosper, and did not wish above all things that you be in health and prosper, He is a “respector of persons” who plays favorites. We know from various verses that God does not do this (Acts 10:34, Romans 2:11, Ephesians 6:9, Colossians 3:25, 1 Peter 1:17). His will for Gaius is equally His will for you – that you be in health and prosper, even as your soul prospers.

So it either IS or ISN'T God's will for ALL men to be in health and prosper. If it ISN'T, John sinned by writing this wish in his letter. It would be wrong to use something as a greeting that was not the will of God and even more wrong to have that greeting become part of Scripture.

Those promoting this objection like to state that John's wish was an “epistolary salutation” that was common even for unbelievers to use back then, and that even today, “I hope this letter finds you in good health” would be a salutation but not a doctrinal statement. The objection can go on to describe “sections” of epistles and claim that no doctrinal statement was ever set forth in the “salutation” section or the “thanksgiving” section that follows. If true, that would ruin one of the most powerful verses in the Bible – Ephesians 1:3, which thanks God who has already blessed us with every spiritual blessing. That powerful truth is from what they would call the “thanksgiving” section. I don't think we can write off verses like that simply because they're at the beginning of a letter.

But if you want to claim that John just greeted people in a theologically meaningless manner, we should consider his other writings – the Gospel of John, 2 John, 3 John and Revelation, and see if that's his peculiar pattern.

I would hope that we would not write off “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God” – an affirmation of the pre-existence and deity of Christ – just because it happens to be the very first verse in the Gospel of John.

1 John does not start with any kind of greeting; it just dives right into content, describing John's eyewitness status to the Word of Life (Jesus).

2 John does open with a greeting, though no mention is made of health or prosperity.

Revelation starts with content without any kind of personal greeting.

So what John said in 3 John was not any kind of “stock greeting” that he used all the time – at least not in the other four letters on record from him.

One objector wrote that wishing good health was a standard greeting at the time, as in “I hope that this letter finds you in good health.” My question to the objector is simple: If that was really the standard greeting of that day, why does it not appear in any other letter in the Bible from John or any other author?

But even if you think it was only a greeting, it shows that John considered health and prosperity, not sickness and poverty, to be blessings. If he were convinced that sickness is a blessing in disguise, as some teach today, he would have written, “Beloved, I hope you get sick really soon so that God can add to your spiritual depth and teach you things, and you can spend all your money on doctors so that you can experience the additional blessing-in-disguise of poverty.”

Suppose for a minute that John intended the verse to be a greeting to Gaius when he wrote it. I think that’s a reasonable assumption. Paul did in fact write some initial greetings in his letters. However, the entirety of 3 John is part of the canon of Scripture. It would be shocking and horrible to suppose that only parts of 3 John are really Scripture, so we have to throw out the material at the two ends. We could really carve up the Bible doing that. Either 3 John 2 is Scripture or it isn’t. I hope you realize that it is.

Although part of the New Testament consists of letters written to others, they are in the New Testament canon because they apply to the Church as a whole. The fact that the letters were written to individual churches and individuals does not mean that they applied only to the recipient(s) of the letters! If that were true, it would wipe out the New Testament epistles completely, as well as the first part of Revelation. And since Luke penned his gospel account and Acts for someone named Theophilus, we would have to throw out those books, too.

So let’s see. If we can’t apply statements made to certain people in the Bible ourselves:

- Only Nicodemus needed to be born again.
- Only the Ephesians should have a revelation of the power and love of God.
- God would only meet the Philippians’ needs, not yours.
- Only the dispersed Jews should anoint the sick. (Believe it or not, someone actually said this.)
- Only the church at Laodicea would ever need to repent of lukewarmness.
- Only the disciples present with Jesus can speak in tongues and lay hands on the sick.
- Only Timothy needed to stir up the gift within him.

And so on. Once you start down that road, you would have to rip out large chunks of the Bible and claim that they are not for the reader, but only for whom the letters were originally addressed.

It’s strictly an opinion that 3 John 2 is “only” a greeting, anyway. But given the other arguments above, I don’t think it matters. In order for this objection to have any validity, you must believe the following, which the objectors do:

1. The desire John expresses for Gaius was specific only to Gaius.
2. It was John’s desire, BUT NOT NECESSARILY GOD’S DESIRE, for Gaius to prosper and be in health.
Thus, John expressed sentiments that could have been contrary to God’s will and yet that is part of Scripture.

Even if you think this was Gaius-specific, if it was GOD'S desire for Gaius to prosper and be in health, it must be His will for EVERYONE to prosper and be in health, because God does not play favorites, as we saw above. So the only way this objection could hold water is if you believe that JOHN wanted Gaius to prosper and be in health, but GOD did not. In other words, John was simply conveying a wish that was contrary to God's will. If he were actually doing that, I don't see how 3 John could have been included in the New Testament canon.

I will speculate that if John had said instead, "Gaius, I hope you get really sick and go broke, even as God uses that to draw you closer to Himself" that the objectors would have no problem taking that and running with it as theology, though that particular idea is blown to pieces with our New Testament cannon elsewhere in this book.

So here is where this leaves the objector. He must either admit that this wish, part of Scripture, reflects God's known will for Gaius and everyone else, or produce evidence from another part of Scripture proving that somewhere else in the New Testament, a writer wished or prayed something for someone else that was contrary to God's will. It would be too hard to claim that this one instance is the one place in the New Testament where a writer wished upon someone else something that was not God's will.

I can't find anywhere that fits that description. For example, wouldn't God want to send "grace and peace" to all believers, not just the ones cited at the beginnings of Paul's letters? Could it be God's will NOT to bestow grace and peace upon any believer? Such statements might even fall into the "best wishes" category, but could you deny that these are God's will for everyone? Does not God want all believers to have the spirit of wisdom of revelation in the knowledge of Him and to know the love of Christ? Paul prayed these things for the Ephesians (Ephesians 1:15-23, Ephesians 3:14-19), but they are clearly the will of God for ALL believers. In fact, praying Bible prayers for yourself is an invaluable aid to a strong walk with the Lord, and one which I heartily recommend and whose value I can vouch for from experience.

Bottom line: Unless someone can show that a stated prayer or wish by a gospel writer anywhere else was contrary to God's will (don't hold your breath waiting), we must conclude that this prayer/wish of John's was God's will along with all similar prayers and wishes, and that therefore it MUST be God's will for you to prosper and be in health even as your soul prospers!

Objection: It Wasn't God's Time to Heal the Beggar at the Gate Beautiful in Jesus' Ministry; He Had to Wait for Peter and John

This oft-quoted popular objection states that Jesus went past this man many times in His ministry and did not heal him, but he was healed only when Peter and John showed up.

First, you don't have any proof that Jesus ever walked past this man. Even if you could prove He walked past this man, that would still prove nothing. Jesus healed all those who came to Him for healing. If this man never appealed to Jesus for his healing, he would not have the right to expect to get it. He would be in the same position as the many at the Pool of Bethesda who were not healed because they did not come to Jesus to be healed.

The power of the Lord was present to heal the religious bigwigs in a house, but only one man (a paralytic who was in faith along with his friends who brought him) was healed. The others were too busy complaining about Jesus to receive from the healing power that was there. They were not healed. They did not even ask to be healed, even though they needed it. (The power would not have been there to heal them if they did not need healing!) See Luke 5:17-26.

Read the stories of the multitudes who were healed and you can see that they were always "brought to Jesus" or they "came to Jesus." Jesus did not just walk around randomly healing people. This is why you can't just go clean out a hospital. People need to be expecting to receive something or you will be wasting your time going there. Now if the hospital will let you preach the good news about healing to everyone, perhaps you WILL get a lot of people or even all of them out of there. I still remember when my wife and I prayed over a terminal cancer patient in a hospital in another country, and the hospital was upset with us for being "too loud" and "using funny languages." God healed that woman, but the workers were upset – that's not an environment where you're going to clean out the cancer ward. I saw a lot of miracles at a certain nursing home, including seeing a man get out of his wheelchair and walk (and also get healed of AIDS), but the staff was upset with me and told me so. (Some of them were denominational Christians who did not appreciate the doctrine of divine healing even though it worked! You will at some point run into some people who accuse you of using the devil's power – after all, they said that about Jesus, and a servant is not above his master.) They accused me of breaking confidentiality by saying that the man was healed, but that man was actually out on Main Street in that city telling anyone who would listen that the Lord had just healed him of AIDS (and he had an HIV-negative test to prove it). I wasn't repeating anything people weren't hearing from him in public. But some people just won't get excited about miracles, just as the Pharisees got upset that Jesus healed on the wrong day rather than rejoicing with the people who were receiving miracles.

The man at the gate was healed by a manifestation of the Spirit, as was the man at the Pool of Bethesda. You can get healed by a manifestation of the Spirit, but you have no guarantee of this. You can always get healed through faith in Christ's atonement, which included provision for your physical healing. It is better to be one of those to whom Jesus can say, "Your faith has healed you," rather than one of those at the Pool of Bethesda who don't know the will of God in the matter.

Okay, so why did God see fit to heal the man then and not earlier? Actually, God was willing to heal that man all along. The man could have been brought to Jesus for his healing earlier and received it along with the other multitudes where they were ALL healed. ANYONE who went (or was brought) to where He was and touched His garment in faith would have been healed. Any person in Jesus' ministry or after could have been healed by believing God's promises and statements in the Old Testament relative to sickness and healing ("I am the Lord your Physician," "I will take away all sickness," "No plague shall come near your house," "Who heals all your diseases," etc. – see the Old Testament portion of this book for a lengthy list.)

If we are going to argue that the man had to wait for it to be God's will to heal him spectacularly one day, we must also conclude that it was not God's will for Saul of Tarsus to be saved until the day that he had a spectacular divine appointment. We know that this cannot be true, because God wills that all men be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth (1 Timothy 2:3-4). Your salvation had nothing to do with the timing of God either. God would rather that you had grown up as a Christian rather than wasting years of your life learning how to sin and then having to unlearn your bad habits. The best testimony of all is that of someone who serves God and never strays. It may not make you a popular conference speaker, although maybe it should. People get excited that a former blaspheming atheist like me got saved, but the man who has been faithful to God all his life has a better testimony than I do.

God tells you exactly when His perfect timing is for your salvation and your healing. Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation (2 Corinthians 6:2). If you have been waiting on God to determine His timing for your healing or your salvation (which includes healing), now you know when it is. God's perfect time for you to receive any of His promises is now. He is not making you wait; He is the One waiting for you. You can pray and receive your healing now if you want to.

Even in our day, some people are healed by a spectacular manifestation of the Spirit, and people wonder why God's timing wasn't earlier. His timing for the miracle was "all along," but the person did not receive it. We don't always know why "signs and wonders" happen when they do, how they do, and to whom they do. That's why they're wonders – they leave you wondering! But one thing you DON'T have to wonder about is God's timing – you can ALWAYS receive healing by faith, even if it requires a miracle – at any time. The fact that God "meets someone halfway" or even "all the way" through a special manifestation does NOT mean that healing wasn't available until then. It's been available ever since Jesus died and rose from the dead!

Objection: We Should Pray, “If It Be Thy Will” Concerning Our Healing

Believers are nowhere instructed to pray this faithless phrase regarding their healing. The only time Jesus prayed this way was when he was facing His imminent crucifixion. He was not using this phrase to pray for healing. He was consecrating himself to the will of God even though it was not what His body wanted to go through.

There is a time and a place for believers to pray, “If it be Thy will,” and it is when they are consecrating themselves to God’s service as Jesus was.

However, Jesus gave explicit instructions about how to receive things from God by faith, and praying this phrase is definitely not part of the program!

This phrase has a nice religious ring of humility to it, yet it is actually an unwitting slap in God’s face. To pray, “If it be Thy will” concerning healing is to express either ignorance or unbelief of God’s clear statements on the subject. There is nothing humble about that.

Study God’s Word concerning healing (which this book will help you do), and you will conclude that it IS God’s will to heal you IN EVERY INSTANCE. Then you won’t use the phrase, “If it be Thy will” because you’ll KNOW that God's will is for you to be healed!

Jesus and the Bible writers NEVER taught that you should ask for something IF it be God’s will, and what they actually DID tell you to do might shock you – they told you to pray according to YOUR will after you’ve acquainted yourself with the Word so that you aren’t asking amiss or selfishly!

Jesus said that if you abide in Him and His words abide in you (those are prerequisites to this) that you would ask what YOU will and it would be done for you (John 15:7).

Jesus told the Syrophenician woman with the demonized daughter in Matthew 15:22-28, “Be it to you even as YOU will.”

God even challenged people, “Concerning the works of My hands YOU command ME” (Isaiah 45:11)! While this clearly does not establish a new pecking order where you are the Supreme Being in the universe and God reports to you, it does show the freedom that He gives us to be bold with Him in prayer. There is such a place in prayer that most Christians will never know. By the way, if this verse upsets you, notify its Author, who isn’t the author of this book. But you should first admit that it is consistent with other cases where people like Abraham and Moses were very bold with God in prayer. Cannot we be at least as bold under our better covenant?

Objection: Death Is the Ultimate Healing for the Christian, So Healing Prayers Are Sometimes Answered by Someone's Death

This is probably taught in the Giving False Comfort 101 class in seminaries around the world, given how much this tired old line gets repeated. The idea is that when a Christian dies, he is completely healed, so he DOES get his healing after all when people were praying for his healing.

But this argument is ridiculous for at least three reasons.

First, if we assume that "healing prayers" are not prayed with the intention of someone dying to get healed, it is silly to claim that prayers for healing that were clearly intended to stop the person from dying were answered by having the person die. That is clearly a case of unanswered prayer, not God's answer to prayer.

I suppose that in some cases someone might actually pray for the death of a spouse because the person secretly has eyes for someone else or just doesn't like that spouse. That indicates another problem that the person really needs to sort out with God! But in the vast majority of cases, the people praying are praying that death will be delayed, not hastened.

The usual "twist" is that God supposedly heard your prayer, but chose to "answer" it in a different way from what you had in mind. That is just plain lame. If you prayed for someone to live and the person died, God did not answer your prayer AT ALL. I realize that I will never get to teach Giving False Comfort 101 because I say such things, but I have to stick with the Word rather than trying to please men.

Second, the objection is factually false! Death does NOT produce healing for a Christian's body! When you go to be with Jesus in this age, you are "absent from the body and present with the Lord" (2 Corinthians 5:8). Your body is NOT healed at that time! You aren't even IN your body at that time! Otherwise, you couldn't be absent from it! Can you see that? The deceased person does not have a healed body, or any body at all of the type we are used to.

When Jesus returns, your old body will be transformed into a new immortal body, and you will be reunited with "your body" at that time. Your new body will not be subject to sickness, pain or death. Your new body will be incapable of getting healed because it will be incapable of getting sick in the first place! It would be too much of a stretch for me to say that your body, which would have already been oxidized slowly in the ground or oxidized quickly by cremation, is "healed" in any meaningful sense. It will be replaced (or changed), not healed. So no "healing" occurs even at that point.

Third, death is described as an enemy – the last enemy that will be defeated (1 Corinthians 15:26). God does not answer prayers by deliberately handing you over to your enemy! That would be no better than having David pray for victory in battle, then having God "answer" his prayer by handing him over to the Philistines to get killed, thus securing "victory" because David would never face Philistines again after he was gone.

I don't belittle the fact that a deceased Christian is in a better place where there is no sickness or crying or pain. But his decease was most certainly not God's "answer" to prayers for healing!

Objection: Some Who Get Healed at Healing Crusades Don't Keep Their Healings

The Church's Responsibility

When I attended a certain church, there was a special healing service at a church across the street. This church did not teach healing from God's Word. It did not tell people that it was provided for all by Jesus Christ. They allowed healing to take place by manifestations of the Spirit, but they did not teach that healing was a covenant right.

There was a stir because a blind woman who was prayed over at the healing service at that church instantly received her sight. Many of us, including me, were surprised, because we knew that this church was hardly a bastion of faith. Aside from a manifestation of the Spirit, you would never get healed there. Some people at the church I attended believed that healing was provided in Christ's atonement, but we had never seen a blind person healed. Thank God for His mercy.

According to the witnesses, this lady left the service saying, "I can't believe that this happened to me! I really can't believe that this happened!" Unfortunately, that was true, because three days later she went blind again and (as far as I know) never recovered her sight.

Was this the minister's fault? The Church's fault? At least indirectly, yes! The woman had no idea how to keep her healing. That is why it is so crucial that any ministry of healing be based on the Bible, not on manifestations of the Spirit. Otherwise, you may get thousands of people healed, only to have them lose their healing soon afterward. What good is that? Then people come up with this "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away" attitude and make objections like the one being discussed here. Worse yet, they can become hardened to healing in general and be harder to reach next time!

Unfortunately, many "healing ministries" do not provide sufficient instruction from the Word. The Bible pattern is to preach the Word and let the signs and wonders confirm it. The Word comes first; the signs and wonders come second. Although I saw people get healed at a service where the minister said, "Remember, God heals in His own time in His own way," that was definitely the mercy of God in action! There was no basis for faith preached, although there was a good basis for unbelief. God moved in spite of it. That was His mercy in operation. Thank God, you don't have to be 100% doctrinally pure for God to use you. You can take comfort in that. But that doesn't excuse neglecting to learn and preach the Word yourself.

Your Responsibility

What some people miss is that you can be healed by a manifestation of the Spirit without exercising any faith at all. Unbelievers have been known to get healed in healing services, and sometimes it seems that God favors them over those who have been "walking the walk" all their lives. (God expects less of them and meets them where they are.) However, even if you get healed with no faith of your own, you still need faith to keep the healing you received. Hence the need for proper instruction.

This is exactly what the religious world does not want to hear. This elicits comments such as, “If God really did the healing, it would be permanent! Guess it wasn’t God!” Yet Jesus told the man at the Pool of Bethesda to go and sin no more, lest a worse thing befall him (John 5:14). Jesus admitted the possibility that the man could get sick again. Saul was refreshed and “made well” when David ministered to him in music. Yet Saul continually got sick again. This cycle in his life continued because of his lack of consecration to God. David ministered to him under the anointing. As long as the anointing got on Saul, he was fine. But Saul never changed on the inside, so he slid right back once he was away from the anointing. God kept making him well, but Saul never managed to stay that way. So much for the idea, “If God did it, it would be permanent.”

The anointing is a great painkiller, among other things. You can feel better while you are around the anointing, but if you don’t take hold of it for yourself, you will feel bad again when you leave the service and have Saul’s kind of experience.

I can understand why some people object to the fact that people lose their healings. They point to the ministry of Jesus in the gospels and ministry of the apostles in Acts and point out that there is no record that anyone in those times lost his healing. This is cited as further proof that the miracles that happen today are not genuine, because the “genuine” miracles then were permanent, while ours today are temporary. That is sheer nonsense, of course, because there are plenty of permanent miracles going on today where people have kept their healing. If we were as diligent to magnify cases where people kept their healings, rather than magnifying failures, more people would have hope for their own healings and keep them.

Is being born again any less miraculous than a healing? Yet there are warnings all over the New Testament against falling away, as well as citations of individuals who did in fact deny the faith and apostatize. Does this mean that being born again is not genuine? The point is that you can have something miraculous and lose it later. Just because you lose something doesn’t mean it wasn’t genuine. The fact that others lose something doesn’t mean that you have to lose it.

Peter walked on water. He was operating in the supernatural. Then he lost his miracle when he let the outward situation mean more to him than Jesus’ command. Did an act of God let Peter walk on water? Yes! But Peter lost it. It was God, but it wasn’t permanent for Peter. If Peter could get something by faith and lose it later, so can someone else.

The Israelites enjoyed the biggest mass healing in recorded history (Psalm 105:37). But after their hearts turned against the Lord, some of the ones who were formally well became feeble (Deuteronomy 25:17-18). So we assume that some were healed (for real) they lost their healings.

Further proof of this is found in the parable of the sower in Mark 4. Four classes of people received the Word. Only one class of people got permanent results. Some of the others got temporary results, but then lost what they had. What they had was a genuine work of God, but they lost it because they were not "good ground." Jesus warned that if you do not have ears to hear, even what you have will be taken away from you. This fact alone contradicts the theology that God's gifts, once received, cannot be lost. (The gifts and callings of God are without repentance, meaning that God never withdraws the right to them. But this does not mean that they cannot be forfeited. Sadly, many go to their graves never having walked in what God had for them, or having done His will for a season before deciding to stop.) Also notice that you can lose out even though there is nothing wrong with the Word or with the preacher!

It is your responsibility, not God's, to make sure that you are good ground. You are the one who must guard the Word that is sown in your heart. God will not do this for you. God told Israel to break up its fallow ground (Jeremiah 4:3, Hosea 10:12), which shows that this was the people's responsibility, not God's.

If everything God gives you is permanent, Jesus' command to the church at Thyatira in Revelation 2:25 is meaningless. He said, "But that which ye have already hold fast till I come." If God's work were always permanent, they would not have had to hold fast to it because there would have been no possibility of losing what they already had.

Jesus told the man who was healed at the Pool of Bethesda, "Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee" (John 5:14). Jesus plainly told the man that if he persisted in sin, he could end up even worse than he was and lose his healing. Jesus didn't say exactly what would be worse than being crippled for 38 years, but it would certainly not be good! It was up to the man whether such a worse thing would come upon him. Jesus did not say that God had anything to do with it. If the man chose to sin, he would lose his healing and get something worse.

Some Parallels

If we are going to use people who lose their healing as an excuse that healing is not for all today, we should also raise the following objections:

"Walking in love doesn't work. Some people go to services where they preach the love walk. They walk in love for a couple of days, but then they start acting mean again. Walking in love was just for the time of the apostles, not now."

"Tithing doesn't work. I know people who heard a message on tithing two weeks ago. At first, it looked like it was working, but then they got extra bills instead of miracle mailbox money. So they stopped once they realized it didn't work."

“Bobby Backslider said he was a Christian, but now he’s back in the world doing drugs again. The doctrine of the new birth was obviously only for the early church. It doesn’t work today because it didn’t work for Bobby.”

Doctrine from Experience?

People’s failures can never be used to prove or disprove doctrinal points. Only the Bible, not people’s experiences, is profitable for doctrine (2 Timothy 3:16-17). The fact that some fail to keep the promises of God does not negate those promises. Mathematically, 75% of the “ground” in Mark 4 got no lasting results. Should we pay more attention to the 75% that got no results or the 25% that bore fruit 30, 60 and 100 times over? The Word was still genuine and of God even though the success rate was only 25%. I would not consider this arithmetically binding, but perhaps we should be extremely pleased if we get a 25% permanent success rate in healing services! Remember, it was not the quality of the Word (the seed) that was the issue; it was the ground that received it. This is still true today. And it is also true that it is up to the individuals involved to be the good ground to receive the Word.

If Mark 4 is any indication, there will always be people who receive and then lose their healings. Like the poor, these people will always be with us. Rather than following and broadcasting their failures, find out what the people did who kept their healings and follow them!

Objection: Thayer's Greek Lexicon Says that the Word for "Healed" in 1 Peter 2:24 Means "to Bring About (One's) Salvation"

Thayer is no good reason to believe this!

If you blindly accept the words of unbeliever Joseph Henry Thayer, who wrote Thayer's Greek Lexicon, you'll call into question the deity of Christ as he did, and maybe even join him in his denial of the inerrancy of Scripture. This is not a man you want to follow too closely.

While his reference book is used in many seminaries and websites today, most if not all modern copies have a warning from the publisher that Thayer was a Unitarian whose heretical views colored some of his entries. Thayer sometimes allowed his preconceived ideas to determine his "official" meaning of Greek words without a careful comparison to the rest of the Greek text. 1 Peter 2:24 is one example of this, as is his entry for Paul's "thorn" where, without any reasonable support other than people's thoughts, he insists that it refers to a sickness.

First, as a theological point, "stripes" do not bring about remission of sin; only shed innocent blood does that (Hebrews 9:22), so Thayer's definition has to be wrong – Jesus' stripes did NOT bring about your salvation. They purchased healing for your body, but that act alone would not have saved you from the lake of fire.

Second, rather than blindly accepting the word of a heathen on this, it would be useful for you to look at other places in Scripture where the same Greek word for healed (iaomai) is used, and see if Thayer's statement that it means to "bring about (one's) salvation" makes sense. Let's substitute Thayer's definition for the word "healed" in a few of the many such verses where iaomai was translated and see what happens!

"And immediately the fountain of her blood was dried up, and she felt in her body that her salvation had been brought about of that plague." – Mark 5:29 (TUV) (TUV = Thayer's Unbiblical Version)

"And it happened a certain day, as He was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the Law sitting there, who had come out of every town of Galilee, Judaea and Jerusalem, and the power of the Lord was present to bring about their salvation." – Luke 5:17 (TUV)

"And Jesus said to the centurion, Go your way, and as you have believed, so be it done to you. And his servant had his salvation brought about in that same hour." – Matthew 8:13 (TUV)

"And He came down with them, and stood in the plain, with the company of His disciples and a great multitude of people out of all Judaea and Jerusalem, and from the coast of Tyre and Sidon, who came to hear Him and to have their salvation brought about of their diseases." – Luke 6:17 (TUV)

"And the whole multitude sought to touch Him, for power went out of Him and brought about the salvation of them all." – Luke 6:19 (TUV)

“And He sent them to preach the Kingdom of God, and to bring about the salvation of the sick.” – Luke 9:2 (TUV)

“And the people, when they knew it, followed Him, and He received them, and spoke to them about the Kingdom of God, and brought about the salvation of those who needed healing.” – Luke 9:11 (TUV)

“And as he was yet coming, the devil threw him down, and tore him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and brought about the salvation of the child, and delivered him again to his father.” – Luke 9:42 (TUV)

“And Jesus said, ‘Permit even this.’ And He touched his ear [the one that Peter had just chopped off with a sword], and brought about his salvation.” – Luke 22:51 (TUV)

“And it happened, that Publius’s father laid sick of a fever and a bloody flow, to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and brought about his salvation.” – Acts 28:8 (TUV)

“And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but rather let its salvation be brought about.” – Hebrews 12:13 (TUV)

“Confess your faults to one another, and pray for one another, that your salvation may be brought about. The effective fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much.” – James 5:16 (TUV)

If you believe (as Thayer did) that Scripture has errors, you might not mind making the substitutions above. If, however, you believe that the Word is error-free and consistent with itself, you would have to admit that the word iaomai obviously refers to healing, not to being saved from sin. It is lamentable that despite his extensive Greek research, much of which I assume is valid as far as the language goes, Thayer’s understanding of Scripture wasn’t even good enough to bring about his own salvation! He never had the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit; his work was solely that of his own intellect.

I realize that some will object to my ad hominem attack on Thayer and point out that the fact that he was a heretic doesn’t necessarily mean that any or all of what he wrote was incorrect. I think I’ve presented enough evidence that Thayer is wrong that it really wouldn’t matter if he were the greatest Protestant theologian of this day – wrong is still wrong. However, I’d think you’d agree that an unenlightened sinner is less likely to have a grasp of the truth than a saint, because the sinner doesn’t have the Holy Spirit in him. There may be plenty of verses that were translated correctly in the Watchtower Bible, but I won’t run out and buy one because I know that it contains deliberate cultish distortions that fit the error of the group that publishes it.

Seeing as the objector brought up Thayer, Thayer's own entire definition reads like this: "1) to cure, heal 2) to make whole 2a) to free from errors and sins, to bring about (one's) salvation." So even Thayer had to admit that the main meaning of iaomai had to do with healing and being whole. I think it is safe to say that ANY Greek reference work out there will confirm that the word iaomai has to do with healing. It is purely Thayer's speculation that iaomai could ever mean "to bring about (one's) salvation – because it is NEVER actually translated that way! (At least it isn't in the KJV. If you are using one of the modern "hip" paraphrases to do your word studies, you are already in trouble, as the author's opinions are already baked into the verses). That was an erroneous idea that he "read into" the Word.

Don't take other people's word for things – even mine! Be like the Bereans (Acts 17:11) and do your own research when you hear claims such as Thayer's rendering of iaomai in 1 Peter 2:24. Then you'll know the facts for yourself rather than taking a man's word for something.

For starters, you can check out the "Healed" Defined section of this book.

Objection: The Theological Dictionary of the New Testament Says that “Healed” in 1 Peter 2:24 Refers to Restoration of Divine Fellowship

We can follow a similar line of thought in the answer to the similar Thayer objection. Take other Scripture passages that use the same Greek word iaomai used for “healed” in 1 Peter 2:24, and substitute this dictionary definition, and see how the resulting Theo-illogical Dictionary Version (TDV) reads:

“And it happened a certain day, as He was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the Law sitting there, who had come out of every town of Galilee, Judaea and Jerusalem, and the power of the Lord was present to restore them to divine fellowship.” – Luke 5:17 (TDV)

“And He came down with them, and stood in the plain, with the company of His disciples and a great multitude of people out of all Judaea and Jerusalem, and from the coast of Tyre and Sidon, who came to hear Him and to have restoration of divine fellowship of their diseases.” – Luke 6:17 (TDV)

“And as he was yet coming, the devil threw him down, and tore him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and restored the child to divine fellowship, and delivered him again to his father.” – Luke 9:42 (TDV)

“And Jesus said, ‘Permit even this.’ And He touched his ear [the one that Peter had just chopped off with a sword], and restored him to divine fellowship.” – Luke 22:51 (TDV)

“And it happened, that Publius’s father laid sick of a fever and a bloody flow, to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and restored him to divine fellowship.” – Acts 28:8 (TDV)

“And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but rather let it be restored to divine fellowship.” – Hebrews 12:13 (TDV)

“Confess your faults to one another, and pray for one another, that you may be restored to divine fellowship. The effective fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much.” – James 5:16 (TDV)

(You could do this with the other verses in the Thayer answer as well as other verses not included in either write-up that use the word iaomai.)

No reasonable person could look at these verses and think that iaomai refers to restoration of divine fellowship. Even an author who raised this “dictionary” objection had to admit in his own article that iaomai does refer to physical healing, but he then says that the word is used only “figuratively” in 1 Peter 2:24! Is it “figurative” in these other verses? If not, why would we have the right to claim that it is “figurative” in 1 Peter 2:24? The context arguments (here and here) and the “spiritual healing only” argument are the only paths left for the author to take, but these also fall apart upon closer examination.

Also, as has been noted elsewhere in this book, Jesus' stripes alone could not have restored you to divine fellowship anyway. Jesus' blood shed on the cross is what allows you to have divine fellowship. His stripes before the cross had to have had another purpose, and they did – to legally provide healing for your body.

Objection: Vine's Expository Dictionary Says that 1 Peter 2:24 Is Figurative of Spiritual Healing

Going to Vine's yourself is fruitful. Mr. Vine did say what the objector claims, but it is easy to prove in many different ways that 1 Peter 2:24 cannot possibly refer to spiritual healing! Vine may have created a famous classic work, but I have found that doing my own research beats taking famous people's words for anything. It's more work, but I've found out some things I never would have found if I just took other people's word for things. The question is not WHO says something – the only question is whether the person can back up his supposition with Scripture.

The problem is that people use books like this in seminary, teach these things to others, and the circle of ignorance goes unbroken – until someone does some digging on his own and finds out otherwise. Several old classic books are seminary favorites that have similar problems, and some of them are cited here because other people cite their writings as if they were Scripture.

This is similar to Thayer's similar error. See that response because it applies equally well here. However, something specific to this objection is the following information that the objector leaves out – the very first thing Vine says about the word iaomai used in 1 Peter 2:24 is that it refers to physical treatment 22 times! It is Vine's supposition that it doesn't mean that in 1 Peter 2:24, against the preponderance of use in the New Testament. Even his citation of the threefold repetition of Isaiah's "and I should heal them" prophecy (Isaiah 6:10) in Matthew 13:15, John 12:39-41 and Acts 28:27 and his assumption that this is "spiritual healing" (his words) cannot be true, as you are not spiritually healed! I don't think you can prove that Isaiah didn't mean physical healing anyway when salvation and healing are so closely intertwined.

I'm not cutting down Vine's in general, as it is an excellent resource to see what words are translated from which original-language words and where they were used. The problem is when Vine twists his own ideas in there along with statements of fact regarding which Greek words were used in which verses. The same problem appears in other "classic" reference works.

Reference works are useful so that you can find all the places where a certain Greek or Hebrew word is used and with what meaning. I am grateful for the reference materials available today on the Internet. (Many old books are in the public domain now.) At least this book will save you some of the time it took me to research some key words, as I looked up all the places they appear for you. I want you to see the evidence for yourself. I am convinced that the evidence always points to healing when you examine it closely!

Objection: 1 Peter 2:25 Proves that 1 Peter 2:24 Just Means that You're Forgiven

According to this line of reasoning, 1 Peter 2:25 ("For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls") proves that 1 Peter 2:24 only refers to being forgiven by turning to Christ ("by whose stripes ye were healed") and not to being physically healed.

First, this makes no more sense than to assert that 1 Peter 2:20-23 refers to not reviling those who revile, so therefore 1 Peter 2:24 must be talking about not being reviled as opposed to being physically healed or forgiven.

Second, the Greek word iaomai translated healed in 1 Peter 2:24 refers to physical healing when it is used elsewhere in the New Testament (see "Healed" Defined to verify this for yourself by seeing everywhere else that iaomai is used), it cannot just refer to forgiveness because of the Greek word that was used in the text.

Third, Peter quotes Isaiah, who was definitely talking about divine healing, as the Bible itself proves based on how Isaiah 53:4 is quoted in Matthew 8:17.

There are other good reasons mentioned elsewhere in this book that 1 Peter 2:24 cannot refer to spiritual healing of any kind but must be talking of physical healing.

But the objector will emphasize the word "for" at the beginning of 1 Peter 2:25 and assert that this proves a connection between "for ye were as sheep going astray" and "by whose stripes ye were healed." Thus, according to that "logic," 1 Peter 2:24 merely asserts that you were forgiven for going astray and it has nothing to do with healing.

And there IS indeed a strong connection, but that link only serves to torpedo the objection!

To the objector, the subject could not change from divine healing to sheep going astray in the next verse. Why would Peter suddenly start talking about sheep going astray when he had just been talking about divine healing? Because that's exactly what Isaiah did! This is just further proof that Peter is quoting Isaiah when he said the following:

[This verse is quoted by Matthew with regard to physical healing:] Surely he hath borne our griefs [literally sicknesses], and carried our sorrows [literally pains]: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace [Hebrew shalom, well-being in every area, including physical] was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

So the fact that 1 Peter 2:25 speaks of sheep going astray only underscores that Peter was quoting Isaiah's prophecy that included healing! "By whose stripes you were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray..." The reference to Isaiah's prophetic passage in which Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains should be beyond dispute.

Objection: Vine's Expository Dictionary Says that 1 Peter 2:24 Is Figurative of Spiritual Healing

Objection: All Uses of Matthew’s Greek Word for “That It Might Be Fulfilled” Refer to Events before the Atonement, So Matthew 8:17 Is Invalid As a Proof that Healing Is in the Atonement

This statement is actually not true, as Matthew 12:17’s use of the word refers to Gentiles trusting in Christ, which happened AFTER His atonement, and its use in Matthew 27:35 refers to soldiers parting Jesus’ clothing, which was DURING His atonement.

Here is a list of the places where Matthew uses this construction other than in Matthew 8:17 and the gist of what he referred to:

| | |
|---------------|---|
| Matt 1:22 | Behold a virgin shall be with child |
| Matt 2:15 | Out of Egypt I have called My Son |
| Matt 2:23 | He shall be called a Nazarene |
| Matt 4:14 | The people which sat in darkness saw great light |
| Matt 12:17 | He shall show judgment to the Gentiles, shall not strive or cry, in His name shall the Gentiles trust |
| Matt 13:35 | He will open His mouth in parables and utter secrets |
| Matt 21:4 | Your king comes to you sitting on a donkey |
| Matt 26:54,56 | Jesus arrested and taken to His death |
| Matt 27:35 | Jesus' clothing parted among the soldiers |

Of the cases other than the two cited in the first paragraph above, I think it is obvious that these would HAVE to have been fulfilled before Jesus was crucified, but what does that really prove? Nothing. Jesus would have to have been born and done the other things He did before He was killed.

Matthew 12:17 is enough to disprove the objector’s point – if a few Gentiles trusted in Him, the fulfillment of that verse was still not “over and done with” at that point in time. Thus, we could expect the same for Matthew 8:17; while some people were healed, Jesus didn’t stop healing people then.

So the only points left would be an assertion that Matthew 8:17 does not mention the atonement, or that Isaiah 53:4/Matthew 8:17 was completely fulfilled when Jesus healed the sick while walking the earth, or that Isaiah 53:4 was chronological, applying first to His earthly ministry and then to His atonement. You can click on those objections for answers to those.

Objection: There Is No Mention of the Atonement in Matthew 8:17 (Fulfilling Isaiah 53:4)

The same people who like to say, “A text without a context is a con” and “A text without a context is a pretext” make exactly that same error about the context of Isaiah 53:4. There is no question whatsoever that Isaiah 53 is about Christ’s atonement. In Isaiah 53:3, Jesus is a man of pains and acquainted with sickness (literal translation), people hid their faces from Him, despised Him and did not esteem Him. These are clearly events that happened during His atonement, as Jesus was NOT sick and in pain during His ministry time, people did NOT hide their faces from Him during His earthly ministry, they did not as a general rule despise Him (though some did) during His earthly ministry, and those who did not esteem Him were not as numerous as those who did during His earthly ministry.

Then follows the statement (still in Isaiah 53:4!) that He is considered smitten of God and afflicted. That clearly happened when He atoned for our sins. He certainly was not wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, etc. (Isaiah 53:5) before He atoned for our sins at the end of His life. The verses before and after Isaiah 53:4 are atonement verses; that is very clear.

So any objector along these lines must insist that one snippet within Isaiah 53:4 refers only to His earthly ministry while the ENTIRE context around it surely refers to His atonement. That is the very kind of Bible interpretation a healing minister would be “roasted” for if he tried to cut out a phrase from its obvious context like that.

But I do understand why this objection is made, because I used to wonder about it myself when reading Matthew 8:17. In particular, (1) it seems to be citing a “fulfillment” of something that seemed to refer to what happened much later in Isaiah’s account and (2) Isaiah also said in the same verse that Jesus bore our sicknesses (that’s the literal word translated “griefs” in the King James Version) and carried our pains (that’s the literal word translated “sorrows” – many study Bibles have margin notes affirming this, and you can study it out for yourself online), but Jesus was NOT sick and in pain Himself when He healed the sick that evening “fulfilling” Isaiah’s prophecy. And it is true that Matthew does NOT mention the atonement explicitly in this verse, so the objection is true at face value, though not true in its implication that healing isn’t in the atonement because it was fulfilled in Matthew 8:17.

These matters are covered fully in a reply to a related objection, so you can click on that so that I don’t have to repeat everything here. But briefly, the lack of a specific mention of an atonement in Matthew 8:17 when it quotes what is clearly an atonement Scripture does NOT mean that the atonement isn’t implied in Matthew’s verse. How could Jesus take all those sicknesses away from people in Capernaum when He hadn’t paid for their healing yet? This is the same as asking how people could be healed by mere SYMBOLS of Jesus when He hadn’t gone to the cross yet in the Old Testament, and the same as asking how anyone could be FORGIVEN in Jesus’ ministry before He paid for their forgiveness on the cross. Jesus did what He did on the basis of His coming atonement, and that is the point Matthew made without having to use the word “atonement” or mentioning the cross. The fact that Jesus was ABLE to heal the sick “on credit” was PROOF of His coming atonement.

Perhaps you think I'm stretching things by saying that, but I think YOU'RE stretching things if you think that one snippet in Isaiah 53 doesn't refer to the atonement when most of that chapter obviously does.

Objection: The Greek Word Used in Matthew 8:17 for “Took” Is Lambano, Which Never Means to Remove in a Mediatoral Sense

The objector is correct that out of the MANY times the word Greek word lambano (used in Matthew 8:17 for “took”) appears, it NEVER has any connotation of a mediatoral removal anywhere else. It simply means to receive or take. It is never used elsewhere to describe Jesus’ sin-bearing on our behalf.

So I would seem hard-pressed to defend the argument that Matthew meant something mediatoral when there is no other verse in the Bible that uses lambano that way. Yet that is exactly what I am going to do!

Let’s assume for now that the objector is right, and lambano in Matthew 8:17 means what it means elsewhere. In the general sense of “taking” something, what happens? Something that is someone else’s becomes yours and is no longer the other person’s. So if Isaiah meant that Jesus “took” (in the normal sense) sicknesses in Capernaum, it would mean that the sicknesses would no longer be on the other people, but they would be on Jesus. But clearly that did NOT happen at Capernaum. He bore our sicknesses at Calvary, not Capernaum. He did indeed take away sicknesses from people, but He did not go around the Sea of Galilee sick after He did it. So clearly the normally-expected use of lambano could not apply here unless you want to maintain that Jesus took all kinds of diseases upon Himself that evening, an idea for which you would find zero support in the Bible. So the objector’s position that lambano would imply a non-mediatoral taking in Matthew 8:17 is even harder to justify than my position!

Matthew quotes Isaiah, where the meaning of Christ’s taking of our sicknesses and pains is PLAINLY mediatoral. The Bible can’t contradict itself. It could not say that Jesus did something mediatoral in Isaiah and something non-mediatoral in Matthew when the same prophecy is involved.

Because Isaiah prophesied that Jesus took OUR sicknesses, not just THEIR sicknesses, this “taking” could not have been fulfilled in Capernaum – we weren’t even born yet. Isaiah’s prophecy was unmistakably about the future punishment Jesus was to endure at the end of His ministry. (For convincing proofs of this, click here.)

How could Matthew be correct in using the word lambano, then? I think it’s actually quite clear that lambano is a good word to use in that context. Matthew describes a situation where Jesus “took” sicknesses but did not get sick Himself AT THAT TIME. He did not bear sicknesses in a mediatoral sense at Capernaum that night – He would had to have been flogged and crucified on the spot to bear them mediatorally that night. The transfer of their sicknesses was from them that night into the future when Jesus DID bear them in a mediatoral sense to redeem everyone from them. (How God could allow this is covered in the reply to a question along that line; it would be helpful for you to read that if you haven’t done so already.)

The context of Isaiah's prophecy in the very same verse shows that the fulfillment had to be during Christ's punishment: "Surely he hath borne our sicknesses and carried our pains, yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted." Did anyone at Capernaum that night consider Jesus to be stricken, smitten of God and afflicted? NO! So that prophecy could not have been "fulfilled" at Capernaum, and Matthew didn't say that it was. He used the phrase, "That it might be fulfilled" as opposed to "Then it was fulfilled." The context is without question Christ's suffering for our sins!

Now for the clincher. When you consider what the word lambano means ("take" or "receive"), it clearly HAS to be mediatorial in Matthew 8:17! Suppose that you had cancer and you decided to go the doctor, and you underwent chemotherapy, radiation and surgery. After that, the doctor pronounced you cancer-free. Now suppose that you told your friends, "That doctor received my cancer! He took it from me! Now it's his!" Wouldn't they think that you were a little strange? The doctor does not receive illnesses from his patients when they are cured. We would agree that the treatments healed the cancer, but not that they transferred the cancer. If Matthew stopped with the statement that Jesus healed ALL who were sick, we would have no problem going along with the objector that Jesus simply healed people instead of doing something as their Substitute. However, Isaiah did NOT say, "Surely He HEALED our sicknesses and HEALED our pains." That seems to be how the objector is reading it, but that isn't what Isaiah actually said. Jesus did not just heal our diseases; His way of securing healing was to take and bear our sicknesses when He was punished for our sins. He BORE them in our place, and the language in Isaiah 53:4 is clear about that. He received them in His own body. That is what Peter talked about in 1 Peter 2:24 when he says that Jesus Himself bore our sins in His BODY on the tree. (Another objector claimed that Jesus was always holy and therefore He could never take sins into His body, but the verse just cited destroys that argument.)

So the use of lambano in Matthew 8:17 actually reinforces the idea that the removal of sickness was based on a substitutional bearing of them rather than simply healing them!

Objection: The Greek Word Used in Matthew 8:17 for “Bare” Is Bastazo, Which Is Never Used to Describe Atonement-Bearing of Sins and Diseases

We’ll give the objector enough rope to hang himself by letting him continue his argument, which is that anaphero is the Greek word used twice of the Lord’s sacrifice in Hebrews 9:28 and 1 Peter 2:24. The objector assumes that if Matthew 8:17 were really talking about a substitutional bearing, Matthew would have used the word anaphero and not the word bastazo.

The objector is correct as far as bastazo never being used in a substitutionary sense elsewhere, and he is also correct about anaphero being used twice to denote a substitutionary bearing of our sins. The objector goes on to conclude that Jesus must have borne sicknesses in a different sense than He bore our sins, and that therefore He “bore” our sicknesses throughout His earthly ministry.

This objection has at least six serious problems.

The first is that Matthew is quoting Isaiah, and in Isaiah 53:4, the words used clearly are substitutionary words – they are the same ones used to denote Jesus’ bearing of our sins. See Isaiah’s Prophecy of Redemption for proof of this. Claiming that Matthew quoted a substitutionary prophecy as non-substitutionary is tantamount to claiming that the Bible misquotes itself, and I certainly wouldn’t want to wade into those waters!

The second is that Jesus never bore sicknesses in a literal sense until His atonement. So even if the word for “bore” isn’t the same word, He still did bear our sicknesses, and the only time that could apply would be when He was punished for our sins. We never see Jesus sick before then. (If you disagree, read the reply to that objection.) So His bearing of our sicknesses must have been as our Substitute.

The third is that the word anaphero doesn’t necessarily, or even usually, relate to “atonement-bearing” either! It is not some special Greek word only used for that. At least the objector pointed us in the right direction, as we can look up the other places where anaphero appears. We are to offer (anaphero) the sacrifice of praise (Hebrews 13:15) and spiritual sacrifices (1 Peter 2:5), and we are certainly not atoning for anyone or anything when we do it! It’s the same word used of Jesus being carried up (anaphero) to heaven, and He was already finished atoning for everyone’s sins before then. Both Matthew 17:1 and Mark 9:2 talk of Jesus bringing the disciples up (anaphero) to a high mountain, and they certainly weren’t the atonement for anyone’s sins either.

The fourth is that by bringing up the word anaphero, the objector has actually pointed us in the opposite direction than the one he intended. A study of anaphero shows that a word may be taken correctly in a substitutionary sense even when many instances of the same word are not substitutionary. If that can be true for anaphero, it can be true for bastazo as well!

The fifth is what the word bastazo actually means – to bear or to carry. Jesus did not walk around Capernaum bearing or carrying anyone’s illnesses, sick Himself while He healed others! He only bore our sicknesses when He suffered for our sins later. This clearly denotes substitution.

Say that you get the flu and go to the doctor, and he gives you a prescription for some newly invented drug that cures the flu. You take it and the flu leaves. You tell everyone at work that the doctor bore and carried your flu so that you don't have it anymore. They would probably think that you're crazy. Matthew doesn't say that Jesus merely healed the diseases, He says that He fulfilled prophecy by bearing (carrying) them – bastazo. Thus, the only possible meaning in Matthew 8:17 of bastazo is substitutionary, as no doctor carries your diseases to get you healed of them!

Sixth, the very same verse of Isaiah's prophecy that Matthew quotes continues, "yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted." That COULD NOT have been fulfilled that evening at Capernaum, as Jesus was not stricken, smitten of God and afflicted at that time. Trying to split this verse in two makes no sense – it all flows together as one thought. So Isaiah and Matthew HAD to be looking forward to Christ's suffering as the fulfillment of that prophecy. Matthew said "that it might be fulfilled" pointing to a future fulfillment rather than "then it was fulfilled" – the phrase Matthew used to describe a prophecy that had just been fulfilled in its entirety. Matthew used that same phrase "that it might be fulfilled" to refer to other events that were yet unfulfilled – see the answer to the related objection for proof of that.

So splitting hairs over bastazo vs. anaphero still doesn't negate the powerful truth that Jesus actually BORE our sicknesses rather than just healing them or merely feeling sorry about them. Why would He have to be sick? He was our Substitute, being punished in our place, bearing our sins in His body, being wounded, bruised, smitten, afflicted and whipped for our sins, so that we could go free from the physical punishment for sin.

Objection: Jesus' Bearing of Sicknesses Is Just a Metonymy

Metonymy is probably not a word you use when you talk with your friends – unless you all happen to be seminary professors. A metonymy is a figure of speech that reverses cause and effect by referring to something closely related to something else. The objector correctly notes that the Bible DOES contain metonymies. Then he concludes that Jesus' bearing of sicknesses is another one.

So let's give the objector some credit for pointing out these verses:

Luke 2:30:

For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

In this case, Simeon's eyes did not actually see God's salvation – they saw the cause of salvation (Jesus) but not His effect – salvation – that would be accomplished later. So cause and effect have been reversed.

Luke 16:29:

Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

In this case, it was impossible for the rich man's five brothers to actually hear Moses and the prophets, who were long gone at that point. Moses and the prophets were the cause of prophecies – the effect was the prophecies themselves. So cause and effect have been reversed.

So now the objector assumes that "Surely He hath borne our sicknesses" (which IS literally what Isaiah said in Isaiah 53:4, as any honest seminarian would have to admit) is a metonymy that reverses the cause (bearing sin) with the effect (sicknesses) and thus really means that Jesus hath borne our sins, not our sicknesses. He goes on to say that the cause (sin) and effect (penal judgment) have been transposed and that Isaiah must have meant that He was punished for sin, which CAUSES sickness. In other words, Isaiah was only saying that Jesus bore our SINS (cause), not our SICKNESSES (effect).

At least this particular objector has the good sense to admit that Matthew 8:17 refers to the atonement – a fact missed by most other objectors.

I will start by saying that the Bible is full of straightforward statements that are not metonymies! The existence of a few metonymies does not prove that any Bible statement is likely to be a metonymy. (I could list such statements by the thousands, but that would lead to monotony.)

How can we tell that Jesus was really bearing sicknesses, according to Isaiah? We could "ask" Isaiah himself by looking at Isaiah 53:10 where God "made Him (Jesus) sick." That undercuts the metonymy argument right there. Isaiah 53:10 could not reasonably be considered a metonymy and it clearly states that Jesus was (literally in the Hebrew) "made sick." So this is no figure of speech. He really WAS made sick. But where did those sicknesses come from? US! God laid OUR sicknesses on Him as part of the punishment for our sins.

No reasonable person could assume that Moses and the prophets were still alive to be heard, or that Simeon saw what Jesus did on the cross. Thus, there is clear evidence that these HAVE to be metonymies. However, this isn't the case with Jesus' bearing of sickness. You should ALWAYS assume that Bible verses are literal unless you can PROVE that they are figurative. Otherwise you'll go around concluding that any verse you don't like is merely figurative, which some people do.

The evidence is overwhelming that Jesus bore CONSEQUENCES for sin and not just sin itself, so statements by Isaiah and Matthew could not be metonymies. If Jesus did not bear our sicknesses, what right did He have to remove them in the gospels before He suffered with them? How could mere symbols of Jesus in the Old Testament produce both forgiveness and physical healing, only to have the real Jesus only offer forgiveness to mankind?

The objector admits that sin is the cause of sickness, so dealing with man's sin problem should also deal with man's sickness problem!

Most importantly, if Jesus bore our sins but not the physical punishments prescribed in the Law's curse, how could He have ransomed us by paying the price for sin in our place? He HAD to be punished as the Law prescribed, which means that He HAD to be made sick. Otherwise He would not have paid our ransom price, and it would still be left for us to pay. God is just – He HAS TO punish sin. The only way He could stop US from having to be punished for our sins was to send Jesus to be punished for our sins in our place! Thus, He HAD to bear not only our sins but the punishment for them as well.

So you should be able to see that the fact that He "bore our sicknesses" is a literal statement that CANNOT be considered a metonymy.

Objection: “Our” Sicknesses in Matthew 8:17 Are Only from the Standpoint of the Jews in Capernaum Who Were Healed

This objection interprets Jesus’ healing of “our” sicknesses to be a statement from the standpoint of Jews at Capernaum as opposed to everyone everywhere. In other words, the Jews would have thought, “He took our sicknesses,” but that would be as far as things went. This would usually be paired with the incorrect statement that Isaiah’s prophecy was completely fulfilled that night at Capernaum, which is refuted elsewhere. Thus, according to the objector, Jesus bore all the sicknesses of the people at Capernaum but not necessarily all OUR sicknesses today.

This is doubly ridiculous. First, Jesus did not BEAR sicknesses in Capernaum – He HEALED them without having to take them on Himself and BEAR them that night. Jesus did not walk away sick. His BEARING of sickness came only during His atonement for our sins. Second, one only has to look at Isaiah’s prophecy in Isaiah 53:4-5 and see that attributing “our” sicknesses to only those there in Capernaum makes no sense for the following reasons:

1. He did not appear to be stricken, smitten of God and afflicted at Capernaum.
2. He was not wounded for our transgressions or bruised for our iniquities at Capernaum.
3. No stripes were laid on His back for anyone’s healing at Capernaum.

Jesus’ taking of OUR sicknesses could not have been a one-time event at Capernaum because it directly related to the atonement for EVERYONE’s sins, as is clear when you read Isaiah’s prophecy to which Matthew referred.

Objection: Matthew 8:17 Refers to Physical Pain and Mental Anguish that Jesus Endured in His Own Life

The objector apparently believes that when Isaiah said that Jesus bore OUR sicknesses and carried OUR pains, he meant the sicknesses and pains that are common to man. This almost seems reasonable – until you find out that the word translated hath borne (Hebrew nasa) that describes what Jesus did with our sicknesses in Isaiah 53:4 is the same word used in Isaiah 53:12 to describe what Jesus did with our sins. Jesus did NOT bear His own sins – He had none. He took ours. Likewise, for the wording in Isaiah to be consistent, we must recognize that Jesus did NOT bear His own sicknesses – He had none. He took ours.

Also, if the objector is correct, Matthew 8:17 makes no sense at all in its context, which is that Jesus healed them all, that what Isaiah said might be fulfilled – “He took our sicknesses.” It is demonstrated elsewhere in this book that this MUST refer to His future atonement and not to anything during His ministry before then. By the objector’s “logic,” Isaiah says that Jesus healed everyone else that evening that it might be fulfilled that He Himself had physical and mental ailments. That makes no sense whatsoever once you think about it.

Objection: Christ Was Made Sin but He Was Never Made Sick

Sickness is a curse for breaking the Law (sinning). Jesus was “made sin” when He atoned for our sins. He was made sick, but He did not turn into a virus. To redeem us from the Law’s curse He had to be MADE SICK, but He did not have to be MADE SICKNESS. The Law never stated that if you didn’t keep it all, you would turn into cancer or something. But GETTING cancer definitely WAS part of the curse for sinning. So there was no need for Jesus to be “made sickness” to redeem us from the Law’s curse because that curse never entailed BECOMING sickness.

Raising this argument allows the equally preposterous argument that Jesus did not redeem us from hell because He never BECAME hell. He didn’t have to BECOME hell; He just had to take our place so that we would not have to go there. He didn’t have to BECOME any form of punishment to endure that form of punishment. Jesus was never MADE a whipping and He was never MADE a crucifixion. These were things He suffered when He became sin for us.

Jesus had to “become sin” because he was sinless until then. God could not justly punish an innocent man. The only way that Jesus could take the punishment that we deserved (including sickness) was for Him to allow God to place Himself in our guilty, sinful condition by putting our sins upon Him. At that point, God no longer saw Him as a spotless Lamb but rather as a sinful person deserving of punishment.

But thank God, Jesus did not STAY “made sin” – He rose from the dead without a trace of sin on Himself!

Objection: Jesus Did Not TAKE ON or BEAR Sicknesses in His Own Body in Matthew 8:17, So Isaiah Couldn't Have Meant That Literally

I don't know how you can take Isaiah's prophecy non-literally when you read it in context. The Messiah surely bore OUR sicknesses and carried OUR diseases, yet people mistakenly considered Him to be smitten by God and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. Isaiah's language of being wounded and bruised does not allow for a non-literal reading of what He suffered. You have to conclude that Isaiah referred to bodily harm and not to some figurative thing.

Besides, the objector (as many others) misses the subtle point that Isaiah referred to Christ's future atonement. Matthew's phrase "that it might be fulfilled" was not the same as saying "then it was fulfilled at that moment." Much more information about this issue can be found in the answer to the objection Isaiah 53:4 \(Matthew 8:17\) Was Fulfilled in Jesus' Earth Ministry and Cannot Be Claimed as a Promise by Christians Today.

Objection: Isaiah 53:4 Is Chronological – the First Part Refers to Jesus’ Earthly Healing Ministry and the Last Part to His Later Atonement. So His Bearing of Sicknesses Was Not Part of His Atonement.

This objection tries to resolve the “problem” that Matthew 8:17 cites fulfillment of Isaiah 53:4 without mentioning the atonement by theorizing that Isaiah wrote chronological events. Supposedly, Jesus’ taking of our sicknesses was during His earthly ministry in the first part of the verse, and then being smitten of God and afflicted in the last part of the verse referred to His atonement for our sins that He accomplished later.

The idea behind this is to “disprove” that Jesus’ bearing of our sicknesses was part of His atonement, though even someone who believes in divine healing being for all could mistakenly use this “logic” to try to explain the difficult fact that Matthew appears to cite fulfillment of Isaiah’s prophecy that He took our diseases away before He was tortured for our sins.

This particular objection is easy to dismiss when you look at Isaiah 53:3, which clearly describes Jesus’ atonement. He was not a man of pains, acquainted with sickness at any time before He suffered in our place. So this busts the objector’s time line. Now Isaiah would have to go from the atonement to an earlier time and back to the atonement, which makes no sense.

If it weren’t for Isaiah 53:3, the “chronological” explanation might be more tempting to believe, but God had Isaiah say things the way he said them to show us that His carrying of “our” diseases was part of His suffering for our sins.

The theme of the whole chapter is the atonement. In Isaiah 53:10, Isaiah said literally that God made Jesus sick. The only explanation for that is that He was made sick in OUR place, bearing the sickness that WE deserved for our sins. Jesus was never sick before He suffered for us.

Also, there is a very important “yet” in Isaiah 53:4. He took our sicknesses and pains YET we considered Him smitten of God and afflicted. The “yet” shows that both portions of that verse have to refer to the SAME event. Because He was smitten of God for our sins when He was punished for us, the entire verse MUST refer to that event. The grammar just doesn’t allow the verse to be split down the middle into two events at two distinct times. So Isaiah HAD to be talking about Christ’s atonement at the end of His life and not to His ongoing healing ministry before that.

The only logical conclusion is that Jesus healed based on His future atonement, which would be the only reason why He forgave sins before His actual atonement as well. This is covered in more depth in another objection reply.

Objection: The Context of Isaiah 53:5 Is That We Are Healed of Our Transgressions and Iniquities

The objector appeals to context, so let's read Isaiah 53:5 in context with the previous verse.

Isaiah 53:4-5:

Surely he hath borne our griefs [literally sicknesses], and carried our sorrows [literally pains]: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

What Isaiah says here should be clear – Jesus was stricken, smitten, afflicted, wounded, bruised and chastised with stripes laid on Him (these all refer to physical punishment) for our transgressions and iniquities. Because of what He did, we are healed. We do not have to bear the physical punishment for sin that already He took in His own body as our substitute.

One would deliberately have to yank “we are healed” out of context to reach any other conclusion.

Besides that, the claim that sins (transgressions, iniquities) can be “healed” is not a Biblical concept. Sins don't need to be healed; they need to be forgiven! When the apostles preached Christ, they didn't tell people that through Jesus there was healing for sins – they told them that through Jesus there was forgiveness for sins. This was consistent with Jesus' own command that repentance and remission of sins (not healing of sins) be preached everywhere in His name (Luke 24:47).

I have no idea what the objector had in mind when he spoke of sins getting “healed.” What exactly happens to a sin after it gets “healed?” Is the healed version of sin not as sinful anymore, or what? Thank God, the New Testament does NOT teach that sins are healed! If it did, you'd still have them, but they'd be the healed versions. No, in the New Testament, your sins are washed away when you call on Jesus. They aren't healed at that point – they're GONE!

Objection: The Fact that Christians Get Sick Disproves that Healing Is in the Atonement

No, the fact that Christians get sick only proves that not everyone believes in and enjoys all the blessings that were provided by Christ's atonement. If we follow the objector's logic, we will reach some really awful conclusions:

"The fact that so many Christians are on antidepressants proves that 'joy unspeakable and full of glory' is not part of what Christ paid for us to have. The fruit of joy must not be available to ALL who are saved. If it were, every Christian would be immediately set free from depression upon being saved, and pharmaceutical company profits would be much lower."

"The fact that so many Christians do not speak in tongues is proof that Jesus did not really send the Holy Spirit after all as He promised, or at least that the Spirit baptism is not available to ALL. If it were, every Christian would be immediately baptized with the Holy Spirit upon salvation, speak in tongues and do miracles, clothed with power from on high."

"The fact that so many Christians struggle with guilt and condemnation proves that Jesus did nothing about guilt and condemnation in His atonement. If He had done something, every Christian would be instantly free forever from guilt and condemnation the moment he got saved."

"The fact that Christians do not always walk in love proves that the ability to walk in love is not for ALL. If it were, every Christian would have a perfect love walk the moment he got saved."

"The fact that so many Christians still sin proves that what Jesus did was insufficient to give them victory over sin. If the atonement bought us that victory, every Christian would stop sinning immediately when he got saved and would never sin again."

If people's failure to receive a blessing proves that it is not in the atonement, we could even go so as to extend the objection a little farther:

"The fact that anyone is unsaved disproves that salvation is in the atonement. It would just drop on everyone automatically if it were."

Surely the objector would not agree with the ridiculous statements above. But if they don't make sense, why does the same argument make sense when healing is the issue? It still doesn't. If we don't expect the other benefits of salvation to drop on us automatically, why should we make healing the sole exceptional case?

The Just Shall Live by Faith

If all blessings were automatic, Paul definitely missed God by praying that God would enlighten the Ephesians to know the inheritance that they had in Christ. After all, if the whole inheritance is automatic, you don't have to know anything about the Word or believe any specific statements or promises.

That isn't how it works. The just shall live by faith (Habakkuk 2:4 and elsewhere). Our ability to walk in God's blessings is proportional to our faith for those blessings. Some sick people have no trouble believing for financial provision. Some rich people have trouble believing for healing. If we fall short in a certain area, we cannot assume that our failure to receive means that whatever it is isn't part of the inheritance purchased by Jesus' atonement.

Experience Doesn't Determine Doctrine

Though this isn't as obvious with this objection, it still makes the mistake of letting experience, rather than the Word, prove doctrine. The experience of most Christians, even most of them, does not determine what is so. If it did, we would write off the baptism with the Holy Spirit in some places where most Christians do not speak with other tongues. We would even write off the possibility of being born again if we were in an area where no one else is a new creature in Christ yet.

Rather than letting our experience drag down our doctrine, we need to let our doctrine improve our experience, which it will if it is based solely on the Word.

Objection: Healing Cannot Be in the Atonement because Healing Can Be Lost, but Salvation Cannot Be Lost

It is certain that healing and health can be lost, because Jesus told the man at the Pool of Bethesda to sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon him (John 5:14). Peter lost his miracle of walking on water when he started to focus on the natural circumstances instead of the words of Jesus. So you CAN lose something you received from God.

The problem with this objection is that it is based on the faulty premise that salvation cannot be lost. So demonstrating that salvation CAN be lost completely destroys this objection. Many denominational people have clung to the idea of “eternal security” (also phrased as “Once Saved, Always Saved” or OSAS for short). In more recent times, some of them have moved away from that idea, but it is making a resurgence in some Spirit-filled circles! So can salvation be lost?

I think both the OSAS and non-OSAS crowds would agree that you cannot “lose” your salvation as you might “lose” your glasses by accident. No one inadvertently loses his salvation. We often use the word “lost” to mean “misplaced” – “I lost my keys” would almost never mean that your keys were permanently lost; it would really mean “I misplaced my keys.” You can’t misplace salvation. The only way into God’s kingdom is to receive Jesus as Lord. The only way out of God’s kingdom, therefore, must be to reject Jesus as Lord. You cannot become unsaved by accident any more than you can be saved by accident. You cannot “sin your way out of grace” even if you sin a lot. Of course, a person who sins like any worldly sinner without remorse would not be a person who has really received Jesus as Lord. The Bible warns us about such fake brothers and urges us to avoid them.

One old extreme Pentecostal position is that you lose your salvation every time you sin, so you have to confess your sin to get re-saved! That is based on a false interpretation of 1 John 1:9 that holds that you have to be “cleansed from all unrighteousness” all over again every time you sin by “confessing” your sin. If you’ve been taught that, please read What 1 John 1:9 Really Means and get taught better! I would hope that people would see the error in this old position.

This following is a favorite “proof-text” among OSAS adherents:

John 10:28-29:

And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

We have to agree with Jesus that no one could pluck you out of His hand, including people who want to torture you for your faith and try to get you to renounce Him. They cannot make you do it.

However, one would still have to leave open the possibility of you deliberately walking away from Jesus as an act of your own will. Otherwise, it would be tantamount to declaring that you have no more free will to choose to sin or not once you get saved, including the sin of walking away from Jesus.

One particular passage is the subject of debate, as good people have reached opposite conclusions.

Hebrews 10:26:

For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

This verse could be argued either way – and it is! The non-OSAS people believe that this shows that you can be saved, then sin WILLFULLY and walk away, at which point there is nothing to save you anymore. The OSAS people reply that this refers to SINNERS who receive a knowledge of the truth and willfully reject it without being saved, in which case there is no other means of salvation available, though they have never lost their salvation.

So let's skip down a few verses. Because this is still in the same vein as the passage above, it would at least tip the scales (to me) to indicate that the author IS warning about being saved and deliberately giving up your salvation in the verse above, though it's still not ironclad proof. But these verses are more explicit on their own:

Hebrews 10:38-39:

Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

The key phrase there is “unto perdition” – which indicates that it IS possible to be saved and live by faith but then DRAW BACK unto perdition. If you were never saved to begin with, you could not DRAW BACK unto perdition because you never would have DRAWN FORWARD out of perdition!

Things get even more convincing when we consider the verse just before Hebrews 10:26. Hebrews 10:25 urges US as believers not to forsake the gathering of ourselves together in one place, and it is linked to Hebrews 10:26 with the word “for” at the beginning of Hebrews 10:26. Thus, one major purpose of having Christian fellowship is AVOIDING walking away from Christ and thus becoming lost.

So I consider it a given that Hebrews 10:26 refers to believers who fall rather than to unbelievers who never get saved and reject the gospel.

Paul urged the Corinthians to test themselves to see if they were in the faith – which would be completely unnecessary if once you're in the faith, you can get out of the faith. If once saved, always saved, it would be impossible to fail Paul's test, but he allowed for the possibility of failure (2 Corinthians 13:5). However, a hard-core OSAS adherent would claim that this would only refer to people who gathered with the church at Corinth but weren't really saved, so we'll keep going.

Paul talked explicitly about being “fallen from grace” in Galatians 5:4: “Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.” This seems pretty straightforward – the person would seem to have been “in grace” but then have fallen out. Also, Christ isn’t helping the person at all, as opposed to helping the person to a limited degree. This matches Galatians 5:2: “Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.” But I’ve heard a hard-core OSAS adherent “explain” that you have fallen away from “grace teaching” to try to follow the law, but you haven’t forfeited your salvation even though you’re missing God on the matter of having to keep the Law. I don’t buy it, but we can keep going with other examples and pile them up quite high.

We’ll start with the possibility that a brother could perish or be destroyed because he gets offended:

1 Corinthians 8:11:

And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

Romans 14:15:

But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

Paul warned believers that habitual walking in the flesh will lead to death:

Romans 8:13:

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

What “death” does he mean? It doesn’t seem that he could mean physical death, because every believer will die physically at some point whether he walks in the flesh or in the Spirit! So this seems to be a warning that habitually walking in the flesh could lead to forsaking Christ and thus dying spiritually. This warning could only be to believers because unbelievers are ALREADY spiritually dead – they can’t “die” spiritually in their current lost state.

Jesus makes a reference to being blotted out of the Book of Life (Revelation 3:5), which would be impossible if once you were saved (meaning that your name IS written in the Book of Life), your name could never be removed.

That might not be explicit enough to convince you, so consider this:

Revelation 22:19:

And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

So it does appear that you can be IN the book of life and later be taken out of it.

2 Peter 2:20-21 is even more explicit. These were people who not only had a head knowledge of the plan of salvation but had also actually escaped the pollutions of the world by knowing Jesus. Yet they went back and were “again” entangled. That means clearly that they WERE entangled, then they were NOT entangled (indicating that they were saved), then they were AGAIN entangled (no longer saved). You can’t be “again” entangled without being entangled and then unentangled first!

James 5:19-20 is hard to explain away, too. It speaks of erring FROM the truth (this means someone was IN the truth) and then being saved from death by being converted back.

Hebrews 6:4-6 is also more explicit, though it raises an apparent contradiction. It clearly talks about someone who was a partaker of the Holy Spirit and then FELL AWAY. This person could not be RENEWED unto repentance, indicating that repentance HAD happened originally. So this person was Once Saved, NOT Always Saved. The issue now is how to reconcile this passage with the previous passage in James. If a fallen-away brother CANNOT be brought back, James must be wrong, and if he CAN be brought back, the author of Hebrews must be wrong. Or so it seems on the surface. However, the reprobate person in Hebrews had a real knowledge of the Holy Spirit and His power – that disqualifies MOST Christians from having this apply to them right there! There is a much more pronounced initial knowledge AND deliberate turning away than we see in James with a former brother who has “erred from the truth” without, apparently, having a real knowledge and experience of the Holy Spirit’s power.

In Jesus’ parable of the sower, He mentions that there are some who initially receive the Word with gladness but then FALL AWAY. Luke 8:13: “They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.”

At this point, we seem to be amassing enough evidence for Once Saved, NOT Always Saved, but let’s keep going.

1 Timothy 4:1 is explicit that some will DEPART FROM THE FAITH in the last days. You can’t depart from somewhere you haven’t been. If you never go to Mountain City, Tennessee, you cannot DEPART from Mountain City, Tennessee.

People having damnation because they cast off their first faith (1 Timothy 5:12) seems too explicit to contradict, too.

Hebrews 2:1-3 and Hebrews 3:12-14 also talk about believers who fall away, though the OSAS crowd could deny that this means falling away from salvation, referring instead to those who hear the gospel but are never saved. However, in the second case, how would you “depart” from the living God if you were never with Him to begin with? Hebrews 4:11 warns us against FALLING due to unbelief, the context being that the Israelites were saved from Egypt but then fell due to unbelief. 1 Corinthians 10:12 tells those who stand to take heed lest they fall.

In 1 Timothy 6:10, Paul warns that some lovers of money have “erred from the faith” and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. If it simply case of erring with regard to proper teaching, one could see that maybe they would just be sorrowful Christians. However, the only other occurrence of the Greek word translated erred is in Mark 13:22, which talks about signs and wonders done to seduce (same Greek word), if possible, even the elect. So this appears to refer to apostasy and not merely doctrinal error.

It appears that Hymenaeus and Philetus erred concerning the truth and overthrew the faith of some (2 Timothy 2:17-18). What could that mean, other than leading them out of the Kingdom?

Shipwrecked faith (1 Timothy 1:19-20) would seem to be another term describing the “faith” of those who once served Jesus but walked away.

Paul said that some women, who used to be believers based on the context, had “turned aside after Satan” (1 Timothy 5:15). This would seem to be another reference to losing one’s salvation. I can’t make an airtight case for that, but I think you would be hard-pressed to defend any alternative explanation.

One particular statement that Paul made to Timothy would NOT qualify as a salvation-loss Scripture even though it looks like one at first. Paul said that anyone who did not provide for his own had denied the faith and was worse than an unbeliever (1 Timothy 5:8). On the surface, this makes it look like you could lose your salvation simply by not supporting a family member in need! However, that is clearly not the case because Paul said that such a person was worse than an unbeliever as opposed to befitting an unbeliever. Such a person could not be worse than an unbeliever if he were already an unbeliever! Paul refers to the person’s abhorrent actions rather than his status of being saved or unsaved.

Peter, who did NOT teach Once Saved, Always Saved (see above), assumed that Simon was LOST even though he had been baptized after the WORD says that he believed (I’m not sure that Peter knew that about him). So Scripture says that he was a believer – at least at that point. However, Peter’s comment, “Your money perish with you,” is not something you would say to a fellow believer, so it’s obvious that Peter considered Simon to be lost at that point. (This whole Simon issue is discussed in more detail elsewhere).

1 Timothy 6:20-21 is a very relevant passage for today, when a major cause of apostasy is attending a secular college! Students are fed the pig slop known as Darwinism until it comes out their ears (or worse, their mouths), and many of them conclude that the Bible has been disproved and is unscientific, at which point they decide to disbelieve everything else in the Bible, including the plan of salvation.

I could cite quite a few other Scriptures, though many of the ones I’ve seen used to be anti-OSAS verses aren’t explicit enough that I’d want to use them to try to convince a serious OSAS believer of his error. In fact, some of them don’t hold water as proof against OSAS, and the OSAS people would be right to jump on them and say that they aren’t refutations of OSAS.

When I was first saved, I attended a Calvinist “Once Saved, Always Saved” church and took their word for it. But one day after I’d been saved a couple years when I was touring in a bus with an evangelist (I was his piano player and occasional singer/preacher), I stumbled across these three verses, which were the ones that dissuaded me from continuing to believe Once Saved, Always Saved:

Matthew 10:22:

And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

Matthew 24:13:

But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

Mark 13:13:

And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

I thought, “I was taught that once I’m saved, there is no question about my final destination no matter what. But these verses say the opposite, and Jesus said them Himself. I guess I’d better believe Him instead of the pastor at that church.”

This concept of “enduring to the end” surfaces in many other Scriptures. There are a couple things common to all of Jesus’ messages to the seven churches in Revelation. One is the necessity of having ears to hear what the Spirit says to the churches. The other is a promise to the person who overcomes. The specified rewards for such people are in heaven. The context is quite clear that Jesus is talking about staying faithful to Him until the end of your life. If it were impossible for a Christian to lose his salvation, the messages to those who overcome in the churches would have been blanket promises to all believers, not just the ones who remain believers. (The references in question are Revelation 2:7, Revelation 2:11, Revelation 2:17, Revelation 2:26, Revelation 3:5, Revelation 3:12 and Revelation 3:21.) Note that in particular Revelation 2:26 equates overcoming with “keeping His works until the end.”

Paul mentioned to the Colossians the possibility of not continuing in the faith and being “moved away:”

Colossians 1:21-23:

And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled

In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreprouvable in his sight: If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister;

He told the Romans this:

Romans 11:22:

Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.

John implicitly mentions the possibility of a believer not continuing as a believer:

1 John 5:13:

These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

At first this seems a little confusing – why would John write to those believe in order that they might believe, which they already do? The only reasonable conclusion (to me) is that John refers to continuing to believe in the Son of God. (The NKJV adds the words continue to in italics, meaning that they were not in the original Greek but were added for clarity. Several translations duck the issue by just chopping off the rest of the verse after “ye have eternal life,” but this cop-out fails to acknowledge the fact that the phrase that follows IS in the original Greek.) If there were no possibility that someone who believes could ever fail to believe in the future, John’s statement would be meaningless.

John then goes on to discuss a brother who has sinned.

1 John 5:16

Here John allows the possibility of a “sin unto death.” John never tells us what this sin is, but he does say that one should not pray for the person in such a case. This would seem to go along with the situation in Hebrews where a former believer who experienced the power of God for himself is now a reprobate who will never come back.

Much silliness has come from speculative interpretations of the verse above. The Bible does NOT teach that there are 7 “deadly sins” and it certainly does not teach that attending a Protestant service is a “venial” (not “mortal”) sin. The clear takeaway from the verse is that a believer could end up not being a believer anymore.

Once you start seeing that a believer could fall, many more passages make sense.

Two such passages are Ephesians 5:5-7 and Colossians 3:5-6. Do you believe that Paul is saying that believers (who remain believers) will partake of the wrath of God? That view is difficult in light of Romans 5:9 (“Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him”) as well as 1 Thessalonians 1:10 and 1 Thessalonians 5:9. If you DON’T take that view, though, the only reasonable explanation for why Paul warned believers about partaking of God’s wrath against unbelievers would be that a believer could lose his salvation, which would then qualify him for the wrath from which believers are saved!

Then there is 1 Thessalonians 5:23, which talks about your spirit being kept blameless until Christ’s coming. Most people don’t notice the obvious issue there. Your born-again spirit was “created after God in righteousness and true holiness,” so it is ALREADY blameless before God! There would be no need for Paul to pray to make this be the case for the Thessalonians. The only way their spirits could become anything other than blameless would be if they denied Christ and thus re-died spiritually.

If it were impossible for a being, once spiritually alive, to become spiritually dead, then it would have been impossible for Adam to fall and go from spiritual life to spiritual death! Adam's example shows the possibility for any other spiritually alive person to become spiritually dead. If it weren't the case, Jesus, who never sinned, could not have "become sin" and merited punishment so that He could save us!

Let me be clear that you cannot SIN your way out of salvation, unless your sin is the SIN of rejecting Jesus. There is no such thing as a "sin quota" that once you reach it, your salvation is lost. That would be a Galatian-style works gospel that the Bible condemns. You did not get INTO the kingdom of God by NOT sinning, and you cannot LEAVE the kingdom of God by sinning. Your only way out is to reject Jesus as Lord just as deliberately as you received Jesus as Lord. However, sin is deceitful and subtle, and the devil knows that if he can get someone mired in sin, that person can get to the point where he says, "I'd rather have these pleasures of sin than Jesus."

Paul makes the distinction that if it is just a case of you being faithless, God will still not deny you, but if you deny Him, He will deny you:

2 Timothy 2:11-13:

It is a faithful saying: For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us:

If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.

That last verse is translated "If we are faithless, yet He abides faithful..." in some Bible versions. Either could be considered correct from a Greek perspective, and I would lean more toward the other Bible versions in this case. "Faith" and "faithfulness" are the same Greek word pistis. But either way – being unbelieving and being unfaithful – it is not grounds for loss of your salvation as long as you don't DENY the Lord.

Thus, you would have to actively DENY God in order to have God deny you – but the possibility still exists that a believer could do this and become an unbeliever. The "we" in the passage above clearly refers to Christians.

I also need to state that you need to avoid reversing cause and effect with statements like Paul's that no fornicator, homosexual, extortionist, etc. will inherit the kingdom of God (1 Corinthians 6:9-11). I know Christians who take these verses to mean, "If you fornicate, you lose your salvation." But that can't be what Paul's saying, because he allowed for the restoration of a fallen (repentant) brother in Galatians 6:1. He doesn't say that you lose your salvation by sinning – you only lose your salvation if you reject Jesus, whom you formerly received. He's saying that people who practice these things and don't repent cannot currently be believers. So Paul isn't saying, "You'll go to hell BECAUSE you're a homosexual." Homosexuals and heterosexuals have this in common – they don't go to hell because of what they do. They only go to hell because of what they DON'T DO – receive Jesus. If they'd receive Jesus, the sin issue would be dealt with and they could go to heaven. However, what Paul says on the matter is that no unrepentant homosexual has really received Jesus. And let's make it clear while we're at it that this concerns people who commit homosexual acts, not people who are simply struggling with lustful temptations, as could be the case for any heterosexual as well.

Finally, you could ask, “Does it even matter? Who cares if Once Saved, Always Saved or not?” I think it DOES matter because a carnal person could conclude, “I can do whatever I want now – get drunk, fornicate, steal, kill, whatever – because I prayed a ‘sinner’s prayer’ and I cannot lose my salvation!” There was a man who committed premeditated murder in the city where I used to get haircuts, and the person who cut my hair was adamant that the man was saved because she had seen the man pray a “sinner’s prayer” at the church they both attended long before he committed the cold-blooded murder. Yet the Bible says that no murderer (that means one who hasn’t repented!) has eternal life (1 John 3:15). Of course, you’d think that a true OSAS person would say that the man had never been saved in the first place, but the haircut person, an OSAS adherent, was convinced of the man’s conversion at the time, along with the idea that once you’re saved, you can do ANYTHING and you’re still saved. That’s a dangerous idea. People would reject Jesus’ lordship, act accordingly, and presume that they are still saved, which would eventually result in a too-late rude awakening in hell.

I for one am not interested in being a “test case” for OSAS. I endeavor to walk with Jesus and shun sinful lusts. I’m not interested in how much sin I can get away with before I’d get to the point where I’d turn away from Jesus. So for me, it doesn’t really matter if “Once Saved, Always Saved.”

I also don’t believe that we need to kill people on the spot who receive Jesus during altar calls. One could reason that if there is ANY chance that a person could become unsaved, it would be better to kill him the instant that he receives Jesus to ensure that he will go to heaven, because if he continues to live, there is a non-zero chance that he will turn from Jesus and end up in hell. (Actually, the MINORITY of altar call responders in modern meetings continue to walk with Jesus for even the next ten years.) But the Bible clearly does not promote this idea. You can’t share Jesus with other people if you’re not here, and your family would not appreciate your early exit. Another good reason (other than avoiding prison) to not kill people who pray sinner’s prayers is that they might not have been sincere. I know this for a fact because I once repeated a sinner’s prayer word for word just to make the person go away, and I was just as unsaved afterward as I was before because I was parroting words with no heart transaction going on with Jesus.

Jesus is so good, it is hard to imagine that anyone would want to forsake Him and go back to being a miserable sinner. In my experience, it is more common for a person to THINK that he has fallen when in fact he is simply backslidden. You’ve only fallen if you’ve knowingly rejected Jesus. Part of the benefit of Christian fellowship is having others watch your back. If they really love you, they’ll point out to you if you’re headed down a dangerous road in your Christian walk that could lead to you rejecting Jesus, as mentioned above in Hebrews 10:25 and Hebrews 10:26.

I have proved that you CAN lose your salvation, and in so doing, I have DISPROVED this objection.

Objection: If Healing Were in the Atonement, John Would Have Just Reminded Gaius that He Was Healed

This objection probably assumes that John PRAYED for Gaius to be healed, which is not necessarily true. He may have expressed a WISH instead, as the King James Version says.

Is there really a contradiction in believing that someone is legally healed by Jesus' stripes and wishing that the person walks in health? If you believe that the person is legally healed, of course you would want that person to walk in the health that already belongs to him!

Notice that there was no indication that Gaius was sick, and there certainly is nothing in 3 John 2 that even hints, "Gaius, I'm praying that GOD will heal you!"

Would be wrong to express your wish that someone who to you is not just "beloved" but "well-beloved" walk in health and prosper? I hope that YOU, the reader, walk in health and prosper too – and I believe that healing is in the atonement!

John did not make a statement either way about healing being or not being in the atonement.

However, if you've been taught that this is only a greeting that means nothing doctrinally, you need to read the reply to that objection.

Objection: Jesus' Bearing of Our Sicknesses Meant His Sympathy for the Sufferers, Not Literally Taking Them on Himself, Which He Did Not Do in Matthew 8

Without realizing it, this objector is taking us closer to the real meaning of Matthew 8:17, namely that Jesus did what He did on the basis of His coming atonement. It takes some study to reach that conclusion, so there are a lot of “bad tries” to explain that it can’t mean that. You can read responses to those related objections in this book.

Anyone who doubts that healing is in the atonement HAS TO try to make a claim that Jesus did not literally BEAR our sicknesses, and this objection is an attempt to do that by explaining away His “bearing” as mere sympathy. The objector would like us to believe that Jesus felt bad for the people who were sick, and that this somehow “weighted Him down” so that He was “bearing” their sicknesses. The objector actually went on to say that we see this “sympathy” aspect when Jesus wept at Lazarus’s tomb.

That is a novel idea. Have you ever heard anyone in normal (not theological) conversation say that he was BEARING the disease of someone else in the hospital? If so, the “bearer” ought to get a sympathy card while the sick person gets a get-well card! “Oh, George, I’m so sorry to hear that you’re bearing your cousin’s cancer!” We don’t do that in real life.

Matthew quoted Isaiah, so for this objection to be true, Isaiah must have prophesied that Jesus was “feeling sorry” for the people who had sicknesses. A reading of Isaiah 53 shows that the “feeling sorry” idea does not make any sense because it clearly refers to the punishment He took when He bore our sins. Do you believe that He bore our sins? Good, so do I. That word bore refers to “bearing something away,” that is, taking something in place of another to relieve the other of having to bear it. Yes, Jesus bore the punishment for our sins so that we would not have to bear that punishment. But the same Hebrew word in that chapter is used to say that He bore our sicknesses – in other words, He carried them Himself to relieve us of having to carry them.

Given that it’s the same Hebrew word, if the objector is right, when Jesus was tortured, He did not really take away our sins; He was just “weighed down” with the thought of us carrying them and He “felt sorry” for us. That “logic” would destroy the entire gospel, which is based on His blood atonement for us, not sympathy for us.

If all Jesus had to do was “feel sorry” for us to free us from our sins and heal our bodies, He could have accomplished that while staying completely whole without being tortured at all at the end of His life! The cross and the whipping post would have been useless experiences.

I said what I did earlier because when you think this through, you realize that Jesus did not “bear” (in Isaiah’s prophesied sense) our sicknesses in Matthew 8. He did not “take” infirmities on Himself at that time – He merely healed them. He had not been “made sick” for us yet. So the objection has a hint of truth in it that points us to the right interpretation of Matthew 8:17 – that Isaiah’s prophecy was clearly about the atonement, which certainly did not occur in Matthew 8. He atoned for our sins ONCE, so there is no way that He could have “lived an atoning life” in Matthew 8. (I agree with another objector that Jesus did not “live an atoning life” before the cross. Sometimes these objections can steer you in the right direction when you study them out!)

Objection: Having a Disease Isn't a Sin, So Jesus Didn't Need to Atone for Our Sicknesses

I agree with this objection! It isn't a sin to have a disease, and Jesus did not "atone for our sicknesses."

The problem is just a misunderstanding of what "healing in the atonement" is about. Jesus was not PUNISHED for our sicknesses, rather SICKNESS was laid on Him as part of His atonement as PUNISHMENT for our SINS.

So Jesus atoned for our SINS. While He was doing that, He took our sicknesses, bearing them in a substitutionary manner to relieve us from having to do so.

Now it is interesting that Leviticus 15:13-15 actually DOES describe an atonement for a man with an "issue" who had by definition become ceremonially unclean because of an illness. However, no Gentile has ever been expected to be "ceremonially clean," so Jesus did not need to atone for our ceremonial uncleanness.

If being sick were a sin, Jesus would have commanded all the sick people to repent. He clearly didn't do that and neither did any of His followers.

I don't know anyone who actually teaches that Jesus "atoned for our sicknesses" in the sense that He was punished for the times that we were sick, so this is an objection that tries to knock down a "straw man" that no one teaches anyway!

Objection: Blood Atonement for Healing Is Unscriptural – Blood Atonement Is Only for Sin

If this were an exam, I'd give the objector partial credit. Atonement is not made for sickness because sickness is not described as a sin. No one in the Bible was ever told to repent for being sick, and I certainly won't tell you to repent for being sick either! Atonement is for SIN, as the objector states.

What the objector misses here is the EFFECT of atonement for sin! Over and over throughout Scripture we see that an atonement for sin has the EFFECT of providing healing for the people whose sins were atoned for.

There is no need to duplicate the proof of that here, as the discussion Healing and Atonement covers this quite adequately. After you read that discussion, no one should ever be able to convince you that healing is not a RESULT of atonement.

Objection: People Can Be HEALED But Not SAVED as a Result of Someone Else's Faith. Therefore Healing Cannot Come by the Same Cross.

The first sentence of this objection is true – people SOMETIMES are healed based on someone else's faith, though this is neither the rule nor the best way to be healed. However, you cannot "believe for" someone else's salvation – every individual must receive the Lord Jesus as an act of his own will.

The second sentence fails to make a distinction between Jesus' STRIPES and Jesus' bloodshed on the cross. The Bible never says, "by whose cross you were healed" or even "by whose blood you were healed." Healing was purchased because of the physical suffering Jesus endured starting with the Roman whipping post, not the cross. He was already too infirm and feeble to carry His own cross before He was ever nailed to it. So neither the Bible nor knowledgeable healing teachers would try to claim that salvation from sin and physical healing were purchased in exactly the same way. The objector makes the mistaken assumption that preachers of divine healing claim that forgiveness and physical healing were provided in exactly the same way on the cross. Because the assumption is mistaken, any conclusions from that wrong assumption may be thrown out as well.

Objection: Jesus Bore Our Sicknesses in Matthew 8:17 Due to the Exertion Involved in Channeling God's Healing Power

This is a desperate attempt to prove that Matthew 8:17 does NOT mean that Jesus healed on the basis of His coming atonement, but rather that He “took” our sicknesses while He healed people of them. While it's hard to take this seriously, the objector was serious about it.

Remember that Jesus also sent out the 12 and then the 70 to heal. Did they “take” sicknesses due to the exertion of channeling God's healing power? Did the 12 get so sick from being channels that they had to find members of the 70 to then heal them, whereupon the 70 got sick too? No, nothing in Scripture says that you have to get sick when you minister healing to others. Jesus did not promise that “They shall lay hands on the sick, and the sick will recover while they who are well will get sick.”

Many other replies to similar objections will take you back to Isaiah 53 where you can be assured that Christ's bearing of sicknesses was at the end of His life, not on one evening in Capernaum.

John 4:6 proves that Jesus COULD get weary (He was human, after all, as well as divine). But there is NO reference proving that Jesus ever got sick before His atonement, despite what another objector said. It is quite possible that He got weary while healing the sick, but that is not the same thing as getting sick. His weariness would NOT constitute TAKING (bearing) our sicknesses. Besides, He would not have taken OUR sicknesses (as Isaiah said) if He had been sick in Capernaum; He would only have taken THEIR sicknesses. I'm glad that He also bore OUR sins, not just THEIR sins, as well as OUR sicknesses!

Objection: If Jesus Did Not Get Sick before His Atonement, He Did Not Fully Participate in Our Human Experience

Objection: If Jesus Never Got Sick before His Atonement, He Did Not Fully Participate in Our Human Experience

The objector speculates that part of His being fully human would be to have colds, maybe chicken pox, bruises from His carpentry, pimples, and so on. Because we've all had to deal with some of these things, the objector concludes that Jesus wasn't really one of us, fully participating in life as a human, if He never had to deal with those things. Thus, His bearing of "our sicknesses" and "our pains" in Isaiah could be construed to be just part of His normal human life and not part of His atonement.

There are at least 4 problems with this line of reasoning.

First, one could take this same argument and prove that Jesus never fully participated in our human experience because He never sinned! We've all sinned, so if He didn't experience that, was He not fully human? Actually, if He HAD ever sinned, He would have been a fallen Second Adam just as Adam was the fallen First Adam, and He would have lost His right to be the spotless Lamb of God whose sinless blood would atone for the sins of the world. He did not fail to be fully human just because He never experienced the humiliation of being caught sinning. I don't believe for a minute that we can say that He did not fully participate in our human experience just because He never got drunk, slept with prostitutes or cursed at aggressive chariot drivers who almost ran Him over.

Second, He did not bear "His sicknesses" and "His pains" – He bore (as our substitute) "OUR sicknesses" and "OUR pains" – which could not refer to anything before His atonement.

Third, He BORE sickness and pain. The same Hebrew word is used of His bearing the SINS of many in Isaiah 53. This would preclude Isaiah's statement from being about any sickness or pain that He had experienced.

Fourth, death came by sin (Romans 5:12). Jesus never sinned. If He had never taken on OUR sins, His body would never had been subject to death, or even sickness, which can cause death. He would have lived forever. Because of His righteousness, He would have continued like Adam in the garden before he fell, never being sick. Sickness is a result of the fall and it is legally a curse for sinning, as shown by the Old Testament "curse" Scriptures. Because Jesus never sinned, the curse causeless would not have alit on Him (Proverbs 26:2) before He was punished for our sins.

Objection: Paul GLORIED in His INFIRMITIES – the Same Greek Word Used in Matthew 8:17 of What Jesus Took. If Matthew 8:17 Refers to the Atonement, How Could Paul Glory in What Christ Took Away?

Without realizing it, the objector has painted himself into a corner. The argument seems somewhat compelling until you realize the conclusion the objector would have to reach. He admits that Matthew 8:17 says that Jesus took our asthenia (translated sickness in Matthew 8:17 and other places, but also translated weakness in other places). He also is correct that Paul gloried in his asthenia, translated weakness in 2 Corinthians 12:5 (“Of such an one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.”), 2 Corinthians 12:9 (“And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.”) and 2 Corinthians 12:10 (“Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ’s sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.”)

The objector assumes (mistakenly) that asthenia should be translated sicknesses in both places, and that Paul, by glorying in his “sicknesses,” “proves” that healing is not in the atonement, because if it were, the Lord would not have refused to “heal” him of his “sickness.” Sicknesses IS the proper translation in Matthew 8:17 because Isaiah spoke of “sicknesses” in the literal Hebrew in the prophecy that Matthew quoted.

There are plenty of other objection replies that deal with the issue of what Jesus did in Matthew 8:17 being or not being in the atonement; I don’t need to rehash them here. But the author has now painted Jesus as someone who is NOT the same yesterday, today and forever! Supposedly, during His earthly ministry, He was willing to “take” (away) sicknesses, but now in Paul’s ministry, He has changed His mind and told Paul to keep his sickness – something He NEVER told anyone else. That’s a problem.

Next, the intervening verses above show what Paul’s thorn in the flesh was. (Click on that objection reply for proof that it was NOT a sickness.) It was a demonic entity (an angel/messenger of Satan) that kept stirring up people to beat Paul. So within the context, “weakness” would be the translation, not “sickness.” Paul’s beatings weakened him. Let’s face it, how would YOU like to go somewhere knowing that angry Jews might have you lashed 39 times yet again or beaten with rods? That would be emotionally weakening on top of the physical issues that would be involved.

Paul never listed sicknesses in his lengthy list of trials in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27. We can see by his statement in 2 Corinthians 11:30 (“If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.”) that he wasn’t talking about sickness, because he had just given his long list of things that didn’t include sickness.

Perhaps the best proof of all that Paul’s asthenia was the weakness kind and not the sickness kind is found in this passage that he wrote:

2 Corinthians 11:30-33:

If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

Paul was not dropped out of town in a basket because he had Ebola and had to avoid infecting Damascus with it. He had to submit to this indignity to avoid being killed by angry Jews who considered him a traitor. He had to sneak out of town like a criminal. This is clearly what Paul was talking about when he mentioned his weaknesses (infirmities).

We have to conclude that Christ did bear our sicknesses but not our weaknesses. The Lord has sometimes asked me to do things that I thought were “not my personality type,” and I had to let Him be strong in my weakness. He never did remove the “weakness” but I got the job done anyway. However, I did not have to be sick, which would have stopped me from doing what I was supposed to do.

Now the objector would probably pop up at this point and say, “Gotcha! You just said that Christ did bear our asthenia but not our asthenia!” However, that word is used quite a few times to mean both things in cases where the other meaning would not make sense. It would be hard to picture Paul, who had a notable healing ministry with the signs, wonders and mighty deeds of an apostle, saying that he gloried in his own sicknesses. In some places where people came to be healed of their asthenia, we would have to translate it as sicknesses, not weaknesses. Ditto the woman with the spirit of asthenia and the man at the Pool of Bethesda who had an asthenia for 38 years. However, Paul told the Romans that he spoke in the matter of men because of the asthenia of their flesh, and he didn’t mean that he was talking a certain way because they were sick. The Holy Spirit helps our asthenia in prayer – our weakness of not always knowing what to pray. It would be hard to claim that He helps our sickness in not knowing what to pray, though I suppose that you might make a case for that, which would be another argument FOR healing, not AGAINST it. There are 3 references in Hebrews to priests with asthenia where it would not fit the context to claim that they had sicknesses.

We also have to remember that Christ did not bear our persecutions; every Christian must take up his cross and bear them himself. We are not redeemed from being persecuted, and that’s why Paul’s request to have God remove the “thorn” went unanswered. God gives us grace to deal with persecution, even when it involves physical abuse. His grace grants us healing for physical ailments.

Objection: Death, Needing to Work and Painful Childbirth Are Effects of the Fall that Are Still with Us. We Seem to Be Selective about Which Effects We're Redeemed from.

Another objection, "If the atonement removed all the effects of the fall, why do people still die?" is so similar to this one that we can cover both of them at once.

Atonement did NOT redeem us from the effects of the fall in this life, so the very premise of these objections is flawed to begin with.

We are not selective about which effects of the fall we're redeemed from because we rightly divide the Word of God. There are two curses – the curse on the earth as a result of the fall in Genesis 3:16:19, which Christ did NOT redeem us from and which will only be reversed in heaven, and the curse for breaking the Law, articulated in Leviticus 26:14-39 and Deuteronomy 28:15-69, from which Christ DID redeem us (Galatians 3:13). The objectors in both cases above mistakenly think that faith teachers believe that sickness was part of the curse on the earth, so it must therefore stay as long as people die, have to work and have labor pains.

I will grant that sickness came into the earth because of sin (the fall). So did being a slave of sin. These are conditions we need not endure as Christians. However, we can't just sit around watching Christian TV all day instead of working unless we're independently wealthy. Paul said that anyone with him who did not work would not eat (2 Thessalonians 3:10). That proves that the "work curse" of Genesis 3 is still with us, and that Christ did not redeem us in this present life from the curses that actually are listed in Genesis 3. We are redeemed from those listed in the "curse of the Law" verses, though, and these explicitly specify sickness as part of that curse.

Death, needing to work and painful childbirth are part of the curse on the earth due to the fall. Sickness is not mentioned in this curse; only dying physically. No Scripture states that we can have a total reversal of that curse in this present life; nowhere does it say that "Christ has redeemed us from the curse on the earth." Sickness is part of the curse for breaking the Law, and Christ has redeemed us from that curse, which means that we do not have to bear anything under that curse because God will treat us as if we've never sinned as far as blessings and curses go. The blessings are ours and the curses are not.

Objection: The Fact that Everyone Dies Proves that We Are All Still Subject to Adam's Curse

This objection is yet another case of a correct statement with an incorrect conclusion. Yes, we are subject to death – it is still appointed for a man once to die (Hebrews 9:27) even under the New Covenant, and that IS part of the “curse on the earth” pronounced on Adam. However, the Bible never states (nor do I) that Christ has redeemed us in this life from the curse on the earth. The curse we are redeemed from was the “curse of the law” found in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39, which includes every sickness there is. So we ARE redeemed from sickness but NOT from death. This means that we can be healthy until we go home to be with the Lord.

There is more elaboration on this in another objection reply.

Objection: The Earth Is under a Curse because of Adam, So Sickness Will Continue Until Jesus Returns

This statement by itself is true. Because death came into the world by sin (Romans 5:12), nothing that causes death (for example, sickness) could have been in the world before Adam fell. Sickness came in with Adam's transgression. Now that Satan has been allowed (by Adam's treason) to become "the god of this world" (2 Corinthians 4:4), corruption and sickness will be part of life on this planet until the earth is replaced with a new one that Satan will never visit.

The implication that we will have to put up with sickness because it is on the earth is not true. There are two major curses in the Bible. There is the "curse on the earth" for Adam's sin in Genesis 3 and there is the "curse for breaking the Law" in Deuteronomy 28, Leviticus 26, and a few other places. These curses do not overlap. They cover completely different things.

While God DID curse the earth after sin came in, He pronounced a separate curse for breaking the Law of Moses in Leviticus 26:14-39 and Deuteronomy 28:15-68. The curse for breaking the Law was not specified in Genesis for the obvious reason that the Law of Moses had not yet been given – so no one could have broken it yet!

We are redeemed from the curse of the law (Galatians 3:13). Every sickness known to man is part of the curse of the law (Deuteronomy 28:61), and because we are redeemed from the curse of the law, we are redeemed from every sickness known to man. On the other hand, we still have to work for a living, and we will eventually die physically, so we are not yet redeemed from the curse on the earth found in Genesis. However, God does not mention sickness as part of the curse on the earth. That is good, because we are stuck with that curse for the rest of our lives.

The fact is, sickness will continue until Jesus returns (and beyond into a couple of other prophetic periods before the eternal new earth is set up). But you don't have to be one of the people who gets it! Just as the Israelites in Egypt were exempt when the whole land was cursed, you are exempt from sickness even if it is everywhere else in the land.

Jesus also said that evil men would become worse and worse before He returned. That does not mean that you have to become worse and worse. There will be sin on the earth, too, but that doesn't mean that you have to be doing any of it.

Objection: The Man in John 9 Exercised No Faith until AFTER He Was Already Healed

This isn't true because the man was told to go and wash in the pool of Sent. He obeyed Jesus and received his sight after he did what Jesus said to do. That was an act of faith. It was probably not convenient for him to go and wash in the pool of Sent when he couldn't see how to get there! But he did whatever he had to do to get there. If the man thought Jesus was a fraud, he would never have followed His instructions. So obviously there was some faith involved.

People have said the same thing about the man at the Pool of Bethesda in John 5:2-19, yet at some point he had to obey Jesus by faith and "rise, take up his bed and walk."

The point the objector is trying to make is that it is God's will, not our faith, that should matter. That argument is not helped by the very passage in question, as it was most definitely Jesus' will that the blind man receive his sight. Jesus didn't even pray and ask God if it was okay for this man to get his sight. The only man we know of who even questioned Jesus' will (the leper) was told, "I WILL." Because Jesus is the same today (Hebrews 13:8), that would be His answer to you as well: "I WILL. Be healed."

Objection: Ten Lepers Were Healed but Only One Had Faith

This is another attempt to try to prove that it is not our faith, but God's will, that matters, and like other similar arguments, this one falls on its nose, too.

In the account in question (Luke 17:12-19), all ten lepers were told to go show themselves to the priests. They all knew what that meant. They were to go certify their healing from leprosy according to the Law of Moses. Yet right at the moment Jesus gave them the command to go to the priests, they were still lepers, as the passage says that they were healed as they went.

So these lepers, with no initial visible proof that they were healed, went off to see the priests to certify their healings. That was most definitely an act of faith on the part of all ten of them. And as is clear from the passage, all ten of these lepers who exercised their faith were healed – Jesus said so Himself!

The issue Jesus had with them was that nine of them never even came back to say thanks or to share their testimonies. They ALL were healed, but only one had a proper grateful attitude about it.

God's will was quite clear here when Jesus, who always did what God wanted, told them to go certify their healings. They acted on God's will in faith and received their healings. Jesus didn't tell the one who came back, "God wanted you to be whole, so He just did it for you." He said, "Your faith has made you whole." So this passage actually is further encouragement for people who want to walk in faith – as these lepers did – to receive their healings.

The fact that Jesus only told one of the former lepers that his faith had made him whole did not mean he was the only one who was in faith. He only told one man this because the other nine were nowhere to be found!

Objection: Some People Were Healed without Faith, So Faith Is Not Required for Healing

This is another objection based upon a half-truth. Some people even TODAY are healed without exercising faith because they are healed through special manifestations of the Holy Spirit. When “the gifts” are in operation, people who are in tentative faith or even no faith get healed anyway.

The Holy Spirit no doubt DID heal people without their faith being involved, so the objector’s citing of the healing of Lazarus and other dead people, Peter’s mother-in-law, the man with the withered hand, the man at the Pool of Bethesda and others who were never cited as exercising any faith does not faze me. In fact, I am GLAD that some people are healed in my meetings who aren’t exercising any faith. The Holy Spirit can and does “give out freebies” to some people who at least make the effort to go where the gospel is being preached. God will do some things just as signs to unbelievers to get their attention.

So if a person is on the receiving end of gifts of healings, working of miracles or (special) faith, faith is NOT required for healing. Some people CAN be healed without faith.

It almost sounds like I agree with the objector, but I don’t. Here’s where the objector is trying to take this thought: “Because some people in the Bible were healed without faith, we can’t teach today that faith is required to receive healing.” That is a half-truth. Faith is not required to receive healing from a special manifestation, but faith definitely IS required to receive healing when no special manifestation is going on, which is most of the time! You can NEVER be sure that there will be a special manifestation that will heal you, but you can ALWAYS be sure that you can receive healing by faith because you have the Word, which is ALWAYS in effect, backing you. Receiving by faith is a far better way to get healed because you don’t have to wait for the next healing evangelist to show up in town. Even if a healing evangelist does show up, you have no assurance that some special manifestation will bring you healing irrespective of your faith. That’s why it’s so vital for you to ascertain the will of God concerning your healing from the Word, which will always point you to healing being legally yours to receive by faith.

Many people who were NOT in faith were NOT healed in Jesus’ ministry in the house where the paralytic was let down through the roof (Luke 5:17-26). So you had no guarantee of being healed if you were NOT in faith – even when the power of God was present to heal as in that case. Contrast this to those whom Jesus said WERE in faith, to whom He said, “YOUR FAITH has made you well.” (See According to YOUR FAITH Be It Done unto You for a complete list of such cases.) There is not one single case where Jesus said to anyone, “You ARE in faith, but you’re going to have to go without your healing anyway for whatever reason God has in mind. Stay sovereignly sick.” Everyone who believed received.

The objector does not like the idea that you have to exercise faith to be healed – it's easier to throw up your hands and say, "It's not up to our faith anyway, it's ONLY up to the will of God!" That is the lazy man's approach – "I want to get healed, but I do not want to be expected to do anything myself. I just want God to drop it on me, and when He doesn't, I'll resign myself to sickness being His good, acceptable and perfect will for me." I hope no sinner ever catches that bad attitude and says, "I want to be saved, but I do not want to be expected to do anything myself. I just want God to drop it on me, and when He doesn't, I'll resign myself to being lost in sin and headed for hell being His good, acceptable and perfect will for me." It sounds crazy to anyone to treat the new birth that way. It SHOULD sound just as crazy to anyone to treat healing that way, as both are received through faith.

Objection: You WERE Healed in 1 Peter 2:24 Must Mean that You Were SAVED, because Healing Is Still Ongoing in the Present for SAVED Believers

The objector reasons that the past tense of the word HEALED in 1 Peter 2:24 proves that whatever Peter is talking about must be a past event for the believer, and because many believers still need healing, it isn't a "past" event for them, and therefore it isn't what Peter is talking about.

But God has a track record of putting in the past tense things that are yet to happen in the future but which must certainly happen.

For example, He told Abraham that He HAD made him the father of many nations, but it had not happened yet from a human time perspective. It was as good as done on a one-time basis in God's mind, but Abraham had to work out the believing part. In fact, God gave him his new name, Abraham (father of a multitude) BEFORE Abraham was ever the father of anyone other than Ishmael, who was not the child God had promised (see Genesis 17:5).

God told Joshua that He HAD given Jericho to him while Jericho's huge wall was still standing (Joshua 6:2).

Jesus is even referred to as the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Revelation 13:8). This messes with our time-based perspective but it shows the perspective of God, who dwells outside of time. Jesus healed and forgave people BEFORE He died on the cross "on credit" based on the fact that He would die for them.

So I see no problem with God saying that we are HEALED before we see any change. In His mind, He already did everything that was necessary for our healing. It is vital that you understand that so that you do not join the ignorant masses who beg God to "do something" about their conditions.

You are HEALED just as much as you are REDEEMED from the kingdom of darkness. Unfortunately, not everyone walks in the revelation of that in this life. This doesn't disprove that it was provided for you in the past tense – it just proves that many Christians aren't too familiar with their Bibles. SALVATION FROM HELL was provided for you in like manner in the past, but you only partook of the benefits when you received Jesus.

The best way to understand "you were healed" is that healing is LEGALLY your possession right now because of Jesus' PAST act. A parallel truth is that Jesus is the Lamb who "takes away the sins of the world."

If we were to follow this objector's logic, we would conclude that the Bible CAN'T say that Jesus took everyone's sins because some people are still on their way to hell in their sins, and others have already gone to hell in their sins. The fact that there was no moment when they received God's gift of righteousness doesn't negate the fact that Jesus DID purchase that gift for them in the PAST. They just failed to receive it. Likewise, the fact that there is no moment when someone has received healing doesn't negate the fact that healing WAS purchased for that person in the PAST.

Objection: 1 Peter 2:24 Means that You Were Healed from the Disease of Sin

The Bible does not confuse sin with disease, so this assertion cannot be backed up with Scripture. There are NO instances in the Bible where God punished someone for catching a cold or developing cancer or getting sick in any other way. DISEASE is not punishable, but SIN is, and part of the punishment for sin is sickness, as shown in Isaiah 53, Leviticus 26:14-39 and Deuteronomy 28:15-68. Therefore, they CANNOT be the same thing. A non-punishable disease logically cannot be a punishable sin.

A DISEASE can come on you without a moral failure on your part. SIN is always a moral failure on your part. The same thing can't be both a moral failure and not a moral failure.

God could not justly tell people to repent of a disease that just came on them. If sin were really a disease, God could not command anyone to repent of sin – but He does, even today under the New Covenant.

I can understand how someone might buy into this objection given our modern tendency to give sins disease names and claim in misleading 12-step recovery programs that a sin like drunkenness is the “disease” of alcoholism. It is a way to shift blame away from yourself, but God sees men's hearts and won't buy into blame shifting. We know He won't accept blame shifting because He didn't sympathize with Adam's excuse that his wife led him into sin, nor with Eve's excuse that the serpent put her up to it.

It doesn't matter how many Biblically illiterate social workers or psychotherapists call sin a disease – it isn't one.

So given that SIN is not a DISEASE, 1 Peter 2:24 cannot possibly mean that sin is a disease from which you are healed.

Objection: Matthew 13:15, John 12:39-41 and Acts 28:27 Prove that HEALED in 1 Peter 2:24 Doesn't Have to Mean Physically Healed

These three passages actually refer to the same prophecy in Isaiah. They are all substantially the same, so this is really one argument, not three:

Matthew 13:15

John 12:39-41

Acts 28:27

By what authority does the objector conclude that these are the ONLY THREE VERSES IN THE BIBLE where the word iaomai (used for healed in 1 Peter 2:24) cannot refer to physical healing? See “Healed” Defined for proof that iaomai refers to physical healing in the Bible. I see no reason to explain away the use of it in these 3 verses. If people return to God, they can be physically healed. That has been the case under the Law of Moses as well as the New Covenant.

But there is an even better way to show that these 3 verses refer to physical healing. They all quote or paraphrase the very same prophecy in Isaiah 6:10. Wouldn't it be logical to check out the word for healed in the original Hebrew to see what it means in Isaiah 6:10, seeing as this is the verse that the other verses refer to?

The word Isaiah used is rapha, which usually refers to physical healing, and is sometimes translated physician, as proved in the section “Healed” Defined. It can be used figuratively of healing a breach, for example, just as we might use the word in English. But this is talking about fixing something physical. If you have any doubt as to what the word means, read through all the places in the Bible where it is used, which are all listed for you in “Healed” Defined, and draw your own conclusion.

On the strength of these points, I maintain that the 3 verses in question DO refer to physical healing and not just some kind of spiritual thing, as the objector likes to think. There is no such thing as spiritual healing in the Bible anyway, though emotional healing is available. So these verses simply CANNOT refer to “spiritual healing.”

An objector could claim that being “healed” only means being saved in a non-physical sense. In other words, it would be reduced to merely being converted. All 3 New Testament passages above as well as Isaiah 6:10 above disprove this theory! In all 4 cases, conversion happens BEFORE the healing! That is why healed CANNOT mean converted! The people who are healed in these verses have ALREADY been converted! (Read the end of all those verses carefully.) The healing has to be another benefit that they receive AFTER they are converted! So I maintain that in the only 3 places in the New Testament where iaomai supposedly doesn't mean physical healing, it actually does. And there aren't any other exceptions to be found in the New Testament. Jesus brought you the same “healing” that a physician would bring you! It is available to EVERYONE and it is a New Testament benefit of conversion that comes with the package.

An even emptier argument would be that having your eyes see and ears hear is something spiritual, so the healing must also be spiritual. In the context of Isaiah's prophecy, you get HEALED after you have your figurative eyes and ears fixed, so the healing can't be referring to something figurative that was already fixed!

Objection: Jesus Bore Our Sins, Not Our Sicknesses, on the Cross (1 Peter 2:24)

The objector asserts that the statement that He “his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree” shows that it was our sins, not our sicknesses, that He bore, and that within that verse, our sins must be what were healed, not our sicknesses.

The Bible does not teach that sins can be healed; it teaches that sins can be forgiven. That’s the first problem.

The second problem is that the objector denies that Jesus bore our sicknesses when the literal Hebrew in Isaiah 53:4 is absolutely clear that He has borne our sicknesses and carried our pains, as pointed out elsewhere in this book. The statement about being healed by Jesus’ stripes in 1 Peter 2:24’s parallels Isaiah’s statement about being physically healed by Jesus’ stripes, and the word healed definitely means “physically healed” (Greek iaomai).

Interestingly, Jesus’ bearing of our sicknesses did not start on the cross – it started when He was whipped by the Romans and made so physically weak that He could not carry His cross. It is by His stripes that we are healed, not by His blood. Jesus was already in horrible physical condition – as punishment for our sins – before He was hung on the cross. However, He still had those sicknesses while on the cross. When we partake of communion, we celebrate the fact that His body was broken FOR US as well as the fact that His blood was spilled FOR US to ratify the New Covenant. (The New Covenant and the New Testament are not the same thing. The four gospels describe mostly action that was under the Old Covenant even though they are in the New Testament. The New Covenant was in Jesus’ blood, which was only shed at the end of the four gospels.)

The third problem is that I would like for the objector to describe how Jesus could bear sins in His body, as Peter says. Clearly, Jesus was physically punished for our sins. He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. This, to me, is the only sense in which anyone, including Peter, could say that Jesus bore our sins in His own body. We know that He bore them spiritually as well because He became sin for us. We have to conclude that bearing sins in His body meant that He had to suffer physical punishment for our sins, which He had taken on spiritually.

But now “by whose stripes ye were healed” reveals its obvious meaning. Jesus took the physical punishment for our sins as our Substitute so that we need not bear physical punishment for our sins. Because we need not bear physical distress ourselves now, that is how God can say that we were healed by Jesus’ physical torment.

So this objection is another half-truth, as many of them are. Jesus DID indeed bear our sins in His body on the cross, but “bearing our sins in His body” meant that He bore physical punishment in our place for our sins while He was on the cross.

Objection: Nothing in Scripture Even Hints that Jesus Was Sick on the Cross

On the contrary, Scripture doesn't just hint it – it comes right out and SAYS it when you look at the original Hebrew!

Isaiah 53:4 tells us that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains. This was talking about the punishment He bore for us.

Isaiah 53:10 tells us that God made Jesus sick. This is also part of the same chapter that describes Jesus' atonement.

For a demonstration that these are the proper Hebrew translations, see Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption.

Also, Jesus' body was in such bad shape before He was hung on the cross that He could not carry His own cross. That is NOT a picture of health! His body was a WRECK when it was hung on the cross. He had already been beaten more than anyone else (Isaiah 52:14). If that wouldn't make your body sick I don't know what would.

Part of the problem has been our "sanitized" depictions of Jesus on the cross in paintings and movies. If you REALLY saw what He looked like after being so completely disfigured, you would be like the crowds and look away, too. No one would WANT a gory picture on the wall showing what He REALLY must have looked like on the cross. One movie finally did a better job of showing all the gore, and when I went to see it, people in the theater looked the other way because they couldn't stand to watch. That showed that the movie was more accurate than similar movies, because in REAL LIFE, people hid their faces from Him (Isaiah 53:3) after His body had been brutally disfigured.

Objection: The Apostles Never Said, “By His Stripes You Were Healed” When They Preached Christ

Even if those weren't their exact words, they certainly preached divine healing.

Paul said that our bodies as well as our spirits were purchased and are God's property (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). This is the same Paul who healed all the sick on the island of Melita (Acts 28:8-9). This is the same Paul who preached at Lystra, and as he did, a man crippled from birth got faith to be healed (Acts 14:7-10). We know that faith for something specific comes from hearing the Word, so Paul must have preached healing. This is the same Paul who said that the Holy Spirit imparts life to our mortal bodies (Romans 8:11). This is the same Paul from whose body cloth items were taken and people were healed and demons came out of people (Acts 19:11-12). This is Paul who wrote to the Galatians that God did miracles in their midst through “the hearing of faith” (Galatians 3:5-6).

Peter DID say, “by whose stripes you were healed” in one of his letters (1 Peter 2:24) – that should count! This is the same Peter whose shadow brought healing to people on the streets in Jerusalem (Acts 5:12-16), who believed that he “had” something (authority) when he told the beggar, “such as I have I give you” (Acts 3:1-16). That should certainly qualify as preaching divine healing!

The apostles quoted Isaiah's prophecy that indicated that if people would turn their eyes and ears to the Lord, He would heal them.

Certainly the MOST important thing that Jesus did for us was save us from our sins. The apostles certainly stressed forgiveness of sins more than anything else, as should we. After all, Jesus commanded that repentance and forgiveness of sins be preached everywhere, starting at Jerusalem (Luke 24:47). The sinner's biggest need is not physical healing but a new birth that will get his name written into the Lamb's Book of Life.

However, it is ALSO the Lord's desire that we preach the Word with signs following it to confirm it. When the apostles preached, signs followed (Mark 16:20). Jesus said that “those who believe” will lay hands on the sick and they will recover (Mark 16:18). ALL believers should take God up on His promise!

Objection: If Christ Died for Our Sicknesses, Then His Atoning Work in This Aspect is a Failure

The objector reasons that not all are healed today, so if Jesus provided healing in His atonement, His work was a failure.

If we go along with this, we must reason that because not all are saved from hell today, if Jesus provided salvation from hell in His atonement, His work was a failure.

If we can't fairly apply this to the second case, we can't apply it to the first one either.

What about the other parts of the inheritance that He gave us – love, joy, peace, prosperity, comfort, power, and so on? If some people do not enjoy the blessings that His atonement made possible for us, does that make His work a failure in those regards as well? No.

Nothing Jesus did for us was a failure. What we have here is a failure to receive.

If someone goes to hell, Jesus' atonement was still complete but the person did not RECEIVE what Jesus paid for. It is the same with anything else, including healing.

The fact that something isn't received doesn't prove that it wasn't given, regardless of which area above we discuss. The fact is that God's blessings were GIVEN when Jesus died for us, so His atoning work was a total success. A failure on man's end to receive something (whether the new birth or healing) doesn't make anything that Jesus did a failure.

Objection: The Greek Septuagint Translates Isaiah 53:4 as Saying that He Bore Our SINS

This statement is factually correct – the Greek word harmatia, which definitely means sins, is used there instead of griefs or sicknesses.

What you must remember is that the Greek Septuagint is simply another translation of the original Old Testament Scriptures. Isaiah 53:4 was written in Hebrew. The Septuagint is not more authoritative than some other translation or paraphrase just because it's old.

One could just as well point out that the standard Spanish Old Testament (RVR 1960) translates the verse as the Spanish equivalent of, "Surely He carried our sicknesses and suffered our pains..." which is actually the best translation of the Hebrew words, as is demonstrated elsewhere. Rather than translating from Hebrew to Greek, the RVR 1960 was translated from Hebrew to Spanish. (By the way, preaching healing in a Spanish-speaking country is facilitated by the fact that you can just read the verse out of an ordinary Bible to show people that Jesus took their sicknesses and pains.)

A quick perusal of all the major English Bible translations at this writing failed to find even ONE that agrees with the Greek Septuagint on this verse. Everyone translates the particular word as griefs, sicknesses, weaknesses or pain, never as sins.

The objector can cite no other translation that will agree with him about the word meaning sins, while several translations agree with my assertion that the word refers to sicknesses or a similar word. Even some translations of griefs come with a footnote acknowledging that the original Hebrew literally means sicknesses, particularly in "study Bible" versions.

Objection: Isaiah's Word for HEALED in Isaiah 53:5 Is Ambiguous

This objection is a convenient way to steer people away from divine healing (which was the idea) because very few people will ever both check out the facts about the Hebrew word rapha that was translated healed in Isaiah 53:5. However, you can refer to the section "Healed" Defined to see every single place in the Bible where the word rapha appeared in the Hebrew and how it was translated.

You will discover that rapha is the Hebrew word for physician as well as heal. So don't you suppose it would be a good word to use to refer to physical healing? You will see all the places where it refers to healing as we would normally understand it. There are a few places where a thing is "healed," but those are rare exceptions. But in Isaiah 53:5, it is not a thing that is healed – WE are healed.

Of course, there is another way to settle the ambiguity, and that is to see how Peter translated Isaiah's prophecy into Greek. You can also refer to "Healed" Defined to ascertain for yourself that the Greek word iaomai is used in the New Testament to also refer to healing as we would normally understand it.

Another way to settle things is to realize that there is nothing ambiguous about the context of Isaiah 53:5, where immediately before we are told that we are healed by His stripes, we are told that the punishment that brought us shalom (the word translated peace) was upon Him. Shalom denotes general well-being, including but not limited to healing. In fact, shalom is even translated prosperity in Psalm 35:27! You can't have well-being in every area if you're sick! Furthermore, before that we are told that He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. Those words definitely state that Jesus endured physical punishment for our sins, so it is only fitting that we should be physically healed after He took the physical as well as spiritual penalty for sin in our place.

The words are clear enough that it would take a theologian to mess them up! And that's what many theologians have done. I think that if you check out the facts for yourself in the "Healed" Defined section, you will reach the same conclusion that I did and the opposite conclusions of theologians who have a predisposition against divine healing and make objections like this one.

Objection: Gesenius' Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon of the Old Testament Says that "Healed" in Isaiah 53:5 Means "Pardoned"

The word "healed" in Isaiah 53:5 is the Hebrew word rapha, which is also translated physician. The fact that a commentator tried to force his predisposition on things does not change what the actual Hebrew word was. You would not go to a medical doctor to get forgiven for your sins, would you? I have devoted the section "Healed" Defined to showing you how the word rapha and its Greek counterpart ioamai are used in Scripture.

If Mr. Gesenius is right, a lot of Scriptures are now very interesting. Let's see how they would pan out if rapha really means pardoned in the Gesenius Rapha-Pardoned Version (GRPV):

"And Joseph commanded his servants the pardoners to embalm his father: and the pardoners embalmed Israel" – Genesis 50:2 (GRPV)

"The flesh also, in which, even the skin thereof, was a boil, and is pardoned..." – Leviticus 13:18 (GRPV)

"And if the priest shall come in, and look upon it, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plaistered: then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is pardoned." – Leviticus 14:48 (GRPV)

"The LORD will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be pardoned." – Deuteronomy 28:27 (GRPV)

"And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he pardoned the altar of the LORD that was broken down." – 1 Kings 18:30 (GRPV)

"So the waters were pardoned unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake." – 2 Kings 2:22 (GRPV)

"And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the LORD, but to the pardoners." – 2 Chronicles 16:12 (GRPV)

"Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: pardon the breaches thereof; for it shaketh." – Psalm 60:2 (GRPV)

"Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who pardons all thy diseases;" – Psalm 103:3 (GRPV)

"He pardoneth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds." – Psalm 147:3 (GRPV)

"For they have pardoned the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace." – Jeremiah 8:11 (GRPV)

"Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no pardoner there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" – Jeremiah 8:22 (GRPV)

“Why is my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be pardoned? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that fail?” – Jeremiah 15:18 (GRPv)

“And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be pardoned again: and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.” – Jeremiah 19:11 (GRPv)

“For I will restore health unto thee, and I will pardon thee of thy wounds, saith the LORD; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.” – Jeremiah 30:17 (GRPv)

“The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye pardoned that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.” – Ezekiel 34:4 (GRPv)

“But the miry places thereof and the marishes thereof shall not be pardoned; they shall be given to salt.” – Ezekiel 47:11 (GRPv)

I could list a lot of similar verses, but these should be enough to make my point. I will definitely stick with heal / healed / physician as opposed to pardon / pardoned / pardoner as the proper translation of rapha.

Mr. Genesis's book is old (early 1800's), so it may be a “classic,” but “old” does not necessarily mean “right.” Mary Baker Eddy and Joseph Smith wrote some “old” works in the 1800's that were totally heretical!

For notes on the context of Isaiah 53:5, see Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption.

Objection: We Are Healed of Going Astray Like Sheep, Not Illnesses, in Isaiah's Context

Divine healing definitely stands or falls on Isaiah's prophecy, so it is no wonder that so many objections try to go after it from so many different angles. Seriously, when is the last time you heard of being HEALED of going astray like sheep other than in a religious objection? I doubt that you've ever heard an actual shepherd say, "One of my 100 sheep is lost so I'm going to leave the 99 for now and try to heal the 100th one of going astray." But we'll hear this one out and answer it.

Isaiah 53:5-6:

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

Verse 6 certainly indicates that Jesus bore our sin – our going astray like sheep doing our own thing. No problem so far. The issue is, can we link the end of verse 5 ("and with his stripes we are healed") with the beginning of verse 6 ("All we like sheep have gone astray")? The two phrases are right next to each other in the text, so the objector thinks that they're saying the same thing, but I don't think so.

Verse 5 contains one thought and verse 6 contains a different thought. In verse 5, Isaiah emphasizes Jesus' physical punishment for our sins (He was wounded, bruised and chastised; He bore stripes) and the Hebrew word used for healed (rapha) is clearly a word denoting physical healing elsewhere in Scripture (see the separate objections to the word allegedly being ambiguous or meaning pardoned).

Verse 6 is a separate but related thought that Jesus bore punishment for our "going astray." This verse talks about SIN as opposed to DISEASE. We see the words going astray, turned every one to his own way and iniquity. These are all talking about the same thing – our sin. Verse 6 is connected to the prior two verses, but for the reason that it continues to explain why Jesus had to be physically punished – because of our transgressions and iniquities (verse 5), which are also referred to in different ways the three times listed above in verse 6.

If a sheep goes astray, does that mean that it needs to be healed? Well, if it wandered too near the edge of a drop-off, maybe. It would take extraordinary proof from the context to insist that a word used to mean heal, healed, physician, etc., could apply to a wayward sheep.

Aside from the literal meaning of healed, the issue is that verse 5 makes it clear that Jesus suffered physically and that it is because of the physical torture inflicted upon Him (His stripes) that we are healed. We have words describing explicitly physical situations (wounded, bruised, stripes and healed), and it makes logical sense for physical punishment to bring physical healing. There is just nothing here that would force us to think that the first 3 words (wounded, bruised, stripes) are literal, but the last (healed) must be taken metaphorically because it somehow goes with verse 6 instead of the rest of verse 5.

Actually, if you back up to verse 4, you see more physical issues – he was sick with our sicknesses and in pain with our pains. This fits the idea in verse 5 that the punishment that brought us shalom, which would imply wellness in every area, was upon Him.

“Going astray” is not a physical form of unwellness, so it does not fit the context of verses 4 and 5. We have to assume that it is part of the logical thought of verse 6, but not a continuation of the physical events in the previous 2 verses. Thus, applying the beginning of verse 6 to the end of verse 5 goes astray from reasonable Bible interpretation.

Objection: Jesus Bore Our Sins in His Own Body So that We Could Be Dead to Sins, Not So that We Could Be Physically Healed

This particular objection from a certain Bible teacher takes the first (but not last!) part of 1 Peter 2:24 to try to prove that Jesus' bodily bearing of our sins was so that we could be dead to sins, quoting this part of the verse:

"Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness..."

The argument is that this snippet mentions being dead to sins (and living to righteousness) as the sole purpose of Christ's bodily suffering.

Without finishing the verse, one could argue that Peter did not say, "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree, that we might be healed by His stripes." We all know that the verse ends with "by whose stripes ye were healed" but this is not one of the purposes stated immediately after mentioning His bodily bearing of our sins, which is the objector's point.

However, if you're going to quote Scripture, you should at least finish the sentence! This verse does end with the statement "by whose stripes ye were healed." Therefore, you can't get around the fact that "healing" was purchased by Jesus' stripes. "Stripes" refers to the physical punishment that was laid on Jesus – the same thing referred to in the beginning of the verse where He bore our sins in His own body. His body bore the brunt of God's punishment for our sins. He wasn't allowed to just suffer spiritually; He had to be tortured physically. Otherwise there was no need for the cross, which was a physical torture device.

The verse starts with the statement that Jesus bore our sins in His own body on the cross. The next phrase emphasizes the reason for the "bore our sins" part of this phrase – so that we, being dead to sins, might live for righteousness. The final phrase emphasizes the reason for the "in His own body" part of this phrase – so that by His stripes we were healed. This whole sentence goes together, so trying to chop it up is unreasonable, as is trying to chop out the last part of the sentence and append it to the start of the next sentence as some objectors have done.

Thus, the entire verse, not just the healing part, shows what Jesus purchased for us when His body was tortured.

Knowing this, the only way to avoid the conclusion that physical healing was not purchased by Jesus' stripes is to claim that "healing" in this verse really doesn't mean physical healing, but rather that you're forgiven, have your salvation brought about, are restored to divine fellowship or are spiritually healed. These objections are handled elsewhere and you may follow the links above to see the disproofs of those arguments.

Objection: Isaiah DID Refer to Actual Physical and Mental Illnesses and Distresses, But Not Necessarily to a Vicarious Bearing of Them, But to Sympathetic Bearing of the Troubles of This Life

This is another feeble attempt to prove that Matthew 8:17 does not refer to the atonement. The idea is to make Isaiah 53:4, which says that He literally bore our sicknesses and carried our pains, mean only that he put up with life's annoyances as part of our common human lot.

I don't doubt that He had plenty of annoyances, from temple merchandizers to religious detractors and sometimes wishy-washy disciples. The problem is that Isaiah was very specific. I assume that the objector is using the King James Version's "hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows" and assumed that the "griefs" must be the kind of "grief of mind" that Esau's wives Judith and Bashemath were to Isaac and Rebekah (Genesis 26:34-35). If you only read the Bible in English, you could actually support this objection. When you get into the underlying Hebrew, it unravels. The word used for grief in Genesis 26 is the word morah, which means grief in the sense of bitterness. The word used for griefs in Isaiah 53:4 the word choliy, which means sickness. The words griefs and sorrows are literally sicknesses and pains. (See Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption for more about this.) They are definitely not the same thing despite both being translated as the same English word by the King James translators. If you were to claim that Jesus bore what was our common human lot based on Isaiah 53, you'd have to prove that He got sick long before the cross – an objection that has actually been made but which is disproved here.

Once you get into the Hebrew, there is another fatal flaw with this objection. The word borne in Isaiah 53:4 is the word nasa. This word is used all over the Bible and has the sense of "take" or "carry away" – a usual translation is "lift up." Just as NASA rockets lift up payloads that are carried away from the earth, nasa implies a lifting up, a carrying away, not just a co-suffering of something. (Before someone comes up with a new objection, I am not suggesting that the Jews derived the Hebrew word nasa from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration – that's just a cute way to remember what it means.) So this does not mean merely that Jesus HAD sicknesses; it means that He TOOK AWAY sicknesses – OUR sicknesses – by BEARING them Himself!

If you doubt that, check out Isaiah 53:12, where Jesus bare (nasa) the sin of many. Can any rational Christian deny that the word there means that He suffered our sins to redeem us from them? He most certainly was not just sympathetically bearing our sins so that He could have sin troubles like the rest of us! No reasonable logic could assume that the same word in Isaiah 53:4 means something other than what it means in Isaiah 53:12!

Objection: We Are Healed by Jesus' Stripes, Not by Jesus' Stripes PLUS Our Faith

This argument attempts to establish that whatever we are healed of by Jesus' stripes would not take faith to receive. But that is utter nonsense. If you believe, as the objector probably does, that we are only "spiritually healed" with the new birth (disproved elsewhere), it still takes FAITH to receive the new birth. Otherwise, we would revert to the horrible error of universalism and have to teach that no one goes to hell. We are not simply saved by grace; we are saved by grace through faith (Ephesians 2:8). God has already given us everything we will ever need (Ephesians 1:3) – it's there to receive, but it's by faith that we have access into this grace (Romans 5:2).

Healing, like the new birth, is already paid for, but it only becomes ours in actual experience when we receive it by faith. God's blessings are free. The objector's error is thinking that they are also automatic. If salvation were automatic, everyone would be saved regardless of his faith or lack thereof. So in the objector's terms, we are saved by Jesus' blood PLUS our faith. Without faith, no one is saved and no one receives anything from God. So really all of God's blessings come as a result of God's grace PLUS our faith!

Objection: The Suffering Servant in Isaiah 53 Is Actually Israel, Not Jesus

This unusual objection is advocated by Jews, not fellow Christians. Isaiah 53 is plainly about Jesus, the Messiah, but in order to stick with Judaism instead of converting to Christianity, Jews had to come up with some reason that Isaiah 53 is NOT about the coming Messiah. This explanation has a LOT of flaws and you can show these flaws to any Jew you know who thinks that Isaiah 53 is about Israel.

Isaiah 52:14 (still part of the same prophecy): It would make no sense to say that Israel was “marred more than any man.” This verse indicates clearly that what the Messiah endured was something that would be done to a man, not to a country.

Isaiah 53:3: HE was despised but WE esteemed Him not. HE and WE (Israel) can’t logically be the same person. WE hid our faces from HIM. You can’t hide your face from yourself. It makes no sense to say that Israelites hid their faces from Israelites.

Isaiah 53:4: HE bore OUR sicknesses and carried OUR pains. HE and the owner of the sicknesses and pains can’t logically be the same person. Also, BORE is a Levitical word that means to take something away from someone else and endure it yourself as a substitute. No one could possibly “bear” anything away from himself.

Isaiah 53:5: HE was wounded for OUR transgressions. HE was bruised for OUR iniquities. The punishment of OUR well-being was upon HIM and by HIS stripes WE are healed. None of these four statements makes sense if the suffering servant is Israel. The prophet would have had to have said “WE were wounded for OUR transgressions. WE were bruised for OUR iniquities. The punishment of OUR well-being was upon US and with OUR stripes WE are healed.”

Isaiah 53:6: The Lord has laid on HIM the iniquity of US ALL. It would make no sense for the Lord to “lay” our own iniquities on us, as they would already be on us with no further action required!

Isaiah 53:8: The suffering servant was cut off from the land of the living, but Israel is still around. Also, HE was stricken for the transgression of MY PEOPLE. Israel is clearly MY PEOPLE, so who is HE (singular)?

Isaiah 53:9: HE died, but Israel did not all die – it’s still around. There was no deceit in HIM. HIM could not refer to Israel – there would be no need for all the punishment detailed in this chapter if there were no deceit in ISRAEL!

Isaiah 53:10: HIS soul was made an offering for sin – Israel consisted of many souls, none of whom would have been an acceptable offering for sin.

Isaiah 53:11: HE shall justify MANY, for HE shall bear THEIR iniquities. Israel could not justify itself, nor could it “bear” (in the Levitical sense) its own sins. HE and the MANY could not grammatically be the same entity.

Isaiah 53:12: Israel did not die, but Jesus did. HE bare the sin of MANY and made intercession for the transgressors. If HE is Israel, HE took away his OWN sin and made intercession for HIMSELF, neither of which makes any sense.

Objection: Mark 16:18 Refers to SPIRITUAL Illnesses

Had I not seen this objection with my own eyes, I would scarcely believe that anyone could even suggest this one. Obviously someone really didn't want to believe in divine physical healing through the laying on of hands!

I fail to see a case in the New Testament where someone laid hands on someone else to heal a "spiritual" illness. That's the first red flag right there. There's a good reason that no one did it. There are no "spiritual illnesses" to heal by the laying on of hands! Can you name one? No, you can't. There may be named illnesses related to emotions or mental issues, but those ARE subject to the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus.

If we adopt the safe approach of letting Scripture interpret itself, we see that many PHYSICAL healings did follow the preaching of the gospel in the book of Acts. There is not one case of a "spiritual healing" mentioned in the same book. We have to conclude that Jesus did indeed refer to PHYSICAL healing.

Everyone is either a "saint" or an "ain't." If a person is an "ain't" (unbeliever), his spiritual problem does not consist of having a sick spirit that needs to be healed. His problem is that he is a spiritual walking dead man. His spirit is DEAD, not SICK. The solution, therefore, cannot be healing, as you cannot "heal" a dead person. The unbeliever must confess Jesus as Lord and believe that God raised Him from the dead, at which point he receives a new spirit and is now a saint instead of an ain't. His old spirit is gone, not healed. He has a new spirit that is born of God. This process cannot occur through the laying on of hands. It can only occur when the person believes with his own heart that God raised Jesus from the dead and confesses Jesus as Lord with his own mouth.

If the person is a saint (believer), his spirit does not need healing! His soul and body might be in tough shape, but spiritually, a believer is in the same perfect spiritual condition that he will be in for all eternity in heaven! He already HAS eternal life – he isn't going to get it after he dies. So there is no need for laying on of hands for spiritual healing for a believer because there is no need for spiritual healing at all!

So the whole idea of laying hands on anyone to heal his spirit is ridiculous. Therefore, Mark 16:18 cannot refer to spiritual healing.

Objection: Healing Is Not in the Context of the Entire Chapter in 1 Peter 2

This is a very similar objection to the one about 2 Peter 2:25, so I encourage you to read the response to that objection. The main point to get is that Peter is clearly quoting Isaiah, who was clearly talking about healing:

Isaiah:

“and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray”

Peter:

“by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray”

See the above-referenced objection for more on this, and for even more proof, see the answer to the objection that healing is spiritual in 1 Peter 2:24.

Objection: Isaiah and Peter Meant that We Were Healed from Sin

How exactly do you get “healed” from sin? What does getting “healed” from sin mean? Why would Isaiah and Peter mysteriously put forth a concept that is unknown in the rest of Scripture?

The biggest thing that was preached in the Book of Acts when they preached Jesus was that by Him forgiveness of sins is available. No one in Acts preached that through Jesus you could be healed of sins.

If sins are something to be healed, there should be Sin Doctors whose profession is to heal you of your sins. That is an absurd idea. Even people who mistakenly think that they have to go to “confession” to get forgiven don’t go to try to get their sins “healed.”

Jesus told the paralytic that his sins were forgiven. He didn’t say, “Man, your sins are healed.”

David said to bless the Lord who forgives all his sins and heals all his diseases, not who heals all his sins and heals all his diseases.

This extremely awkward objection tries to explain away the plain meaning of Isaiah 53:4 and 1 Peter 2:24 that Jesus’ sacrifice bought us PHYSICAL healing, which is plain from the words that both of them used (see “Healed” Defined for proof of this). If you aren’t willing to accept the plain meaning of the original languages, you have to come up with some kind of an explanation for why the words don’t mean what they would mean if they were used anywhere else. So this is a try, but not a very good one.

Our dear healing objectors would then be hard-pressed to make any sense out of Matthew 8:17. Even the hard-core ones who are sure that Isaiah’s prophecy was fulfilled with no continuation that day in Capernaum are admitting by saying that it was fulfilled that day that people were being physically healed. The people thronged Jesus as He walked the earth to be healed of their diseases, not “healed” of their sins. No one in his right mind could say that Matthew 8:17 was an account of people’s sins getting healed. How then could anyone claim with a straight face that Isaiah’s prophecy, which Matthew quoted, referred to people being healed of sins by what Jesus did? Isaiah’s account in Isaiah 53, verses 4 and 5, all refers to the same atoning event. Thus, Isaiah HAD to be referring to physical healing. Otherwise Matthew’s use of that part of that prophecy would make no sense.

The only remaining wiggle room for the objector would be that verses 4 and 5 don’t actually go together, and that idea is refuted in another objection reply. So this objection is broken and can’t be healed!

Objection: Paul First Preached at Galatia Due to a Physical Infirmary

Paul was stoned and left for dead at Lystra, Galatia. (According to a map in the back of one of my Bibles, Lystra was part of Galatia, along with Derbe and Iconium.) If you had just been stoned and left for dead at Lystra, you might have an “infirmary of the flesh” too! Paul continued to preach immediately despite what had happened. It was only “at the first.” Obviously, God healed Paul and he went on to other places. Much later, on his second missionary journey, Paul returned to Galatia. We can assume that Paul no longer considered this “at the first” and that he was healed by then. After all, he talked about “the trial that was in my flesh” when he wrote to the Galatians, not “the trial that I have been carrying around in my flesh ever since we first met, which God calls my thorn in the flesh!” Paul’s thorn in the flesh did continue, but whatever problem he had at Galatia did NOT continue, so it could not have been Paul’s “thorn in the flesh.” Therefore, any reference to Paul’s eyes has NO bearing on his thorn in the flesh.

In fairness, we should look at this entire passage, because critics often cite it in relation to Paul’s thorn in the flesh:

Galatians 4:13-15:

Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel to you at the first.

And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus.

Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

This has been used for years to “prove” that Paul had an eye disease (some people even specify “ophthalmia” with zero Biblical proof of that), but these verses do not prove that. First, the expression, “would have plucked out your own eyes” is possibly a statement of affection that is not to be taken literally. Second, it is possible that some of the rocks just thrown at him in Lystra did injure Paul’s eyes (that would be my preferred take), but that is quite different from Paul picking up a disease somewhere. And even if we stretch a bit and suppose (without any Biblical support) that Paul’s injured eyes had gotten infected, this trial did not continue, so Paul obviously got healed even if he was having eye trouble. Obviously, God healed Paul of whatever infirmity he had “at the first” because he never mentioned preaching anywhere else at any time “through infirmity of the flesh.”

Paul never mentions sickness or disease of any kind in his list of trials in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27, and practically every other kind of trial imaginable is listed there. Therefore we must conclude that Paul was not having a problem with some terrible disease.

Another hint at the nature of Paul’s infirmity is found in Galatians 6:17 – Paul bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. These marks were from his ill treatment, not from chicken pox or some other disease.

Galatians 6:17:

From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

Therefore, this passage in Galatians counts as a healing Scripture, not as a “stay-sick Scripture” the way some would use it. Because God healed Paul of his infirmity, you know that He desires to do the same for your infirmities.

See the Paul's Thorn reply for a long elaboration on this answer, including a discussion of what is usually a follow-up objection, namely that Paul wrote with big letters because his eyes were so messed up.

Objection: Paul Couldn't Heal Himself in Galatia

The idea here is that if Paul could not heal himself instantly (seeing as he walked in all that apostolic power), certainly none of us could expect to receive the healing that Paul did not receive. Is this a fair argument that divine healing is not really available to us?

First, let's dismiss the idea that he had some horrible eye disease or that he had any disease at all – there are other objection replies (Paul's Thorn, Paul's Physical Infirmary at Galatia) that deal with that issue. Paul had just been stoned and left for dead at Lystra, which was part of Galatia.

I would say that Paul received an amazing miracle of physical healing after his stoning. To be able to get up the very next day and go back into the city after being stoned and left for dead was phenomenal. To be able to travel like any other normal person to other parts of Galatia to preach the gospel, not being able to hop on a plane or a bus as we would today, is even more amazing. Would not those Jews, who wanted Paul dead, have inflicted horrible injury to him, given that they were convinced that he WAS dead? (And maybe he was; we know that the disciples gathered around him and raised him up, either from death or at least from death's door.)

Obviously Paul was healed enough that he was able to continue on the mission on which the Holy Spirit had sent him and Barnabas. All that walking would be tiring even if you HADN'T just been stoned and left for dead! Even Jesus, who was probably in the best shape of anyone who ever lived, got wearied on long journeys, as we can see in John 4:6. What an amazing healing testimony that Paul was able to go on a long journey after being so viciously stoned that he at least appeared to be dead! If you were a Jew with a nasty "everybody must get stoned" attitude toward Christians, you would probably have aimed your stones at Paul's head to make sure that you had "offed" him. This to me is the obvious source of Paul's apparent temporary eye trouble in the days that followed at Galatia.

Jesus had not promised Paul instant and total healing of everything when Paul was to be physically abused. In Acts 9:16 He said, "For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." If Jesus had provided instant healing for all forms of abuse and torture as they happened, Paul would not have had to suffer at all. But the healing that Paul did receive to go from death's door to a long journey is amazing. It would not be fair to say that Paul lacked faith for healing or did not operate in it. If you're ever stoned and left for dead by angry Jews, let's see how "instantly" your faith gets you healed before you throw any stones at Paul!

Paul's infirmity at Galatia was only "at the first" as Paul himself testified (Galatians 4:13), so he WAS healed, even though it was not instantaneous. It's hard to make an anti-divine healing argument using a case where someone was miraculously and notably healed, even if it wasn't instantaneous! So I would argue that Paul indeed walked in outstanding faith for healing given what had just happened to him.

I've had some serious conditions that were completely healed in half a day to two weeks. I wasn't instantly healed in any of the cases, either, but I didn't keep those problems for very long!

The objector leaves an image of Paul having to continue to suffer some disease that he had in Galatia, but disease is not on Paul's autobiographical list of severe sufferings. No, he had a persecution-related situation AT THE FIRST and he was later completely healed, even though he had to be mostly healed to get to Galatia in the first place after his stoning. That is no argument against divine healing in my book (literally)!

Objection: Teaching that Jesus Healed as an Anointed Man Is Heresy because It Denies His Deity

Satan loves using this kind of language to scare people away from divine healing teaching. After all, if it is truly heresy that Jesus did not do miracles as God, you would be duty-bound to avoid me and anyone else like me lest you become a heretic and end up in hell. There are plenty of “heresy hunter” websites run by people who believe they have criticism ministries (they prefer the term discernment ministries) who seem to feel that their God-given purpose in life is to tear down certain ministers by name. They usually have a weak disclaimer that they really regret having to use names, but they just have to do it to protect the Body of Christ. (You will notice that this book does not accuse anyone who disagrees with me of being a heretic – a very serious charge – and I never mention any names of people with whom I disagree because I am looking to counter their teaching, not tear down their ministries or ruin them personally. I don’t question the salvation of any of them who profess Christ. I don’t believe that they are heretics; I just believe that they are misinformed.) There is usually a fuss thrown in over who has what kind of plane or lives in what kind of house, none of which has ANYTHING to do with someone’s doctrine being right or wrong. I don’t ask what car a critic of divine healing drives to figure out whether his doctrine is right.

The reasoning you see offered is that Jesus is God (Amen to that), so therefore He ministered as God when He walked the earth, and to claim otherwise denies that He is God and denies the Trinity, which would be heresy. To this day, I have yet to actually encounter a “word of faith” website that denies that Jesus was God when He walked the earth. I certainly believe that He was God when He walked the earth; I just don’t believe that He ministered as God, which is a different matter. I believe that Jesus was (and is today) 100% God and 100% man. (He is still Man today, in case you didn’t realize that, because there is one mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus – 1 Timothy 2:5). I certainly don’t deny the Trinity and I’ve never met a “word of faith” preacher who does. People would do well to actually read the writings of the ministries that they tear down before going public with scary heresy charges.

When Jesus came as a Man, He laid aside His attributes that would have given Him an unfair advantage. (This is what Philippians 2:5-8 talks about.) He was not allowed to have all wisdom or all knowledge while walking the earth. In fact, if Jesus could have walked around exercising His power, wisdom and knowledge as God, He was NOT truly man because He never truly shared in mankind’s lot on the earth! That’s an interesting point that you might not have considered; these sites certainly haven’t. Also, God is immortal – He cannot die! If Jesus walked the earth with all His divine attributes operating rather than as a limited man, He could not have died on the cross, which would have ruined the whole plan of redemption!

If you believe that Jesus walked and ministered as deity, you will have a tough time explaining how God could grow in wisdom (Luke 2:52) or “become” strong in spirit (Luke 2:40) or even get physically tired (John 4:6). He WAS deity, but He had submitted Himself to human limitations. Otherwise, as deity, He would have been performing miracles from His youth, as He was just as much deity before He was anointed with the Holy Spirit. Make no mistake – He WAS God for His first 30 years, but He performed no miracles during that time. Also, if He ministered as deity, you would never be able to do “the works that He did and greater” (John 14:12) because you are not deity. This would make Jesus out to be a teller of lies, which is certainly not an attribute of deity, because He said that you would do the works that He did and greater! He did not have to act as God when He and His disciples were teleported to the shore of the Sea of Galilee during a storm (John 6:21), because Philip was not deity when He was teleported to Azotus (Acts 8:39-40). Believers in the book of Acts, who were not deity, did the works Jesus did. If they had to minister as deity to do those works, they could never have done them.

Jesus had to be “anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power” (Acts 10:38). This would not be true if He ministered as deity because God doesn’t need to be anointed by anyone – He does the anointing!

So let’s make this clear one last time – Jesus walked as a MAN, but He always has been the second member of the Trinity. At no point was He ever otherwise, even when He was “made sin” for us. That doesn’t sound like heresy to me.

Objection: The Council of Constantinople in 553 Said that Anyone Teaching that Jesus Ministered as a Spirit-Anointed Man Must Be Anathema

First, I am already anathema (accursed) according to this council because I do not call Mary the Mother of God, and the Council of Constantinople in 553 also declared that anyone who taught that Mary could not properly be called the Mother of God was “anathema.” So everyone should take this Council’s edicts with a grain of salt if not a truckload of salt. If you don’t think Mary can be referred to as the Mother of God, you’re also anathema according to this Council! I don’t deny that Mary was a virtuous woman and Jesus’ mother, of course. But this “Mother of God” teaching has misled some Christians (as well as pagans) into thinking that she was also divinely conceived and that she rose to heaven the way Jesus did. (The assumption is false.) Some go on to pray to Mary and even worship Mary, which is clearly out of order because she was just as human as the rest of us, confessing HER need for a Savior in Luke 1:47: “And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.”

Second, the Council of Constantinople did NOT actually condemn the teaching that Jesus ministered as a Spirit-anointed Man! It condemned Nestorianism, which was teaching that was attributed to a man named Nestorius. Regardless of whether Nestorius actually taught what he was accused of teaching, his name became associated with teaching that Jesus was manifested in two different parts, spirit and body. Thus, there would be four members of the “Trinity” – God, Jesus’ spirit, Jesus’ body and the Holy Spirit, because His body and spirit could act independently.

The objector assumed that teaching that Jesus ministered as an anointed Man is the condemned Nestorianism. In his eyes, if Jesus could not function as God while on the earth, His divine nature and His humanity must be separate from each other. However, that misses the point. Jesus never gave up His divinity. What He gave up was His right to exercise divine power that was not available to man while walking the earth. He was still God, but He COULD NOT do miracles at Nazareth because no other anointed human preacher would have been able to do them.

Objection: Teaching that Jesus Healed as an Anointed Man Is Heresy because It Denies His Deity

Objection: Isaiah Foretold that Jesus Would Heal SOME People, Not Everyone

According to this objection, Isaiah foretold the healings found in the four gospels during Jesus' ministry, but he did not foretell that Jesus would provide healing for everyone. This usually follows the argument that Isaiah 53:4 was fulfilled in Jesus' ministry, not at the cross; you can read the answer to that argument elsewhere in this book.

This objection is very easily dismissed for a couple of reasons.

First, Isaiah 53:4 tells us that surely (God is emphatic about this because He knew that there would be plenty of unbelief-ridden articles written against divine healing!) Jesus took OUR sicknesses and carried OUR pains. (If you still think that this means griefs and sorrows, as translated in the King James Version, click here.) Since He carried OUR sicknesses, Isaiah had to be talking about YOUR sicknesses too, not just the ones found in the four gospels.

Second, it does violence to the entire context to say that what Jesus did in Isaiah 53:4 was for a few when in Isaiah 53:5-6, what He did was clearly for EVERYONE. "But he was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."

Thank God, His bearing of our sicknesses and our pains was just as much for everyone as His bearing of our sins on the cross!

Objection: If Faith Healing Really Worked, Doctors and Hospitals Would No Longer Be Needed

I thank God for doctors and hospitals. I would be in hell right now if it weren't for them. I would almost certainly have died in the third grade from a strange illness, and I did not know Jesus back then.

The vast majority of Christians have no revelation of divine healing. Their only way to healing is through doctors and hospitals, at least until they find out the truth about what Jesus purchased for them. I would rather that they stay alive until they can come to a knowledge of the truth in this area.

I wonder how many others are like me, whose lives were saved by surgical procedures, who were able to stay around and come to know Jesus later on – and would be in hell if it weren't for modern medicine.

Having said that, the believer can receive healing directly from God because Jesus paid for it, without having to use a doctor, medicine or a hospital. However, if you are struggling in this area, I would be the first to tell you to get medical help. There is no shame in that. If you really believe and receive healing, a doctor can confirm it. (However, if you think that you have to go to the doctor to find out whether or not you are healed, you were never in faith to begin with. A person in faith can go to the doctor to confirm his healing, not to find out "if" he is healed.)

I used to preach somewhere where the hospitals were so bad, the people would go to Christian healing services to get healed as a matter of course. Even a secular bus tour guide told everyone that! Once a beautiful modern hospital was built, interest in such services waned, which was a crying shame. But at least there was a time that the people knew that they could get healed without doctors and hospitals. This is one drawback of modern medicine – it gives your flesh an easy way out that doesn't involve faith. People tend to be much more serious about the things of God in places where there is no alternative. Even in developed countries, some conditions are medically incurable. When things get to that point, people develop a much greater interest in receiving healing directly from God. Of course, it would be nice if they pursued the things of God with the same intensity before things got to that point.

We can see an example in Jesus' ministry. The Pool of Bethesda was a hospital of sorts. People were getting healed there. Jesus made no effort to shut it down. So we would not assume that Jesus would want to shut down modern hospitals just because healing is available through faith.

Objection: Only GOD Can Call Those Things that Be Not as though They WERE (Romans 4:17)

Romans 4:17:

(As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were.

First, notice that when God raised dead people, He used MEN to do it! So if MAN can quicken the dead, surely MAN can “call those things which be not as though they were” too. Elijah raised a dead person (1 Kings 17:17-24). Elisha raised a dead person (2 Kings 4:18-37) and even his bones raised another dead person (2 Kings 13:20-21). Paul raised a dead person (Acts 20:9-12). Peter raised a dead person (Acts 9:36-42). They did it with God’s help, obviously, but God did not act independently of man to accomplish these miracles. So the same sentence the objector uses says that God quickens the dead, but man accomplished these miracles through His power. It would be inconsistent to think that man could not also call those things which be not as though they were.

Second, the verse in question never says that ONLY GOD calls those things that be not as though they were. The objector is reading in something that isn’t there.

Third, God wants us to be imitators of Him, as dear children (Ephesians 5:1). (Followers in the King James Version is correctly translated imitators, as in the NKJV and most other translations. Being a follower is in the sense of doing what He does.) So if God calls those things that be not as though they were, we should be expected to do so as well as we imitate Him!

Fourth, God HAS told people to call things that be not as though they were! He changed Abram’s name to Abraham so that Abraham had to go around saying that he was the father of many nations when he had not yet had Isaac and become the father of ANY nation. Joshua, at God’s direction, told Israel, “Shout, for the LORD has given you the city” (Joshua 6:16) when the city’s impermeable walls were still standing and not one square inch of that city was yet in Israel’s possession. That should be sufficient proof to you that “calling those things that be not as though they were” is NOT a privilege reserved for God alone.

Objection: God Works All Things for Good (Romans 8:28); This Includes Sickness

The title of this objection is a misquotation of Romans 8:28. Did you notice that? The verse actually says, “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.” This verse does not say what almost everyone thinks it says. It does not say that God purposefully works bad things for our good. It says nothing at all about bad things. It says nothing about God’s direct involvement at all. Read the verse! Do you see anything there about bad things such as sickness? NO. Is God even mentioned in the verse? NO! Instead, this is a definite statement that things work together for good for us as believers. There is no mention that these “things” include sickness and other attacks.

What is really said here is that all things will work for you, not against you, if you love and serve God. It is a spiritual law. God’s direct involvement is not stated. This is similar to what God told Joshua (Joshua 1:7-8) – if he kept the Law, HE would make his OWN way prosperous. God didn’t say that He would make Joshua’s way prosperous. Keeping the Word makes you prosperous – it’s a spiritual law. God said that if you love Him, all things will work together for good for you. He didn’t say that HE would make them work together for good any more than He will “make” the law of lift work if you’re in an airplane. His spiritual laws always work.

“Yes,” someone will say, “but you’ve heard about the girl who dove into shallow water and broke her neck. She became a Christian after that incident. It was a bad incident, but that was an example of Romans 8:28 where God worked good out of a bad situation. If God works ALL things for good, He would surely work BAD things for good for her.”

But that person would be completely in error. Romans 8:28 did not apply AT ALL in that situation, and I can prove it. Romans 8:28 says that all things work together for good to those who love God. The girl who dove into the water did NOT love God. It doesn’t matter that she loved God later. She didn’t love God when it happened, so God was not working ANYTHING together for her good. What happened was that her head hit bottom (literally) and she realized that it would be better to serve God than not to serve Him.

There are many other testimonies from people who figuratively “hit bottom” and suddenly turned to God at breakneck speed. Many of these people say that GOD orchestrated their loss of their health and/or their businesses and/or their marriages to being them to Himself, but these testimonies are junk. The devil ate their lunches. God had nothing to do with their losses. I always wonder why anyone else would want to serve a God whom you testify to be a destroyer of health, businesses and marriages.

Besides, the Bible does not teach that God uses calamities to lead you to repentance. It DOES say that the GOODNESS of God leads men to repentance (Romans 2:4). People followed Jesus when they saw God’s goodness manifested through the healing of the sick. The healing of the sick should continue to lead people to Jesus today. If more people saw healings in front of their noses, perhaps fewer would have to “hit bottom” before realizing that life is better when you serve God.

God is not using sickness for your good. Satan is using it for your harm.

God can work good DESPITE bad situations, even though that is not the subject of Romans 8:28. But that does not mean that God deliberately uses bad things for your good as part of His plan. God can turn things around for His glory even if situations were not from Him to begin with. This is what He did with Joseph. Joseph was thrown into a pit and sold into slavery, then his brothers faked his death. That was ungodly, and God did NOT incite them to lie about Joseph. The incident got Joseph to Egypt, where he would be needed. Potiphar's wife framed Joseph. It got Joseph into prison, where he met someone who would give him access to Pharaoh. Joseph was in jail and someone who was supposed to help him forgot him. That wasn't good, either, but Joseph ended up delivering his family and being second in command in Egypt next to Pharaoh. The path of Joseph's life led to power in Egypt and the salvation of Israel, but that does not mean that all the things that happened to him were good, and it certainly doesn't mean that GOD prompted the bad actions. It means that God brought good OUT OF them. However, God could have orchestrated a way for Joseph to reach power in Egypt without bad things having to happen. One can just imagine Satan trying to do everything he could to snuff out Joseph's dream, but to no avail. But even though Joseph didn't have Romans 8:28 in his day, he WAS someone who loved God and had things work out for him.

I've heard the stories about people who got sick and went to the hospital and witnessed to someone. (There's even a whole objection reply devoted to that.) It doesn't mean that their sicknesses were good or that they were from God. It just means that God worked something good (which He always seeks to do) in a bad situation that he had nothing to do with setting up.

The objection can be extended to say that sickness is covered here because verse 26 says that the Spirit helps our infirmities and we groan. But if you insist on interpreting "infirmities" as illnesses, you have just come up with another good proof text for divine healing! It says that the Spirit helps our infirmities, not that He gives us our infirmities that get worked for our good. Actually, the word helps means take hold together with against. He helps us get rid of them. The groaning is a spiritual thing having to do with intercession. To say otherwise does violence to the meaning of the verse: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself [Himself] maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Really, in context, this verse is about the Holy Spirit helping us pray and certainly has nothing to do with God wanting us to be sick. Therefore, to claim sickness as a context for verse 28 is ludicrous.

Then, consider verse 29, where Paul says that we were predestined to be conformed to Christ's image. Jesus Christ was not sick until He took our sicknesses, so sickness cannot conform you to His image! The "for" at the beginning of the verse makes it a continuation of verse 28, so it makes no sense to claim that verse 28 could be talking about sickness.

Now let me ask you something. Do you honestly believe that dying prematurely in horrible agony can possibly be an example of all things working to your good? No way. That is an example of all things working to your bad. That is an example of not getting the victory in this life. Even the world is sensible enough not to think of that as something that worked to your good. Of course, not even sickness can rob the Christian of his ultimate victory over sickness. No Christian will ever be sick again after he dies! People in heaven do not get sick. People's redeemed bodies on the new earth will be sickness-proof! If you're a Christian, you win ultimately. However, you do not have to lose in this life. You are to receive the victory and always triumph in Christ (1 Corinthians 15:57, 2 Corinthians 2:14). Dying in terrible pain does not represent victory in this life. You get the final victory; you end up where the devil can't touch you and sickness can't touch you. You'll never suffer again. But you lived beneath your privileges in this life if some horrible illness takes you out.

Someone once cited Romans 8:28 as a proof text that terminal illness can be a gift from God. I kid you not! If dying prematurely is your idea of things working together for good, perhaps you should refer to the section on mental illnesses for help. No one but a religiously brainwashed Christian would ever consider it good to be taken from this world early, unable to do any further work for the Master. The only others who would think this was good would be the devil and his demons!

Yes, God can do good things in bad situations. He can do good things in good situations, too! He is always interested in doing good things. If you get sick and God does something good in the situation (like using you to lead a nurse to the Lord), it certainly does not prove that it was the will of God for you to be sick in the first place or that the sickness was in any way part of His plan for you. God's ONLY plan for sickness is healing it!

Objection: The Doctrine of Faith Healing Sends Many to Early Graves because They Don't Take Medicine When They Need It

Wrong. The doctrine of faith healing keeps people out of early graves! Lack of wisdom sends people to their graves prematurely. Failure to use common sense sends people to their graves prematurely. Nothing is wrong with the doctrine of faith healing or any other doctrine presented in the Bible.

Let your doctor tell you when you don't need to take your medicine anymore. You don't need to be afraid of going to the doctor. He can verify that you are healed. If you fear that he'll find out that you're not healed, you're not really in faith to begin with. It's pointless to fear going to the doctor. He is on God's side, after all, when it comes to your healing – he's for it. You just have to ignore any of his statements that nothing can be done, because you know a higher law than the physical laws on which earthly medicine is based.

You can't even stop taking medicine based on feelings. For example, if you have high blood pressure, you may not "feel" like you need to take medicine. You may have no good way of knowing whether or not if you need the medicine without medical evidence. You could stop taking the medication, feel fine for a while, and then have a heart attack because it turns out that you weren't in faith for your healing. If the doctor prescribed the medicine, let HIM un-prescribe the medicine when he sees that you are healed.

The fact is that people have died, saying that they were "in faith" (obviously, they were not) and therefore they would not take their medicine because "by Jesus' stripes, they were healed." The press loves to latch onto these cases and parade them to make sure that we all know how "evil" the doctrine of faith healing is. Now and then, a scare book or scare story comes out about parents who lost a child because they believed "faith teachers." This is supposed to make the rest of us avoid faith teaching and avoid believing in healing. These people never understood faith or healing in the first place. The proof is that they distorted the teachings they heard to say that "faith teachers" are against doctors, which good ones are not. The prominent faith teachers of our day are unanimous in their support of the use of doctors when necessary. If the people in the scare book were that careless in hearing what these teachers said about doctors, it should come as no surprise that they messed up what they heard on faith and healing.

Yeah, but what about the people who believe all the right things and die anyway? Paul talked about some such people in Corinth, and the Mistakes to Avoid section of this book shows that you can believe the right things about divine healing but not be healed for completely different reasons that have nothing to do with your healing doctrine.

Throwing your medicine away does absolutely nothing to promote your healing. You are either in faith or you are not. Throwing away medicine does not twist God's arm and make Him heal you. It does not necessarily honor Him, either. If you get healed, it will be because you believed God, not because you did or did not throw away your medicine.

I am aware that a famous faith preacher long ago told everyone it was a sin to go to a doctor. I do not share his disdain for doctors, though certainly at this writing he was involved in MANY more healing miracles than I have seen. I have his collected works, and in general they are a blessing. However, I cannot follow him in his doctrine that going to the doctor is anti-faith and therefore sin. Fortunately, his still-active ministry organization today does not share his hardline approach about medicine being sinful.

A related objection that didn't seem worthy of its own section because it's pretty much the same thing goes like this: "Some treatable people go to a healing meeting rather than to the doctor, and by the time they DO go to the doctor, it's too late and they die." The same kinds of comments above would apply.

If we could get it through to people that God has no problem at all with the act of going to a doctor, they would not do stupid things and die while learning faith. I hope that I have gotten that message through to you.

Objection: Some Children DIE because Their “Faith Healing Cult” Parents Deny Them Medical Care

Have you ever noticed that when a child dies because his parents were in a “faith healing cult” and would not take them to get the help they needed, the secular media goes wild with it and disseminates that story as far and wide as they can, but when God does notable miracles, the same news outlets refuse to even cover them? Some of them love anything that makes Christians (or people who claim to be) look bad.

I know what I’m talking about first-hand. When I pastored in Maine, the two local newspapers, owned by the same person who didn’t mind using his media clout to attack me publicly, refused to publish my press releases and healing event announcements or even letters to the editor in response to his attacks. He refused to print anything about the many miracles that were being done in the name of Jesus at my church. But he didn’t mind printing the obnoxious actions of a pseudo-Christian kook group! That’s just how the game is played in some places. It’s also why the world desperately needs Christian journalists!

The first thing you have to realize is that there are NON-Christian cults that do things like refuse blood transfusions or medical care in general. The press doesn’t make a distinction, but you should. The parents of children who died without medical help are often not involved in anything remotely mainstream in Christian circles, and often they aren’t even in Christian circles. But the press would love for you to think that they are all hyper-faith, hyper-whatever Christians so that you will stay away from anyone who believes in divine healing.

I don’t deny that the stories are true. There are bad apples in some bushels. They’ll cover an insignificant “church” (which may not even really be one) just because they do really stupid things publicly – they love to leave the impression that all Christians are like that. (Note: Speaking what the Bible says about sexuality and gender issues is NOT hateful in and of itself; it’s possible but not necessary to do it in a nasty way. When I did street ministry, homosexuals were just behind high schoolers as those MOST LIKELY to take my tracts even though I disapprove of their lifestyle. I disagreed with them but respected them as people on the street. Of course, if you say ANYTHING Biblical about their lifestyle, you will be tarred and feathered by some people as judgmental, intolerant, hateful and homophobic. But often, the ones with the tar and feathers aren’t even homosexuals; they’re just “sympathizers.” And by definition I’m not homophobic; if I FEARED homosexuals I wouldn’t have handed them so many tracts with the good news of what Jesus did for them in an area noted for its “gay community!” Nor would I have given anti-gay-marriage and anti-transgender-bathroom-“rights” speeches to 3- and 4-figure crowds. At least the homosexuals won’t be able to stand before God and say that no one ever told them that their lifestyle is a dead end, showed them the love of Jesus or shared the plan of salvation with them.)

The scare stories don't represent what I or any healing evangelists I know teach people to do. None of us ever tells people to stay away from doctors or medicine. We never encourage people to act the way the people in the sad news stories act. It was not a case of God letting them down, but their own foolishness that brought disaster on themselves. Perhaps they bought into the old-time teaching that it's a sin to even take an aspirin (quite a few of the old-time Pentecostals were like that, by the way). Unfortunately, they didn't get their hands on a book like this one in time to straighten out their thinking.

People who get good teaching on healing do not get involved in situations like this. If you want to "tough something out" by faith that is happening to YOU, you can, but don't impose that on your other family members who may not be where you are with such things. I've personally eschewed medical help at times and trusted God – successfully. But I knew what I believed and in whom I believed, and I have testimonies instead of sad, hyped failure stories. If you know that you're in over your head, get yourself to a doctor as soon as possible.

Even for me, I had never gotten any kind of medical care (even checkups) for over a quarter of a century, but one day I got a dangerous insect bite on a golf course (technically a gouge; horseflies gouge instead of bite) that carried some kind of really bad infection. My face swelled up and my eyes were almost swollen shut. I believed God – and then went to a clinic and got antibiotics – and I took them faithfully for as long as I was supposed to! I wasn't going to play games with something like that. I don't mind admitting that to you in this book – I want to admit it to you to drive home the point that when you know you need care, you get it. In your heart, you know when you need it. As I heard one prominent faith preacher say, I didn't want it written on my tombstone that I died proving my doctrine! I don't want to give the secular media another tragedy story to circulate that makes faith preachers and faith churches look bad.

Objection: The Doctrine of Faith Healing Sends Many to Early Graves because They Don't Take Medicine When They Need It

Objection: God Is in Control

This is a favorite catch-phrase in Christian circles that is often used to offer false comfort to the afflicted. It applies in certain GENERAL areas like the ultimate fate of the earth, the devil, saints and sinners. However, it is NOT true of specifics in our lives, much as we wish that it were or how much we tell each other or sing to each other that it is.

God CAN be in control in your life, but only if you willingly yield to His control and believe and speak His Word. He will never force His control on anyone, even believers. His will is always good, but He does not force anyone to walk in His good will. God is in control of your life to the extent that you allow Him to be.

If GOD were really in control, there would be no wars, no abortions, no racism, no false religions, no divorces, no cross-dressing, no false apostles, in fact, no sin at all for that matter, to say nothing of no sickness and no bookstores full of anti-healing books. These things on the earth are all proof that God is NOT in control of this planet! If you look at heaven where He is in exclusive control, there is nothing on the above list. So God is NOT in control here.

Well, if He isn't, who is? The devil is called the "god of this world" but that really only refers to his worldly system of doing things. If Satan were literally in control of the earth, there would be no prayer meetings, churches, salvations or any other righteous activity!

This leaves the one possibility that is explicitly stated in Scripture.

Psalm 115:16:

The heaven, even the heavens, are the LORD'S: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

MANKIND is in charge of the earth! God gave MAN dominion over everything on the earth. He has never rescinded that dominion, even after MAN willingly disobeyed God and allowed the devil to have access to the earth.

I realize that you might not have a Top 40 Christian hit on your hands if you put out a new song, "MAN Is in Control," but you'd at least be right while you were unpopular!

So it is just plain foolish to assert that God is in control. He isn't!

Death and life are in the power of your tongue (Proverbs 18:21). In fact, whether you go to heaven or hell is not up to what God says – it's up to what YOU say (or don't say)! Do you confess the risen Jesus as Lord or don't you? God doesn't control your choice in that matter – you do. God will honor your choice, not control it. If you don't want Jesus, you get eternity without Jesus. If you want Jesus, you get eternity with Jesus. Everyone gets what he chooses, not what GOD chooses for him. The same is true in others areas of life.

You are more in control than you realize with the words of your mouth. You can set the course of nature on fire in your life (James 3:6), or you can bring health and healing to your life. God has given you the free will to speak as YOU wish, but you will bear the consequences of your words. Your words can bring healing or sickness your way.

Unfortunately, most Christians are taught that God is in control, and the inevitable follow-up to this is that if a Christian is sick, he supposedly should just realize that God is in control of his health and everything else. Whatever will be, will be, as that stupid and unbiblical old song says.

When Jesus had His way, the multitudes were healed. You don't EVEN ONCE see Jesus saying to anyone, "Now remember, God is in control. Accept whatever happens as His perfect will" and then walking away leaving the person sick. When God has His way, the sick are healed, but He needs man's cooperation because this is man's planet. Likewise, when God has His way, sinners are saved, but He needs man's cooperation. He always leaves salvation up to the individual's free will.

MAN is in control of whether or not He receives the healing that Jesus has already provided. God does not control that. If He did, He would be a favorites-player, a "respector of persons." We all know that some people receive healing and some don't, just as some people receive the new birth and some don't. If that were all up to God, God would be horribly unfair to allow one person's body under His control to be healed and another person's body under His control to stay sick.

"Yes," someone might object, "but we can't control our bodies!" Paul didn't think that; he said that he kept his body under subjection (control) just as all of us should (1 Corinthians 9:27). Our bodies are unspiritual, not born again, so we must keep them from just acting on natural information, which is all our bodies know how to do. And James told us that if we can control our tongues, we CAN control our entire bodies (James 3:2). So don't lie and say that we can't.

So the next time you hear someone say, "Well, I guess you have to remember that God is in control" as if God were in control of your healing, the first thing you should think to yourself is, "No, that's wrong. MAN is in control because God PUT man in control of the earth. The earth He has given to the children of men. God is no more in control of my healing than He was in control over when I got saved."

The only time that God will be "in control" of your healing is when you speak in agreement with His Word and believe that you receive your healing when you pray, or use one of the many other means that He has provided in Scripture to be healed.

Objection: Jesus Now Has ALL Authority, So If Satan Afflicts You, He Has to Get Jesus' Permission First

Objection: Jesus Now Has ALL Authority, So if Satan Afflicts You, He Has to Get Jesus' Permission First

This is a variant of the God Is in Control fallacy covered elsewhere, but this time it is Jesus who is supposedly “in control.” On the surface, the argument seems reasonable – if Jesus has control over everything, He must control the devil and therefore He must control what the devil is allowed to do so you.

The objection simply misses the point that there is a difference between authority and control. Jesus has all AUTHORITY, but He does not have all CONTROL. If He did, no one would ever sin and Satan would never get away with anything! Neither God nor Jesus CONTROLS anyone else in the sense of forcing people or angels to do what He wants. We all have free will.

Say for example that a street downtown is closed to vehicular traffic. Now an Islamic jihadist, intent on obeying the Quran’s mandate to kill infidels, barrels toward that street in a giant truck. A policeman sees him coming and orders him to stop, but he runs over the policeman and proceeds to run over many pedestrians as he barrels up the street while praising his false God. (Sorry, one-world-religion fans, but the nonexistent “Allah” is definitely NOT the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ by a different name.) That policeman had the AUTHORITY to stop the truck, but he obviously could not CONTROL the truck. The truck driver had the ability to disobey the authority, and he did. Now when he is brought to justice, he will pay a high price for his crime because the AUTHORITIES will apprehend him and sentence him. Even the real God did not CONTROL that truck and stop the terrorist act. God is not in control of the earth – man is.

The authorities had a rule, but they did not control whether people broke it. Think about it for a minute – if everyone were FORCED to do the right things, there would be no need for rules or authorities!

Jesus has authority over everything, but people can choose not to submit to His authority. They too will be sentenced and pay a high price for choosing not to submit to His authority.

Now you might wonder, “If people can willfully choose not to obey authority, can’t Satan and his demons refuse to honor Jesus’ name (representing His authority) and not leave when ordered to do so?” The answer is no. A man invoking Jesus’ authority has the right to run them off. They have no ABILITY to stay because Jesus backs His name when believers use it. These beings are no match for the Lord Jesus Christ. What I want you to see here is that YOU have to do the apprehending – that is not God’s job under the New Covenant. He already put Satan under your feet, but you have to enforce that in your own life. WE are the “authorities” under the New Covenant. We have the keys to the kingdom. If we don’t use them, God will not use them for us.

Satan is still allowed to be on the earth during this period of time. However, everything he does is contrary to Jesus' authority and is therefore illegal. God does not CONTROL Satan because Satan can still roam around seeking whom he may devour. However, a believer can "apprehend" him in the name of Jesus and force him to cease and desist his ILLEGAL activity in his own life. A believer who knows his rights in Christ is one of those whom Satan may NOT devour.

YOU are responsible for resisting the devil (James 4:7, 1 Peter 5:8) in your own life. YOU need to force him to bow his knee at the name of Jesus. It is at Jesus' NAME that every knee must bow – they bow to His NAME, not to Jesus in person (Philippians 2:9-11). You run him off in the name of Jesus. God will not do that for you. Satan has no LEGAL RIGHT to afflict you, but he will try to do it anyway. YOU must make him stop using your authority in Christ. Satan cannot buck that authority when you use it.

Jesus clearly came to DESTROY the devil's works (1 John 3:8), not to give "steal, kill and destroy permits" to the devil so that he can afflict people. You can be CERTAIN that any sickness that comes your way is ILLEGAL and does NOT have Jesus' permission to be in your body. ANY attack of Satan against you is UNAUTHORIZED and is therefore subject to "arrest" in the name of Jesus – but you have to make the arrest. Jesus doesn't do it for you. If anything is from the devil (in other words, it steals, kills and destroys), you know that Jesus did NOT authorize Satan to do it. However, Jesus does not exercise authority over the devil on the earth – He delegated that task to believers, so YOU must do it.

That is why so few Christians are successful in running the devil off – they keep praying for GOD to do something about the devil, which He already did. They don't realize that Jesus put the devil under their feet and that they can trample him themselves.

Even we do not CONTROL the devil on the earth in general. If someone wants to serve the devil, we can't force him to stop doing it, and we can't force the devil to stop letting that person serve him. The CONTROL we have is in our own lives because we are redeemed. To see Satan's control ended in someone else's life, that person must submit his life to Jesus and thus be taken out of the kingdom of darkness himself. We can grant some relief by taking authority over sicknesses in other people's bodies, but only if we get their permission first. We still can't bring someone completely out of the kingdom of darkness – only Jesus does that when someone receives Him.

Jesus' ministry shows what HE thinks of the works of the devil – His only interest is in getting rid of those works, not "authorizing" them so that men can be miserable.

Objection: God Has Satan on a Leash and Only Permits Him to Do Certain Things to You

Objection: God Has Satan on a Leash and Only Permits Him to Do Certain Things to You

To hear some talk, they think that there is a new spiritual company, GodSatanCo, and that God and Satan have now become partners to bring about personal growth in your life. To put it bluntly, this objection could be stated simply as “God Uses Satan.”

According to this line of thinking, Satan is only allowed to do the things to you that God decides to let him do, but he is barred from doing anything more drastic. In others words, your Heavenly Father sets the suffering level that is just right for you so that you grow the most.

This is just another religious hogwash argument that deceives people into accepting the works of Satan in their lives, because they think that whatever Satan is doing, he’s on God’s leash and so God “let” him do it.

Will you tell the relatives of someone who was cut down in the prime of life by cancer or one of Satan’s other inventions that God explicitly gave Satan permission to kill that loved one? This “leash” thinking would indicate that if God “allowed” Satan to do it, it was OK with Him for some unknown reason. So what exactly would be the limit on what God allows Satan to do? Satan gets wars going so that sometimes millions of people die. How long do you think that leash is?

The real God has never partnered with Satan since he fell. Satan is the “enemy” and the “adversary,” not God’s “partner” or “instrument.” Satan is here because Adam admitted him to the planet. He has had the right to be here ever since. It is NOT because God approves of what Satan does or that He wants to “use” what Satan does. God gave the earth to man. When man allowed Satan in, God had to honor that choice.

The real Jesus has no use for Satan and his works. He went around doing good, healing those whom Satan oppressed (Acts 10:38). He was manifested to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8). Rather than accepting the works of the devil as something that God was OK with because Satan was on a leash, Jesus went around undoing what Satan had done. He said that a certain child of Abraham “ought to be” loosed from the bondage that a Satan-sent “spirit of infirmity” had caused (Luke 13:11-16). You are a child of Abraham too (Galatians 3:7, Galatians 3:29), so you “ought to be” loosed from Satan’s bondage too! How can God and Satan be working together when everything Jesus did was about releasing people from Satan’s dominion and his evil works?

What about Job? Can you point to ANYTHING good that resulted in Job’s life from what Satan did to him? Was all of that torment designed to build Job up and make him mighty in God? It certainly didn’t have that effect. The longer Job suffered, the farther he got off the mark, railing at God for things that God didn’t do. And the longer people today are sick, the crankier and more miserable they tend to get. There is no benefit.

Besides, Satan has already proved his track record of DISOBEYING the will of God. Why would God entrust ANY part of His work in His Church to an unreliable renegade? Scripture warns us about depending upon unreliable people (Proverbs 25:19: "Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint."). God would be ignoring His own counsel if he partnered with an unreliable fallen angel.

If God were using Satan to build you up, He would owe Satan a reward throughout eternity, not punishment. The fact that the devil will be tormented day and night in the lake of fire shows that God will punish him for what he did to us. This proves that Satan did nothing but sin against God rather than partner with Him. All his deeds are acts of rebellion against God's divine purpose, not cooperation with God's divine purpose.

"Yes," someone might say, "but if God didn't have Satan on a leash, he could just do anything he wanted. He could rob, destroy and kill everyone. So OBVIOUSLY there has to be a divine leash." But this is not a leash that varies from person to person at God's supposed whim. God Himself is on a leash the way Satan is because God gave MAN control of the earth. Neither God nor Satan has the right to just barge into the earth and do things without man's permission. So did YOU give Satan permission to move on the earth by giving you a sickness? If not, his actions are ILLEGAL and you can stop him in his tracks. YOU are the one who is supposed to put him on a leash, not God! On this fallen earth, "the god of this world" has the right to TRY to tempt you to sin and TRY to make you sick. And YOU have the right to stop him!

So now you might wonder, if man had this authority all along, why couldn't Old Testament people, particularly Job, just run him off and stop his works? Man did not have a covenant with God that allowed him to do that. We do have such a covenant. Actually, Adam had the ability to run the devil off before he fell, but he failed to use his authority. After he fell, he was in the same fallen "sin condition" as Satan. Man lost his ability to engage Satan and win until our new and better covenant was inaugurated by Jesus' blood.

Satan is the one who wants to keep YOU on a leash, but you can break all his leashes through your authority in Christ! Rather than having to obey him, he now has to obey YOU! The introduction of the New Covenant changed everything.

Objection: Jesus Redeemed Us from Disease, But the Fulfillment of That Won't Come until We Get Glorified Bodies

An alternate wording of this objection is, "Healing Is Provided in the Atonement but Guaranteed Only in the Resurrection." This has become a cliché in some circles. Actually, it's a backpedaling statement made by churches whose founders believed that healing is provided in the atonement, but whose current leaders aren't so sure. Wording it this way lets them continue to stick with the LETTER of the church's original statement of faith while actually turning it into a statement of unbelief.

At least the objector admits that Jesus did redeem us from disease, which is clear to everyone who checks out the Hebrew in Isaiah 53:4. What should also be clear to anyone who reads Isaiah 53 is that Jesus bore our diseases in our place as our Substitute. Surely He has borne our sicknesses and carried our pains. You won't be able to have sicknesses or pains in your glorified body. There will be no diseases that He could take away from you then. The only time you can experience "your sicknesses" and "your pains" is in this present life! These, then, are the very sicknesses and pains that Jesus bore in our place as our Substitute. Redemption from sickness will be unnecessary in heaven because no one in heaven ever gets sick! There are no sicknesses or pains there. It is only in THIS LIFE that we need this redemption.

It is clear from Matthew 8:16-17 that the present-day healing of the sick is what fulfills Isaiah's prophecy of healing, not our future healing. If this redemption were only for the future, there would be no way the multitudes could have received healing from Jesus Christ in their lifetimes. It is obvious that multitudes were healed during their own earthly life-spans.

The fact that healing is a present-day ordinance in James 5:14-16 should serve as proof that healing is for this life, not just the next one. Actually, there are many, many other promises cited in this book that are meaningless if healing is relegated to heaven.

We are redeemed from sin and the punishment for it in this life, so there is no reason to think that God would require us to bear any part of the punishment for sin, including sickness. You cannot separate healing and forgiveness, as is made clear elsewhere in this book.

Walking in divine health is like living victoriously over the flesh. Your FINAL victory over the flesh will coincide with your FINAL victory over sickness – when you get a new, immortal body. In this life, I don't know anyone who always walks in victory over the flesh, but that doesn't mean that Paul lied when he wrote to the Romans that we are not debtors to the flesh to do after the flesh (Romans 8:12). We don't have to ever do a single work of the flesh for the rest of our lives. We have the victory NOW. "Sin shall have no dominion over you" (Romans 6:14) is a promise for now, not later. (There will be no sin that could have dominion over you in heaven!) We can always overcome sin. Likewise, we can always overcome sickness because we are healed by the stripes of Jesus (1 Peter 2:24). Many people will not enjoy the victory in this life even though it was provided in Christ. It may be that all of us fall short of what we could have in both the areas of sin and sickness. But this does not prove that we cannot walk in the Spirit and walk in health now. God says that we can do both.

Objection: Our Bodies Are Not Yet Redeemed, So We Are Still Subject to Sickness

Objection: God's Kingdom Is "Already But Not Now" – What We Will Be Has Not Appeared \(1 John 3:2\) and Our Lowly Bodies Have Not Been Transformed \(Philippians 3:20-21\)

Objection: Our Bodies are Not Yet Redeemed, So We Are Still Subject to Sickness

We are still “subject” to sin only in the sense that it is possible for us to sin. We are still “subject” to sickness only in the sense that it is possible for us to get sick. Neither will be possible when we receive our glorified bodies, but neither has to be the case today, either. Sin is not to rule us, and sickness, which is also a work of the devil, has no right to be in us.

Paul said that Jesus purchased your body in 1 Corinthians 6:19-20. He said that your body was a member of Christ in 1 Corinthians 6:15. Your body is still mortal (subject to death), and it is subject to sickness in the sense that you can get sick, but you don't have to stay sick. You are redeemed from the curse of the law (Galatians 3:13), which includes every sickness and every disease (Deuteronomy 28:61).

But doesn't Romans 8:23 say that we are waiting for the redemption of our bodies? (This is a favorite verse for the anti-healing crowd.) Not when you read it in context! The context is that the creation will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. This is not a current event, but a future one, where our bodies will be changed from mortal to immortal. This “redemption” of the body is a completely separate event from the purchase of your existing mortal body by the blood of Jesus, as proved by 1 Corinthians 6:19-20. The Holy Spirit will quicken (give life to) your mortal body throughout this life (Romans 8:11). You will get an immortal body after that in the time spoken of by this passage in Romans.

In case there are any doubts in your mind about Romans 8:23, let's dissect the verse itself.

Romans 8:23:

“And not only they [the whole creation], but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves...”

Are we groaning because we need the latest 12-hour relief pills? No, read this in context with Romans 8:26, where the Spirit intercedes for us with groanings that cannot be uttered. This is referring to praying in the Spirit, not to being sick. Groaning is also referred to as something all creation does in verse 22, and all creation is certainly not sick! The Holy Spirit helps your infirmities; He doesn't give you infirmities! We groan because we want to have our bodies changed into immortal ones so that we can get on with our eternal lives with our new bodies. This is our hope that we wait for with patience (verses 24-25).

Here is the entire passage:

Romans 8:22-26:

For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself [Himself] maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

Romans 8:23 actually states a plain case for physical healing. Paul said that we have the “firstfruits” of the Spirit. We don’t have everything we’ll have in heaven, but we have the firstfruits, a down payment, of what we will have. “Firstfruits” in Scripture are the beginning of a larger collection, and are made up of the same substance as the larger collection. (For example, we are told to honor God with the firstfruits of our substance. That is part of our money, which is a subset of all our money.) So Paul says clearly that while we don’t have everything we’re going to have later, we have a sample now of what we’re going to have later, through the Spirit.

When we receive new bodies, healing will be unnecessary because we will never be sick. We will be in eternal good health. However, we can enjoy the “firstfruits” of our salvation on this earth and receive healing when we are sick. The Spirit Himself is the down payment of what we will have eternally, even though our mortal bodies will never be like the glorified ones we will get in the future.

There is a future redemption not only for our bodies, but for all of creation in the context of this verse. If you look back in verse 18, Paul says, “For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.” The glory will not be revealed in us at the present time – that will be in the future. In verse 21, we read, “Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.” Creation will have a new glory then, too.

You current flesh-and-blood mortal body would not be able to handle eternity in heaven. But your body will be changed: “In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.” (That’s 1 Corinthians 15:52-53.) Paul taught that the day is coming when we will get new immortal, spiritual bodies to replace our current fleshly unrighteous bodies. Your spirit is born again, but your body is not. It is the same as it was before, though fortunately God has promised to impart His life (zoe) into your mortal body – so you can still be healed now – a glorious fact Paul brought up only 12 verses earlier (Romans 8:11)!. Paul taught that as we bear the image of the man of dust (Adam), we SHALL bear the image of the heavenly Man (1 Corinthians 15:49). THAT is what Paul means when he refers to the redemption of our bodies in the future. He did not teach that you just have to suffer everything out until Jesus returns. If he believed and taught that, he would not have gotten EVERYONE who was sick on an island in Acts 28:8-9 healed! (See the Paul’s Thorn objection reply for other healings that Paul did.)

After Jesus rose from the dead, He could teleport Himself at will while still being able to eat in front of people. When you think about it, the angel did not have to roll the stone away to let Jesus out of the tomb – He could have gotten out of there with the sealed stone still intact, and He probably did. The stone was rolled away to reveal to MAN that the tomb was empty. We do not have bodies like that yet, because they are not “redeemed” – but the day will come when we have a body like the one Jesus has and we can do the kinds of things we saw on I Dream of Jeannie and Star Trek in real life. When our bodies are redeemed, we will no longer have unspiritual, unrighteous bodies that operate solely according to sense knowledge. We will never have to “put the flesh under” again because we won’t have “flesh” (an unrighteous body) anymore!

The fact that your body has been BOUGHT shows that it HAS been redeemed in one sense already, as Jesus has paid a price for the privilege of owning your body, of which you are now the steward but not the owner. But the full redemption, when you get a glorified body, will not happen until Jesus returns.

The fact that we now have the “firstfruits” of our eternal reward points toward, not away from, the fact that we can have physical healing now.

“Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.”

Here, the adoption is equivalent to the redemption of our body. If you follow the objector’s logic, you might conclude that we do not have the Spirit of adoption yet, but we have to wait for it. Of course, verse 15 of the same chapter just said that we had received the Spirit of adoption. (“For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.”) The fact that there is a certain adoption we are waiting for does not mean that we are not adopted as God’s children now. The fact that there is a redemption for which we wait does not mean that we are not redeemed from sickness now.

Romans 8:23 clearly refers to the change of our bodies from mortality to immortality, so it cannot be used to disprove our redemption from sickness. This verse does not mention sickness. You will have a body that cannot get sick in the future, but that does not prove that the body that you have now needs to be sick – Romans 8:11 refers to this lifetime!

You will have to wait for the “redemption” of your body referred to in Romans 8:23. You do not have to wait at all to receive the healing of your mortal body. The fact that you have to live in a mortal body for now does not mean that you have to live in a sick one! Jesus destroyed sickness, a work of the devil, in people’s mortal bodies, and He continues to do so today. Jesus’ ministry made it abundantly clear that we do NOT have to wait for the ultimate redemption of creation to receive healing – the people He healed didn’t have to wait, did they? If He didn’t make them wait, then Jesus, who never changes, will not make you wait either.

Objection: God's Kingdom Is "Already but Not Now" – What We Will Be Has Not Appeared (1 John 3:2) and Our Lowly Bodies Have Not Been Transformed (Philippians 3:20-21)

Denominational preachers seem to love to harp on this thing about the Kingdom being "already but not now." However, this saying isn't true. The Kingdom is ALREADY! The Kingdom of God is Here NOW.

There are some future events for which we must wait, such as receiving new immortal bodies. I'm not questioning that. I look forward to the day when we will never deal with Satan, sin, the flesh or the ungodly world system again. But Jesus told His followers to go out and preach that the kingdom was visiting them THEN, not at some distant point in the future that they had to wait for. We should be proclaiming the same thing.

Jesus said that there were some standing there hearing Him who would not die before they saw the kingdom come in power (Mark 9:1). Since they are all gone now, what did they see? I believe they saw the Holy Spirit come and inaugurate the Church Age, infusing the Church with power in Acts 2. I realize that respected Bible commentators have instead tied Jesus' prophecy with the transfiguration on the mount that followed soon after He said this. (This is consistent in Matthew's version and Luke's version.) If you believe that, you're welcome to do so, as that doesn't detract one iota from my response to this objection. The transfiguration already happened, which would ALSO mean that the Kingdom of God has already come! I just consider it a little dubious that Jesus would say that "some" there would see the Kingdom come if "some" meant only 3 people. I also consider it dubious that what happened on the mount of transfiguration one day represented the promised coming of the kingdom with power. I don't notice any "power shift" in the scheme of things after that particular event. I suppose that we're all entitled to our opinions on the nonessentials.

OK, but what about the objector's verses?

1 John 3:2:

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

Philippians 3:20-21:

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

These speak of a COMING day when we will get new bodies that are like Jesus' resurrected bodies. However, Jesus did NOT teach that this was a prerequisite for what He considered the coming of the kingdom. There are many other future events to come prophesied by Daniel, Ezekiel, John and others. But they don't all have to be fulfilled for what Jesus said in Mark 9:1 to be true. If it were a matter of theological opinions between believers, we could have long arguments, but I don't think I'd want to be the one to stand up and call Jesus a liar or claim that His prophecy about the kingdom coming then was false.

The curse that Christ redeemed us from was "temporal" – different kinds of woes that pertain to this life. Such challenges will never even exist in heaven or on the new earth in which righteousness dwells. We won't need healing after we're with the Lord! Our redemption from sickness, poverty, mental anguish and everything else in the law's curse applies to THIS life. We can stand on God's Word on the matter and refuse to allow the devil to visit upon us anything that is inconsistent with our redemption.

While it would be nice to have immortal bodies that can't get sick, we can't enjoy that privilege yet, but we CAN enjoy the firstfruits of that day by receiving healing for our MORTAL bodies today. Contrary to what the objector said, we DON'T have to wait for the Kingdom to come – it's here. Jesus announced His kingdom and healing followed His announcement. Because the same Kingdom Jesus operated in is here now, we should expect healing to continue until we decide to go home or get new bodies that don't need healing.

Objection: If We Are Subject to Death, We Are Subject to Sickness

This argument is usually stated something like this: “Death comes by sickness; therefore, since you are subject to death, you have to be subject to sickness. Otherwise you would never die. You die from sickness. If you’re subject to dying of a sickness, you must be subject to sickness in general. Physical death came into the world by sin. Therefore, sin has made your body subject to sickness.”

Jesus did not prevent anyone from having to die eventually. He did remove sickness from people. Because He has not changed, we should expect today that He will not prevent anyone from having to die eventually, but He will remove sickness from people. In other words, you are subject to death, but you do NOT have to be subject to sickness. In fact, Jesus said quite the opposite in Luke 10:19, where He said that He gives you power over all the power of the enemy, which includes sickness. We know that sickness is part of the power of the devil, because Jesus went around healing all those who were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38).

The false notion that you must die from an illness is covered in another objection answer. This objection goes a different direction. Sin is linked to death. This seems obvious because Romans 5:12 plainly states it: “Wherefore, as by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.” The problem occurs if you stop reading right there and miss the conclusion that Paul makes. Romans 5 goes on to talk about Christ giving us a free gift that is superior to this law that is in the earth. Romans 5:17: “For if by one man’s offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.” Romans 5:21: “That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.”

Paul’s point is not that we are subject to sickness because of death passing upon sinners. Actually, Paul said the opposite – that Christ has set us free from sickness, as you could hardly “reign in life” in a sickbed. No one else would think that you were reigning in life while you’re in a sickbed.

Paul goes on to say that sin shall have no dominion over us (Romans 6:14). There is such a thing as the law of sin and death at work in the earth today, but we are free from it. Romans 8:2: “For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.” Also, notice the work of the Holy Spirit in our mortal bodies: “But if the Spirit of him that raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken [make alive] your mortal [subject to death] bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you” (Romans 8:11).

So although we are subject to death, we are promised the Holy Spirit’s quickening power in our bodies as long as we are on this earth. Christ set us free from “the law of sin and death” that would otherwise make us subject to sickness of every kind.

We all have to die so that the mortal can put on immortality. You would not want to live forever on this earth in its current condition, anyway. There is an inward groaning in the believer, a desire to put on the new spiritual body that will not be subject to death. We are not redeemed from dying. But nowhere does God say that we must die from an illness. Go ahead and look for a Scripture that says that we must get sick before we die. There isn't any. That is just natural human reasoning apart from the Word of God. Jesus healed every manner of disease among the people, which by necessity must include "terminal" ones that would otherwise have caused death. It is possible to "give up the ghost" when you are ready, as some people in the Bible did. I suppose that there will always be some "medical" reason why you die, even if you do just decide to go home to be with the Lord. Your heart will obviously stop beating, and that may be ruled the "cause of death." There is probably no box on any form for the person who just decided to go home to be with Jesus and had nothing medically wrong with his body.

There is no age limitation on the health wish in 3 John 2. Peter did not say that you "were healed" until you got to a certain age, after which that doesn't apply to you anymore. Jesus carried OUR sicknesses and OUR diseases, and OUR diseases means YOUR diseases as long as you live on this earth. God is still "The Lord who Heals You" (Exodus 15:26) and the One who "forgives all your sins and heals all your diseases" (Psalm 103:3) and stops any plague from coming nigh your dwelling (Psalm 91:10). God's Word has no expiration date!

Another argument is the practical one, "We all do get sick, you know!" Well, we all sin, too, even though sin should have no dominion over us (Romans 6:14). So no one has proved anything with that argument. For an exception to both cases, consider Jesus Christ. He was made fully human. He could have chosen to sin, but He didn't. (There would be no point in the devil tempting Him to sin if He could not have done so.) Jesus lived His entire life as a human being without sinning. Therefore, it is possible for a human being to not sin, especially when the One who never sinned once in His life lives inside us. Jesus also lived His entire life without being physically sick (except when He carried OUR diseases at the end). Therefore, it is possible for a human being to live sickness-free in this life, especially when the One who was never sick lives inside us.

Jesus never sinned, so He lived above "the law of sin and death" until He took our sins upon Himself. He then ransomed us from that principle. Sickness and sin go together. When sin is forgiven, healing is the natural result. Our sins are forgiven, so we should walk in health.

Objection: Because We Are Still Capable of Sinning, We Must Be Subject to Sickness, an Effect of Sin

This argument can be extended as follows: “Because we are still capable of sinning, we must be subject to going to hell, an effect of sin.” As you can see, this objection misses the whole point of redemption! Jesus redeemed us from the punishment for our sins! While it is possible to get sick, we are redeemed from sickness and we can run it off in the name of Jesus.

Sin definitely DOES lead to sickness, so repentance is in order if you are engaged in sin. However, Jesus did not demand that people repent of every sin they could think of before He healed them. His mercy spares us what we deserve if we turn to Him.

However, unrepentant sin can just lead to more sickness from which you’ll need to be healed. For example, homosexuals reap in their body the due punishment for their error (Romans 1:26-27). So if you receive healing but don’t repent for practicing homosexual perversion, you will just end up needing healing again. Jesus warned the man whom He healed at the Pool of Bethesda to sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon him (John 5:14)! Paul warned the Corinthians to quit sinning against each other at the communion table lest they get sick and die prematurely (1 Corinthians 11:27-32). Getting healed would be of little use to someone there who was going to just keep on defrauding his brothers in Christ – the person would just get sick again and possibly just drop dead.

So we can see from the examples above that sin certainly CAN lead to more sickness! However, sin does not have to dominate a Christian (Romans 6:14). Sin still carries a price tag, but we can rule over sin and stop practicing it, and meanwhile, receive healing from Jesus for whatever mess our sin got us into.

Objection: Pain Will Not Be Done Away with until Heaven (Revelation 21:4)

This is another case of a correct statement coupled with a wrong conclusion.

It is certainly true that there will never be a time in this earthly life when there will be no pain. There is no statement in Scripture that pain will stop until Revelation 21:4.

However, that is not proof that WE have to have pain until we go to heaven! Jesus BORE our pains (Isaiah 53:4) as our substitute to relieve us of having to bear them in this life. Did you notice that this bold declaration is the only one in Isaiah 53 preceded by the word “surely?” Now the whole Word is surely true, but it as if God were making a special point of singling out the fact that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains. Maybe He knew how few people would actually believe it. (Isaiah also wondered who believed the report about Him! I hope that YOU are one of the ones who do.)

Jesus certainly didn't agree with the objector that pain relief had to wait for heaven, because He healed all kinds of painful ailments rather than telling people they'd have to wait until they get to heaven. We don't have to wait until we all get to heaven to sing and shout the victory – I'm going to do it in this life, even if others never know the victory that they could be enjoying in Christ.

The premise that WE have to be stuck in our pains because pain is only gone forever in heaven does not make sense when you think about it, because based on that same logic, I could “prove” to you that you have to be a slave of sin until Jesus returns:

“SIN will not be done away with until we get to heaven and then go to a new earth in which righteousness dwells. There will never be a time in this earthly life when there will be no sin. There is no statement that sin will stop until the end of the book of Revelation. Therefore, YOU have to be stuck being a slave of sin until then!”

Let's be consistent. If you admit that the logic is fallacious when it comes to sin, you should admit that it is equally fallacious when it comes to sickness.

Although OTHERS may be slaves of sin, Paul made it clear that the believer is not – even though there will be others who are until Jesus returns. Although OTHERS may be stuck with pain, Paul made it clear that the believer is not – you are redeemed from the law's curse and every sickness known to mankind. The fact that SOME will be somehow burdened does not prove that the redeemed, victorious Church must be burdened along with the unbelievers.

Objection: Ecclesiastes 12:1 Proves that You Should Expect to Get Sicker as You Age

Ecclesiastes 12:1:

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them;

The famous objector believed that this verse proves that you should deteriorate as you age (as he did). But are the “evil days” that you “have no pleasure in” old age that includes sickness? A quick check of the context shows otherwise. Here are the next verses:

Ecclesiastes 12:2-7:

While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain:

In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened, And the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of musick shall be brought low;

Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets:

Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

Is there ANYTHING in the obvious context of this passage that indicates that it refers to being sick in old age? NO! That is not at all what Solomon talked about in this passage.

Besides, if this verse meant that you have to be decrepit in old age, it would contradict Psalm 92:13-14.

Don't Get Sick When You Get Old

Objection: Bodily Suffering Helps You Avoid Sin (1 Peter 4:1)

1 Peter 4:1-2:

Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

(The verse the objector cited reads substantially the same in all translations, so there is no language misunderstanding issue here.)

The point made in this verse does not negate divine healing. Peter, whose shadow fell on people and healed them in Jerusalem (Acts 5:12-16), who said himself that by Jesus' stripes you WERE healed earlier in this same letter (1 Peter 2:24), certainly did not negate the doctrine of divine healing by saying that you should be sick because it's good for you because it'll help you not sin. Trivially that's true; if you're laid up in bed with a 103-degree fever, it will be harder for you to visit the bar, the brothel, the "mature" video store (which actually caters solely to the immature) or even the chain carnality café that tempts carnal men to stare at the girls' figures rather than the food (or their wives, which is where their eyes belong).

No, you should go through the entire book of First Peter and notice that the theme throughout the book is suffering for the sake of the gospel, not suffering because you got some "bug" that used to be in a bird or a pig somewhere. There is no reason to believe that Peter has changed gears here. Thus, the suffering in the flesh that he is describing must be persecution-related, not illness-related.

I have not been beaten at this writing for preaching the gospel; I've only been threatened. (Talk is cheap and the devil knows it. If he can run you off the street with mere words; he's won.) But it stands to reason that if you ARE beaten up for the gospel, your flesh has endured pain for Jesus' sake, and you have proven your choice to deny what makes the flesh comfortable for Jesus' sake. Sin needs your flesh's cooperation because it will NEVER get your born again spirit's cooperation. If your flesh is "under," you won't sin. I believe that Peter was making that point.

So the objection at the head of this discussion is completely true; it is the implication made by the objector that is false, namely that sickness is somehow good for you because it helps you sin less.

Are we not all called to walk as the Bible says, with our flesh crucified (Galatians 5:24)? If that is our goal, and the objector is correct that sickness is the secret to being done with sin, we should all find the sickest person we know, ask him to cough and sneeze all over our hands, and then put our hands in our mouths and lick them profusely. After all, don't we want to get sick because it's such a great shortcut to mortifying the flesh? Why don't the objectors do that if that's really what they believe? (Maybe you can ask them if they come to you with this objection.)

If you'd like to do something that really DOES help mortify the flesh, try fasting. That is a kind of "suffering in the flesh" that DOES help you stay out of sin by helping keep your flesh under. I neither recommend nor do long fasts, but I've found it doesn't take too long before my flesh quiets down.

Fortunately, Peter never mentioned sickness in conjunction with bodily suffering in this context. Instead, he told us to be minded as Jesus was. Did Jesus get sick all the time? No, He got sick ONCE when he atoned for our sins to spare us having to be sick. He was willing to suffer physically if that was what it took to fulfill God's will. We also need to be willing to suffer physical pain, if need be, to fulfill God's will. The reason that the devil couldn't stop me on the street is that I had already made up my mind that I was dead with Christ and that my life wasn't my own. If I had to join Paul and the apostles in being physically assaulted for the gospel's sake, I would sooner endure that than back away from preaching to people who were headed for ETERNAL physical agony in hell. I had a street evangelist friend who actually was beaten repeatedly and lost most of his teeth and CONTINUED going out on the street to reach "the worst of the worst" – drug dealers, prostitutes, gang members, and so on. I used to go out with him in my earliest days as a Christian. A fellow preacher and I were robbed at knifepoint on an overseas trip once, but I wasn't hurt, and the thief unknowingly got a camera that didn't work right and was probably going to have to be thrown out anyway. But showing people the way out of eternal suffering is worth some physical peril.

And in agreement with Peter's words, my friend who got beaten didn't seem to have much time for the works of the flesh! But that had nothing to do with sickness.

Objection: If You Suffer More in This Life, You Get a Greater Reward in Heaven

This statement is true, but not the way that the objector thinks.

When Suffering DOES Bring a Greater Reward

The only sense in which you get a greater reward for suffering more in this life is when you suffer persecution for the sake of righteousness:

Matthew 5:11-12

If you stand up for the gospel instead of chickening out when public pressure stands against you, you'll get a reward in heaven. Cowards who back off, thinking, "I can't afford to offend Muslims or LGBTQ people or people who advocate for a woman's 'right' to kill her unborn baby; it could hurt my career or my public image," will not get the same reward as those who stand with the Word when it's unpopular and causes some people to hate you and say bad things about you falsely (e.g., you hate homosexuals, you hate women, you're a bigot, and so on) – or even truthfully (you're intolerant [of sin], you're exclusive [because you think only Christians are saved]). I've made plenty of "gay" people furious with VERY public statements I made in front of thousands of people in one case and on TV soon afterward, but my stand is still unapologetically "LGBT" –Let God Be True! Could this even result in this book being banned in some places? Absolutely! And that's not all bad – if you want to make SURE that people will check something out, make it forbidden! I've seen that on the street when a camp counselor who took a bunch of teens to a public place FORBADE them to take my tracts and tried to "forbid" me to give them to "his" teens (I just ignored him, to his irritation). They snapped them up when the counselor wasn't looking!

I've known cowardly preachers who would not stand up against the "gay rights" / "trans rights" crowd for fear of what would happen to them or their churches or ministries. A couple ministers even said that they wouldn't stand up because they saw what happened to me and my public image as a result. The owner of two local newspapers urged people to flee from my church in an editorial, printed two weeks in a row of scathing and untrue statements about me and refused to print my responses. The preachers who would not stand up against him and his "power of the press" will not get the same rewards that I will. The fear of man (let's call it for what it is) brings a snare. (Proverbs 29:25: "The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD shall be safe.") By the way, no one left my church because of him and I got free publicity besides. As for the other preachers, saying that you don't want to be controversial or make waves or rock the boat are lame excuses – some boats need to be SUNK!

But aside from suffering PERSECUTION in this life, there is absolutely NOWHERE in Scripture where there is even a hint that you will get bigger heavenly rewards because you suffered more in this life. To be sure of that before I wrote it here, I checked every Bible verse that had anything to do with rewards, and you can feel free to do the same. NOT ONCE was the reward linked to how much sickness or poverty or misfortune you endured in this life! The objector does not have any Scripture to back his claim. This objection is false comfort to the sick. Saints have to suffer persecution, but they don't have to suffer from rheumatoid arthritis or chronic sleep disorders.

The only "try" that comes to mind is the account of the rich man and Lazarus and Abraham's statement, "But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented" (Luke 16:25). But you have to remember that the rich man was not in hell because he had riches – he was in hell because he was wicked. Having money in and of itself is not evil – if it were, Paul's instructions to the rich in 1 Timothy 6:17 would have to be altered to say, "Exhort the rich to repent – if they don't repent for being rich, they'll go to hell for having too many good things here on earth! Their excessive earthly comfort will have to be countered with eternal discomfort – they didn't have their fair share of suffering when they were here!" The rich man suffered not because of his riches but because of his attitude, which was evident given that he never did anything to relieve Lazarus's misery. Lazarus did not receive good things to make up for his poverty on earth; he received them for being right before God. How ridiculous to conclude that your earthly bank account would consign you to heaven or hell forever! That is never taught in either Testament. No one lives on the new earth forever because he lacked money here, and no one is consigned to the lake of fire because he never lacked money here. The Biblical plan of salvation makes that clear. It is trusting in the living God that saves a rich person, not parting with all his riches. (See 1 Timothy 6:17 again.)

Does Suffering from SICKNESS Bring a Greater Reward in This Life?

This is what the objector had in mind. This is similar to the rancid God's special favor objection. If this is true, you can crank up your reward level in heaven by being sicker here. Sickness is now turned into a special trial for special people that will give them higher heavenly status. So now rather than just being physical miserable, you can get into spiritual pride at the same time, convinced that you are better than the rest of us who aren't as sick as you are. If you really believe this, you should earnestly desire that God "bless" you with the most painful afflictions imaginable, like maybe pancreatic cancer and kidney stones at the same time, so that your patient endurance will make you a really big celebrity in the hereafter.

NOTHING in the Bible substantiates the idea of greater rewards for those who suffer more here for reasons OTHER THAN persecution.

The only “try” to justify this objection (other than in the case of persecution) would be citing the case of the beggar at the rich man’s gate, which might make it seem like those who have easier lives here get worse eternities and those who have lousier lives here get especially blessed in heaven. The rich man had good things and suffered; the poor man had a crummy life and was comforted. So should we agree with the objector after all that the more junk you deal with here, the better your eternal reward will be?

No, you can’t conclude that, because the rich man went to HELL! He was not handed a horrible hereafter because he was rich and he didn’t suffer as much as the beggar did. Apparently he had no concern for the beggar although the beggar was there all the time. In other words, he was stingy with the poor, which Jesus never considered a virtue. The rich man didn’t suffer just because he hadn’t suffered his “fair share” in this life! So neither can we conclude that the beggar had done more suffering and was thus entitled to more eternal bliss. Nothing in the Law, which was still the covenant in effect at the time, made a virtue of poverty or sores, both of which the beggar had, and both of which were considered curses (Deuteronomy 28:15-68). Nothing would indicate that a person is rewarded for having a miserable life. In fact, all of Jesus’ followers would be doomed to few rewards if that were the case, as He came to give life and life more abundantly (John 10:10)! Surely walking in more abundance and fewer curses does not ruin our heavenly reward.

If you can really qualify for heaven by being poor as opposed to being born again, we should all give up everything so that we can beg on street corners to be more like the Biblical beggar and be assured of great honor in heaven for all eternity.

The beggar was not rewarded anyway – he was comforted. So again, there is no reward for suffering sickness (sores) and poverty (being a beggar) in this earth.

Without faith it is impossible to please God (Hebrews 11:6), so God is surely more pleased with someone who rises up in faith, believing God’s promises, than someone who just sits there in passive resignation, never attempting to exercise one bit of faith.

Finally, if suffering sickness entitles us to better rewards, Jesus definitely did some of the crowds a major disservice by healing them ALL! He emphasized laying up treasures in heaven that can never pass away. If sickness lays up treasure for you, He contradicted His own teaching! That shows that this objection is nothing but false comfort for sufferers, not Bible teaching.

Don’t you think that God wants all of us to get a maximum reward in heaven? Jesus certainly exhorted us toward actions that reap eternal rewards that can never rust, be moth-eaten or be stolen. So if the objector is right, then instead of HEALING people and thus STOPPING suffering, Jesus should have REFUSED TO HEAL PEOPLE and DISHED OUT suffering to maximize people’s rewards, and we would read passages like this:

Mark 18:2-4:

A leper worshiped Jesus, saying, 'If you are willing, You can heal me.'

And Jesus saith unto him, "Why in the world would you want Me to do that? Your reward in heaven will be greater if you suffer more because you're not healed. Keep your leprosy and die from it in ever-increasing pain, and your great reward in heaven shall increase daily."

Then Jesus socked the leper in the face to further increase his suffering, and thus his heavenly reward.

Objection: Many Who Are “in Faith” for Their Healing Die Anyway

Trivially, all of those who are in faith for their healing die anyway – sooner or later! You just don’t have to be sick before you die.

A corrected restatement of this objection is, “Many who say they are in faith for their healing die anyway.” The sad fact is that most people have no idea what being in faith really means. They may live more sanctified lives than a faith-filled person with no love walk, but if they do not understand faith, they cannot get “in faith.” It is presumptuous to say that you know that someone else was in faith. Are you telling God and the rest of us that faith doesn’t work? That would be news to God and to Jesus. Do you know claim to know everything about other people’s hearts? Well, some people do, and you get stories like this:

THE AUNTIE FAITH STORY

by Fay Thayter

If anyone ever knew how to believe God, it was Auntie Faith. No finer saint ever walked this sod. She was as pure as the driven snow and she had a heart of gold. She was a mighty woman of prayer who could pray for hours at a time. She was trusting God to heal her of cancer, but she got worse and worse. But even at the hospice house, she maintained her fine Christian character and sense of humor until the morphine made her incoherent. Don’t you tell me that Auntie Faith didn’t know how to believe God – she saw many prayers for other people answered over the years. The only reason she didn’t get healed must be that God had a reason for allowing her to stay sick and die. After all, He could have stopped it from happening because He’s all-powerful, but He chose not to. So are you telling me that she had a lack of faith, so it was HER FAULT that she died? Huh? HUH???

Are you going to tell me to my face that she did something wrong in her believing? Don’t insult me with such horrible accusations about my Auntie Faith. She was the most consecrated Christian in town. Her tragic death is just something we’ll never understand. Every time you preach that faith stuff around me, you’re insulting Auntie Faith and making her look like she’s guilty of unbelief or something. Stay away from me with that finger-pointing, nasty teaching that people who died of sickness didn’t have enough faith!

Perhaps a summary of this story is, “Auntie Faith died and her niece is MAD AT GOD for not stopping it from happening!” Many Christians are exactly where Auntie Faith’s niece stands. They’re MAD AT GOD because He “allowed” a fine person to die while He “allowed” far crummier persons to live on. If you haven’t met such a person yet, you probably will. Especially if you preach divine healing!

However, God is never the guilty party. If you are MAD AT GOD, you are ALWAYS in the wrong because God is good. There is never a legitimate reason to be mad at Him. If you’re mad, you don’t understand how things really work.

Faith works. If you are in faith, you get healed. If you were to die from a sickness, either you were not in faith or you have let some other hindrance in (for example, doubt, unbelief or unforgiveness) on top of your faith. That's blunt, that's direct, that offends a lot of people, and it will probably get you on some cult-watch lists if you become better known. It's still the truth. We sometimes compromise the gospel just to soothe people who have suffered a loss. We assure them that the baby dying was somehow God's mysterious will. We assure them that the young father who died, leaving his widow to care for four small children, was supposed to die because it was just his time to go. When we do this, we are no better than the scoundrel who preaches at a funeral that the sinner with the good works is surely in glory now. (This won't offend the unsaved relatives.) I'm no diplomat (I'm sure you've noticed), but if you don't come up with something else to say, you are guilty of denying the gospel. That would probably send dozens more people to hell when they believe that they can be religious but unsaved like Uncle Henry and still go to heaven based on good works! I wouldn't want that blood on my hands! Likewise, you are setting the stage for unbelief and sooner funerals for more people by preaching at a funeral that an untimely death was the will of God. I can't necessarily tell you what to say, but I can definitely tell you what NOT to say! You can't deny the gospel to spare people's feelings! You just have to pray for nice, wise, diplomatic words that don't contradict what your Lord taught.

I witnessed to a relative on many occasions, and as far as I know, he died and went to hell. Should I then stop preaching the good news that people can be saved from an eternity in the lake of fire because "it didn't work for him" even though he was generally someone you'd consider to be a morally upstanding person?

People get scared by people who have stories about those who "tried it and failed." If only the church world would be so quick to broadcast successes in divine healing as it is to broadcast failures! I have talked to people who have "tried" to get baptized with the Holy Spirit and failed. Do we stop believing in the Spirit baptism because they failed? No! Once these people are instructed from the Scriptures, they can get baptized with the Holy Spirit, too.

Are there people who say that they have "tried it and failed" for one reason or another? Yes. Are there people who insisted that they were in faith for their healing who died anyway? Yes. Some people "tried" to stay out of adultery and failed. Some people "tried" to walk in love and failed. That doesn't make it impossible for you to avoid adultery and avoid walking out of love.

The closing argument in the above article about teaching that a person who dies didn't have enough faith is somewhat of a "straw man" argument – many faith teachers would NOT say that she didn't have enough faith, so the article is attacking a position that many of us would not really take to begin with. Auntie Faith, like everyone else, DID have the measure of faith (Romans 12:3) and Jesus was the Author and Finisher of it (Hebrews 12:2). So blaming her death on a "lack of faith" is at best technically inaccurate. Evidently she did not USE her faith, and if she were like most Christians, she would not have known enough to point her faith in the right direction based on the Word.

People all over the world can testify that faith for healing works. You can find people who say it doesn't, and I can find people who know it does and are living proofs of it. You cannot base your doctrine on anyone's success or failure. You can base it only on the Word of God. Does God say it's so, or doesn't He? You have to be convinced for yourself. Once you are, it won't move you if "a thousand fall at your side, ten thousand at your right hand." You will know that you can walk in health.

Objection: I Tried That Faith Stuff, and It Didn't Work

Other people have tried that faith stuff, and it did work. They are up from their deathbeds, out of their wheelchairs, healed of their allergies, and free from their tumors. Their blind eyes now see and their deaf ears now hear. Their incurable and terminal illnesses have vanished without a trace. It's too late to convince them that faith doesn't work. It's too late to convince me, since I'm an eyewitness to people in all these categories successfully receiving healing.

No one with any sense should take this objection seriously. Mature Christians know that you only prove doctrine through the Bible, not through people's experiences. For every sad-sack sickness saga you spout, I could recite a glorious healing testimony. We could go back and forth for a month and still be no closer to proving anything. After all, there are healing testimonies in some cults, too. Can you see the futility of determining doctrine from experience?

I once had a person tell me, "Tithing doesn't work." Her "proof" that it didn't work? She tithed for three weeks and didn't see a change! She missed the fact that tithing is a lifestyle, not something that you try. Faith is also a lifestyle, not something that you try. The minute someone says, "I tried that faith stuff," you should see the problem immediately. They "tried" it. You don't "try" faith to see whether or not it works. If you're trying something to see whether or not it works, you are by definition not in faith to begin with! If you're really in faith, you must already know for sure on the basis of God's Word that it works!

If you want to convince us that faith doesn't work, you must prove it from the Bible. You must find a way to explain away all the healing miracles in the New Testament, especially the ones that Jesus attributed to people's faith. You must prove that Jesus was wrong when He said that "whosoever" can speak to physical things and receive by faith (Mark 11:23-24). You must prove that there is some reason why your faith cannot make you whole today, when the faith of many in the Gospels made them whole back then. You will have to explain away all of Jesus' teachings on faith.

Should we accept Jesus' word that if you have faith as a mustard seed, nothing shall be impossible to you (Matthew 17:20), or your word that even if you have great faith, healing can be impossible to you? Should we accept Jesus' word that anyone can move mountains with his faith (Matthew 17:20), or your word that this faith stuff doesn't work for everyone? Should we take Jesus' word that all things are possible to him who believes (Mark 9:23), or your word that some things are impossible to him who believes? Should we take Jesus' word that with God, all things are possible (Mark 10:27), or your word that with God, not all things are possible?

If you really tried that faith stuff, that means that you knew from Scripture that God wants you to be in health. If you were really in faith, you must have had Scripture to back you up. Real faith can only come from hearing God's Word on a subject (Romans 10:17). So now, if you claim that faith doesn't work, you must somehow prove that those Scriptures don't really promise you what you were sure that they promised you. Otherwise, we'll have to conclude that faith does work, but you weren't really in faith.

Or perhaps you knew some things about faith, but you were in unforgiveness, or you allowed some other hindrance to creep in.

If you are willing to admit that faith does work, you can read this book and hear the Word about healing. Then you can really be in faith and receive your healing. If you claim to have a Scriptural reason why healing is not for all, you can go back to the objections list and click your pet reason why healing is not for all today. Then you can see why your pet reason is wrong. If you are willing to admit that you are wrong, God is ready to heal you. Then you can testify to others, "I tried that faith stuff, and it works! Let me tell you how you can do it, too!"

Objection: TEMPORARY Relief in Healing Crusades is Often Caused by a Release of Endorphins, Serotonin and Adrenaline

I might shock you with this, but I agree! What I do NOT agree with is that ALL healing that goes on in healing crusades falls into this temporary category or that healing ministers deliberately choose to see people receive temporary healing in these ways by getting people worked up emotionally.

Much has been written about the “placebo effect” actually working, despite the fact that there is no apparent medical reason that it should work. There is such a thing as people “psyching” themselves into feeling temporarily better. However, a healing crusade should not be a “psych rally” or a “mass hypnosis meeting” as they are sometimes accused of being. I want people to believe that they receive and leave the meeting in faith believing that they received what they needed. If they truly did, their healing won’t be temporary!

Someone’s excitement when being ministered to COULD produce a temporary fleeting good feeling. I’ve had times myself when I felt better after hands were laid on me, only to end up feeling as bad as before afterward because I really was not in faith when hands were laid on me. I think that most Spirit-filled Christians have had similar experiences as they were learning faith.

Sometimes it was almost a blessing NOT to feel anything, as it kept my focus on the Word and not on my sudden improvement. I’ve sometimes felt WORSE after hands were laid on me, but gotten healed anyway! In one case, I was the only person in the prayer line who did not fall over. (I went up expecting to receive my healing, not expecting to fall over. I think a lot of people were expecting to fall over.) Yet as far as I know, I’m the only person in that line who actually received my healing and had my body verify it. It was NOT a temporary improvement caused by a chemical rush in the exciting atmosphere!

Jesus expects us to minister believing His words, not using earthly persuasion. When He said that we would lay hands on the sick and they would recover, He didn’t mean temporarily!

People can experience temporary relief for another reason that is more important than endorphins and adrenaline! What people experience is the anointing. The anointing is the best pain-killer I’ve ever encountered. You can’t be allergic to it, it has no life-threatening side effects, and you don’t even have to ask your doctor if the anointing is right for you. (It is.) It is not unusual to feel really good when you are in a service where the anointing is flowing tangibly. I’ve occasionally been on the ministry end of things and felt rotten before the service, but then felt absolutely fine after the anointing started flowing! Sometimes I felt awful afterward. I’m not saying that’s how it SHOULD be; I’m just being frank with you. Thank God, we can grow in these areas.

When Jesus ministered, people got more than temporary relief, and He said that we would do the works that He did and greater. That means that we will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover, not just get temporary relief!

Objection: So-and-So Was “Healed of Cancer” But Now Has Cancer Again

The premise of this objection is that someone must not REALLY have been healed of cancer (it must just have been “in remission” at best) because someone who had previously been diagnosed with cancer, then was diagnosed as being cancer-free, now has been diagnosed as having cancer again.

Can this happen? Absolutely! I have had cases where I laid hands on people or spoke to the cancer in their bodies with their permission and they got a clean bill of health from the doctor – only to get another grim diagnosis later.

Some people start slacking off with the things of God after they are healed. In fact, I know of several cases where in a way their healing was the worst thing that happened to them. They were faithful to be at services when they were learning how to receive healing, but after they received it, they disappeared in a puff of smoke, never to be seen again at church. Then they got another scary diagnosis and were in no position to handle it. And I’m sure that the devil was right there to lie to them and say that they were never really healed in the first place.

But a subsequent grim diagnosis does NOT prove that the person was not healed in the first place! If this objection’s logic is valid, if you have a cold this year, you were never really healed of the cold you had last year. It was only “in remission” but you had it all along. You were “healed of a cold” but now you have a cold again so your healing must not have been real last year. Do you see how ridiculous this is?

Jesus acknowledged that you can get sick again after He heals you, especially if you “go back into the world” after you’re healed. He warned the man at the Pool of Bethesda to sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon him (John 5:14). Notice that Jesus told him that he was healed before He warned the man. So Jesus has no problem with the idea that you can be “made whole” now but end up getting sick again later. It doesn’t invalidate your original healing.

Although this has been some additional material to cover a specific objection, more general related information can be found in the response to the objection, “Some Who Get Healed at Healing Crusades Don’t Keep Their Healings.”

Objection: People at Faith Churches Are Just as Sick as Everyone Else

Many anti-healing writers like to cite congregations where “healing in the atonement” is taught and it seems that everyone is just as sick as anywhere else. When this year’s latest “bug” goes around, they miss work like their worldly counterparts. When cancer rears its ugly head, their best “testimony” is that the Lord helped someone stay peaceful through chemo treatment. And let’s be clear – getting healed through chemo treatment definitely beats dying, although it’s not a divine healing testimony. (If it’s a method that a SINNER could use to get healed, you won’t impress anyone with a testimony about it, as many bar-hopping, income-tax-cheating sinners get healed the same way.) In some cases, the anti-healing writer attended such a church and became disillusioned.

I have been to some of those places too. Unlike James, you almost have to ask, “Is any among you NOT sick?”

But this generalization does not apply to all faith churches! We had some wonderful miracles at our church that rattled doctors. Almost every person who came to our church got healed of something through faith in the name of Jesus! I don’t claim to have a perfect track record, but I’ve had a lot less sickness than most people! I’ve “run off” plenty of those kinds of things that those obnoxious “It’s flu season!” TV commercials show (where someone has a Mount Everest of tissues next to his bed while he hacks and coughs and can’t sleep and makes his wife miserable in the process). So the claim that preaching “healing in the atonement” produces no tangible results is bogus. The objectors just aren’t going to the right places! There are plenty of witnesses to real miracles all over the world. I have spoken in other churches where miracles are downright normal! The objectors just don’t believe that or want you to believe that.

As I mention elsewhere, the problem that some of these “same as the world” churches have is not allowing the Holy Spirit enough leeway in the services. Some people will be healed through the proper teaching of the Word, but we will see more miracles when the Holy Spirit is truly allowed to be Lord over all aspects of the service. That means that His lordship supersedes (gasp) the pre-selected song set and even (multiple gasps) the meticulously prepared message that matches the Scriptures that are queued up on the “media machine.” Otherwise, you can have doctrinally correct but dry-as-burnt-toast services.

But let the Holy Spirit move, teach the Word, and you’ll see plenty of healing testimonies where THAT becomes the norm rather than suffering through the junk that the sinners put up with. This can become a good snowball, because the more miracle testimonies there are, the more other people will be stirred to believe as the testifiers did.

As far as the objection goes, it's another let-people's-experience-determine-your-doctrine objection, which is always flawed for that reason. You get your doctrine from the Word even if NO ONE else seems to be walking in it. Jeremiah kept speaking for the Lord despite the fact that it seemed that NO ONE wanted to listen to him. These very objectors would cite Jeremiah's unpopularity as proof that he was missing God. That doesn't mean that what he preached was wrong. You can't judge a preacher's doctrine by the hearers' actions or by the size of his crowd.

Objection: Our Bodies Wear Out. Even Some Healing Ministers Wear Glasses!

I wore glasses from the time when I was in Kindergarten until about a decade and a half before I wrote this expanded edition of this book. I will admit to using “readers” at this present writing. Someone asked me if I got contacts, and I replied, “No, I made contact!” Even back when I needed to wear glasses all the time, I did not go out and get contact lenses just to make myself look more like a faith man! I stopped wearing glasses because I can do fine without them, and actually, they’re still somewhere in Colorado! I had started to just put them in my pocket after noticing one day that I could actually see better without them than with them. They must have fallen out somewhere, but it doesn’t matter.

It really doesn’t matter if the healing minister wears glasses or not; many do. The only thing that matters when you are determining doctrine is the Word, not anyone’s experience – even the experience of the people who are preaching to you!

Our bodies do wear out. God does renew your youth like the eagle’s (Psalm 103:5), but clearly, your mortal body will not last forever. That does not mean that you have to be sick, though.

Have I just admitted that sickness is for all, then? No. God still “heals all your diseases” (Psalm 103:3) throughout your life on earth. You can’t stay here forever, but while you’re here, God wants you to prosper and be in health even as your soul prospers (3 John 2).

I know for a fact that God heals bad eyesight. It often comes down to a question of desire. If your eyesight gets bad enough, you will definitely want to be healed. If it’s a minor nuisance that glasses can fix, it will probably not be high on your “faith agenda.” That’s how it was for me. I was losing my sight in my left eye to the point where I could hardly work anymore, so I was very highly motivated to believe God! I believed and acted on the Word and received my healing. However, doing away with glasses happened much later, as I could still function with glasses. (Technically, my sight in that eye had become 20/20 without the glasses and 20/15 with them. That changed later and I was better off without the glasses.)

But if our bodies will eventually break down, is it not inevitable that some body parts will fail, thus bringing on some kind of “sickness?” Let’s consider that Jesus healed every sickness and every disease among the people. This would include any “disease” caused by the failure of a body part (such as diabetes). Among the multitudes that were healed, there were surely some in this category. If you sampled thousands of sick people today, you would find at least some who have such a condition.

Even if something like that happens to you, you have a right to be healed. If Jesus healed every disease, which would include old-age-related diseases, He surely does the same today. To say otherwise is to put an age limit on God’s promises to heal all your diseases and take sickness away from you. There is no age limit on this in the Bible, so why add one yourself?

Every disease is part of the “curse of the law” found in the Law of Moses. Paul said that we are redeemed from that curse. Because we are redeemed from every disease, we are redeemed from “old-age” diseases. As a lawyer would say, these diseases are “including, but not limited to” Alzheimer’s, senility and dementia in general, kidney failure, incontinence, feebleness, osteoporosis and arthritis. If it’s an illness of any kind, you are legally redeemed from it, no matter how old you are.

Consider the two million or so Jews who went out into the desert with “none feeble among their tribes.” Can you imagine two million people in one geographical area where no one was feeble or crippled because of old age? It happened under a worse covenant that was based upon worse promises than your covenant. You should expect better under our better covenant today. It is a tradition of man that makes void the Word of God that you have to be decrepit and senile for a season before you die. Tell that to Moses when you see him; he was fine at the age of 120. No one had to carry him around in a sedan chair! Tell that to Caleb when you see him. He was 80 or so when he wanted to go conquer more giants! This was under the Old Covenant! Don’t let modern tradition and man’s thoughts talk you out of God’s best.

Mortality is part of the curse on the earth in Genesis 3, and we are not redeemed from that curse yet. So we will all die eventually, but we don’t have to be sick before we die!

Sickness is part of the curse of the law according to Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39. We are redeemed from the curse of the law according to Galatians 3:13.

Therefore, we are not redeemed from death (mortality), but we are redeemed from sickness. You have to die, but you don’t have to be sick before you die. See the answer to the objection about never dying if we’re always healed for more insight on this subject.

Objection: There is No Office of “HEALING Evangelist” in the Bible

Biblically speaking, Healing Evangelist is a redundant term, as Jesus never commissioned any preacher to be a NON-HEALING evangelist! In fact, the same disciples who were told to go into the entire world were also told to wait in Jerusalem until they were clothed with power from on high before going out and evangelizing the world (Luke 24:49).

Philip is the only person explicitly called an evangelist in Scripture. There is no question that Philip had a signs-and-wonders ministry in Samaria. Thus, there is no case where God sent someone out and called the person an evangelist who did NOT have signs and wonders following him, but there is a case where God sent someone out as an evangelist who DID have signs and wonders following him.

This objection is wrong for another reason, as well: There ARE ministry positions described as “miracles” and “gifts of healings” in 1 Corinthians 12:28. These would seem to be expressions of the evangelist’s office, which is not mentioned otherwise in that passage. So there are some evangelists with an anointing for miracles and others with an anointing for different types of healing. Thus, such a position actually IS in Scripture. What ISN’T in Scripture is someone just going and sharing the plan of salvation as his primary activity in life with no signs and wonders (miracles or healings) following.

Objection: A Famous Faith Preacher Struggled with Kidney Stones

Perhaps you've heard the story of a British preacher who saw amazing miracles, but still suffered a lot of agony himself from kidney stones for a time. It's often told as if to prove that God withholds healing for mysterious reasons. After all, if such a great man of faith didn't get healed, how can we ever be sure we can be healed? The issue is sometimes erroneously referred to as his "thorn in the flesh."

However, this preacher DID get healed. Different biographies set the time of his suffering anywhere from a few months to a few years, but I haven't seen any that said that he had that problem the rest of his life. I imagine that some people have assumed that in error. One faith-critical website says that his condition was gallstones and that it lasted 3 years. But even they have to admit that he did not keep the problem for the rest of his life.

Also, this particular man made a choice that no doctor or knife would ever touch his body. While that faith stand is admirable, one could suggest that if he'd been a little more lenient and been willing to take something or get other help for the issue, he might not have suffered as much or as long.

However, his story doesn't prove anything. Experience never proves doctrine. Only the Word proves doctrine! If you get your doctrine from people's experiences, you will fall short many times.

You can focus on this man's testimony, but you can also focus on mine. Kidney stones run in my family, and I got one when I was thirty or so. I was in horrible shape, but I believed that I received my healing – and then went to the emergency room. That's not a contradiction. I took my Bible and F. F. Bosworth's book "Christ the Healer" with me, and I read them most of the time when I was awake. They thought that I was weird. I think that people who DON'T do things like that are weird. I had better things to do than to sit in an expensive hospital room watching non-faith-building TV shows. I guess it's up to you if you want to just lie there and watch couples on TV pretend to agonize over which of EXACTLY three houses they want to buy when their real decision was made before they (or in at least one case, their more photogenic stand-ins) recorded the made-for-TV scenes. (Would YOU and your spouse make the actual life-changing decision with cameras recording that conversation?) I was there for only about a day and a half, at which point they said there wasn't much they could do for me other than give me painkillers (which never took all the pain away anyway because the pain was just too intense) and that I would probably suffer a lot for a few weeks based on the X-rays. I told them that I could hurt at home a lot less expensively, and if they couldn't do anything for me, I should go home. So they sent me home. That night, in awful pain, I was claiming God's promises of being able to sleep, which I couldn't do with that pain. All of a sudden a sheet of power hit me and all pain left instantly. I fell asleep almost immediately. The next morning, when the stone came out, I didn't even know it was coming out until I heard a "clunk." That was the end of it. The doctors told me I'd have to avoid chocolate, broccoli, dairy products and most other things that I like for the rest of my life. I decided that I would not be bound by such a regimen. I claimed my healing and I've eaten whatever I wanted since then.

I've had only one incident a quarter of a century later, but I'd had more time to build my faith and this time I didn't go to the hospital. I did scream (literally) in the car when coming back from preaching a healing service (of all things!), "I'm HEALED! I'm HEALED! I'm HEALED!" (My wife was driving and she had to put up with that. It was no fun for either of us.) Probably most people would have checked into the emergency room, but I remember how little they had helped last time and I didn't want to go through that time and expense again. Also, though I was in pain, I wasn't in as bad shape as the first time. The problem stopped, and interestingly, I don't even recall sensing anything leave my body. Whether something did leave or whether it disappeared in my body, I don't know, but I DO know that the Word works mightily in me. Both cases were very short and I never suffered for years as the British preacher did. I don't know why it took years for him, though apparently he himself explained that his faith just needed to be developed more.

Rather than emphasizing the experience of someone who didn't get healed (for a while, at least), why not take encouragement from the testimony of someone who DID get healed?

A friend of mine and I went into a hospital room to pray for someone else who had a kidney stone and they discharged him a couple hours later, completely healed. We are just as redeemed from kidney stones as we are from all other ailments.

Objection: Groaning As Our Outward Man Perishes Is Part of This Life (2 Corinthians 4:16-5:4)

2 Corinthians 4:16-5:4:

For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day.

For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven:

If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

First, the context of this passage involves Paul's suffering for the gospel, which consisted of persecutions, beatings, and so on, but not persistent sickness. (Paul's body was afflicted by the physical abuse, but there is no record of Paul having a virus, cancer, or any such thing.) This is clear from the verses immediately preceding the passage above:

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair;

Persecuted, but not forsaken, cast down, but not destroyed;

Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. [Far from implying that physical sickness is normal, Paul is testifying that every time his body was abused for the gospel's sake, the life of Jesus made itself manifest and healed him.]

For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake [this must mean persecution again; having AIDS or cancer is not dying for Jesus' sake!], that the life also of Jesus might be manifest in our mortal flesh. [Again, this is a testimony to God's healing power, not His supposed ability to make you sick.]

So then death worketh in us, but life in you.

We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak;

Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise us up also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.

For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God.

Paul's talk about his outward man perishing is tied to his "light affliction," which did not consist of contracting viruses. Getting a cold does not "work for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" – it is just a nuisance. Paul is not talking about illness here.

We are not redeemed from aging. You could make an argument that the outward man perishing is speaks of the natural (under Adam's curse) aging process, although that would be difficult to prove in the context. Even then, the fact that you age does not mean that you have to get sick; this is covered in other discussions and objection replies. If God heals all your diseases, that includes diseases caused by breakdowns in body parts. God wants your body to work properly until you go home to heaven. You will age, but you don't have to be sick as you age.

The groaning here has nothing to do with groaning in pain because you have appendicitis or something! Paul did not have any regular diseases as far as we know, and he groaned. The groaning here is due to the desire for something better, for eternal bodies in our eternal home. The same idea is expressed in Romans 8:23, where we groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our body. (This speaks of full redemption in the sense of having a new body. This does not prove that our current body is not redeemed from illness any more than Paul's later statement in Romans 13:11 that salvation is nearer now than when we first believed proves that salvation is not for this present life. There are current and future aspects to redemption and salvation in Scripture.)

The groaning of our spirits has more to do with the fact that we are stuck with unregenerate flesh for the rest of our earth walk. Our flesh is not born again. It will constantly lead us into trouble unless we make a point of walking in the Spirit so that we do not fulfill the lusts of the flesh (Galatians 5:16). You will fight this battle every day. Can you see why the real you – your spirit – wants to be free from this?

You might make an argument that the passage in question has to do with aging, but you cannot prove that the passage has anything to do with getting sick. Sickness is never mentioned either in the passage or in its context. Therefore, you cannot use this passage to prove that you should have to groan with sickness as your outer man perishes!

Objection: If God Wanted Us to Enjoy Perfect Health NOW, He Would Have Already Given Us Immortal Bodies

In the days of the Wright brothers, people said that if God wanted man to fly, He would have given him wings. That is similar to what the wrong brothers who object to divine healing say with this objection.

By this objector's reasoning, if God wanted us to live sin-free lives now, He would have already given us immortal bodies so that the flesh would never be a hindrance again. Therefore, it must be God's will for you to be a slave to SOME sins in this lifetime. Do you see how silly this argument is?

In this life, the just live by FAITH (Habakkuk 2:4 and elsewhere). When you get your immortal body, you will cease to live by faith in the area of healing because you will never need healing. For now, you must believe in and receive the inheritance that God's grace has provided. You will have to put your flesh under until Jesus returns. That is how God has structured things, and you will have to forward complaints to Him (not that you should) if you don't like His arrangement.

This objection sounds cute, but there is a sinister undertone that God does NOT want us to enjoy perfect health NOW. In other words, He does NOT will that we prosper and be in health even as our souls prosper (3 John 2) and He will NOT heal all our diseases (Psalm 103:3) or be The Lord Who Heals You (Exodus 15:26) because the fact that your body is mortal "proves" that He didn't mean everything else that He said about healing.

Why did Jesus go about healing all who were under the devil's cruel oppression (Acts 10:38) if God did NOT want everyone to enjoy perfect health now? Why did He move through Peter to heal the crippled beggar and allow Peter to proclaim that the faith which is by Him gave the man perfect soundness (Acts 3:1-16)? Why did God heal ALL the sick in the streets of Jerusalem (Acts 5:12-16) and ALL the sick on the island of Melita (Acts 28:8-9) if He did NOT want people to be healthy? If He wanted people to be healthy THEN and not NOW, that is tantamount to saying that He has changed, which would negate Malachi 3:6 and James 1:17.

God does want us to enjoy perfect health now, and that's why He has already given us JESUS! It would be senseless for Jesus to bear OUR sicknesses and OUR pains (Isaiah 53:4) only to have God tell us that if He really wanted us healed, He would have given us immortal bodies.

Objection: David Said that It Was GOOD that He Was Afflicted; So It Can Be with Us

This line of “reasoning” goes something like this:

IT IS GOOD FOR YOU TO GET SICK

by Dolores N. Ferma

David said, “It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes” (Psalm 119:71). He said, “Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now I have kept thy word” (Psalm 119:67). Where did these afflictions come from? God sent them in His love. “I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me” (Psalm 119:75). David spent much of Psalm 38 enumerating his physical distresses, which he attributed to God (“thine arrows” in Psalm 38:2) and his sin (Psalm 38:3). David learned the valuable lesson that it is a good thing to endure afflictions from God so that you stop sinning. Surely, the stopping of sin will be far more beneficial than the temporary “loathsome disease” and “lack of soundness in your flesh” (Psalm 38:7). Therefore, when sickness comes, you should seek to find what lesson God is teaching you, and what sin He is revealing to you. Then thank Him that He did something good for you when He lovingly, in faithfulness, sent sickness your way. You will grow far more than a person who complains that healing is his “covenant right” and protests the very thing (affliction) that David said was good.

The problem with this objection is that there is enough truth in it to make it attractive as an anti-healing argument. David did say these things, after all, and they are just as much part of the Scriptures as John 3:16. Unquestionably, it was good that David was afflicted. Through physical suffering, David faced his sin and repented of it. He was better off because of it. That does not mean that you have to learn your lessons the way that he did, though. It is far better to stay out of sin and not have to learn things the hard way. The Bible was given to us so that we can learn in the School of the Holy Spirit rather than in the School of Hard Knocks.

What about Psalm 38, where it appears that God sent the sickness to David because of his sin? The idea that only the devil makes people sick conflicts with some Scripture passages where illness is God’s judgment for sin. You can’t read Deuteronomy 28:15-68 without seeing that clearly! God often speaks of sending pestilence to judge sin in the Old Testament. (See Sickness as Chastening and Judgment in the Old Testament.)

The afflictions and sicknesses David endured were clearly the result of sin. He says so himself. It should be obvious that sickness as a judgment is a minority condition under our covenant because most (but not all) people healed in Jesus' ministry did not need to be spoken to about sin in their lives. (Jesus did tell the man in John 5:2-19 to sin no more lest a worse thing come upon him.) See Sickness as Chastening and Judgment in the New Testament for more New Testament examples of extreme cases.

Sickness can indeed serve as a wake-up call, and it is better to receive this kind of wake-up call than to stay on the road to forsaking the faith. This is really the mercy of God in action. In fact, that seems to be the idea in 1 Corinthians 11:27-32, where judgment falls before people end up condemned with the world.

The problem is the unwarranted conclusion reached at the end. This conclusion is that sickness is God's way of pointing out sin in your life. That is simply not true. Acts 10:38 could never have been written the way it was if all sickness were God's wake-up calls. There would surely have been some in the crowds who hadn't heeded the wake-up call yet, but they were all healed anyway.

Under the New Covenant there is still a judgment for sin for the stubbornly unrepentant (see Revelation 2:20-23 for a graphic example.) However, the fact that this does happen does not mean that all sickness is God's way of pointing out your sins. God gave you a conscience that can point out your sins without any sickness involved. If you are born again and there is sin in your life, you know it. Sin just has an "icky" feeling to a believer because his born-again spirit will always side against sin. You don't need to wait for a sickness to find out about your sins so that you can repent. And if you do get sick, you should take authority over the sickness and command it to leave your body in the name of Jesus! Don't go on a "witch hunt" for some awful secret sin if you don't know of any. That's the devil's game to get you to accept sickness. God gave you His Word and His Spirit to teach you; He does not need to use the devil's crud.

In no case in the gospel did Jesus refuse to heal someone because God "faithfully afflicted that person for his own good." In fact, Jesus didn't even decide who could be healed. ANYONE who touched Him could be healed in certain cases. He didn't pre-screen people to see how bad their sin was before He let them touch Him. Although some were probably sick as a result of sin in their lives, Jesus offered forgiveness and healing as a package. You never see Him say, "God did that to you for your own good to afflict you so that you won't want to sin. Therefore, it wouldn't be good for Me to heal you at this time. It is GOOD that you are afflicted." Since He hasn't changed, why would you expect Him to deal with any New Testament believer that way? You have to remember that you live under a much better covenant than David ever had. David was not born again. He did not have a new spirit made after God's image in righteousness and true holiness that would never side in with sin. He never had the victory over sin that you have in Christ. He did not have the Holy Spirit living in him as his Teacher. You do! God can teach you from the inside without having to resort to external, fleshly affliction. Unless you're trying to destroy the church or actively hinder the gospel, you need not worry about the judgment that fell on some people in the New Testament.

Also, affliction itself is not good, and David never said it was! He said that the result of his affliction was good, but he never once said that affliction itself was good. You would have to be an idiot or a modern theologian (which are not necessarily mutually exclusive categories) to reach that conclusion. Read those verses carefully!

If you're sure that sickness has been sent in faithfulness to point out your sin, just try to figure out what sin you're being reprov'd for the next time you come down with the flu. I doubt that you will come across any connection. Also, you might want to note the coincidence that during "flu season," God "reproves" so many people, sinners and saints alike, at the same time. Then maybe you'll realize the foolishness of this objection. Maybe you'll even question some other traditions, start receiving the truth, and then NOT have the latest flu bug that is making the rounds.

Resist sickness rather than embracing it and seeing what you can "learn" from it. You are not in David's position, and NO good would come out of your affliction unless you're in such rebellion that your soul is in danger.

Let me give you one more illustration. Sid the Seminarian sends texts to his friends (while driving) about Dolores N. Ferma's latest bestseller, "God Loved Me Enough to Give Me Lyme Disease." He misses the fact that a large branch was blowing into the road and he gets into a car wreck. He goes to get X-rays to see if he's OK. While the car wreck did nothing permanent to him, the X-rays point out a tumor in his abdomen that he didn't know about. The doctors remove the tumor, which otherwise would have grown quickly and become inoperable. Sid then writes an article entitled "It Was GOOD that I Got into a Car Wreck" in which he shares how the car wreck saved his life. He exhorts the rest of us to realize that car wrecks are GOOD, so we should be glad when they happen because God uses car wrecks to point out other problems in our lives. (A Christian magazine turns him down and prints a Dolores N. Ferma article instead because it makes more business sense to promote her to increase sales of her Lyme Disease book, which it so happened that the magazine's publisher also published.) Would you believe that car wrecks are good because of what happened to Sid? If not, you should not believe that being afflicted with sickness is GOOD because of what happened to David.

Objection: We Should Be Grateful for Illness that Throws Us into the Arms of Jesus

This is a variant of the "David Said that It Was GOOD that He Was Afflicted..." objection, but it comes from this slightly different angle:

ILLNESS, MY BLESSED GUIDE INTO THE ARMS OF JESUS

by Noah Menz

I struggle constantly with my condition. But far from being my enemy, I have found that my condition is my friend because it always drives me closer to Jesus. My condition is so bad and so overwhelming, my only option is to run into the arms of my Savior for help. But we should all trust Him for help at all times, so my condition is actually a blessing. So I've decided that it's all right if I'm never well again. I know I wouldn't cling to my Savior so closely if I didn't have my condition. I'm in the arms of Jesus because my condition drove me there! I have stopped seeing my condition as a problem to be solved and have started being grateful for it, because if it weren't for my condition, I would not have to run to Jesus so much and I would not walk as closely with Him. I would never know as I do now what it is like to be held in His loving arms. I bless my illness because it has made my walk with God so much better.

Grateful? So to whom are you going to express your appreciation?

To Satan? Are you seriously going to have a talk with Satan and tell him, "Thank you for sending me my condition. I am so grateful that you did your work of stealing my health and destroying my body to drive me into the arms of my Savior?" Do you seriously think that Satan will EVER do anything to you that is intended to improve your walk with Jesus?

"Yes," someone will say, "Satan MEANT it for evil, but it actually boomeranged on him, because it drove me closer to Jesus, so he actually helped me even though Satan had other plans!" Still, are you going to thank the devil for his efforts to steal from, kill and destroy you? Did anyone in the Bible ever thank the devil for making him sick? If not, why should you be the first to do something so ridiculous?

Or will you thank God – for something He didn't even do? He isn't the one who wants to destroy you, and He isn't the one who brought you "your condition." (Of course, anyone reading this book should know better than to claim a condition by calling it "my condition" – that phrase, especially when repeated incessantly, is like nails on a chalkboard to someone who knows the Bible.)

“OK, you may say, “I know GOD didn’t put this on me, but He ALLOWED it in His loving providence, and for that I am grateful.” God ALLOWS a lot of things that kill people, but that is not because He and Satan are now partners. God ALLOWS people to be sick who don’t know what His Word says. He ALLOWS people to be UNSAVED who don’t know what His Word says, too. He ALLOWS wars and terrorist attacks. He ALLOWS gay pride parades. The fact that God ALLOWS something by no means indicates His approval or complicity in what is happening.

I “get” the fact that good fellowship with Jesus is desirable, and that whoever objects this way is grateful for having that fellowship. I am grateful for His fellowship too, but He does not have to “allow” some horrible affliction for me to enjoy it. If you go along with the argument in question, that “your condition” is your friend that brings you closer to Jesus, you will embrace “your condition” and never want to get rid of it. That is tragic, because Jesus paid a painful price for you to be rid of it when it became “His condition” when He suffered it in your place for your sins. Worse, you’ll encourage others not to receive His freely-offered healing.

While essays like the one above might seem very humble, they actually don’t reflect too well on the author. Another way to word his argument would be, “I’m such a spiritual lug that the only way I will walk with the Lord the way I should is if a condition drives me there in desperation! Even though I know how wonderful it is to fellowship with Jesus, I won’t do it unless I HAVE to because of my condition.” If you already know how wonderful it is to walk with Him and you already realize how beneficial and peaceful it is, why do you still need “your condition” to drive you there if you have any spiritual sense at all? Why not desire to be rid of it and keep your closer walk with the Lord?

This kind of thing is really a false comfort to others dealing with “his condition.” It tries to tell them that “their condition” is really a blessing that brings them closer to Jesus, so why would they want to be healed of such a blessing-in-disguise? (This book deals with the whole “blessing-in-disguise” lie in other places. I don’t need to repeat those comments here.)

But let’s get real. If the “condition” is such a blessing, are they doing anything to get relief from the problems arising from that condition? Most likely, yes! But it is logically inconsistent to seek any kind of relief for a condition that you think is beneficial to your spiritual walk. If pain and overwhelming negative emotions are REALLY your friends, you would not do anything to relieve them such as taking medicine, seeing a doctor or going to a hospital. If your problems are so beneficial, why not abandon all medicine and medical help so that you can be EVEN MORE miserable to be driven EVEN MORE QUICKLY into the arms of Jesus?

And once you’re in the arms of Jesus, why on earth do you need your condition to continue, as it no longer needs to throw you into the arms of Jesus?

If illness literally drove you into the arms of the REAL Jesus when He walked the earth, the anointing on Him would have driven out that illness! Is He less anointed or less compassionate today? If not, we should conclude that you can run to Jesus and GET RID OF your illness.

Objection: So-and-so Had a Vision Where Jesus Said that a Relative Who Died in the Prime of Life Was Called Home by God and Had Finished His Course

So? Sun Myung Moon and Joseph Smith claim that they had visions from God, too. It surely wasn't God talking to them because their "revelations" contradict the Bible. Are you going to believe someone because he said he had a vision? That's how the Moonies and Mormons got deceived, and you'll get deceived too if you believe everyone's vision stories.

I've heard this objection (in person by a speaker), and you might have heard some variation of it. Let me state this as plainly as I can – that vision was not from God and that person did not see and hear the Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus did not tell that person that the prematurely dead relative had finished his course. The person may have been under a lot of psychological pressure and the vision was a fabrication of his mind, not a real vision given by the Holy Spirit. Or it could have been a vision sent from Satan, who likes to masquerade as an angel of light (2 Corinthians 11:14). Satan can give people visions. The fact that you are a Christian and you have a spiritual vision does not mean that you heard from God. New Agers and other cultists have visions. If you smoke or snort certain things, you'll have plenty of visions, too, and they won't be from God. I have never had a vision of the Lord at this writing, though I know quite a few people who have had one. Even if I had one, I would not attempt to convince you that anything I said was true on that basis. The only basis I can legitimately use is Scripture. Otherwise, I could see one thing and someone else could see another thing, and you'd be confused.

Anyone who dies in the prime of life (other than a martyr; this is covered elsewhere) was not called home by God and did not finish the course that God intended for him. Period. If you want to compromise your faith for healing because of someone's alleged vision, that is your loss. It was God's will for the person to live a long, satisfied life (Psalm 91:16) and to be healed and prosperous (3 John 2). God wanted to heal all that person's diseases (Psalm 103:3). Jesus purchased healing for that person so that he would not have to die in the prime of life. For one reason or another, most likely lack of instruction on healing, the person did not receive it.

If you want to fight to defend someone's nice "comforting" vision, that is your privilege. It will also be your privilege to be sick yourself and encourage others to accept a premature and unnecessary death when you believe that such nonsense is really from God. You must draw the line with Scripture and reject anything that is inconsistent with the healing Scriptures quoted throughout these discussions. Don't be moved by anyone's vision, no matter who's it is. Only the Word should move you when it comes to doctrinal matters.

Objection: Saying, “I Am Healed” When You Are Actually Sick Is Lying, and Therefore Sin

What comes to mind with this objection is a person hoarsely croaking to his colleagues at work between coughs and wheezes, “I am healed. Kachhh. I am not sick anymore. Achooo. I do not have a cold.” Because people are trained (at good churches anyway) to speak God’s Word, the objection is that such people are being trained to lie and look ridiculous in front of the world. The world surely does not understand the spiritual principle of speaking truth that is not yet outwardly apparent. Yes, if you are not careful, you will look silly and the world will laugh at you.

First, it is never a lie to speak God’s Word. God cannot lie, so nothing in His Word is ever a lie if you affirm it. God does declare that you were healed (past tense), so if you were healed, you are healed by Jesus’ stripes. You are simply agreeing with God. That is completely proper. Jesus gave Peter his name when he was still flaky; he was hardly a rock at the time. God called Gideon a mighty man of valor when he was still hiding in fear. God told Joshua that He HAD given him Jericho before Jericho was conquered. God called Abram “Abraham” (meaning “father of a multitude”) when he was only the father of one child (Ishmael) who was not even the child of promise. This should all be no surprise, because Romans 4:17 says that God calls those things which be not as though they were. If God can call those things which be not as though they were, so can His children, who are being changed into His image from glory to glory (2 Corinthians 3:18) and are supposed to imitate Him (Ephesians 5:1).

You can be between the point that you believed that you received your healing and the point that it has manifested itself in your body. In other words, you are in the condition the fig tree was in between the time that Jesus cursed it and it began to wither away from the roots and the time that the disciples could see outwardly that the tree was dead.

However, it actually is lying to say, “I am fine. Nothing is wrong with me. I am not coughing or acchhh-chhh-chhh stuffed up.” It is not a lie to say that you are healed by the stripes of Jesus or that you have received your healing from the Lord. It is a lie to say that you don’t have symptoms left in your body when in fact you do.

Given that you are healed by the stripes of Jesus, but unbelievers don’t understand how faith works, what DO you say? How can you avoid looking silly without denying with your mouth that God’s healing power is already at work in your body, which would short-circuit that power and allow the devil to put it back on you?

You are not denying the reality of the symptoms. What you are denying is their right to continue in your body. There is no point in trying to make distinctions between having an illness and having the symptoms of an illness. As far as your body is concerned, you have the illness. However, you recognize that the illness is subject to the Word of God and the name of Jesus. It must leave.

You certainly don't want to confess that the sickness is still yours. It would be counterproductive to your health to say to your co-workers: "I have this miserable cold. Kaccch. I am really sick. At whom will I sneeze next? Achoo!" Satan would love for you to sign for his sickness package by declaring to others that you "have" it. But how can you avoid saying that you have it without looking foolish? You CAN say that you believe that you have received your healing, despite the fact that it has not manifested yet. Unbelievers may well think you're foolish, but they're the foolish ones when they claim that the cold is "their cold," which gives Satan the right to continue the affliction. If you're afraid of people's reaction, you need to pray for more boldness, which is perfectly okay to do.

Your alternative is to "throw in the towel" and accept the sickness, in which case you can say, "I have this miserable cold" and you will indeed have it like everyone else. If you say and do what everyone else says and does, you will get the same result that everyone else gets. You may not risk ridicule if you do this – but you do end up keeping the miserable cold as the others do!

It is always true that you are legally healed by Jesus' sacrifice. To say this is to agree with God. You can receive your healing by faith, and you would not be lying to say that you have received your healing.

I generally wouldn't get involved in deep theological conversations with unbelievers over this. You have no obligation to tell all your co-workers that you are healed by the stripes of Jesus while you are still coughing. Wait until the healing manifests, and then you can tell them how you got it. Saying, "I am healed" is true theologically, but unless you are prepared to share your theology with others, you would indeed look like you are just denying your sickness if all you say is, "I am healed. I do not 'have' this cold anymore." You could say instead, "I am standing on God's Word in regard to this. I will not keep this thing." As I say elsewhere in this book, if you don't believe that you have received your healing so deeply that you're willing to tell others about what you've done, you really haven't received anything. Your mouth speaks out of the abundance of your heart (Matthew 12:34). Then again, you have no real obligation to say anything at all unless you're asked. Even then, you could say, "I don't want to talk about it!" without lying. But the bolder you are, the better.

One day a long time ago when I worked for a certain corporation, some kind of awful thing came on me and I went in the bathroom and threw up. I walked into my boss' office afterward, and he said, "What's going on? You're white as a sheet! You look sick. You should just go home." I felt as bad as I looked at the time, but I told him, "I am going to go home and pray and come back here healed!" He said, "You've never taken a sick day [which was true for all the years I worked there]; just take the rest of the day off!" I said, "No, healthy people should be working. I am going to go home and pray and get healed and come back and work as usual." He still tried to dissuade me, but I went home and I believed that I received my healing. I went back a couple hours later and walked into my boss's office. He asked, "What happened? You look like a completely different person!" I said, "I feel like a completely different person! I told you that I was going to go home and pray and come back healed, and here I am. I'm ready to work!" He was so impressed by this visible manifestation of healing that he insisted that I tell him more about Jesus at some length, which I was happy to do.

That took boldness. You may not feel like you can do that right now, but you can keep building your faith until you get to the point where you can. Satan will try to discourage you by saying, “What if you DON’T get healed? You will look really stupid in front of your boss!” But your Word-filled heart will think instead, “When I DO get healed, it will be a tremendous testimony and witnessing opportunity, and I will be a living, walking witness of Jesus’ resurrection and the reality of His power!”

One more thing: Don’t just say something because it is the “faith” thing to say. If you aren’t in faith and you go around telling people that you’ve received your healing by faith and then you stay sick, you will only sour the people on the idea of receiving by faith. If you’re not sure whether you’re in faith or not, read the article about that subject elsewhere in this book.

When you’re by yourself, remember that God cannot lie (Numbers 23:19), so when you speak what His Word says about yourself, you are NEVER lying!

Objection: David Was Honest Enough to Sing to God about His Sicknesses; We Should Pray “Honest” Prayers Like His Rather Than Saying We’re Healed When Our Bodies Say Otherwise

Part of this is a point worth taking for Christians; we SHOULD be honest with God, realizing that God wants to hear from the YOU who exists NOW, not a future, more perfected, more spiritual version of YOU. YOU are accepted in the Beloved the way YOU are right now (Ephesians 1:6); God is not waiting for a better version of YOU before He wants to talk with YOU! So be honest with Him and talk with Him today. His ears are always open to the prayers of the righteous (Psalm 34:15, 1 Peter 3:12), and you’re the righteous because you’re in Christ. The Psalmist’s instruction to “pour out your heart before Him” is valid today. (Psalm 62:8: “Trust in him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.”) However, you should realize that if your “honest prayer” consists of complaining, then like Asaph, you’ll just end up with an overwhelmed heart and you’ll be worse off (Psalm 77:3).

However, you COULD “admit that you’re sick” without it being a complaint. Why should you then say that you are healed if you’re honest?

God is ALWAYS honest. He says in 1 Peter 2:24 that you were physically healed by what Jesus did. (There is abundant proof elsewhere in this book that the healing discussed is physical, not spiritual.) So you’re not being dishonest when you agree with God!

If you just say what you see, you are no better off than the rest of carnal humanity. You may think you’re being honest by “telling it like it is,” but telling it like it is will not get you set free. For example, to go around saying that you are an alcoholic, even a recovering alcoholic, is counterproductive, as you are simply affirming something you don’t want (I hope). Agreeing with God that you are set free by the Son (John 8:36) and taken completely out of Satan’s power (Colossians 1:13) WILL help you. Saying that you are sick will not get you healed! According to Romans 10:10, confession is made unto salvation (that word includes physical healing and well-being, not just escaping from hell), so it is your mouth that needs to confess (literally “say the same thing [as]”) what God says. This means affirming that Christ has healed you.

Well, why didn’t David do that instead? David did indeed sing about some horrible physical conditions he had. (The Psalms were lyric sheets for songs; they were the precursor to words shown on an overhead screen so that you would know what to sing – though some modern songs have such convoluted melodies, words, accents, beats and crazy vocal ranges, they’re hard to sing anyway even when you see the words, but I digress.) I hope the answer is obvious. David WASN’T healed by the stripes of Jesus because Jesus hadn’t taken his sicknesses as punishment for his sins. He did not have the better covenant that you have.

For those who really get upset at the teaching of “confession” of God’s Word, let me ask you a question. Would you ever get set free from your sins and born into the kingdom of God by praying the following “honest” prayer? “Lord, you know that I’m in sin. Sin has a stranglehold on me. That’s the truth, God; I’m just being honest and pouring out my heart before you. I am wicked. I am unworthy. I deserve to go to hell.”

That “honest” prayer would still leave you sin-strangled, wicked, unworthy and on your way to hell! On the other hand, the confession of Jesus as Lord would get you saved.

Likewise, an “honest” prayer about feeling miserable will still leave you feeling miserable. On the other hand, the confession of Jesus as Healer would get you healed.

If God can call those things that be not as though they were, and you’re supposed to be an imitator of God (Ephesians 5:1), you can also call those things that be not as though they were. (The Greek word mimetes in Ephesians 5:1 translated follower in the King James Version means to be a follower in the sense of being an imitator, and it is used that way elsewhere. Almost all other translations, including the NKJV and Young’s Literal Translation, use the word imitator in Ephesians 5:1.) Your father in the faith (Abraham) did this when he called himself “Father of a Multitude” (which is what Abraham means) when he had not yet had Isaac. He was still “Honest Abe” because he agreed with God. God called Gideon a mighty man of valor when he was still a total wimp from all appearances. God said that He had given Jericho to Joshua while the walls were still standing. Those statements did not reflect physical reality, yet they were all true statements – not dishonest ones.

If you want to see positive change in your life, tell it like THE BIBLE says it is, not like YOUR SENSES say it is! You will have a much better life.

Objection: Laying Hands on the Sick is Not Part of the Great Commission

There are different versions of the Great Commission in different gospels, but a quick reading of Mark's version immediately does away with this objection. Mark 16:15-18 was one continuous discourse by Jesus. "Go ye into all the world..." was part of the same speech as, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." Also, the reason to go and teach all nations was that Jesus has been given all power in heaven and in earth (Matthew 28:18). Anyone who says you can divide Mark's record of the Great Commission down the middle must be making some other erroneous assumption, such as healing not being for this current dispensation or Mark 16:9-20 not being in some early manuscripts. These objections are covered adequately elsewhere in this book.

The apostles certainly thought that laying hands on the sick was part of the Great Commission. They went out and did it, to which many New Testament Scriptures cited in this book attest. In fact, it was so important to go out with this power that Jesus said not to go out until they got it (Luke 24:49)! We have no Biblical basis for reversing this today and thinking that Jesus now wants us to go out with no power.

James 5:14-16 is binding on the church today. We are still to minister in faith to the sick. It is part of New Testament doctrine. The book of James did not pass away with the last apostle! If any church obeys James 5, the sick will be prayed over in faith and they will recover. James 5 is part of the same New Testament as Mark 16 and Matthew 28, and it will be in effect just as long!

Objection: God Does Great Miracles Only During Crucial Times in History

Those promoting this idea point to the fact that there were a lot of miracles when Israel came out of Egypt. There were a lot of miracles at the time of Elijah and Elisha. There were miracles during the Babylonian captivity. There were a lot of miracles surrounding the ministry of Jesus, including the ones done by the apostles. The conclusion is that miracles in history are “clustered” around crucial moments and do not happen continually. Therefore, you are not supposed to believe that God would do miracles today. It is sometimes added that we do not need miracles today.

Even if you agree with this position, that would be a case for, not against, miracles in our day. Since Jesus is to return soon (the Scriptural signs of the “last days” are all around us), is this not a crucial period of history as well? Is this any less notable than the other times mentioned above? If this objection is true, that is precisely why we should be seeing a profusion of miracles in our day.

But of course the proponents of this “cluster” theory declare that there are no real miracles going on today or in any recent time. I don’t know where these people have been hiding, as I see no shortage of them.

It is true that the Middle Ages seemed to lack miracles, but being born again was at an all-time low then, too. Was this because God’s saving power is reserved for specific “crucial” periods of history? No, it has always been available. The problem was that knowledge of the Scriptures that are “able to make you wise unto salvation” was at a low, and that is why more people were not saved.

The fact that miracles did not occur then does not mean that they could not have occurred. There was little knowledge about God’s miracle-working power. It was a matter of human ignorance, not the will of God.

The argument itself is rather thin because it is difficult to define why God specifically chose the time of Elijah and Elisha. What great event was going on then? Why then and not during the reign of earlier or later kings? The reason given by one proponent of this theory is that Israel and Judah were at a critical stage in their relationship with God. But this was surely true in many earlier and later instances.

Besides, there were other miracles throughout the Bible. The miraculous victories in Canaan took place a generation after the miracles in Exodus. Gideon and Samson did miracles in their own generations. What about Sarah being able to conceive? What about Jehoshaphat’s miraculous victory? What about Hezekiah’s sundial that went backwards? What about David stealing Saul’s sword while the army was miraculously put into a deep sleep? What about the mighty outpouring in Solomon’s temple? What about the fact that miracles happened from the time Jesus entered the ministry through the last chapter of Acts?

It is demonstrable that there are indeed “clusters” of miracles at certain times, although miracles have always been part of human history. This is largely because when Israel strayed from the Lord, miracles were at a premium, and Israel did a lot of straying! The miracles were done by those who clung to the Lord, not by the apostates.

It astounds me that anyone can read today’s news and say that we don’t need miracles today. Don’t the people everywhere dying with AIDS need miracles? Don’t those with birth defects need miracles? Don’t the insane in our asylums need miracles?

It is a senseless retort that we don’t need miracles today because we don’t need proof of Christ’s divinity now that we have the Bible. Don’t sinners today need every bit as much tangible proof of the resurrection as sinners in the days of the apostles? Overall, people in the world are not very convinced! Did God, who is “no respecter of persons,” give men of old a better chance to see His power than He is willing to give us?

Because many of the miracles were done on the medically hopeless, does it make sense to you that God would heal the incurable in past times, but would not heal the incurable, or even the curable, today? Did He do it just to make a point about Jesus? Should the terminally ill person wish that he were born in the first century so that we would have had a chance to be healed miraculously? I would rather that this thought perish than that the sick perish!

Fortunately, the gift of “working of miracles” is still for today. (The argument that the perfect has come [supposedly meaning the Bible] and that spiritual gifts ended with the last apostle is proved untrue elsewhere in this book.) And as long as the gift of “working of miracles” is in operation, there will be miracles in operation! In fact, even without a spiritual gift in operation, your faith can receive a miracle for yourself. Read Galatians 3:5-6.

The kingdom of God is not in word, but in power (1 Corinthians 4:20). To say that we have the Word without the power today is to say that the kingdom of God is not for today.

God and Jesus have not changed (Malachi 3:6, James 1:17, Hebrews 13:8). If we are not seeing miracles, it is because we have changed, and not for the better. If we have changed, let us change back and conform to the Bible standard rather than explaining it away with weak arguments.

Objection: The Lord Did Not Say that These Signs Would Follow Those Who Believe ALWAYS, So They Were Just to Get the Church Started

Based on this thin argument, we could reach all kinds of other incorrect conclusions:

“We don’t need to evangelize today because the statement three verses before Mark 16:18 did not tell us to go out into all the world and preach the gospel to everyone ALWAYS. That was just to kick-start the church.”

“God doesn’t supply all YOUR needs today because He didn’t say that He would supply your needs according to His riches in Christ Jesus ALWAYS. That must just have been when the church was starting.”

“The Lord will not deliver YOU from every evil work, and preserve YOU unto His heavenly kingdom because He did not add ALWAYS after that statement.”

“You cannot do all things through Christ who strengthens you TODAY because God did not add ALWAYS to the end of that promise. He favored the Early Church when it came to that.”

In fact, if you really look at everything God says about who you are and what you have, you’ll see that hardly any of those great statements about the New Testament Christian contain the word ALWAYS. So perhaps the whole bunch of statements was only for the Early Church by the objector’s logic. If the objector were to counter that those “who you are and what you have” words DO apply to all of us because the Word is profitable for doctrine, you could point out that based on his reasoning, God’s statement that His Word is profitable for doctrine isn’t necessarily true today either because that statement doesn’t have the word ALWAYS in it, either!

At this point, I’d hope the objector would have to admit that ALL Scripture is God-breathed whether a particular verse has the word ALWAYS in it or not. That would include Mark 16:18.

In fact, the only time you are justified NOT seeing an implicit ALWAYS in Scripture is when Scripture itself indicates that something is not ALWAYS to be. For example, Jesus told His disciples that the way they would pray would change after His departure. He had given His disciples the so-called Lord’s Prayer, which does not ask for anything in the name of Jesus, but He said that the day was coming when you would ask the Father for things in His name. In the Old Covenant, there are references to a New Covenant that would replace the Old Covenant. So there are times that things are not ALWAYS going to continue as they are, but they are explicitly noted.

Besides, it would not be true if Jesus said that those who believe would lay hands on the sick and see them recover ALWAYS – meaning FOREVER – because they will not do so on the new earth in which righteousness dwells and in which sickness never dwells. There will be no need for this promise when sickness is not present in anyone’s body!

We know that healing won't be done away with until the "perfect" has come, at which point we will know everything fully. That time has NOT come, so that which is in part – the manifestations of the Holy Spirit, including gifts of healings, WILL continue – ALWAYS – until then.

Isn't it interesting that world evangelism would be OK with the objector despite the fact that ALWAYS isn't part of that verse, and yet the healing of the sick would not be OK because the word ALWAYS isn't part of that verse? Yet both are part of the same Great Commission. So if "go" is ALWAYS, "these signs shall follow" is also ALWAYS.

Objection: Not All of “Those Who Believe” Will Pick Up Snakes, So Not All of “Those Who Believe” Are Supposed to Lay Hands on the Sick and Have Them Recover (Mark 16:17-18)

On the surface, this seems to be a reasonable argument. You could substitute the phrase about drinking any deadly thing and having it not harm you, because a minority of Christians will ever have that experience, and make the same argument.

However, it makes sense to let Scripture explain itself. Deliberate snake handling is nowhere encouraged by Scripture and was not practiced in the book of Acts. However, Paul had a snake bite him in Acts 28:3-6. He suffered no harm even though the natives of the island were waiting for him to drop dead. The apostles and others in the book of Acts Jesus most definitely laid hands on the sick and healed them. Jesus said that we would do the works that He did and greater (John 14:12). He did not pick up snakes on purpose. He left an example for us to follow, so we should lay hands on the sick in the His name and see them recover, but not pick up snakes on purpose.

Also, there is an if before the deadly thing statement, so Jesus did not mean that ALL believers will drink deadly things and be unharmed. Because this immediately follows the snake statement, the clear implication is Christ’s followers will be supernaturally protected from accidental snakebites and poisonings if they should happen. This does not give anyone the right to deliberately drink battery acid while cuddling a rattlesnake. Most Christians will never need to claim these promises, but thank God, the promise of protection is there in case they need it. But there is no if before the statement about laying hands on sick people. It is God’s will for all believers to enjoy the glorious privilege of laying hands on the sick in the name of Jesus and seeing them recover.

Objection: Mark 16:17-18 Can't Mean that All Believers Can Lay Hands on the Sick because Not All Believers Did So in the Bible

This is a half-truth. It is certainly true that not all believers today lay hands on the sick, and it is not recorded that all believers did so in the days of the early church either. Not only that, but Jesus did not even say that ALL believers would cast out demons, speak in tongues or lay hands on the sick. That would not have been a true statement, as plenty of Christians today have never cast out a demon, spoken in tongues or laid hands on a sick person in the name of Jesus. However, there certainly would be those who would. The question is, is this by God's choice or by man's choice?

The problem is with the implication that some believers CANNOT lay hands on the sick and see them recover, which would make this a privilege available to some believers but not others. Jesus said that if you believe on Him, you will do the works that He did and greater (John 14:12). He laid hands on the sick and they recovered, so this privilege must be available to anyone who believes. The fact that some do not do this does not prove that it was God's will for them not to do it.

I've met Christians whose love walk was a train wreck. These Christians did have the love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit, and they did have new spirits created in God's image, and God is love. Therefore, they were able to walk in love because they were Christians. The fact that not all Christians actually walk in love does not "prove" that "not all believers can walk in love." So it is silly to take that same logic and apply it to laying hands on the sick.

There is a difference between "All believers CAN lay hands on the sick" and "All believers DO lay hands on the sick." The first statement is true while the second statement is false.

Let's consider a parallel situation. Based on the same passage in question, all believers CAN speak in tongues (after receiving the Holy Spirit). However, not all believers DO speak in tongues. The fact that not all believers DO speak in tongues does not negate the fact that speaking in tongues is AVAILABLE to all believers (Acts 2:39). It is explicitly God's will that we ALL speak in tongues (1 Corinthians 14:5) even if not all believers actually DO it.

Objection: Mark 16:18 Speaks Collectively – Only Those Who Actually Have Gifts of Healings Can Heal the Sick by Laying on of Hands

The qualifications for elders in 1 Timothy 3 and Titus 1, together with the command for elders to minister to the sick in James 5:14-16 together disprove this. Nowhere in the Bible is it a necessary qualification to be a church elder to flow in gifts of healings. You must be able to pray the prayer of faith as in the passage in James, but you are not required to have special manifestations of healings in your ministry. If this were required, Paul would have included that on the list of requirements for elders.

So even those WITHOUT gifts of healings should lay hands on the sick with the expectation that they will recover.

So that's one way to disprove this objection. Another is the more brute-force method of finding other verses with the phrase "them that believe" and seeing if ANY of them could refer to a SUBSET of believers as opposed to ALL believers:

John 1:12:

But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

Romans 3:22:

Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:

Romans 4:11:

And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

1 Corinthians 1:21:

For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

1 Corinthians 10:27:

If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake.

[This is one case where you can argue for a subset, but only because of the use the phrase "ANY OF them that believe" as opposed to just "them that believe."]

1 Corinthians 14:22:

Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

Galatians 3:22:

But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

2 Thessalonians 1:10:

When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

Hebrews 10:39:

But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

To be fair, we should also consider the phrase those who believe, which only appears once:

1 Timothy 4:10:

For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.

We're in trouble if He is the Saviour of only a subset of those who believe!

It's clear enough to me that when God talks about people who believe, He means all the believing ones, not just some of the believing ones. So this objection cannot be true.

Objection: Acts 8 Proves that the Apostles Had Unique Powers

The gist of this objection is that Philip, who was not an apostle, did not get the Samaritans filled with the Holy Spirit. This only happened after Peter and John (who were apostles) came down from Jerusalem and laid hands on the Samaritans who were already believers. Therefore (supposedly) only the apostles had the authority to impart the Holy Spirit to people through the laying on of hands. We know that Paul, who was also an apostle, also imparted the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands at Ephesus (Acts 19:1-6).

However, this objection is disproved by Acts 9:17, where Ananias, who was NOT an apostle, laid hands on Saul of Tarsus to be filled in the Holy Spirit. We know that this was successful because Paul told the Corinthians that he spoke in tongues more than any of them (1 Corinthians 14:18).

This objection is also disproved by the fact that someone who was NEVER commissioned by Jesus as an apostle was going around doing Jesus' works in His name anyway (Mark 9:38-39)!

Stephen's "wonders and miracles" ministry in Jerusalem (Acts 6:8) shows that signs and wonders weren't limited to the apostles because Stephen wasn't an apostle.

Philip's successful healing ministry in Samaria (Acts 8:5-8) also shows that dramatic, city-changing healings weren't limited to the apostles, because Philip wasn't an apostle either.

Of course, Jesus' statement that believers would lay hands on the sick and they would recover (Mark 16:18) also demonstrates that miracles can be done by regular believers. Paul spoke of miracles in Galatia being done "by the hearing of faith" (Galatians 3:5-6), not by special apostolic power.

Objection: No One Today Has Apostolic Power because a Prerequisite for Being an Apostle is Having Walked with Jesus in Person (Acts 1:20-22)

Acts 1:20-22:

For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishoprick let another take.

Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us,

Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection.

The Bible does distinguish the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb from apostles in general:

Revelation 21:14:

And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

If these apostles have a chat page in heaven, it's a closed group! There will never be a 13th or 14th out of the 12 apostles of the Lamb. So they are in a special class that no person today could be in. Not even Paul was part of this select group.

But the objector misses the glaringly obvious truth that Paul called himself an apostle, and he refers to others as apostles who were not mentioned in the four gospels. Paul did not walk with Jesus in person before His death and resurrection! So the whole basis for the objection has fallen apart. Paul certainly walked in apostolic power even though he was never one of the original twelve Apostles of the Lamb.

Paul introduced himself as an apostle in his letters, stating that Jesus had made him one, not man:

Romans 1:1:

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God,

1 Corinthians 1:1:

Paul, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother,

2 Corinthians 1:1:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

Galatians 1:1:

Paul, an apostle, (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead;)

Ephesians 1:1:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus:

Colossians 1:1:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother,

1 Timothy 1:1:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope;

2 Timothy 1:1:

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus,

Titus 1:1:

Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness;

Moreover, he referred to other apostles who were not Apostles of the Lamb either:

Romans 16:7:

Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellowprisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me.

Even if you wanted to argue that Andronicus and Junia were “of note” when the apostles talked to each other rather than being apostles themselves, you cannot escape Paul’s teaching that there will continue to be apostles until the Body of Christ is completely mature, which won’t happen in this lifetime:

Ephesians 4:11:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

How long were they given?

Ephesians 4:13:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

That hasn’t happened yet!

So there are STILL apostles today who are not numbered among the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb. Therefore, we should continue to expect “the signs of an apostle” that Paul did (2 Corinthians 12:12) to be among us today as well.

Objection: Jesus Did No More Healing Miracles after He Rose from the Dead

The objector is trying to build a case that Jesus' healing ministry was a unique event, limited to His earthly ministry before He died, and that the "fact" that it did not continue after His resurrection proves it. This supposedly means that we should not have healing events today.

Based on that illogic, we should not preach the gospel to the unsaved, either. Jesus appeared to those who believed in Him, but we don't see Him preaching to unbelievers after He rose. So based on this objector's argument, there should be no more evangelistic meetings today because Jesus was done reaching unbelievers during His earthly ministry! But we can see that this falls apart because Jesus told us to go preach the gospel to everyone, promising that He would be with us even until the end of the age. Thus, the gospel should be preached until He returns, so evangelistic meetings are appropriate until He returns. Of course, if we're going to preach, we should preach the full gospel as they did in the Bible, not just the get-out-of-hell part of it.

Biblically, the argument is incorrect at face value anyway. Luke opens the book of Acts stating that his former treatise (the gospel of Luke) was about all that Jesus began to do and teach until the day when He was taken up (Acts 1:1-2)! So Jesus was not done doing and teaching just because He ascended to heaven! He was only beginning something at that time, not ending it! Jesus is still doing miracles and teaching today through His Body, the Church. He isn't doing it physically in person as He did when He walked the earth, but we who are now walking the earth are His vessels through whom He can CONTINUE to do and teach things.

Also, this objection can't be right because the BIBLE is right in the case of Peter and Aeneas. In Acts 9:34, Peter said to Aeneas, "Jesus Christ makes you whole." So Jesus was STILL making people whole after He rose to heaven – through His Church. So the assertion that Jesus did not more miracles after He rose from the dead has been disproven, and this objection is toast.

Objection: Christ's Command to HEAL THE SICK Stopped before the Cross and Has Never Been Repeated Since Then, Even in Other New Testament Writings

First, I wouldn't expect Jesus to appear in the Epistles and command the sick to be healed because He had already ascended to His Father. So of course He does not command healing of the sick in person in the epistles.

Second, the objection is an inaccurate statement because AFTER the cross, Jesus told His followers that they would receive power after the Holy Spirit came on them (Acts 1:8). This is the same power (and the same Greek word for it) that Jesus had in His earthly ministry in the four gospels. What do you suppose this power was for? We'd have to check the Book of Acts to see what kind of power was in manifestation. How about healing of ALL sick people in Jerusalem in Acts 5:12-16 and the healing of ALL sick people on the island of Melita in Acts 28:8-9? What about Philip's miracles (Acts 8:6), Stephen's wonders and miracles (Acts 6:8), and the "acts of an apostle" (signs, wonders and mighty deeds) that Paul did at Corinth (2 Corinthians 12:12)? We must conclude that Jesus' reference to Holy Spirit power (Luke 24:49, Acts 1:8) – which He made AFTER the cross – involved the healing of the sick.

Third, Jesus said that the person who believes on him would do the works that He did and greater because He went to His Father (John 14:12). Thus, believers doing His works and greater works was explicitly to be done AFTER the cross, as the cross was obviously before Jesus went to His Father.

Fourth, Paul prayed for regular believers, not fellow apostles, that they would fulfill the good pleasure of God's goodness and the work of faith with power (2 Thessalonians 1:11). Paul's prayer was after the cross.

Fifth, it was AFTER the cross that Jesus commissioned His disciples to preach to everyone, adding that the ones who heard them and believed would lay hands on the sick and they would recover (Mark 16:18). So it is CLEARLY Jesus' intent that healing the sick would continue after the cross.

Sixth, the last verse in Mark's gospel testifies that the LORD worked with the believers as they went and preached everywhere, confirming the Word with the accompanying SIGNS (Mark 16:20). So Jesus definitely isn't done doing healing miracles and other signs and wonders! He is working through "those who believe" to continue those works today!

Objection: The Greater Works Jesus Talked about Were Spiritual – Raising the Spiritually Dead to Life

I agree! Jesus never got anyone born again or baptized with the Holy Spirit while He walked the earth, but it is our privilege to do these “greater” spiritual works today. So while He might have meant greater quantity as well, this interpretation of “greater quality” works is OK with me, though I wouldn’t preclude it to mean greater healing miracles as well. But for the sake of discussion of this objection, it’s OK if we assume that He meant getting people saved.

If that’s what He meant, this STILL doesn’t work as an objection to doing the works of Jesus! Just read the whole verse (as the objector should have done)! “The works that I do he shall do also, and greater works that these shall he do.” (This is also part of John 14:12.) Jesus said that we would do the works that He did – NOT referring to getting anyone born again – along with the greater works. He preached, taught, healed the sick, cast out demons and did other miracles. Therefore, we should expect to do the same. Case closed.

Objection: Jesus Only Said that He Was Sent to Heal the Brokenhearted, Not the Sick

Luke 4:18-19:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,
To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

This claim, based on the verses above, is dubious to begin with, because Scripture refers to sickness as captivity (Job 42:10) and being under the devil's harsh control (see Notes on Acts 10:38). Recovering of sight to the blind could certainly include physical healing. (It certainly does NOT refer to people who were blind to New Testament truths, as it would be impossible for people to "recover" something they never had in the first place.) They that are "bruised" could be figurative or literal as well (unfortunately, the Greek word used for bruised is not found anywhere else in the New Testament so we have no other usage of it to compare).

Jesus obviously WAS sent to heal the physically sick, because He healed multitudes of sick people and stated that He only did that which pleased the Father (John 8:29). Jesus came from heaven to do the will of Him who sent Him (John 6:38). He said that He did His works in His Father's name (John 10:25) and that He did the works of His Father (John 10:37-38).

Thus, it was God's will to heal the sick, and He sent Jesus to do it. His statements above furnish ample proof of this.

This objection shows the danger of pulling one Scripture out of the context of the rest of the Bible to make a point.

Objection: Jesus Withdrew Himself from Multitudes Who Wanted His Healing (Luke 5:15-16)

Luke 5:15-16:

But so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

And he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

The objector is trying to make a case that Jesus was not willing to heal everyone. However, this passage certainly doesn't show that.

First, Luke does NOT state that Jesus denied healing to the multitudes who came to hear and be healed. If anything, it appears that He did preach to these multitudes and heal them, after which He withdrew Himself into the wilderness. If Jesus had not been physically present, there would not have been great multitudes gathered to listen to Him and to receive healing! Crowds didn't just gather hoping that Jesus would show up where they were!

Second, His withdrawal into the wilderness was to have some all-important prayer time. It had nothing to do with a lack of willingness to heal the sick. Actually, if He wanted to continue to heal the sick, He needed time to hear from God. Ministers who just "minister" all the time and get "too busy to pray" will eventually burn out. Jesus knew better than to let this happen.

Objection: Jesus Was MADE SIN for Us. He Was Not MADE SICKNESS for Us.

The objection at face value is true, but the intended implication, that sickness isn't in the atonement, is false.

Jesus wasn't "made bruising" or "made affliction" or "made smiting" or "made stripes" or "made wounds" for us, either. His bruising, affliction, smiting, stripes and wounds were punishment for our sins, which He bore when He "became sin" in our place. He was MADE SIN, but He was not MADE PUNISHMENT FOR SIN. Instead, He bore the punishment for sin.

But while He was not MADE SICKNESS, He was definitely MADE SICK. Isaiah 53:10 literally says that God "made Him sick" (the literal Hebrew translation of where the King James Version says that God "put him to grief"). Isaiah 53:4 shows us that it was OUR sicknesses – the ones we deserved – that He was bearing. Jesus was MADE SICK so that we don't have to bear that part of the punishment for our sins.

See Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption for more on this subject.

Objection: Healing Will Not Be Available UNIVERSALLY until the Millennium

To say that healing is not available universally today is to contradict the Scriptures that state that God is “no respecter of persons,” in other words, that He does not play favorites. God would be playing favorites if He would grant healing to some but not others who were in the same circumstances and walking in the same light. Of course, the man with no faith in the healing Scriptures will not be healed while a man who believes them will be healed. This has no more to do with playing favorites than the fact that many men will burn forever in the lake of fire while others go to heaven. Heaven is available to all, but not everyone will go there because not all men believe the gospel and receive Christ. The man who believes is saved, while the man who does not believe is damned.

During the Millennium, things will be much better than they are now. They will be even better in heaven and on the new earth in which righteousness dwells. The fact that everyone will be healed on the new earth does not mean that this blessing isn’t available now. In heaven, God’s will is done. God’s will is healing. Today, God’s will is not always done because man and sin have messed things up. (If God’s will were always done on the earth, no one would die unsaved.) But all who believe today can have healing. The fact that we will have it better and easier later is no reason not to believe for all our covenant blessings now.

Healing was available universally during Christ’s ministry. Not all the sick people on earth at the time were healed, but healing was certainly available. Even some outsiders to Judaism came and were healed, although they had no technical right to do so because they were outside of God’s covenant at the time. Those who heard that Jesus of Nazareth was the Anointed One came and were healed, and Jesus never made an exception. There were surely those like the ones at the Pool of Bethesda who did not know who Jesus was and were not healed by Him. Probably some of the crowd around the woman with the issue of blood needed healing. All we know for sure is that woman believed based on the reports of others and that her faith made her whole. When people were enlightened about Jesus’ ministry, they came and were healed. It is the same today.

Because Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), it is illogical that He would grant healing to whoever came for it then but refuse to do so now, but then be willing to do it again during the Millennium. Healing will be the norm in the Millennium because Satan will be bound during that time. Men will be able to know the truth without his hindrance. Part of this truth is that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains, and with His stripes, we are healed (Isaiah 53:4-5).

Peter was not in the Millennium when all the sick who came for healing were healed in Jerusalem (Acts 5:12-16). Paul was not in the Millennium when all the sick people on the island of Melita came and were healed (Acts 28:8-9). The Holy Spirit did not make any exceptions for these people.

Because Jesus purchased healing for everyone by His stripes, healing MUST be available UNIVERSALLY today, just as the new birth is available UNIVERSALLY today because Jesus purchased it for everyone by His blood.

Objection: If Hebrews 13:8 Really Means what Faith Healers Say It Does, Jesus Will Be Healing Us Forever in Heaven as He Did on the Earth

The objector doesn't doubt that Jesus Christ is the same Person forever, but he thinks that Jesus will act differently today from how He acted in the four gospels. He assumes that the fact that Jesus will not heal anymore in heaven while He did heal on the earth in the past proves that He CAN act differently today as well as in the future – by NOT healing people.

One could add correctly that He will act differently during the Tribulation than He will act during the Church Age, despite the fact that He does not change.

So it seems that there can be a proper distinction between “Jesus Christ is the same” and “Jesus Christ acts the same.” (In the Greek, there is neither a word is or acts; it's just “Jesus Christ the same” – as the King James Version renders it.) Can this distinction be used to prove that Jesus Christ does not ACT the same today as He did during His earthly ministry?

In some ways, He can't act the same. He ministered as a man on the earth empowered by the Holy Spirit. He cannot do that today. He has to use His Body, the Church. He has empowered His Body by sending the same Holy Spirit who empowered Him. That is why we can do the same works that He did – we do them as men on the earth empowered by the Holy Spirit. He didn't have to do the miracles in anyone's name other than the Father's. We do works today in His name, as is evident both by His teaching and by the book of Acts, where mighty miracles were wrought in the name of Jesus.

What does it mean to do works in His name? Does it just mean that we add the tag line “in the name of Jesus” to whatever we're praying and that it's some kind of incantation that will guarantee results? No, when you do something in the name of Jesus it means that you do it by His authority. You are taking authority that Jesus gave you. He said that if you ask anything in His name, HE will do it (John 14:13-14). So He still has an active role on the earth today, but He needs our cooperation. Our part is to ask in the name of Jesus. His part is to DO it. We have the easier of the two parts.

He is the vine and we are the branches (John 15:5). Our life comes from the vine. We do things as His personal ambassadors on the earth. He works through us.

Because Jesus IS the same, His WILL must be the same even if His actions are done through different means. Given that it always WAS Jesus' will to heal during His earthly ministry, and given that He IS the same yesterday, today and forever, His will must be to heal TODAY just as much as it was YESTERDAY.

The objector would probably like to jump into this book at this point and scream, “No, it WON’T be His will to heal TOMORROW in heaven because there will be no sickness. So His will CAN change, as I said in my objection!” Very well, let’s just rephrase this. It was Jesus’ will for EVERYONE to be in health yesterday, Jesus’ will for EVERYONE to be in health today, and Jesus’ will for EVERYONE to be in health forever. There is no change at all in His will. The only difference is that in heaven, where only God’s will is ever done, there will be no opposition to everyone prospering and being in health even as their souls prosper (3 John 2), and hence there will be no new sicknesses to heal.

So Jesus will not be healing us forever, and thus His actions will be different from His actions today, when there is still a need to heal the sick. But because He IS the same, His WILL concerning our health cannot change. He wants the sick healed today just as much as He ever did.

Objection: God Meets Your Spiritual Needs, Not Your Physical Needs

How different “religious” teaching is from the Bible! No one who spends a serious amount of time in the Word of God could ever make such a silly statement. It amazes me how many people will believe something like this just because someone says it.

Consider Philippians 4:19, where Paul told a giving church that God would supply all their needs according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus. He was clearly talking about physical needs – money in particular. He devoted much of 2 Corinthians 8 and 9 to God’s meeting of your financial needs. In 3 John 2, we see that God wants us to prosper (physically) and to be in health (physically) even as our souls prosper.

Jesus said that God would meet your physical needs in Matthew 6:25-34. There is no way to spiritualize food and clothing.

The Old Testament blessings for keeping the Law and the curses for not keeping the Law (see Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39) are almost all physical in nature. Yes, you will suffer spiritually by being out of the will of God, but you will also suffer physically. Likewise, you will be blessed spiritually for walking with God, and blessed physically as well. These chapters mean nothing if not that.

The multitudes healed in Jesus’ ministry were taken care of physically! Jesus always did what pleased God, so it pleases God to heal you and to meet your physical needs. Jesus also met physical needs when He turned water into wine (John 2:1-11), multiplied bread and fishes (Matthew 14:17-21, Mark 6:41-44, Luke 9:16-17, John 6:5-13, Matthew 15:34-38, Mark 8:1-9), provided supernatural fish catches (Luke 5:4-7, John 21:5-6), stopped a storm (Mark 4:35-40, Luke 8:23-25), and told Peter to get money from a fish (Matthew 17:24-27). In fact, because of His compassion, we see that Jesus went everywhere meeting people’s physical needs, most notably, needs for healing. Since He has not changed and the will of God (which Jesus always did) has not changed, it is still the will of God to care for all of your physical needs.

It is religious slander of God’s character to say that God is only interested in your spiritual needs. Aren’t you interested in the physical needs as well as the spiritual needs of your children? Your heavenly Father is even more interested in your physical needs!

Objection: Sickness Can Be Proof of God's Special Favor

I really wish that Christians would stop buying books written by famous people who make such inane statements. There never seems to be a shortage of such books in the Christian bookstores (and elsewhere, wherever crummier Christian books are sold). Why people buy books that help them be sick is beyond me. Why people write such books is even farther beyond me, unless they misunderstand what the demonized boy's father meant when he said, "Help my unbelief!"

The premise behind this objection is that God has a special purpose for sickness and suffering, and that maybe you have your condition because God knows that you are now so spiritually advanced that you are ready for this great challenge. This goes right along with the asinine statement, "God gives special children (referring to those with severe birth defects) to special parents." The truth is, there are plenty of wretched sinners out there with the same condition you have and whose kids have the same conditions yours have, and they've never so much as lifted a finger to please God. Not only won't they learn a thing from it, they'll just be ornery and mean and mad at God for "letting" it happen. Ask the parents of a child with severe problems whether they think that they're "special" to God because they have such a child. The world knows better; it's only gullible Christians who buy into such rubbish.

On the other hand, the old Jewish idea that having a special-needs child is a result of sin in your life is not any more comforting or true. (Recall that in John 9:1-7, they wanted to know if a blind-from-birth man's parents had sinned. Jesus said no.) This idea is unfair to the parents, who are probably not worse people than anyone else.

The righteous should increase in favor with God and man, as Jesus did (Luke 2:52). Given this, Jesus did the parents of the man born blind a great disservice by healing their "special" child if you accept this silly "God's special favor" argument. Imagine the heartbreak for the parents to find out that aren't so "special" anymore and that now they have less special favor from God. Would you be disappointed if your "special" child who participates in the "Special" Olympics got miraculously healed and neither the child nor you were "special" or had "special favor" anymore? Hah! You'd be dancing in the street, and you know it!

If you really believe that sickness is proof of God's special favor, you should get sick and cough on all your family and friends so that they can enjoy this special favor, too. Of course, you should not take medicine, since that might relieve your suffering and lessen your favor. And I assume that you would never go to the doctor or the hospital to try to escape this "special favor." Indeed, if you believe that sickness is the work of God, then you, your doctor, your pharmacy, the hospital, your insurance company, etc., are sinning because you are all conspiring together to undo the work of God in your life and reduce His special favor.

If sickness is from God, and God made all things good, you should pray to be sick when you are well. Can you see how ridiculous this reasoning gets?

If God gives His children sickness as a token of His love, surely you should find at least one place where Jesus, moved with love and compassion, made multitudes sick. Then more multitudes should have come forward to receive such wonderful gifts, and we should have passages like this in our Bibles:

Hezekiah 15:7-12:

And multitudes came from every quarter to be made sick by the Lord. They laid the well at His feet, and as many as touched Him had to be carried away in beds and stretchers. And the Pharisees as well as the disciples wondered, saying, "We sure never saw it like this before!"

And Jesus found a man with 20/20 vision in both of his eyes, who had never been blind since his birth. He said, "Be blind!" Immediately, the man was unable to see, and he glorified the God of Israel for counting him worthy and mature enough to endure this proof of God's special favor.

And a man who could walk approached Jesus in the crowd and touched His robe. Immediately he became "differently abled," and he rejoiced in the favor he had been given.

And a man in perfect health worshipped, and said, "Lord, if you are willing, you can make me sick!" And Jesus said, "I will. Receive leprosy now because you're really special. Glorify God with your mature response to this special test for which only special people qualify! Receive AIDS also, O greatly favored one!"

And Jesus commissioned the disciples, saying, "These signs shall follow you. You shall lay hands on the well in my name and they shall become sick as a sign of God's special favor."

But among the Gentiles, no one got saved, because verily, no one wanted anything to do with a God or the disciples of a God who makes people sick and declares it to be a special blessing.

But we know that Jesus is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8). If He did not make anyone sick to help him grow during His earthly ministry, He is not doing it today. If His only action regarding sickness was healing then, that is His only action now when people come to Him for healing.

If sickness is the work of God, Jesus was a big-time sinner, because He went everywhere un-doing the works of God. Surely, if there were a special category of those whom God wants sick, Jesus would have encountered at least one such person in his travels. I won't hold my breath while you try in vain to find such a person in the Gospels.

No, Jesus declared that He only did His Father's works. His Father's works did not consist of sickening the well. Therefore, the works of God today are not sickening the well, either. You are mistaken if you think that God wants you to be sick for some special reason. Jesus never told anyone who came to Him for healing, "Stay sick. You have special favor." Jesus has not changed. The Church has changed, and not for the better. I hope that this book can help undo that change and get Christians back on track with God's healing plan. Maybe while I'm at it I can decrease the public's seemingly insatiable appetite for pseudo-Christian foolishness in book form.

Objection: God Could Give Disease as a Prophetic Sign

As “out-there” as this sounds, a famous person suggested that her cancer could be a prophetic sign that paralleled developments in Israel. Supposedly, she was being used like Old Testament prophets to have her very life be a sign of prophetic events soon to unfold.

Well, we aren’t under the Old Testament anymore, and we don’t read of a single case in the New Testament where anyone went through something awful as a prophetic sign to the church.

This objection has to assume that the person is standing in the office of an Old Testament prophet. There are no Old Testament prophets in the New Testament! Agabus, a true New Testament prophet, foretold two events (that we know of), but he never told anyone what to do. An Old Testament prophet could tell you what to do, and if you disobeyed, you could become part of the food chain when a bear showed up! But there are NO cases in the New Testament of any prophet acting like an Old Testament prophet. The Old Testament prophet actually had more authority than a New Testament prophet.

We don’t see prophets today showing signs that affect nations the way that Ezekiel and Hosea did.

Nor is there a single case where Jesus told someone to keep his sickness because it was divinely given as a prophetic sign of what was going on in Israel or anywhere else.

This just gets added to the list of “why God didn’t heal me” excuses, but it’s always sad when people “bite” on the devil’s deceptions that are designed to get people to accept and even welcome their sicknesses when they should be taking authority over them in the name of Jesus. This thinking promotes a kind of pride that you are such a big deal that God would use you as an international sign. Satan is the one who wants you to be in that kind of pride, being quite a pride expert himself. It is far better to humble yourself and accept the healing that Jesus has provided. Please be assured that the Lord Jesus would NEVER go along with afflicting anyone as a prophetic sign.

Objection: Pain is God's Megaphone to Raise a Deaf World

The fact that a famous and beloved Christian author said this does not mean it's true. Does God use what the Bible attributes to Satan to get people's attention? Is GOD now the source of our pains because He wants to get our attention?

That would be unlike God. His usual way of dealing with humanity is to give His word and expect you to heed it. If you don't heed it, you suffer the consequences, but God doesn't send pain to get in your way of making wrong choices.

If this absurd statement were true, everyone who is in pain right now should be paying close attention to God's words because God got his attention through His megaphone. You know full well that's not so. If anything, sinners in pain are more likely to curse God for "allowing" the pain to happen to them.

If this absurd statement were true, a Christian who loves God and tries to serve Him wholeheartedly would never experience pain because He would not need God's megaphone to raise him out of his deafness. Were Paul's pains God's attempt to get his attention because he wasn't walking closely enough to get any revelations? No, Paul's pains were the results of persecution, and God did not send those pains – man inflicted them.

Perhaps some, like David, got afflicted and wised up, realizing that following God's ways were better after all. But to say that pain is His attention-getting method contradicts what Jesus said. Jesus said that when the Holy Spirit came (which He did), He would "reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment," in particular the sin of not knowing Jesus (John 16:8-9). So God does not send PAIN to get people's attention in the Church Age; He sent the Holy Spirit. Those with ears to hear Him will hear Him, and the others will just "remain ignorant still" (1 Corinthians 14:38).

Objection: Sickness is One “Cross” We Must Bear

I felt led to minister on this topic in a certain country, and proceeded to have one of the most productive healing lines I’ve ever had. I found out later that this “sickness is a cross” doctrine had been running rampant around that country. Once people found out the truth as I outline it below, the truth set them free and they got healed, many of them instantly.

Whoever says that sickness is one cross we must bear has never taken the time, as the Bereans did (Acts 17:11), to look into the Word “to see if these things be so.” Even a cursory reading of the passages where Jesus said to take up your cross will reveal that He could not possibly have been talking about sickness. For the sake of completeness, all “cross-references” where Jesus talked about a cross in the life of a believer are listed below.

Luke 14:25-33:

And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said unto them,
If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.

And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

Matthew 16:24-25:

Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

Mark 8:34-35:

And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel’s, the same shall save it.

Matthew 10:37-39:

He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me.

And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

Mark 10:21:

Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

Luke 9:23-24:

And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

From these passages, a few things should be obvious.

First, Jesus never used cross in the plural. You are to take up your cross (singular). Therefore, sickness cannot be “one cross you must bear.” Either sickness is the only cross you must bear, or it is not the cross you must bear.

Second, Jesus said to take up your cross. It is a voluntary act on your part. Jesus never said that He or God would lay a cross on you. In every case above, you choose to pick it up. A cross therefore cannot be something that falls on you by accident or without your consent, as sickness would. It certainly cannot be something that God lays on you to bear. If sickness is your cross, Jesus was saying, “Make yourself sick!” This would be a strange statement indeed coming from the Person who often healed every sick person in large crowds.

Third, Jesus said that you must take up your cross daily (Luke 9:23 above). If your cross is sickness, then Jesus said, “Make yourself sick daily!” Even the most hardened skeptic must admit that He did not mean that.

Fourth, Jesus said to follow Him after taking up your cross. Sickness cannot be a cross, because it prevents you from following Him, at least from being “fruitful in every good work” (Colossians 1:10). How can you do the works of Christ when you are in bed needing someone else to do the works of Christ to you so that you can be productive again?

Fifth, there is no mention either here or anywhere else in the Bible that sickness can be a cross. Religionists who nullify the Word of God with their “traditions of men” came up with this idea of sickness as a cross out of their heads, with no Biblical support at all.

Sixth, it is obvious in every passage what the cross you take up is. It is preferring God's will for your life to your own will. It is enduring hardship and persecution for the sake of the gospel. It is following Christ when it is not convenient or pleasant to do so, in spite of what your family or others say about you. It is denying yourself to follow your Lord.

Therefore, sickness cannot possibly be a "cross" that you must bear! I think I've gotten my point across.

Objection: Sickness, While Unpleasant, Is Used by God to Build Character

What kind of character could God be building through sickness? Patience? Humility? Longsuffering? Consecration? Love? Let's look at some of these and see if it is Biblical for God to use sickness to produce these traits in your life. Then we'll consider God's plan for growth in the life of a Christian and see if sickness qualifies as part of that plan.

Patience?

Patience does not consist of just accepting whatever happens, throwing up your hands, and saying, "Oh well, the will of the Lord be done." That is resignation, not patience. Patience is an active force, which along with faith, will cause you to inherit the promises of God. Patience consists of refusing to back down until you get your answer.

Hebrews 10:35-36 says that you need patience so that after you have done the will of God, you may receive the promise. Hebrews 6:12 tells us that through faith and patience we inherit the promises. Once you have received something by faith, it is time for patience to work.

Stop and think about this for a minute. Patience cannot be the grace to resign yourself to pain and suffering. If it were, it would not be a tool by which you could receive the promises of God. Instead, it would be a tool used while NOT receiving the promises of God!

You only use patience when you are in faith. If you are not in faith, you are not in real patience. You are in resignation – to defeat.

Humility?

Do not confuse humility with humiliation. Being unable to care for yourself or work productively during the day because of illness is humiliating, not humbling. It does nothing to make you more humble.

It is not humble to accept illness, which Jesus Christ has redeemed you from. It is humble to accept His sacrifice for your healing, without leaning on any of your own merits. You didn't deserve it, but He gave it to you in His mercy. If you are truly humble, you will accept His healing on His terms – grace!

It is not God's job to make you humble. It is your job. You are commanded to humble yourself in the sight of the Lord (James 4:10) and to humble yourself under the mighty hand of God (1 Peter 5:6). Jesus said that he that shall humble himself shall be exalted (Matthew 23:12), Luke 14:11, Luke 18:14). You are nowhere commanded to ask God to humble you. God does not make you humble any more than He makes you walk in love. It is your job to choose to walk in love, and it is your job to choose to be humble.

Therefore, God could not possibly use sickness to “make you humble.” The devil will use sickness to try to humiliate you.

Longsuffering?

Longsuffering does not refer to suffering a long time from a disease. God is longsuffering toward us (2 Peter 3:9). If longsuffering refers to suffering from an illness, God could not be longsuffering or even shortsuffering. God is not suffering at all and He is not sick, either.

Longsuffering is listed as a fruit of the Spirit, not a fruit of sickness, in Galatians 5:22-23. God is able to develop this in you by His Spirit without the use of bodily affliction. As you can see elsewhere in this book, sickness is not the work of God anyway – it is the work of Satan.

God wants you to develop this fruit. But you are mistaken to think that He will develop it through something that is the work of the devil.

Consecration?

The idea is to be consecrated before you get sick. If you fail to live a consecrated life, you may open the door to the devil to make you sick. This is true even under the New Covenant. You may “learn” consecration in this way by suffering the penalty of being unconsecrated. But it is never the will of God for you to learn consecration that way. His way is for you to voluntarily present your body as a living sacrifice (Romans 12:1). You choose to be consecrated. Although you can learn the valuable lesson that serving God pays better than not serving God, having the devil beat you up is never the will of God for your life.

The idea that you should “humbly” submit to the will of God (meaning sickness) because you are consecrated shows only ignorance of God’s healing covenant. If you are truly consecrated to God, you should desire good health at all times, as God desires for you (3 John 2), so that you can serve Him to the fullest.

Love?

It is important to maintain your love walk even when your body is in pain, and it is surely more difficult to do so then. But this does not mean that God wants you sick to give you “love practice,” any more than it is His will for others to rail on you just so that you can develop your love walk. Love is a fruit of the Spirit (Galatians 5:22-23), not a fruit of sickness. You develop your love walk by believing what the Bible says about the love of God within you. If you don’t develop your love walk the Bible way, it will probably deteriorate when you get sick, to the regret of everyone around you.

God's Plan for your Growth

What about other areas? What is God's plan for your growth? Let's see.

"As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Peter 2:2). It is God's Word, not a trial, that produces growth. A trial simply shows you how much you have (or have not) grown! You are responsible for your growth as a Christian, not God. You are commanded to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18). This is a command, so it's up to you to do it, not up to God. God will help you grow, but you must submit to Him and let Him correct you (Hebrews 12:5-13).

Mark 4:2-25 makes clear that a harvest in your life is the result of planting the seed of God's Word and making sure that you are good ground for it. It is the Word, not your flesh or personality, that will produce the 30-, 60- or 100-fold return in your life.

According to Ephesians 4:11-16, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers are given so that, speaking the truth in love, we may grow up into Christ in all things. So another vehicle God uses for your growth is ministry gifts in the Body of Christ. That is why people who refuse to be pastored remain babies. They are refusing one of the means God uses to produce growth in our lives. And I am talking about having a REAL pastor who knows you personally, not a "TV pastor" who can't counsel you in person or hold you accountable.

Here's a Scripture that some might think applies to God taking things away from you, but it really means the opposite. John 15:2-3: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." The word purgeth and the word clean in these verses come from the same Greek root word. You can verify this with a concordance. In other words, every branch that bears fruit, He cleans so that it can bear more fruit. (I first noticed this reading my RVR 1960 Spanish Bible, where the Spanish words for He will clean and clean are used in these verses.) How does God clean you? Through His Word! Therefore, this passage represents additional proof that God uses His Word, not sickness or troubles, to cause you to produce more fruit (love, patience, longsuffering, and so on).

In no Scripture does God ever say that He produces growth in the life of a believer through sickness. It is true that you will grow by learning to resist sickness and take authority over it, but the sickness is still the work of the devil, never God's will.

What Does Sickness Really Teach You?

The only thing sickness will teach you is that it is a drag to be sick and better to be well. Be honest enough to admit that the last time you got sick and spent half the night throwing up in the toilet, you did not learn one single lesson about Christian character or anything else. You were inconvenienced and annoyed and maybe embarrassed, and you just wanted to be well. You learned nothing spiritual at all. You know that full well, so don't try to tell us that God uses sickness to teach you lessons unless you can cite the lessons God supposedly taught you through your experience. You simply found out what God says – sickness is a curse!

One Final Thought about God Developing Character with Sickness

How many precious saints have been killed in the prime of life by disease? How many have died long before they were satisfied with long life? If their sickness was supposed to have the result of improved character, what opportunity was there for improved character on the earth after they died? Can you see how ridiculous it is to think that God gave you a disease that killed you so that you would have better character?

Objection: God Uses Sickness to Draw Us Closer to Himself

No way. There is not one single place in the Bible where God ever used sickness to draw someone who was walking in the light closer to Himself. If you believe this objection, look in the Bible for proof of it. You won't find it. God uses sickness for chastisement and judgment in some extreme cases, as pointed out in some of the discussions in this book. He does not use it on His obedient children. He cannot possibly use sickness to draw you closer to Himself, as I will prove below in all kinds of different ways. This religious-sounding junk about God using sickness is just another dead tradition of men that robs people of their enjoyment of their rightful inheritance in Christ. It sounds reasonable only until you find out what the Bible really says.

How You Draw Near to God

"Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." – James 4:8

"For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh unto God." – Hebrews 7:19.

"Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." – Hebrews 4:16.

"For through him we both [Jews and Gentiles] have access by one Spirit unto the Father." – Ephesians 2:18.

"In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him." – Ephesians 3:12.

It is up to you to seek God. It is up to you to draw near to God. God does not do anything to force you to draw near to Him. He didn't force you to do it when you were unsaved, and He won't do so now. God did not put the sickness on you to draw you near. He never forces you or anyone else to draw near to Him. He has provided the means for you to draw near and He leaves it up to you to do it. Jesus has already provided the way for you to go to God's throne. He doesn't need to make a new way through sickness.

This should be clear from the verses above. James did not say, "Let God draw you nigh to Himself." The author of Hebrews did not say, "Let God draw you boldly to His throne of grace." YOU choose to draw near to God or you choose not to. Heaven's door is always open to you whether you feel like it is or not. We walk by faith, not by feelings. Even if you feel like God took off on you, the truth is that He never fails you nor forsakes you. He certainly doesn't panic and run away because you sin. If you're struggling with sin, you need to run TO God, not AWAY FROM God! He doesn't give you the "silent treatment" to punish sins that He already punished when Jesus took them onto Himself.

How God Draws People

The goodness of God leads men to repentance (Romans 2:4). God does not use calamity to draw men to himself; He uses good things. Think of all the people in Acts who were brought to Jesus by seeing the goodness of God through healing. It was not God making people sick that drew the masses! They were drawn when God healed people!

Jesus, the Healer, is drawing men to Himself today. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die." – John 12:32-33. We use this passage to describe men being drawn to Jesus if we "lift Him up" and "exalt" Him in praise and worship, but that isn't what He said! He spoke of His coming death and exaltation to the right hand of God. Therefore, Jesus does not just draw men to Himself if we praise and worship Him. He was lifted up from the earth on the cross, so now He is in the continuous process of drawing all men unto Himself, worship or no worship! (There is a principle that God inhabits the praises of His people and will move in an atmosphere of corporate worship, but John 12:32 is not the verse to use to prove it.) So Jesus, not sickness, draws men to God today.

Think how ridiculous it would be that God would heal a sinner to draw the sinner to Himself, but after the sinner became a saint, God would turn around and use sickness as the method for drawing the saint unto Himself. Is God more gracious to His own children than to those who hate Him and disobey Him? No!

Sickness Is an Ineffective Method of Drawing People to God

Consider Revelation 9:20 and Revelation 16:10-11, where God sends sickness and pain and the people DO NOT repent. Then consider that whole cities turned to the Lord when they saw His goodness through a miracle (Acts 9:32-35, Acts 9:36-42). Obviously a miracle would get more people to turn to the Lord than a catastrophe.

God is the Healer, not the Sickener

Another problem with this objection is that it assumes that God is putting sickness on people. But if you've seen Jesus, you've seen the Father (John 14:9). Jesus went around healing those who were oppressed of the devil (Acts 10:38). God is our Physician (Exodus 15:25-26), not our Sickener. You know God's will in the matter from these and other verses. If Jesus never put sickness on people to draw them closer to God, God will never do it either. Jesus never changes (Hebrews 13:8), so He won't do it today either. Have you ever been to an earthly physician who deliberately made you sick? How much less will the Great Physician do that to you! If God sometimes healed you and sometimes made you sick, He would at best be the Not-So-Great Physician.

When You've Already Been Drawn

One of the amazing things about this objection is that is used by people who experienced a physical calamity and then turned to God – but they still have their physical problem! How ridiculous is that? If the sole purpose of that physical catastrophe was to draw the person to God, and now that person has already been drawn to God, why should that condition linger in their bodies? What purpose does it serve NOW? You would have to ask the objector that question, because I can't make any sense of it. Can you?

Objection: The Lord Puts Us on Our Backs that He May Teach Us to Look Up

No, God gives us His WORD and His SPIRIT that He may teach us to look up! That is painless, unlike being bedridden. If you are on your back, you should look up what the Bible says about healing!

Jesus made it clear that the Father would send the Holy Spirit, not a spirit of infirmity, to teach us ALL THINGS (John 14:26). So there is NO “thing” left for sickness or accidents to teach us, including teaching us to look up.

Colossians 3:1 tells us to seek the things that are above, not the things that are on the earth. Hebrews 12:2 exhorts us to look to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith (who is already “up” in heaven as well as in believers). Jesus, our Example, didn’t have to be sick to look up to heaven before telling a deaf person’s ears to be opened in Mark 7:32-37. He didn’t have to be flat on His back to look up to heaven before He multiplied the loaves and fishes in Mark 6:41 and Luke 9:16. Jesus had a man with eye trouble look up while he was getting healed, not while he was getting sick, in Mark 8:22-25. The disciples did not have to have broken backs when they looked up after Jesus had ascended in Acts 1:10. Stephen was not sick with a disease when he looked up and saw Jesus standing at God’s right hand in Acts 7:55-56.

So clearly, when you look up what Scripture says, the idea that God has to put you on your back to get you to look up gets no traction.

Objection: Our Sickness, Disease and Illnesses Keep Us Dependent upon God

Dependent upon God for what, exactly? For providing some small amount of relief for a horribly painful condition? For just being able to make it through another day of agony? For providing extra money because you spent everything on doctors but were nothing better but rather worse? The objector is certainly not depending upon God for healing because that would take away the very things that are supposedly beneficial, being like a “refiner’s fire” in the objector’s own words.

Like many other objections, this one paints disease in a “good” light by claiming that it is actually beneficial to us. Why then, did Jesus minister in such a way that ALL who wanted healing were healed? If sickness were beneficial, He would have been robbing them of a chance to be “kept dependent upon God.” Surely there would be at least one case like the following:

Mark 17:1-2:

And behold, a severe asthmatic came to Jesus looking to be healed.

And Jesus turned around and said unto him, “Your sickness is a good thing for you because it keeps you dependent upon God. It benefits you to have to believe God just to be able to take your next breath. You wouldn’t be nearly as dependent upon God without asthma. Therefore, keep it and appreciate the benefits that every labored wheeze confers.”

So this objection fails the SAME test. If Jesus never turned away a sick person and said that the illness was actually God’s way to make him depend on God, He would never do so today. He most certainly would not have redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Galatians 3:13), which included every sickness (Deuteronomy 28:61) if it were God’s perfect will for even ONE person to suffer from sickness to get some kind of spiritual benefit.

Plenty of sinners are horribly sick, yet somehow their maladies do not force them to suddenly become “dependent upon God.” If this benefit fails to work for them, how could we think that it would work for believers? From what I’ve seen, sickness only makes sinners more bitter at God, often pointing an angry finger at Him for His supposed unwillingness to heal them or His supposed “will” of “letting” a loved one die a miserable, excruciating death from sickness.

Sickness CAN make you dependent upon medicine, doctors and hospitals, all of which are costly in many countries. It CAN make you more dependent upon relatives or convalescent homes to take care of you. But nothing about it makes you more dependent upon God. In fact, if you really “depend on God,” that means that you act on His Word that declares you legally healed, and you receive the healing that He has already paid for you to have.

Objection: God Is Far More Interested in Your Character than in Your Comfort

The faulty conclusion is that God will let you be uncomfortable through sickness so that you can reach a “higher” goal – the development of your character. Or, restated, that God uses the devil’s oppression to perfect you. This is a variation of the “God builds character through sickness” objection handled elsewhere, but with a slight twist that we’ll deal with here.

When Jesus walked the earth, it was very clear that He had mercy on those who were in “dis-ease” (discomfort) because His will was for those who were in discomfort to be physically comfortable. To make people’s comfort seem relatively unimportant is to deny God’s mercy on mankind. God is interested in both your character and your comfort! It makes little sense to try to “rank” things that are God’s will. Someone could come out with a statement that God is far more interested in having you walk in love than He is in you reading your Bible, but again, it is senseless to “rank” things that are BOTH the explicit will of God for you, as if one really isn’t as important to Him.

Your comfort is important enough to God that He sent Jesus to bear your diseases so that you would not have to do so. If you take the objection at face value, it leaves you with the impression that God really doesn’t care about your comfort; it’s somehow of secondary importance to Him as long as you’re a godly person. This is not what Scripture teaches. He wants you to enjoy abundant life, walking in both character and comfort. Neither is unimportant and neither should be minimized. God does not have a “suck it up, buttercup” attitude toward sickness and pain, which Jesus made clear when He went around healing those whom the devil had oppressed (Acts 10:38).

The other problem is that this objection makes the false assumption that the development of your character depends on you being uncomfortable! Why not read the Word and believe what it says about the fruit of the Spirit and act out what the Bible portrays as love? That does NOT have to involve discomfort on your part. The Word will build you up and cause you to be a person of better character without the devil having to get involved.

Besides, if you’ve spent any time around sick people, have you found that they get sweeter and sweeter as the days go by and full of better character as their pain level increases? That hasn’t been my experience. Usually sick people are more irritable due to their discomfort. Consider the last time you got sick – did you find that your joy level increased and your character blossomed as a result? I doubt it.

So when you really consider what this objection says, you have to conclude that it doesn’t make sense as an argument against divine healing, and it makes God look a lot less merciful than He really is.

Objection: God Gets Glory from Our Patient Endurance of Sickness

I partially agree with this statement! God does get some glory from the fact that you don't turn into a mean old crab when you're not feeling well. Your ability to continue to walk in love and kindness while sick can have a positive influence on unbelievers and be a witness to them of the grace of God. I think we come down too hard on sick people who don't believe in healing when we say that God gets no glory from your patience while sick. It is possible that an unbeliever can see the difference between the way you handle illness and how an unbeliever handles illness and be positively influenced for Christ. God can get a limited amount of glory from that.

However, God would get far more glory if you were healed! Then the unbelievers could really see the all-sufficient grace of God at work in your life. That is God's perfect plan. He only shows us His best plan (healing) in Scripture, not a second-best plan (bearing fruit while sick).

There is no virtue in patiently enduring something from which Jesus redeemed you. It is never the will of God for you to demonstrate your patience to the lost while sick instead of getting healed. It beats being impatient, but it's not all that Jesus paid for you to have. If you are not in a position yet to receive your healing through divine means, be the best witness you can while sick. But don't ever tell anyone that God wanted you to be sick to display you as an example of patience to unbelievers. That's never His best for you, and you'll just turn people away from God because they might not be interested in a God who just leaves people sick.

The Bible cites examples of whole cities being turned to the Lord because people got healed of diseases so that they didn't have to patiently endure them. The Bible cites no cases of cities or even one single individual won to the Lord by watching someone else's patient endurance of sickness. Getting healed influences far more people for Christ than patiently staying sick.

Notice what Matthew 15:30-31 does NOT say: "And great multitudes came to Him, having with them the lame, blind, mute, maimed, and many others. They cast them down at Jesus' feet, and Jesus did nothing about their conditions. But when people saw the mute still patient while mute, the maimed still patient while maimed, the lame still patient while lame, and the blind still patient while blind, they glorified the God of Israel." No, God was glorified when the sick were HEALED. When the paralytic literally went "through the roof" and got healed, the multitudes glorified God "who had given such power unto men."

Being nice is a good witness. Being nice and being healed is an even better witness that glorifies God far more!

The main reason that people “patiently endure” sickness is that they haven’t heard and believed that God’s plan for them is better than that. If all you eat is Ramen noodles, you might not ever hunger for a steak when you don’t even know what a steak tastes like. But once you’ve had steak, you probably don’t see it as being an equal alternative to Ramen noodles! Once you know the truth about divine healing, you won’t be satisfied living on a lower level, “enduring” sickness patiently. You can endure persecution and certain things that could happen to you because you’re a Christian, but you never have to endure things from which Christ redeemed you, including sickness!

Objection: God Sometimes Has an Older Person Get Sick to Make That Person Want to Come Home to Heaven

The only reason that old wives' tales like this manage to circulate is that people don't read their Bibles. Actually, an old wife who didn't read the Bible was the first to tell me this one! This is right up there with "God wanted another little angel in His choir" in the ludicrous false comfort department.

Aside from being completely ignorant, this also slanders God's character. The real God is not so cruel that He would say, "I'll make you really suffer so that you just can't take it anymore and you'll finally 'cry Uncle' and decide that going to heaven is better than enduring the awful ailment I inflicted on you."

Like most objections, this fails the "where do you see Jesus do it" test. Jesus is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), so if this horrible objection is true, there should be many cases where Jesus says to someone, "I won't heal you – this particular illness was sent from God to make you so miserable that you want to commit Satan-assisted suicide by just letting yourself die from it." But you will never find anything like that in Scripture. Jesus went about healing all who oppressed by the DEVIL (Acts 10:38), not oppressed by GOD. ANYONE who wanted to be healed could be healed. That would include older people. Jesus never hinted that someone was "supposed to die" from an illness and could not be healed. If He did not do that in the four gospels, He will never do it today.

Jesus bore OUR sicknesses and OUR pains. That includes whatever you have. That means that you are legally redeemed from them and you need not suffer them so that you want to bail out of your earthly body early.

Jesus came to give us all "abundant life" (John 10:10). That includes older people. A life that you want to escape because you're so miserable cannot qualify as abundant life, and Jesus and His Father are never the source of something that tears down your life and makes you miserable. Jesus came so that you could have life more abundantly. Be very sure that Jesus and His Father would never afflict you to make you want to leave the planet.

SATAN is the one who wants you to be so miserable that you want to leave the earth. The sooner you leave, the sooner you can't be a problem for him anymore.

Objection: God Could Use So-and-So Powerfully because She was Paralyzed When She Was Young

God does not use someone because that person is paralyzed. God uses anyone who is available, whether paralyzed or not. But that doesn't prove that He wants the person to stay in that condition.

God can use people who don't believe that He wants to heal them. Such people may have many good things to say about other topics, and you could miss out on a blessing by avoiding their writings completely because of their opinions about healing. Of course, it is unlikely that God would be able to use them to help others to receive healing.

You will have to give a person like this credit for not going through life angry with God because of what happened. Such a person can testify of the grace of God. However, the person could be a more dramatic example of the grace of God out of the wheelchair! Think of the impact the healing of such a person would have!

You must reject anyone's claim that God "sent an accident" that resulted in paralysis, particularly if the accident was simply her fault because she dove into water that was too shallow. God does not cause accidents. If you are away from God, out from under His covenant of protection, you are in a place where you have no guarantee of safety. The devil has a certain right to harm you if you're operating in his kingdom. You may look back at your accident and say that you got blessed because of it, but God would rather than you had heeded His words instead of getting hurt and then turning to Him in desperation.

Suppose for a minute that God "used" the accident and paralysis to "chastise" this person or to draw her closer to Himself. Indeed, she did get saved after her accident. However, she would have a right to expect to be healed after repenting. Do you keep spanking your children when they're not doing anything wrong at the moment because they did something that deserved a spanking in the past? God would not continue to "chastise" someone who had already learned the lesson. Even in the extreme case where someone is "handed over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh," once the person repents, Satan can't continue beating up his flesh.

People who raise this objection usually dare me, "Go tell So-and-So that she could be healed!" If you're So-and-So, this book is designed to show you that you can be healed, and you can take it as my message to you. However, the objectors' idea is really, "Go to her in a nasty, argumentative way and tell her that her own lack of faith is keeping her paralyzed." That is just as stupid as saying, "Go tell a sinner in a nasty, argumentative way that his lack of faith in Christ is keeping him from eternal life." Would you share Christ that way? I hope not. You would present the gospel as good news. You would present the solution rather than just stating the problem. The good news for the sinner is that he can be delivered from sin and have eternal life. The good news for the sick person is that he can be healed through faith in Jesus Christ. Who says that you have to be nasty about it? Some sinners don't want to hear the truth. What do you do? You back down and just love them. Likewise, if someone does not want to hear about divine healing, you have to back down and just love him, too. Getting in strife with people over divine healing is unlikely to get them healed. Some people have made up their minds. Unless they become open to healing, the power of God will never heal them. That does not make them bad people. They may have a positive influence in the Body of Christ in another area about which they know more. Believe it or not, I have been on very good terms with multiple pastors who do not believe that our healing was already purchased. We can present truth to those who are interested, but we shouldn't go around bludgeoning people with it.

There is a danger in testimonies that God broke someone's neck or burned someone's body or did some other cruel and hideous thing. Such testimonies misrepresent God's character. God does not do these things. If you preach that He does, you risk driving people away from Him instead of toward Him. Would you be interested in a God who might want to do things like that to you to "help" you? If you were a sinner, you might figure you would be more comfortable staying away from a God like that. Perhaps you'd be more interested in Allah, Buddha, Krishna, or other false gods who at least aren't presented as putting horrible things on you out of "concern" for your well-being.

I have nothing personal against So-and-So or anyone else with an opinion quoted or paraphrased in this book. However, when someone is brought up frequently by those who don't believe in divine healing, we need to respond. We need to be just as bold as the critics are, without resorting to the tactics that some of them use. For example, we should not ridicule other preachers by name, quote passages of their books and CD's out of context, continue to quote old statements that they have publicly recanted, and bring up details of their personal lives that are nobody's business, as some authors today have done. I could say that the sources of the objections in this book are unnamed, but that's not technically true because they DO have names; I just don't tell you what they are. (The articles and authors' names quoted at the head of some objections in this book are fake, and rather obviously so if you look at their names, though they do have strong similarities to what certain real authors have written. They are generally shortened composites of different articles with the same objection. In some cases you might figure out or already know who made the objection, but I'm not going to give any hints if you don't already know.)

So here is the correct answer to those who ask, “Do you say that SO-AND-SO could be healed if she believed God wanted to heal her?” YES, she could be healed if she would believe the Bible on the subject of healing. God wants to heal her. He provided her healing at Calvary. She could read God’s healing covenant and receive faith to be healed. She could get out of her wheelchair and join many others who were confined to wheelchairs before being healed by the power of God. One of the most famous faith teachers who ever lived was also paralyzed when he was young, but he believed God and received his healing. Today his teachings are helping many others receive their healings. God does not love that man any more than he loves the woman in question.

It is ludicrous to think that such a person is “proof” that believing and receiving by faith does not work. You can’t work a principle that you don’t believe in. I would not be proof that a diet aid doesn’t work if I never used that diet aid according to the instructions because I didn’t believe that it would work for me.

I have no intention of calling up anyone and arguing about divine healing. I imagine that anyone who claims that God caused a disaster for a higher purpose would probably agree with me on more things than we would disagree on. It is possible to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace without agreeing on every doctrinal issue, including divine healing.

It is superficially true that God uses the woman in question because she was paralyzed when she was young. She did not turn to God until she was paralyzed, and the fact that she turned to God has enabled her to be used today. Perhaps she would not have turned to God if she did not have her accident. Still, that does not prove that God wanted the accident to happen. Many have turned to God without suffering terrible accidents first. God does not send terrible accidents to draw men to repentance. His goodness draws men to repentance (Romans 2:4). In fact, God has already told us in the book of Revelation that when he does send terrible tragedies upon the earth, many men will still not repent. Why would He use tragedies, which do NOT reliably get people to repent, instead of healing, which often results in many people turning to the Lord? Look at what will happen in the future when God DOES send plagues and calamities during the Tribulation period, and see if you think that tragedies are a reliable cause of repentance:

Revelation 9:20:

And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

Revelation 16:11:

And [they] blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

I suppose that if you thought that God wanted to paralyze you, you would be a hypocrite if you asked God to undo what you think is His work in your body. However, it would be better to learn the truth and let the anointing destroy that yoke of bondage in your life!

One could also say, “Isn’t this woman an example of Romans 8:28?” The answer is a resounding NO. That verse doesn’t even apply to her conversion. Read it! Romans 8:28 only applies to people who love God, and she did not love God when she had her accident. Therefore, God was not working anything through it. She just “hit bottom” and cried out to God in desperation.

Objection: God Only Heals Some at Healing Crusades, Thus Proving It Is Not His Will to Heal All

It is undeniable that at most healing services, some sick people are healed while others are not. However, this does not prove anything about the will of God. If we take this argument to its logical conclusion, we must conclude that it is not God's will to save all, because God "saves" only some people at evangelistic meetings, while others leave the service unsaved. I hope that you understand that God already provided salvation for the masses in Christ. He does not do a new work to "save" them in the service. Nor does He have to do a new work to "heal" the people in the service.

At either kind of service, some people will respond in faith and others will not. Healing and salvation are available to everyone in the service. They are available to everyone outside the service, too. Their availability is based on what Jesus did, not based on the fact that a special service is going on. At evangelistic services, the people are simply told what is already available to them. At healing services, the people are also told what is already available to them. The service is not the issue; it is just a place where the good news can be proclaimed and people can receive something that Jesus has already provided for them.

The one point where the parallel between evangelistic meetings and healing meetings breaks down is that some people get healed by the gifts of the Spirit without any faith, while no one gets saved without any faith. Thus, some people may leave healed who were not expecting anything. However, certain signs and wonders may be done that result in people getting saved! A sinner might even have a vision of Jesus in the service and decide to follow Him. I know of cases where that has happened and Muslims immediately decided to forsake Islam and follow Jesus.

God is still in the signs-and-wonders business. He does miracles as a sign to unbelievers. He expects more of believers. That is why you may notice more anointing when you lay hands on an unbeliever than when you lay hands on a believer! God doesn't expect much from the unbeliever, but the believers are supposed to grow and believe His Word.

Healings that take place without the recipient's faith are signs. Perhaps the most important sign is to the person himself, who can "taste and see that the Lord is good" (Psalm 34:8). Healing is proof of God's mercy and compassion.

How absurd, though, to think that God would be less willing to heal His own child than a sinner! It is not that God won't heal His child; He just uses different means. His primary means is to have faith rise in the heart of the believer when he finds out that healing belongs to him as part of his covenant with God. God is not obligated to perform the healing in a miraculous or spectacular way.

You are on very thin ice when you attempt to prove doctrine from experience. You never look at the results of any meeting to determine God's will in a matter. Your only reliable source of information concerning God's will is the Bible. Nothing else ever "proves" anything!

Objection: Jesus Did Only What He Saw the Father Do. He Only Saw the Father Heal ONE Person at the Pool of Bethesda.

Jesus ministered as a man anointed by the Holy Spirit. He was God, but He stripped Himself of His divine privileges and lived under the same limitations that we have. He healed many people through special manifestations of the Holy Spirit, whereas many others were healed through their faith when they came to Jesus. This latter part is undeniable given the times that Jesus told people that their faith had healed them. (If many modern preachers were around back then, they would have boycotted Jesus' meetings and encouraged others to do the same. They would have considered it an invitation to spiritual pride to tell someone that his faith, rather than Jesus Himself, did something. But reading the Bible, it is unquestionable that the individuals' faith in Jesus, the Anointed One, was responsible for many healings.)

The man at the Pool of Bethesda was obviously not in faith. He was healed through a manifestation of the Holy Spirit, just as unbelievers today are sometimes healed in services with no faith of their own in operation. We cannot control the manifestations of the Spirit in individual cases, and neither could Jesus. If He could have done so, He would have had an unfair advantage over the rest of us, and it would no longer be true that we would do the works that He did and greater.

The Holy Spirit only manifested Himself in this particular way for this one person. It is common today for one or two people to be healed supernaturally in a service with no faith in operation. I have heard people say that they were healed even though they were not expecting anything to happen. This is how the Holy Spirit often operates when it comes to so-called gifts of the Spirit. But what people miss is that anyone can get healed through faith in God's Word without ANY special manifestation of the Spirit. If the others at the pool were in the same faith that the multitudes elsewhere had, they could have been healed as well.

The objector who brought this up continued that once the others at the pool saw this divine healing, they surely would have asked Jesus to heal them, and so He surely turned them down. There is NO evidence for this; that's pure speculation. I can prove to you from the Bible that just because one person gets healed does not mean that anyone else will want or get anything. In the famous incident where a paralytic was let down into a room through the roof, only that one man got healed. Yet Luke records that the power of the Lord was present to heal them –the religious leaders who were present (Luke 5:17-26). The power was present, but only one person got healed. Every sick religious leader could have been healed, but not a single one of them got anything, even after they all saw a miracle happen right in front of their religion-blinded eyes. No one else asked for healing, let alone came for healing in faith. The others who could have been healed but weren't healed simply thought that they had seen something strange. That proves that when one man received healing from Jesus Christ, other sick people who saw it would not necessarily ask to be healed. Also, remember that Jesus healed this man when he saw their faith (the faith of the man and his friends), and this kind of faith was obviously lacking in the religious leaders.

The others at the pool may have thought that they had seen something strange, but they did not approach Jesus. Like the man, they were probably still trusting in their healing shrine to do the work, not Jesus. It was hard enough for Jesus to get that man's focus off the pool let alone get the others to change what they were trusting.

As far as Jesus seeing the Father heal only one person, clearly Jesus offered healing to all who would believe, and that is what He saw the Father doing. It was not His Father's fault (or His) when people did not receive healing from Him. Did Jesus see the Father only healing the paralytic? Because Jesus was the Anointed One, the anointing was available to heal the others. They just didn't receive it. Jesus was anointed, but the people at the pool did not recognize this. The woman with the issue of blood believed that Jesus was the Anointed One, and she came and received healing even when Jesus was just going about His business traveling from one place to another.

Jesus did not turn down those who came to Him for healing, but He did not necessarily go around healing people who did not ask to be healed. There are exceptional cases such as this incident where He did. The rule was for people to come to Him to be healed. He never told anyone who came, "Sorry, but I just don't see the Father healing you." Jesus never made anyone sick for some spiritual reason, as the religionists of our day maintain that God does now. This objection should be neatly turned on its head. The mass healings that Jesus did were what He saw the Father doing. Going around healing those who were oppressed of the devil was an expression of what Jesus saw the Father doing. If Jesus always did what the Father wanted, and He healed people in His earthly ministry, never making anyone sick, what can we conclude about what He saw the Father doing? The opposite of what this objection says!

Objection: Jesus Told a Greek Woman NO When She Came for Deliverance for Her Daughter

Matthew 15:22-28

Mark 7:25-30

Someone dragged this story up in a discussion when I was making the point that Jesus never turned away anyone who wanted healing. What about this woman? Didn't Jesus and the disciples try to turn her away? They did at first, but she was not denied by the end of the story.

It is curious that anyone would use this as an anti-healing argument, because the lady in fact did get what she wanted, which Jesus attributed to her great faith. However, examine the basis on which Jesus denied her attention. The woman was not an Israelite, and Jesus was sent by God to preach to the Israelites. Jesus did not want to operate outside His calling. He was not called to go to Gentile lands with the gospel. (If you're called of God and you have any smarts, you won't try to go do something outside your calling, either.)

Jesus was not rude to her. He did NOT call her a dog in a derogatory way. He did not say, "Hit the road, Fido! You ain't nothin' but a hound dog!" He was simply making an allegory about the "children" of Israel who had a right to bread and the "dogs" who were outside of Israel's covenant. The woman was outside the Old Covenant, being a Greek. The promise of healing was not made to her; it was made to the Jews. (Before you make another objection out of that fact, please realize that we are the true Jews now according to Paul, and we do get the blessings they had. This woman came to Jesus before the Church Age. Being a Gentile, she did not have a covenant right to healing.) Yet Jesus spoke in faith and the woman obviously believed that she received her answer at that moment, and her daughter was set free.

There is no reason why anyone under the New Covenant could be told NO for the same reason this woman was told NO, because we are all able to partake of the New Covenant. It is not just for the Jews. Jesus' ministry is now just as much for the Gentiles as it is for the Jews, which is different from how things were when He walked the earth. Therefore, it is senseless to use this passage to say that Jesus could turn someone away or say NO to someone who wants healing today. Even back then, there was an open door – a Gentile could become a Jew and then be included in God's promises to the Jews.

Far from being an anti-healing passage (there aren't any), this passage teaches a valuable lesson. Healing is called "the children's bread." It is something that they have a right to. Now that you are a child of God, healing is your bread, too. Jesus told the Greek woman that healing was something that the Israelites had a right to. Surely, a blood-bought believer under our new and better covenant, established upon better promises, has a right to the same! You are not a Gentile outside the covenant as this woman was. You are a covenant child of God. Healing is part of what your Father gives you because you are in His family.

Objection: Jesus Himself Pointed Out that There Were Many Lepers in Israel in Elijah's Day, Yet Only Naaman the Syrian Was Cleansed (Luke 4:27)

The objector has pulled Luke 4:27 completely out of context in an effort to prove that it isn't God's will to heal everyone. The objector tries to make Jesus' comment indicate that God didn't want to heal the many lepers in Israel at the time – only Naaman the Syrian.

But that is NOT why only Naaman was healed. The Jews in Israel at the time weren't heeding God's prophet, and at least Naaman showed up where the prophet was. Here's the real context of the verse:

Luke 4:24-27:

And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country.

But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

So the problem in Israel was not God's will to heal. It was Israel's lack of recognition of God's prophet – the same problem Jesus went on to encounter at Nazareth, where He COULD NOT do mighty works because of their unbelief (Mark 6:1-6).

Objection: God Sometimes Heals You Only after He Has Let You Suffer a While (1 Peter 5:10)

It is amazing that anyone would quote this as a proof text that God is unwilling to heal you right away in all cases. As with many objections, a look at the context quickly unravels this argument and a quick trip to a concordance runs what is left through the shredder.

1 Peter 5:8-10:

Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour.

Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

To What Afflictions Does Peter Refer?

The “afflictions” you suffer here are from Satan, who is out to destroy you. The suffering is from temptations and persecutions, not sicknesses. The afflictions accomplished in your brethren around the world must be from Satan, because we are told to resist him (personally) steadfast in the faith. Note that our faith is what gives us the victory over him. However, Satan won’t just give up the first time you resist him; he’ll be back. You will suffer temptations, as even Christ Himself had to do, and you will have to actively resist Satan.

The word Greek word translated “afflictions” is elsewhere translated as shown below in the New Testament:

“But call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions; Partly, whilst ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.” – Hebrews 10:32-33. Does sickness fit here? Nope. If they were sick, they would not have been referred to as “them that were so used.”

“Persecutions, afflictions, which came to me at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me” – 2 Timothy 3:11. Again, this is clearly persecution and not sickness. (Paul did have some physical trouble because of his stoning at Lystra, as mentioned elsewhere, but this proves nothing because the Lord healed him.)

“For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.” – Romans 8:18

“For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. And whether we be afflicted [this is a different word that means to crowd, literally or figuratively – it is translated afflict, narrow, throng, suffer tribulation and trouble, never sickness or anything of the sort], it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.” – 2 Corinthians 1:5-7.

“That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death” – Philippians 3:10. Do you suppose that Paul was expressing his prayer that he would get sick? No, that would not be one of Christ’s sufferings that he could partake of because Christ was only sick during His atonement. No man can add to the finished work that He did at Calvary. After all, Paul wanted to know the power of His resurrection, and that resurrection power healed Christ’s body and raised it from the dead!

“Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is left behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body’s sake, which is the church” – Colossians 1:24. This Scripture has been used as the basis for a different healing objection that is covered elsewhere. But just look at this verse – would you rejoice in someone’s sickness? No. Could your sickness be suffering for you or for His Body’s sake, which is the church? Does the Church benefit from your asthma? No. Could you have arthritis for Christ’s Body’s sake? No. So forget that idea.

“For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons into glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings.” – Hebrews 2:10.

No sensible person would say that Jesus was made perfect through sickness. Sickness never perfects anyone – it loads the person up with imperfections!

“Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.” – 1 Peter 1:11.

“But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ’s sufferings; that, when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.” – 1 Peter 4:13-14.

You cannot possibly partake of Christ’s substitutionary sufferings for mankind. There would be no need for that anyway, as Jesus finished the needed substitutionary work for all mankind. So these sufferings must be what Jesus suffered BEFORE He was punished for our sins. Those sufferings NEVER included sickness, so sickness CANNOT BE “Christ’s sufferings” of which you partake in the passages above.

“For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death.” – Romans 7:5.

“And they that are Christ’s have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts.” – Galatians 5:24.

“The elders which are among you I exhort, who am an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:” – 1 Peter 5:1. [We’ll come back to this verse below.]

Conclusion: The afflictions Peter talks about are persecutions, not sicknesses.

When Does God Strengthen You?

It is also a very questionable reading of this verse to say that God will perfect, stablish, strengthen and settle you after you have suffered a while. That is how most people read it, but it could equally be taken to say (in English or Greek): “God, who has called you unto His eternal glory after you have suffered a while, will Himself perfect, stablish, strengthen and settle you.” In context, this would almost have to be what Peter meant. In other words, the “after you have suffered a while” clause belongs with “has called you into His eternal glory” as opposed to the part about God perfecting and establishing you.

See 1 Peter 5:1 cited above. Peter speaks of the glory that shall be revealed. Then in verse 4, “And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.” Then in verse 10 he tells us that he has called us into His eternal glory after we have suffered a while. The suffering in this context refers to our entire life on earth, not temporary suffering from some illness.

It does violence to dozens of Scriptures to claim that God will let you suffer a while and only then will He get around to strengthening you. He declares repeatedly that He IS your strength and that he will strengthen you. The Bible is full of promises about God’s strength being imparted to you. For a long list of them, see the article, Condition: Weakness. It would be totally inconsistent with God’s nature to refuse to strengthen you even for a minute. God strengthened Paul in his weaknesses and declared that His grace was sufficient for him. So His grace is not going to be insufficient for you!

Study that Weakness article and you will have to conclude that God does not want you to be weak. He wants you to be strong, not in yourself, but in Him. To keep these promises, God could not delay strengthening you for some arbitrary amount of time just to make you suffer.

Quit Suffering from Illness Thinking That It’s God’s Will!

God wants to strengthen and establish you, not leave you sick. If you’ve been taught to patiently suffer sickness until God gets around to strengthening you, you now know better. It should now be clear to you that Peter was talking about Satan and persecution, not sickness.

Objection: Suffering Glorifies God (Romans 8:17)

Romans 8:17

The objector says that because Romans 8:17 says “if we suffer together, THAT we may be glorified together,” our suffering is necessary to bring glory to God.

First, Romans 8:17 doesn't even say that suffering glorifies God; it talks about US being glorified, so the objection at face value just doesn't make any sense.

Second, Romans 8:17 says, “if we suffer WITH HIM,” which obviously means Christ, who is mentioned explicitly before that phrase appears. Jesus is currently in heaven, where there is no sickness, so I can confidently assert that the Lord Jesus Christ is not currently suffering from diabetes or any other illness. So any present-day “suffering WITH Christ” cannot refer to suffering from any illness.

Third, when Jesus walked the earth, He NEVER suffered from any illness until He “took our infirmities.” So you are not suffering “with Him” in YOUR earth walk if your suffering is from an illness. However, He DID suffer reproach, so that has to be the kind of suffering that Paul had in mind. You CAN suffer reproach just as He did. But when that happens for His name's sake, great is your reward in heaven (Matthew 5:11-12), so you will be glorified with Him for bearing the reproaches of men without caving in.

Fourth, Jesus has never changed (Hebrews 13:8), so if suffering glorifies God, surely there would have been an instance where Jesus refused to heal someone so that the person could continue glorifying God. But there is no verse that says, “But to the woman with the issue of blood, Jesus spake these words: ‘Suffering glorifies God, and your particular case is so bad that you are just CONSTANTLY glorifying God with your constant discomfort. Keep suffering because you're REALLY going to be glorified someday yourself because of it!’”

Fifth, if suffering from disease glorifies God, Jesus was an anti-God thief because He healed diseases that were supposedly making people suffer and glorify God! He never turned anyone down, so ANYONE who was “glorifying God” through suffering could immediately stop “glorifying God.” Seeing as Jesus explicitly sought the glory of the One who sent Him (John 7:18), His healing actions could not possibly have stolen glory from God. Because healing did not take away any of God's glory, sickness could not possibly have contributed to God's glory.

Objection: You Are Called to Suffer (Philippians 1:29)

Let's read Philippians 1:29 in its context:

Philippians 1:28-30:

And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God.

For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake; Having the same conflict which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

The suffering Paul talks about is "for His sake" as verse 29 explicitly states! Getting asthma or a kidney stone is not suffering for the sake of Christ or the kingdom. Paul was talking in the context of a "conflict" (verse 30) with "adversaries" (verse 28). So this can only mean suffering as a Christian at the hands of enemies of the gospel. It has nothing to do with suffering from a cold or any other disease.

As far as persecution goes, you ARE called to suffer in that manner (2 Timothy 3:12) and there is no way to "believe away" or "pray away" that kind of suffering. Just don't confuse that with needless suffering from bodily affliction that does nothing "for Christ's sake" to advance His kingdom and actually hinders you from doing so.

Objection: Jesus Suffered and That Is the Example for You to Follow (1 Peter 2:21)

1 Peter 2:21 does not simply say, “Jesus suffered.” This objection sets the same trap as Satan’s misquotation of Psalm 91:11-12 in Luke 4:10-11 where he left out the key phrase “in all your ways” to make it sound like angels would catch Jesus if He jumped off a high building. 1 Peter 2:21 says that Christ “suffered for us.” When you read the whole verse, it ruins the objection. The objection only “works” if you take out the two words “for us” because then you would get a statement that Christ suffered, leaving us an example that we should follow in His steps. However, no one needs to engage in redemptive suffering for others. So the suffering Peter talks about cannot mean suffering for others the way that Christ suffered for us. So His suffering was NOT the example for you to follow.

All you have to do is read the context of 1 Peter 2:21 to discover what His example really was. Peter is talking about doing good things and yet suffering as a result at the hands of others. Jesus did nothing wrong and yet suffered at the hands of sinners, but He didn’t hurl their abuse back at them. Instead, He trusted God to sort things out. Here’s the general context:

1 Peter 2:20-23:

For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

Once you read this, you see clearly that His example was the patient suffering of persecution. He left us an example of how to do it. You are not redeemed from suffering persecution, so you need to know what to do when you encounter it. Paul even promised that you would suffer persecution if you’re trying to live a godly life (2 Timothy 3:12). However, suffering from persecution is completely different from suffering the devil’s sicknesses, pains and torments! Jesus’ example when encountering THAT kind of suffering was to heal those who were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38)!

Objection: Long Life is Not a New Testament Blessing

Ephesians 6:1-3 is in the New Testament! Although it refers to an Old Testament blessing, it is explicitly carried over into the New Covenant. Therefore, long life is a New Testament blessing, and this objection is wrong.

Also, bear in mind that you have not been redeemed from the blessings of the Old Testament; you have been redeemed from the curses! The curses do not apply because they belonged to the wicked, and you have been made holy by the blood of Jesus. The blessings belonged to the righteous who kept all the words of the Law. Jesus has made you righteous just as if you had kept all the words of the Law as He did.

Furthermore, long life (Psalm 91:16) was available under a worse covenant based upon worse promises, so surely it is available under a better covenant based on better promises (Hebrews 8:6).

Objection: James Said to Say, "If the Lord Will, We Shall Live." This Proves that We Cannot Claim Long Life.

Objection: James Said to Say, “If the Lord Will, We Shall Live.” This Proves that We Cannot Claim Long Life.

James also told some people that they should weep and howl. When I read objections like this, I don't know whether to weep or to howl!

Read this in context:

James 4:13-16:

Go to now, ye that say, To day or to morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain:

Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

But now, ye rejoyce in your boastings: all such boasting is evil.

If you are self-willed and conceited, this passage applies to you. If you aren't, it does not tell you what to do because it is not addressed to you.

Two verses later James says to howl and weep for the miseries that are coming upon you. (See James 5:1-6 for the whole context.) Is that proper conduct for all Christians? No, it only applies to the rich oppressors described in the context. God does not want His children howling and weeping for the miseries that are coming upon them! Likewise, it is the evil boasters (verse 13, verse 16) to whom the verses in between (verse 14 and verse 15) apply. James gave commands to two groups of people who are out of God's will. If you don't think that you should howl and weep with the rich oppressors, why classify yourself with the self-willed people who have no guarantee of long life in their present condition? (God's promises of long life are always tied to serving Him, and self-willed people do not qualify.)

You don't have to wonder if the Lord is willing to give you a long life if you are serving Him; there are many promises covered in this book elsewhere that make this clear. In fact, to serve God fervently but then say, “I don't know if God wants me to continue living until I've had a long life or not” would accuse God of being able to break His promises.

In the larger context, James said in the next chapter that the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and that being transparent with each other – confessing our shortcomings to each other and praying for one another – would result in healing (James 5:14-16). So we KNOW that it is the Lord's will for you to be healed – not to die of an illness – based on that next chapter. James definitely does not counsel the Christian to question the will of God for his healing. The only IF is that IF a SINNER calls for the elders, IF he has committed sins, he will be forgiven when the elders come and anoint him and pray the prayer of faith over him. No IF is involved with the healing. Therefore, you cannot make James 4:14-15 say that you should die of an illness and not have long life.

You must remember that James is addressing a “mixed bag” of sinners and saints. Some of the people whom he addresses KILL (James 4:2, James 5:6), and no murderer has eternal life (1 John 3:15). So some of these people are not partakers yet of New Covenant blessings.

The other ways out of here would be an accident, murder, suicide or martyrdom. Anti-faith teachers love to harp on martyrs as proof that we can't be assured of long lives. (See the objection about Stephen for an exposition on this.) So what about accidents? Jesus talked about some accidents. He talked about accidental poisoning and snakebites. You are guaranteed preservation in such cases in Jesus' name. He also said that we would tread on snakes and scorpions and over ALL the power of the enemy, and NOTHING should be any means hurt us (Luke 10:19). Psalm 91 covers accidents when it says that no evil shall befall the man who abides in God and that God will satisfy that man with long life. That takes care of accidents and getting murdered (as opposed to martyred). As far as suicide goes, just don't kill yourself and you won't leave that way, either.

It is true that your life appears “for a little time” in the overall scheme of time, but even 120 years would be a little time by God's standards. Given that a thousand years is as a day to Him, 120 years would be as 2 hours, 52 minutes and 48 seconds using the same standard, which would seem to God like a little time. Okay, I'm being a little overmathematical, but you get the point. (I like math, and I cringe when Christians make mathematically incorrect statements. For example, some preachers say that there are over 30,000 promises in the Bible. There are actually only 31,101 verses in the entire Bible, and they are certainly not all promises. The New Testament has only 7,957 verses. Also, some preachers say that Paul wrote half [some even say two-thirds] of the New Testament. Paul actually wrote only 24.04% of the 180,551 words and 25.55% of the 7,957 verses in the King James New Testament. [I pulled those totals out of a popular Pentecostal reference Bible. The total from the individual books' word counts was 180,551 words, but the total for the New Testament was stated as 180,552 words. I did not feel like counting the words in the New Testament myself to see which was right.] Of course, these numbers are slightly misleading because Paul did not write in King James English, and this count includes little italicized words that were added for clarity to the English translation. If you think that he wrote Hebrews (which is not explicitly stated, but probable in my opinion), the numbers jump to 27.90% of the words and 29.36% of the verses, which is still less than a third of the New Testament. I'll only go along with you if you say that Paul wrote half of the books in the New Testament [13, or 14 including Hebrews, out of 27]. End of mathematical digression.)

James's point is that life is a gift from God. The boasters should recognize that God gives them their very lives so that they don't boast in themselves. It is not a blanket statement of unbelief telling all Christians that they should ask God every year if it is His will for them to live another year! It is only the people who turn away from God who are in danger of not living another year except for God's mercy. If you aren't one of these proud boasters, you don't have to pray every New Year's Eve to see if God wants you to live another year or not.

Objection: We Are Not Promised Tomorrow

If you and your friends are not saved, you're right, so please read How to Be Saved from Your Sins. When you're not in covenant with God, you have no guarantee of your next breath. That's why it's urgent that you get right with God by surrendering your life to the lordship of Jesus Christ immediately. I wonder how many people realize a second too late that their chance to receive eternal life ended when they stepped into an eternal hell. How many people in hell really intended to do something about their lost, unforgiven condition someday but never had the chance for "someday" to come?

But if you are a saint and have not reached a ripe old age, you most certainly ARE promised tomorrow, and the day after tomorrow, and a lot of tomorrows after that! Psalm 91:16 tells you that God satisfies the person in His secret place with long life. If you haven't lived a long life yet, I can't think of a better DEFINITE promise of tomorrow.

This is a weaker cousin of the "If the Lord wills, we shall live" objection; this one just doesn't even pretend to have any Scripture backing it. (You can see that other objection for some further comments on this matter.)

Objection: Psalm 41:3 Proves that God Permits Sickness but Gives You Grace to Bear It

The idea is that rather than healing your sickness if you help the poor, God will just “turn your bed,” which the objector is convinced means that He promises to comfort you, not heal you, if you get sick. Does He really mean that He will just give you grace to bear sickness as you resign yourself to it? As in many cases, this argument dissolves when you consider the context. Let’s see this objection fits the context when we look back a couple verses:

Psalm 41:1-3:

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the LORD will deliver him in time of trouble.

The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness.

So, speaking of the giver, God says that He will (1) deliver him, (2) preserve him, (3) keep him alive, (4) bless him (5) not deliver him to his enemies’ will (6) strengthen him when he is sick and (7) “make his bed” (literally “turn his bed”) in time of sickness. So right away we know that He is not saying, as some think, that you must waste away, resignedly singing your sweet songs in the night as God kills you with sickness. The Lord will preserve you and keep you alive and deliver you and strengthen you. Already we can see in the context that God does NOT let you die from the illness, refusing to heal you but just giving you grace while you die a miserable death! That conclusion definitely does not fit what God says when you consider the preceding two verses, or even the rest of verse 3 itself.

The phrase “turn his bed” does not appear anywhere else, so we have nothing in the Bible to compare that to, which makes this a little difficult. If you look through modern translations of the Bible, many of them just come out and say that the Lord heals the person in his sickness, which would refute the objection immediately. So it is far from universally accepted that Psalm 41:3 speaks merely of comfort. However, it is not universally accepted that Psalm 41:3 speaks of complete healing rather than comfort, either, so assume for this discussion that He says He will comfort you, as the objector insists. What you have to see here is that even if “make his bed” does mean that God will comfort the person, that is not ALL that He does! He also strengthens him (in the same sentence), which is probably why many translators concluded that the person would get out of his bed rather than just stay there comforted.

In my opinion, the strongest proof is in verse 2 that God does indeed heal rather than merely comfort, though I don't argue that "the God of all comfort" (2 Corinthians 1:3-4) would comfort you too. David says, "He shall be blessed upon the earth." It doesn't say that he will LEAVE the earth because of his sickness, so obviously he gets healed and stays on the earth. To assign a status of "blessed upon the earth" assumes that the sick person is no longer languishing in a sickbed. When is that last time you looked at a sufferer in a "care center" and declared, "Wow, that person is blessed upon the earth!" Never, and no one else in his right mind would think that a person confined to a bed with a chronic unhealed illness is "blessed upon the earth" either. So in my mind, the man in this passage MUST be healed and delivered from his sickbed so that he can be "blessed upon the earth."

Another strong argument that the Psalmist did not think that the person must just stay sick and be comforted is the fact that Psalm 41 is a Psalm of David, the same David who wrote Psalm 103:3, in which he declares without question that God "heals all your diseases."

In case you're now wondering how someone would ever die if God really promised to heal all his diseases, check out the answer to the related objection.

Objection: It Is Presumption to Think that Life and Death Are in Your Power

Actually, it is presumption NOT to think so when God's Word clearly states that they are!

Proverbs 18:21:

Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and they that love it shall eat the fruit thereof.

The words you say can bring healing or kill you!

Proverbs has numerous passages telling you things that will lengthen your lifespan and things that will cut short your lifespan. (See Is There an Appointed Time for Each Person to Die?) These things are up to YOU, not up to God. It is up to you whether you speak in agreement with the Word (whether regarding healing or anything else) or whether you speak contrary to it.

It should not come as any shock to you that physical life and death are literally in the power of your tongue, because SPIRITUAL life and death are in the power of your tongue, too! It is not up to God whether or not you are born again! With the mouth confession is made unto salvation (Romans 10:10)! If you don't say WORDS with your mouth, you will not be saved. By your WORDS you shall be justified, and by your WORDS you shall be condemned (Matthew 12:37).

What you say about Jesus (Lord or not Lord) determines your final destiny! How powerful is the tongue! James also talked about the power of the tongue in James 3-2:6, saying that if you can control your tongue, you can bridle your whole body. Jesus said that you will have whatever you say with your mouth and believe in your heart (Mark 11:23), and He did not restrict that to only good things or only bad things. If you believe Jesus' words, and you should, you see that YOUR TONGUE determines what you will get.

The vast majority of Christians have no understanding or appreciation of the power of their words, and that is why so many of them live defeated lives. They fail to realize how often they "shoot themselves in the foot" with their own words.

Objection: Jesus, Not the Devil, Now Has the Keys of Death, So HE Is the One Who Makes People Die Today

I get a chuckle out of some of things people write today, and I definitely got a rise out of this one. But I can see how someone would reach this “logical” conclusion, and the answer isn’t obvious. The book of Revelation does reveal that Jesus has the keys of death and hell. This means that the devil does not have those keys. So this COULD lead you to believe that Jesus has the power of death, so if someone dies, it must be His doing! Besides, doesn’t Hebrews 2:14 teach that Jesus must have the power of death now because the devil doesn’t?

Hebrews 2:14:

Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

Actually, it’s this verse that is the key to undoing this objection. The King James Version uses the word HAD above, but it’s a mistranslation. (Okay, I’ve probably lost the entire King-James-Version-Is-The-Only-Word-of-God crowd, but I might have already lost them when I’ve pointed out a few other mistranslations such as Isaiah 53:4’s use of griefs and sorrows for sicknesses and pains.) The word echo used for “had” is a Greek present active participle. Thus, a correct translation from the Greek says that the devil HAS the power of death. That might upset you if you’ve used this as a “proof text” to prove otherwise, but you can check it out for yourself. Many other translations get it right.

So how can Jesus have the keys to death if Satan still has the power of death? I believe that the “death” reference in Revelation properly refers to the “second death” which is the lake of fire. In other words, Jesus has the keys to hell and the lake of fire.

The last enemy to be destroyed will be death (1 Corinthians 15:26), but that has not happened yet.

Unfortunately, death is still part of life – it hasn’t been destroyed yet, though its sting has been removed for the Christian. For us, death is just a change of address to a better location.

However, Satan still HOLDS the power of death. That is enough to disprove the objection that it must be Jesus at work when someone dies because Satan doesn’t have the keys to death anymore. So no, death does not occur when JESUS goes around killing everyone. Death came into the world by sin, not by Jesus. We will have to deal with it until Jesus returns, but Jesus has no darkness and no death in Him.

But Satan’s power of death does NOT give him the right to kill Christians at will. Christians have been delivered out of his kingdom and control (Colossians 1:13). We should “go home” when we’re ready, not because Satan evicts us from our bodies prematurely.

Objection: Healing Is a Side Issue that Does Not Deserve to Be Emphasized So Much

Every time Jesus Christ commissioned anyone to preach the gospel, He also told that person to heal the sick. Gospel preaching is to have signs and wonders following. The last verse in Mark (Mark 16:20) tells us that. The word Amen means so be it. They preached everywhere, and the Lord worked with them, confirming the Word with signs following. So be it! That is how it is supposed to be!

In Acts 14:7-10, Paul preached “the gospel” (what God calls the gospel, not what most men today call the gospel, which covers only the new birth) to a man and that man received faith to be healed. He had never walked a step in his life, but by listening to the gospel, faith to be healed came. Healing was obviously part of the gospel that Paul preached. Paul, as you probably know, did mighty signs and wonders of healing. Paul himself had to be healed on numerous occasions just to be able to continue ministering after being physically mistreated in various cities.

Laying hands on the sick should be taught to everyone! You probably think I’m off the deep end for saying that, but actually, you are off the deep end if you don’t say it, because you are out of agreement with what God says the basics are:

Hebrews 6:1-2

The doctrine of laying on of hands is one of the six fundamental doctrines of Christ! It’s right in there with faith and eternal judgment. I would not dare call anything that is a fundamental doctrine of Christ a side issue! Receiving healing from the laying on of hands is an easy way to get healed that should be taught to new believers. As they grow in faith, they can learn to receive healing without the laying on of hands, but they have to start somewhere. They should also be taught that THEY can be the one DOING the laying on of hands.

Miraculous healings have resulted in entire cities turning to God. It wasn’t a side issue to the people in those cities. Read about the crowds that came to Jesus, Peter and Paul because of the healings that occurred. No evangelist should be without this alleged “side-issue” working in his ministry. It will multiply his effectiveness.

The only people who think healing should be a side issue are people who don’t really think that healing should be discussed at all, or at least not preached as a covenant right. I would hate to see one of the foundations of Jesus Christ’s ministry (preaching, teaching, healing, delivering) be yanked out of our gospel preaching as a “side issue.”

The fact that so many Christians get just as sick as the heathen in the world is proof to me that we need to preach healing a lot more, not less!

Objection: We Need to Fulfill What Is Left of Christ's Sufferings in the Earth (Colossians 1:24)

It stretches my imagination that anyone could really think that you need to be sick to finish the sufferings of Christ on the earth. Ironically, this objection came from a very popular book that was generally written in favor of healing! It was a pitiful attempt to explain why some people remain sick. I suppose some anti-healing people might use this excuse too, but if all healing books were full of statements like this, we would not need anti-healing books.

The objection comes from mangling the meaning of Colossians 1:24:

“Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church.”

Paul was referring to the repeated beatings he received for preaching the gospel. He could not possibly have been referring to normal sicknesses. See the reply to the objection about Paul's Thorn in the Flesh if you are not convinced.

Christ Was Only Sick When He Took Our Sins and No Man Can Share in His Atoning Sufferings

Jesus was never sick during His preaching ministry. So being sick could not be one of Christ's sufferings in the ministry.

Jesus was “made sick” (see Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption for notes) for us. That was the only time when He was sick, and He did not bear His own sicknesses anyway – He bore our sicknesses! No other man can take the sicknesses of another in an atoning way. No other man needs to. Since Jesus already bore your sicknesses, there is no need for you to bear them, and there was no need for the apostle Paul to bear them, either. There is no evidence that Paul was ever infirm except as a result of his beatings. Neither Paul nor you could join in Christ's finished atoning sufferings. That would make you a coredeemer/coredemptrix with Jesus, and NO ONE will ever fill that category, not even Mary, despite the erroneous claims that some are making today.

Paul's Physical Sufferings Were from Beatings, Not Sickness

Paul first preached in Galatia because of a physical “infirmity.” Lystra (part of Galatia) was where Paul was stoned and left for dead. The believers (who obviously believed in divine healing), prayed and raised Paul up.

This “infirmity” was not caused by catching some illness. Paul lists his many sufferings for Christ in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27, where illness is noticeably absent.

An Illness Could Not Benefit the Body of Christ, Yet Paul's Sufferings Did

Have you ever heard of an illness that helped the Body of Christ? When one member suffers, all suffer (1 Corinthians 12:26). This verse does not say, "When one suffers, all are built up. When one gets a stomach virus, everyone benefits."

Paul said that he suffered for the sake of Christ's Body, the Church. Therefore, his suffering had to benefit others. That is because his suffering came from being beaten for preaching the gospel, not the current year's flu strain. Paul was willing to get beaten up all the time because it advanced the Church. Simply getting sick does not advance the Church at all. It is a drag on the Body because it forces you and often others to give up otherwise productive time to care for your illness.

Paul said that his sufferings were for you (the Church). Just getting sick with some disease would have hurt the Church, not helped it, because it would have hindered Paul from getting the gospel out.

Do You Rejoice at Someone's Sickness?

Paul also said that they rejoiced in his suffering for them. Is anyone rejoicing because you are sick? No, other than Satan, his demons and maybe a few modern Pharisees who don't want you to get healed if you preach divine healing. However, Jesus said to rejoice when men revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for His sake (Matthew 5:11-12), so there is Scripture for rejoicing in persecution. Recall how Peter and John rejoiced that they were worthy to suffer shame for Jesus' name (Acts 5:41). Jesus never said to rejoice because you're sick; He removed sicknesses rather than rejoicing in His spirit in front of the sick because they were sick. The Church rejoiced in Paul's sufferings, so that COULD NOT refer to disease of any kind!

Is It Finished or Not?

Jesus said, "It is finished." This meant that He had fulfilled everything He was supposed to do on the earth, which included doing all the suffering on the earth at the end of His life that was necessary for the plan of redemption. He didn't say, "It is MOSTLY finished, but some other people will have to finish My redemptive work that I started while on the earth."

Whose Sickness Are YOU Bearing?

Jesus redeemed us from sicknesses by bearing our sicknesses in our place. Isaiah said that He bore OUR sicknesses (Isaiah 53:4). The mangled reading of the verse in question would require you to bear SOMEONE ELSE'S sickness to redeem that person whom Christ somehow did not redeem. So do you really believe that you are literally bearing a sickness that is not your own, but one that belongs to someone else? Do you really believe that your sickness will prevent the other person from having to be sick? (Assuming, of course, that the other person in turn is not bearing yet ANOTHER sickness for ANOTHER person whom Christ somehow failed to redeem during His life.) Do you see how ridiculous this gets? It is clear from Scripture that Jesus bore EVERYONE'S sins and sicknesses; He did not leave any part of the job for someone else to finish.

Objection: Vine's Expository Dictionary Says that AFFLICTIONS in Colossians 1:24 Are "Afflictions of Christ from Which His Followers Must Not Shrink, Whether Sufferings of BODY or Mind"

When we try to untangle Vine's on this, we could still be left with a description of suffering while being persecuted for the sake of Christ, and these persecutions certainly could afflict your body and your mind. Paul suffered plenty of afflictions for his preaching of the gospel. We are not redeemed from persecution; we are guaranteed it if we want to live godly in Christ Jesus (2 Timothy 3:12).

I've read Mr. Vine's entire entry on this word myself (always do your own research!), and Vine correctly points out that the word means a pressing or pressure – "anything that burdens the spirit" (he didn't say body in that sentence). He mentions calamities of war, distress, anguish and several other meanings that would not be interpreted as physical illness. When he does get to the part quoted by the objector, the previous meaning he mentioned was persecution, for which he cited 10 passages! So implying that Vine meant a cold or cancer could fit the bill is reading something into Vine's that isn't really there as well as reading something into Scripture that really isn't there.

If the objector thinks that getting a cold or cancer is part of the afflictions of Christ, he should read the related response involving Colossians 1:24.

Objection: We Should Expect, as Paul Did, to Always Bear Jesus' Dying in Our Own Bodies (2 Corinthians 4:10)

2 Corinthians 4:10:

Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.

I am amazed at how many Scriptures can be used when preaching divine healing and answering objections to it. I am also amazed at how many Scriptures are quoted out of context like this one to give the impression that healing is not always God's will for all. It actually gets worse, as the objector proceeds to also misappropriate 1 Corinthians 4:16 ("Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me") and/or 1 Corinthians 11:1 ("Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ") by saying that Paul urged people to imitate him so that they also should bear this "dying" in their own bodies!

If you get a flu bug from that person who coughed and sneezed and blew his nose the whole flight in the airline seat next to you, you can't convince me that it has anything to do with the "dying of the Lord Jesus." It certainly had nothing to do with what Paul was discussing, as we'll see. But even within this verse, notice that it ends saying that the life also of Jesus might be manifest in our own bodies. So that alone proves that getting sick does not equate to Jesus' dying, unless you are prepared to claim as well that your sickness causes the life of Jesus to manifest in your body! And if the life of Jesus, the Healer, manifests in your body, you'll be healed, not sick! So this makes a decent healing verse but a horrible stay-sick verse.

But the argument gets even weaker when you consider the context of 2 Corinthians 4:10. Let's take it along with the 2 verses before it and the 2 verses after it, and we will see how downright un scholarly it is to use the verse as a healing objection.

2 Corinthians 4:8-12:

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair;

Persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed;

Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.

For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

So then death worketh in us, but life in you.

Now we see that Paul is talking about his persecutions and physical abuse for the sake of the gospel. Just as Jesus was physically abused by his persecutors, so was Paul. That's why he called it "the dying of the Lord Jesus." But even then he said that the life of Jesus would be made manifest in his body, so that instead of actually dying from the physical torture, as Jesus did, he would still be kept alive and healed from whatever was inflicted that would have caused death.

The verse following verse 10 proves again that this “dying” was persecution-related. Paul was delivered unto death for Jesus’ sake. Being diagnosed with type 2 diabetes or rheumatoid arthritis has absolutely nothing to do with Jesus’ interests. Not only does it not further the gospel, but it hinders it inasmuch as you end up unable to spread it. But again Paul says that the life of Jesus would be manifest in his mortal flesh. In other words, the more he was tortured, the more Jesus would manifest His life in Paul’s body to supernaturally strengthen him, heal him and keep him going.

The clincher is the final verse above where Paul says that death worked in him, but life worked in the Corinthians. So the Corinthians were not experiencing the horrible physical torture that tried to work death in Paul. So having “the dying of the Lord Jesus” only applies if you are being physically tortured for your faith in Jesus. Yet there is one more gem here related to healing. Paul said that life was working in the Corinthians. So even though they were NOT being tortured practically to death and needing that life to work in them to stay alive, that life was still working in them anyway without death working in them! This is similar to what Paul told the Romans – that the same Spirit who raised Christ from the dead would impart life to their mortal bodies (Romans 8:11). That cannot refer to the resurrection because they would not have mortal bodies after the resurrection! That applies to this life.

So far from being a “stay-sick passage,” this passage can and should be used as a healing passage! When you really study the passage in question, the entire objection gets turned on its head and backfires on the objector!

Objection: Disease Viruses are Part of God's Creation and Are Therefore Good, Even Though We Often Don't Think So When We Catch Them

Disease viruses are not part of God's original creation that He declared to be good. You will not find viruses in Genesis 1 and 2. You will not read, "Sometime between the sixth and seventh days, God said, 'Let there be viruses to make My creation miserable for a season.' And it was so. And God looked on the various flu strains and called them good." Diseases are mentioned only after Adam fell. Death, and with it, sickness, came into the world through sin (Romans 5:12).

Further proof that disease is not part of God's original good creation is that fact that there will be no more pain in the renewed earth that we will inhabit forever (Revelation 21:4). (Yes, technically, you don't live in heaven eternally, you live on the new earth in which righteousness dwells. This isn't worth splitting hairs over with people who talk about heaven in a generic sense.) The former things will have passed away! If sickness were good, it would be in heaven forever and continue to cause pain. But sickness will be absent from heaven and the "new earth" will not be fallen; it will be in the same good condition that our current earth was in before sin corrupted it.

God declared everything that He made good or very good. You don't have to go through mental gymnastics trying to convince yourself that disease germs are somehow "good." They aren't. They're bad. Any right-thinking person can attest to that. However, someone actually tried to get me to believe this ludicrous theory about viruses in creation. It was too corny to forget! However, you may feel free to forget it.

Seeing that death came by sin (Romans 5:12), fatal diseases could not have been around before Adam fell, because Adam could not have died physically before he sinned! Disease came only because Adam allowed Satan, the author of disease, into the earth. Jesus did good and healed all those who were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38)! Peter called the healing of the crippled man in Acts 3:1-16 a "good deed" in Acts 4:9. If the REMOVAL of sickness is GOOD, sickness itself CANNOT be good! That settles the matter.

Objection: As Many Doctors Can Tell You, Many People Make Themselves Sick – It Has Nothing to Do with the Devil

This is true, but it does not negate the fact that the devil is still the ultimate author of sickness. I knew a Christian smoker who died of cancer. If you violate certain natural laws, you will make yourself sick and have yourself to thank for your condition. If you do not keep your flesh under (i.e., you let your temple of the Holy Ghost turn into a cathedral of the Holy Ghost), you can suffer natural consequences from being obese. You can make yourself sick. Many Christians do unhealthy things. But this does not negate the fact that healing is available to everyone. In some cases, there may be physical things you need to change (such as your diet) to stop the problems from recurring. You are warned in Proverbs not to eat too many sweets so that you don't make yourself sick (Proverbs 25:16). Believing in healing can coexist with believing in common sense. You don't leave your brains at the altar when you get saved! But there is mercy for everyone in God's kingdom. You can bet that Jesus laid hands on more than a few obese people in the crowds and healed them even if their illnesses were self-inflicted (Psalm 107:17-20).

Other sicknesses are caused by sins that are not explicitly physical, like worrying. Yes, worry is a sin because God says not to do it. This is true even though worry is a socially acceptable sin. Preachers who commit adultery make the tabloids, but preachers who worry don't. (When was the last time you saw a headline, "Famous Evangelist's Dirty Secret Out: He Worries about His Finances?") Yet worry is just as much a sin as adultery is, and you can get sick from either one!

It is not the devil's fault if you make yourself sick by worrying or harboring bitterness or jealousy. It is your fault. Sin is always your fault because it is your choice. The Bible does teach that you can make yourself sick. For example, jealousy causes rottenness of the bones (Proverbs 14:30).

On the other hand, plenty of sicknesses are not caused by poor stewardship of your body or moral failure. Colds do not indicate moral weaknesses! Job was righteous, but the devil made him sick. Jesus said that a woman whom Satan had bound for 18 years ought to be healed (Luke 13:16). Jesus healed all who were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38). Because the New Testament describes sickness as bondage to the devil and oppression of the devil (literally, being under the power of the devil – see Notes on Acts 10:38), we should agree with that.

If I were to put a rock on the accelerator of my car and let it crash into your house, I'll bet you wouldn't say this: "I'm not mad at Steve for ruining my house, because it was the car that did it. I'm mad at the car, not Steve." Yet that is exactly what you are doing when you say, "I don't blame the devil for my sickness. It's just a virus that's going around." Yes, the virus may be the immediate cause, but that virus was invented by the devil to make people sick. It was not part of God's original creation, which he declared good. (There's another objection reply devoted to that topic, in case you have any doubts about that.)

Power over sickness and disease in the New Testament has always gone along with power over the devil. We shall cast out demons and lay hands on the sick. Jesus gave His disciples power over all sickness and over all demons (Matthew 10:1, Mark 3:14-15, Luke 9:1-2, Luke 10:19). This power is over two different aspects of the work of the same devil, who is out to steal, kill and destroy.

In conclusion, the New Testament is quite clear that sickness is the work of the devil. To say otherwise, you would have to question the authority of Scripture, which is beyond this book's scope. (I am happy to answer any objections on Scriptural grounds, but you will have to argue with someone else if you do not believe that the Bible is true.)

Objection: To Preach that Jesus COULD NOT Do Miracles at Nazareth Is to Deny His Deity and God's Sovereignty. Therefore, the Only Reason He Could Not Would Be that People Did Not Bring the Sick.

Boy, do people ever get mad when you preach that the Son of God COULD NOT do miracles at Nazareth. "He's God! He can do anything! He's sovereign! You have just denied the deity of Jesus Christ!" You will be called an unbeliever and a heretic for teaching this. (I have been, actually.) This is strange because God Himself teaches this, and He is not an unbeliever, and He believes in the deity of Jesus Christ.

Of course, Mark 6:1-6 plainly states that Jesus could do no mighty work there. Matthew 13:54-58 states that He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief. We'll let Matthew and Mark fight over exactly what constitutes a mighty work, but it's plain that mighty works could not be done at Nazareth because of the people's unbelief.

That would seem to be plain enough, but someone took me to task on this and said that these passages do not prove that unbelief can stop God from doing miracles. The objector said that because they did not recognize Jesus as the Messiah, they did not bring the sick. Therefore, the reason that Jesus did not heal the sick at Nazareth is that they were never brought to Him in the first place. If they had been brought to Him, He would have healed them. In other words, there were no sick people present whom Jesus did not heal.

But we know that there WERE some sick people there, because Jesus laid hands on a few sick people and healed them even though no "mighty miracle" happened there. (See Mark 6:1-6 again.)

Of course, unbelief could have stopped them from bringing the sick to Jesus, and this would be at least a partial explanation. However, the assertion that there could not be a sick person present whom Jesus could not heal is not true, since there is other Scripture to support that this situation could happen. Luke 5:17-26 records that the power of the Lord was present to heal them – the religious leaders – and yet they did not get healed. As far as we know, only the paralytic got healed. The Pharisees were too busy complaining and getting offended to get healed. They figuratively "went through the roof" but only the man who literally "went through the roof" was healed. So we have just proved that the sick could be in Jesus' presence and not be healed because they did not believe.

(Some people like to argue that Jesus did not heal them all if this were true, but it is definitely true that Jesus healed everyone who came to Him for healing. He never turned down anyone. He healed all who came to Him, though others stayed sick, like many at the Pool of Bethesda, because they did not seek healing from Him.)

When the father of the demonized boy asked Jesus to help him, Jesus told the man that all things are possible to him who believes – putting the responsibility for believing on the man, not on Himself. (See Mark 9:17-29.) This shows that the man could have continued to doubt and that the boy could consequently have stayed demonized.

Only one man at the Pool of Bethesda was healed in John 5:2-19. In other places, where all believed, all came and all were healed. In this case, the others did not believe. They stayed sick, even though Jesus Christ Himself was present in their midst. If they would have believed, they could have been healed, too. Instead, they stayed sick, apparently not knowing who Jesus was or what He was anointed to do for them.

Repeatedly in Scripture, we see that God Himself is limited by what we can believe He will do. Can man limit a sovereign God? YES – because He has limited Himself to operating according to His Word, and He has given authority over the earth to mankind (Psalm 115:16). God was just as sovereign when Peter walked on water and when he started to sink. It had nothing to do with God and everything to do with Peter's faith and doubt. It was God's will for Peter to walk all the way to Jesus, and Jesus actually rebuked him for doubting. God's power let Peter override gravity, but it only operated when there was faith. It stopped operating when there was doubt. In this sense, God's power that allowed Peter to walk on water was definitely limited by Peter's faith and doubt.

Another Scripture that comes to mind is "They turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel" (Psalm 78:41), but the Hebrew word for limited used here is indistinguishable from the Hebrew word for grieved, so I would not offer this as a conclusive proof-text.

God will save anyone who will confess Jesus as his Lord. But His power to save is limited to those who believe His promises and His statements about His Son. God is still sovereign, but His saving power cannot operate in a man who will not believe. Why should it be any different for physical healing, which is the physical side of salvation? Where there is faith, there will be the power of God. Where there is unbelief, as at Nazareth, the power of God is stopped in its tracks. God has chosen to operate by making promises and then fulfilling them when we believe, thus loosing His power on the earth in response to man's faith.

There is no power shortage on this earth, nor is there a deity shortage or sovereignty shortage on God's part. The reason we do not see more healings is that there is a faith shortage!

When Jesus ministered, He did so as a Man. He stripped Himself of any advantage He could have had by invoking His power as deity (Philippians 2:5-8). Because He had to "play by the same rules" that we do, He COULD NOT heal people as deity.

Finally, the clincher is that people didn't HAVE TO bring the sick – Jesus preached in the SYNAGOGUE (Matthew 13:54)! There were surely sick people there already, including the ones that He laid hands on who WERE healed.

For more information on this topic, see Objection: We Cannot Expect to Heal as Jesus Did because We Are Not the Son of God and Objection: Jesus Healed and Did Miracles to Prove His Deity.

Objection: The Only Reason Jesus COULD NOT Do Miracles at Nazareth Is that They Drove Him Away before He Could Do Anything

First, the objector is reading something into the passage that isn't there. A reading of Mark 6:1-6 shows that on this occasion, the people did NOT drive Jesus out of town. Did Mark miss something that Matthew picked up on? Nope. In Matthew's version (Matthew 13:54-58), there is also no indication that Jesus was driven out of town.

Second, Mark records that Jesus laid hands on a few sick people and healed them. So Jesus was obviously not driven out of town before He could lay hands on anyone.

Third, Mark and Matthew both point out the REAL reason Jesus could not do anything there – they both cited the people's unbelief!

Fourth, Matthew is clear that Jesus preached in the synagogue, so the idea that no one showed up can't be taken seriously. People DID attend the synagogue, after all.

People are looking for excuses to back up the idea that as deity, Jesus could do anything, so there must be some other reason He "could not" do miracles at Nazareth. But Jesus ministered as a Man anointed by the Holy Spirit. Remember, He couldn't do any miracles ANYWHERE until the Holy Spirit came upon Him. So He could not have ministered as deity (even though He undeniably WAS deity). If He had ministered as deity, He would have performed miracles even as a child,, which He did NOT do, despite "lost books of the Bible" claims to the contrary. The REAL Bible says that his first miracle was in Cana of Galilee AFTER He was anointed by the Holy Spirit (John 2:11), so any claim that He did a miracle before - then is contrary to REAL Scripture!

Objection: Mark 16:9-20 Was Not in Some Early Manuscripts

Occasionally, those prone to discrediting the ministry of laying on of hands fuss over this point. However, the removal of Mark 16:9-20 from the Bible would not change the New Testament's teaching on any of its contents. Thus, this is somewhat of a useless argument against healing ministry.

It should be noted that the vast majority of old texts DO include these verses. The retort to this from the objector is that the "most reliable" manuscripts do not. An argument over this is well beyond the scope of this book, but suffice it to say that most scholars through the ages have seen no need to cut Mark 16:9-20 out of their Bibles.

But suppose that Mark 16 ended at verse 8. So what?

Matthew and Luke both record the commissioning of believers to preach everywhere.

Admonitions that only believers make heaven are throughout the New Testament.

There are many accounts of believers speaking in new tongues as Jesus said they would. (See Acts 2:4, Acts 10:46, Acts 19:6 and 1 Corinthians chapter 14, for starters.) Paul expressed his wish (and God's) that all would speak in tongues (1 Corinthians 14:5). So the fact that believers would speak in tongues can be proved apart from Mark 16.

Paul's experience with the snake in Acts 28:3-6 confirms Jesus' words concerning snakes. Besides, God already healed people of deadly snakebites in the Old Testament – see Numbers 21:5-9.

James 5:14-15 COMMANDS sick people to call for the church elders, with the promise that the prayer of faith will save the sick person and the Lord will raise him up.

There are plenty of passages in Acts where the gospel was preached with signs following.

God's promises of divine protection and long life in Psalm 91 would cover poisoning as well as fatal snakebites, which if successful, would lead to short life. This would constitute evil befalling the one who abides in the secret place of the Most High, which God promised would not happen in Psalm 91:10.

Jesus commissioned His disciples to preach and heal the sick during His earthly ministry. Laying hands on the sick was not new in Mark 16; the disciples already had experience doing that! See Matthew 10:1, Mark 3:14-15, Luke 9:1-2 and Luke 10:19 for proof of this. Note especially that the power was given when they were sent out to preach. Romans 8:29 tells us that our destiny is to be in the image of Christ. Preaching with power was so important that Jesus said not to leave Jerusalem without it (Luke 24:49).

Jesus said that those who believe in Him will do the works that He did, and greater (John 14:12). Therefore, even if we rip out "they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover," we could still figure that out from what Jesus said in John's gospel, as He successfully ministered to the sick over and over. Thus, we should do the same.

Luke records the Ascension twice – once in his gospel (Luke 24:51) and once in Acts 1:9.

Acts 1:8 summarizes what Jesus said would happen. His followers would share His gospel all over the world in the power of the Spirit. The rest of the book of Acts demonstrates believers going into the world, preaching the gospel, and having it confirmed with signs following. You don't need Mark 16:20 to verify that this happened.

God's principle is that by two or three witnesses every word should be established (2 Corinthians 13:1), so yanking out only one section of Scripture (Mark 16:9-20) cannot invalidate any principle. Everything in Mark 16:9-20 is taught elsewhere.

Rather than fussing about some verses that weren't in a couple of early manuscripts, why not weigh the entire Bible's teaching on the subject of healing? There is no shortage of teaching on it, as the list of Scriptures in this book should demonstrate.

Objection: God's Healing Covenant in the Law of Moses Was Only for the Jews

This argument falls apart for several reasons.

God Declared Who He IS, Not Just What He Would Do

Anyone who has read Malachi 3:6 or James 1:17 knows that God does not change. Therefore, whatever He was, He still is. He is the great I AM, not the great I WAS or the great I WILL BE SOMEDAY.

God did not just promise to take sickness away, although He did that on several occasions. He declared in Exodus 15:25-26 that He is the Lord your Physician (The Lord That Healeth Thee). This goes beyond a promise to do something and declares something about the nature of God Himself. God cannot change, so if He was The Lord Your Physician, He still is The Lord Your Physician today.

It is strange that everyone agrees that God's other Old Testament covenant names still apply today. I have yet to see anything in print disputing that God is still all of the following today, even though these were all Old Covenant titles for God. The fact that He still is all of these things today is borne out by New Testament Scriptures. Here are some, but certainly not all, of them:

The Lord our Banner of Victory (2 Corinthians 2:14)

The Lord our Righteousness (1 Corinthians 1:30)

The Lord our Peace (John 14:27)

The Lord our Shepherd (John 10:11)

The Lord whose Provision Shall Be Seen (Philippians 4:19)

The Lord is Present (Matthew 28:20)

Because God still IS all these things, it is inconsistent and illogical to single out the one title "The Lord That Healeth Thee" and say that it was only for Jews and that it does not apply today.

God's Old Covenant Promises Are Yes and Amen in Christ

2 Corinthians 1:20:

For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us.

Matthew 5:17:

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.

Jesus did not destroy the wonderful promises that God made under the Old Covenant. He fulfilled the sacrifices for sin so that we do not need to sacrifice animals today (Hebrews 10:11-14 and elsewhere). He redeemed us (Galatians 3:13) from the curse for not keeping all the Law, found in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39. He made it unnecessary to observe the Jewish rituals and ordinances found in the Law (Colossians 2:14-17). But nowhere is it stated that Jesus abolished the promises of God. On the contrary, the New Testament says that God's promises are yes and Amen in Christ, not done away with in Christ.

No serious student of Scripture can dispute that a Gentile convert under the New Covenant can still receive Old Covenant blessings. Galatians 3 settles this issue:

“So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham” – Galatians 3:9.

“Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree: That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles, through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.” – Galatians 3:13-14. (Note that “the promise of the Spirit” refers to the promises the Holy Spirit made, not to the baptism with the Spirit, which Abraham did not have. Of course, the baptism with the Holy Spirit is also available because Jesus is “He who baptizes with the Holy Spirit,” but Galatians 3:14 isn't the verse to use to prove it.

“And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.” – Galatians 3:29.

Much of Galatians 3 covers the subtle point that Christ is the real recipient of the blessings of Abraham, and they are yours because you are “in Christ.” This is why you can't “break” the New Covenant; you can only step out from under its blessings. It wasn't made with you; it was made with Jesus, who you can be sure will never break it. That makes it an everlasting covenant.

Ephesians 2:12-13 makes it clear that you are a partaker of the promises to the Jews, saying that you were (not are) a stranger to the covenants of promise! “That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.”

The blood of Christ has made you a partaker of the wonderful promises made to the Jews. You are not a stranger to them.

The New Covenant is Better than the Old Covenant

Hebrews 7:22

Hebrews 8:6

How could anyone believe the two verses above and then say that God's healing covenant was only for the Jews? That would mean that under a better covenant, established upon better promises, God is not as willing to heal today as He was under the Law.

Hebrews 11 lists the greats of faith in the Old Covenant and ends with the words, "God having provided something better for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

If Jesus brought us out of the Old Covenant where any sick person could be healed, and into a New Covenant where some people just have to stay sick, a sick person would be better off (as far as his health is concerned) if Jesus Christ had not come yet! The coming of Christ would rob some sick people of their healing!

How ironic it would be if Jesus Christ, who went everywhere doing good and healing all that were oppressed by the devil (Acts 10:38), made this universal healing unavailable to us by His final sacrifice. This would mean that it was inexpedient that He went away, because you could be healed if He were still around physically. Of course, Jesus said that it was expedient that He would go away (John 16:7), so what is available now cannot be worse than what was available during His earthly ministry. The same Holy Spirit who empowered Jesus now empowers believers to do the same works in Jesus' name.

The Old Covenant's Blessings Are Still Yours

Further proof that Old Covenant blessings are available to Christians today is found in Ephesians 6:1-3, where the Old Covenant blessing of long life is still made available to us today.

The New Testament Is Also a Healing Covenant

Even if we threw out our Old Testaments, you could find plenty of covenant promises to heal the sick in the New Testament. Jesus said that we would lay hands on the sick in His name and they would recover (see Mark 16:15-18). There are clear instructions that if (!) there are "any sick" among you, they are to be prayed over in faith so that they will be healed (James 5:14-15). Peter declares that we were healed by the stripes of Jesus (1 Peter 2:24). Paul declares that our bodies are the property of God, bought with a price (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). God imparts His power to your mortal body (Romans 8:11). God wants you to prosper and be in health (3 John 2).

Even if the Old Covenant promises of healing were only for the Jews, there are plenty of New Covenant promises of healing. So there is no way that you can say that healing was only for the Jews, unless you're willfully ignorant or you want to make a lot of money selling this year's "Why God Won't Heal You" book in Christian bookstores.

Objection: The New Testament Emphasizes Spiritual Blessings, Not Material Blessings

I will grant the objector's point that many of the blessings in the Old Testament were related to this life – blessed animals, crops, physical health, and so on. Under the Law, you could not have the vast spiritual blessings available to the born-again believer.

That is why the New Covenant is a better covenant established upon better promises (Hebrews 8:6). You can enjoy spiritual blessings, especially true sonship, that even the Old Testament heroes of faith never enjoyed. In fact, the difference is so drastic that Jesus said that the least person in the Kingdom of God is greater than the greatest prophet who ever served under the Old Covenant (Matthew 11:11, Luke 7:28)!

I agree with the objector that the New Covenant emphasizes spiritual blessings. But if our covenant is truly better than the old one, especially by the drastic degree spoken of by Jesus, how could the Old Covenant physical blessings have been revoked today? The Old Covenant said that God satisfies us with long life (Psalm 91:16), takes all sickness away from our midst (Deuteronomy 7:15), heals all our diseases (Psalm 103:3), and so on. Have we been “ripped off” to the extent that these blessings no longer apply to us, and all we get today is “spiritual” blessings? That doesn't make one bit of sense. If the physical blessings aren't for us, we were robbed of them when Jesus inaugurated the New Covenant.

Abraham walked in a number of physical blessings, but we can tell for sure that they haven't been done away with because Galatians 3:14 says that the blessing of Abraham has come upon the Gentiles through Jesus Christ. So physical blessings continue today along with the spiritual ones.

Now the physical blessings are ours to an even greater degree, because Jesus was made sick in our place so that we don't have to be sick (Isaiah 53:4-5), and He was made poor so that we through His poverty might become rich (2 Corinthians 8:9). Our blessings under the New Covenant are all the more sure because they are granted on a basis of 100% grace + 0% our personal merit.

Thank God, we have BOTH material and spiritual blessings under the New Covenant!

Objection: Exodus 15:26 Only Applies to You if You Keep the Whole Law of Moses

Exodus 15:26 opens with the condition, “If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes...”. Thus, the statement that God would put none of the diseases of Egypt on them depended on their meeting this condition. So with apparent logical consistency, the objector asserts that if you don’t keep the whole Law of Moses, you don’t qualify for exemption from sickness or enjoyment of the statement, “I am the Lord who Heals You.”

God undoubtedly DID heal the Israelites on many occasions, but it is noteworthy that they never reached the point where they kept the whole Law of Moses! Consider the people in Hezekiah’s day – they definitely (through ignorance) did NOT keep the letter of the law regarding the Passover (a symbol of Christ who was to come), but God healed the people anyway. So somehow you CAN enjoy healing from the Lord Who Heals You without actually keeping the entire Law. Otherwise, no one in the Old Testament would EVER have been healed of ANYTHING based on this verse, because aside from Jesus, NO ONE ever kept the WHOLE Law of Moses! Also, God knew that “all have sinned” and that NO ONE other than Jesus would ever keep the whole Law of Moses. So what good would this promise have been if there had been no way for imperfect people to receive it?

The key is to understand something about both covenants. Under both covenants, God provided FORGIVENESS through the shedding of innocent blood. In the New Testament, your sins are washed away so that God can treat you as if you had never sinned. Under the Old Testament, a blood sacrifice could be made that would COVER (but not wash away) your sins so that God could treat you as if you had never sinned. Under the Old Covenant, you retained your sinful nature, but you could still receive forgiveness on the basis of shed blood and enjoy the blessings, including Exodus 15:26, that would have applied to you if you had never sinned.

Sometimes we forget that even the Law provided a means of forgiveness, thinking that everything back then was received on the basis of human effort. But if human effort to keep the Law would have worked, the mandated sacrifices for sin, and in particular, the Day of Atonement, would have been unnecessary. It was those blood sacrifices that enabled people to regain God’s favor as if their sins hadn’t been committed.

Today, it is Jesus’ blood sacrifice that has WASHED AWAY, not just COVERED, our sins. Because of that blood, we are entitled to receive any promise God ever made to people if they never sinned at all. That includes Exodus 15:26 and many other Scriptures.

Finally, Exodus 15:26 contains a declaration of who our unchanging God IS. He isn’t just the God who has made a promise to heal you; healing is His very nature. He IS the Lord Your Physician. That is true for us today as forgiven Christians who walk in right standing with God as if we HAD kept the whole Law of Moses.

Objection: Galatians 3:13 Means that Christ Redeemed Us from the Law, Which Was a Curse, Not the “Curse” in Deuteronomy 28

According to this objection, “Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law” means that He redeemed us from the Law itself, which was (supposedly) a curse, as opposed to the curse contained IN the Law that would come on those who broke it.

God Says that His Law is Good, Not a Curse

God certainly does not share the objector’s dim view of His Old Testament law, and neither should you:

Romans 7:12:

Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

Romans 7:16:

If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good.

Psalms 119:72:

The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver.

God never refers to His Law as a curse. If it’s good, it can’t be a curse! To say that the Law was a curse is to say that part of the Word of God is a curse! How can God’s holy, pure word be a curse? That doesn’t make sense.

No, the Old Testament Law was good; we just have something better. Galatians 3:13 cannot possibly say that we today were redeemed from the “cursed” Law itself because neither the Galatians or any other Gentiles were ever under the Law of Moses to begin with! However, Jews and Gentiles alike are redeemed from the specific curses for disobedience mentioned in the Law.

The Context of Galatians 3:13 Proves that It Does Not Refer to the Law Itself

Now let's consider the immediate context of Galatians 3:13. This passage starts out with the following statement in verse 10: "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Observe carefully what Paul did and did not say here. He definitely did not say, "The law is a curse; it's a curse to be under it" as the objector might think. No, his point is that if you are "of the works of the law" – seeking to be justified only by your own good works – you put yourself under the curse because you did not "continue to do all things that are written in it." You have broken the Law and so has everyone else, so you need to be redeemed. Only shed innocent blood atones for sin – never good works. If you don't accept redemption, you are still under a curse for sinning. It took Jesus' innocent blood to pay for our sins forever so that the curse would not have to come upon us. As Paul explains, Jesus was punished in our place to serve our just punishment for falling short of God's standard. He was cursed for us! He was "made sick" (Isaiah 53:10) – sickness was part of that curse. He had to take the parts of the curse that He could in our place to legally redeem us from those. He redeemed us from the rest of the curse by being cursed in general. Now that our sin has been punished with the Law-threatened curses, that sin doesn't have to be punished a second time when we believe in the One who "became sin" and was punished accordingly. So you don't need to be punished with the curse of sickness and pain for your sin, because Jesus already was cursed with sickness and pain for your sin when He was wounded for your transgressions and bruised for your iniquities (Isaiah 53:4).

The other giveaway of Paul's meaning is his use of the closing verse of Deuteronomy 27 – the verse immediately before the blessing and curses of Deuteronomy 28. Deuteronomy 27:26 says, "Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them. And all the people shall say, Amen." In verse 10, Paul deliberately echoes that statement that was made immediately before the blessings and curses: "...as it is written, Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." So this is also definite proof that Paul referred to the curse contained in the law that was the punishment for not doing the whole law. The same Paul who told the Romans that the law was holy and just and good did not contradict himself by telling the Galatians that the law was a curse. If he had, he would have introduced an internal contradiction into God's Word and spoiled it!

Objection: The Curse of the Law Was Given to Israel, Not to Us. We Cannot Be Redeemed from It Because We Were Never under It.

It is true that the Gentiles were never under the Law of Moses, so they never had the curse directly addressed to them.

However, we (Jews and Gentiles alike) are redeemed from everything in that curse. The book of Galatians was clearly addressed to the churches of Galatia, who would have been Gentile believers. Paul said that Christ has redeemed us – not just the Jews – from the curse of the Law, not that He has redeemed “them,” or just the Jews. Therefore, although the curse never applied to us directly, the redemption from the curse and all it contains does apply to us. Galatians 3:14 continues the thought: “That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ....” We were not under the Abrahamic covenant until we were in Christ, where the promise made to Abraham’s seed now applies to us because we are in Christ. The blessing of Abraham that wasn’t ours became ours in Christ. The redemption from the curse’s contents was not ours until we were joined to Christ. Even though we were never Jews under the Old Covenant, the blessings and deliverance promised to the Jews have become ours because we are in Christ.

The Old Covenant blessings on the righteous are not NEGATED in Christ; they are YES and AMEN in Christ (2 Corinthians 1:20).

The point Paul was making was to “foolish” people in Galatia who were trying to live under the Law of Moses even after becoming Christians. Paul’s point was that if you live under the Law, the curse of the Law applies to you if you don’t keep the whole Law. Who would want that? Paul was warning that if you want to go back under the Law, you’re also going back under the curse. However, there is no need to go back under the Law and its curse because Christ redeemed us from that curse when He was cursed for our sins. So it is better to live under grace, being redeemed from that curse, than to try to live under the Old Covenant, under which you would have been subject to that curse. No New Testament believer is subject to that curse, which includes every kind of sickness there is as well as poverty, defeat and other things.

Objection: Galatians 3:13's "Curse" Speaks of Spiritual Death, Not Sickness or Poverty

Someone once objected that I should read Galatians 3:13 in context to see that it really talks about spiritual death, not temporal troubles. So I read it in context and learned exactly the opposite.

Galatians 3:10 says that as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse. What curse? "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them." Paul quotes Deuteronomy 27:26, the last verse in Chapter 27. This is the verse right before Deuteronomy 28, which expounds on the blessings for obedience and the curses for failure to do everything in the Law! Thus, the "curse" referred to in Galatians 3:10, in context, must refer to the "curse" of Deuteronomy 28:15-68, which lists many ailments and covers "every sickness and every plague that is not written in the book of this law" (Deuteronomy 28:61), which definitely covers anything that may be wrong with you right now.

It is scarcely conceivable that Paul could be talking about one curse in verse 10 and be talking about another curse in verse 13. If you don't think he's talking about the same curse when he says that Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the Law, you are the one who is not reading Galatians 3:13 in context!

While it is definite that Christ redeemed us from poverty, sickness and spiritual death, as stated by the title of a classic faith book, it is NOT true that the curse of the Law was poverty, sickness and spiritual death. The curse of the Law included poverty and included sickness, but there is no reference at all to spiritual death in it, nor could there be, because that law was written to people who were already spiritually dead! No one could be "made alive" spiritually until Christ rose from the dead. In fact, all those rules and regulations in the Law were given BECAUSE people were spiritually dead. They needed a spiritual law to follow because they themselves were unspiritual. They couldn't have the Holy Spirit living in them to guide them, and they couldn't be made new creations in righteousness and true holiness (Ephesians 4:24). The law was their schoolmaster until the time when Christ came to introduce something far better (Galatians 3:24).

So it is ironic that the objector has this backwards. The curse referred to in Galatians 3:13 had plenty to say about poverty and sickness (read it – that will dispel any doubts about what is in there), but spiritual death is actually what is absent from the curse!

Objection: Christ Did NOT Actually Bear the Deuteronomy 28:15-68 Curse Himself because He Could Not Have “Borne” Our Mildew, Droughts, Bad Crops, Children Sent to Captivity, and Other Things Mentioned in That Curse

The objector is sure that Jesus did NOT bear the sickness and disease in the Deuteronomy curse (“the curse of the Law”) because there are so many things in that curse that it would have been impossible for Him to bear literally. And when you consider what the objector is saying, there certainly ARE a lot of aspects to the curse that He could not have borne in a personal sense during His atonement. This certainly is food for thought, isn’t it? The objector also claims that the Bible does not really say that He bore that curse for us.

He could not have borne the curse on his livestock because He didn’t own any livestock. (The sheep who heard His voice weren’t the kind that they sheared for wool.) He could not have crop failures because He didn’t run any farms. His carcass was NOT “meat unto all the fowls of the air” when He died. He did not get married (no matter what some silly fictional bestseller might tell you) and have another man lie with His wife. He did not have an ox that was slain before His eyes.

He did not plant a vineyard and have someone else eat its grapes. He did not have sons or daughters who could have been “given to another people.” He was not led forth into other nations. He did not borrow money from the heathen. And the Lord did not bring him into Egypt again with ships.

So it appears that the objector is right that Jesus could not have personally borne everything in the curse of the law on our behalf.

And the objector is right!

However, his conclusion isn’t. He makes three false assumptions: (1) If Christ could not bear the ENTIRE curse, He could not have borne ANY of it, (2) It is necessary to believe that Christ bore the whole curse as our substitute to believe that healing is in His atonement, and (3) The Bible never says that He bore the curse, therefore He didn’t redeem us from disease.

Regarding the first point, Isaiah specified that Jesus surely bore our sicknesses and carried our pains. Matthew agreed with this understanding of it (Matthew 8:17), and so did Peter (1 Peter 2:24). Paul later wrote that Jesus was made poor so that we through His poverty might become rich (2 Corinthians 8:9). (He lost everything He had before He died; the Romans even split up His clothing rather than giving it to His family.) So we see substitution in the areas of disease and poverty. So He did bear the sickness and poverty parts of the curse even though He did not personally experience all of it.

We can look at the second and third points together. The objector is actually correct again that the Bible never claims that Jesus bore the entire curse of the law in our place! Now before you start gasping too much, you should read Galatians 3:13 carefully. It does NOT say that Christ bore the curse of the law. Isaiah and Peter agree that He bore our SINS, but He did not actually bear the CURSE in its entirety, though it appears that the parts He could bear, He did.

What Paul ACTUALLY said was something far more drastic – Jesus BECAME a curse for us! The Law’s curse didn’t say that God would go off and leave you, but that’s what happened when Jesus cried out, “My God, My God, why have You forsaken me?” (Matthew 27:46, Mark 15:34). It’s bad enough to sin, worse to carry sin, but He “became sin” (2 Corinthians 5:21). He was cursed on that cross, as it is written, “Cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree.” So Jesus definitely was CURSED so that we don’t have to be cursed. While He didn’t literally bear every part of the curse such as having someone take His (nonexistent) wife, obviously God deems the way that He was cursed on the cross as a complete payment to redeem us all from “the curse of the Law.” So He DID redeem us from everything in Leviticus 26:14-39 and Deuteronomy 28:15-68! That means that He DID redeem us from EVERY sickness and EVERY plague!

The fact that we ARE redeemed from every sickness does not depend on His literally bearing every detail of that curse Himself, which we all have to admit would have been impossible. It was His BECOMING a curse, not BEARING the curse, that redeemed us from the curse. But either way, we’re still redeemed from it! He surely did bear our sicknesses and carry our pains (Isaiah 53:4), and the only way that makes sense is that He did it as our Substitute. Jesus paid our ransom, made the gift of righteousness available, and freed mankind from having to suffer ANY part of the curse in the Law, including “every sickness and every plague.” Now as righteous new creations, God can bless us as if we’d never sinned and not judge us for failing to follow the Law.

Here are the main things you need to know:

1. Jesus literally DID bear the sickness and pain part of the curse as our substitute because Isaiah, Matthew and Peter agree that His punishment provided healing for us.
2. He did not literally bear all the rest of the curse, but He “became a curse” – “became sin” – and by doing so, He DID redeem us from the entire curse, including “every sickness and every plague” and even the parts that He could not have literally borne personally. He did not have to literally bear them all Himself to redeem you from them at Calvary, and neither I nor the Bible claim that He did.

Objection: The Only Sense in which Jesus Was Cursed Was that He Died a Cursed Death by Being Hung on a Cross

Galatians 3:13 does NOT merely say that Jesus died a cursed death. It says that He became a curse for us. The objector tries to tie the phrase “bring made a curse for us” to “cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree” in such a way that Jesus’ manner of death was what counted. This is understandable given that it’s hard to comprehend what “becoming a curse” would be mean, yet the Bible also says that He “became sin,” which is probably just as hard to comprehend. But you don’t have to comprehend the gospel to believe it. (Do you comprehend the Trinity? I hope that you believe that God is Three in One anyway!)

If you back up 3 verses, Galatians 3:10 tells us that as many as are under the works of the law are under the curse because cursed is everyone who does not keep the whole Law. When Jesus took your sins upon Himself, He was counted before God as if He had NOT kept the whole Law, but was a lawbreaker as you were. Thus, He was counted as cursed, not just because He was nailed to a tree, but because He was counted as unrighteous. Your sins brought that unrighteousness on Him. Because anyone who sinned merited the curse, He had to be cursed.

Parts of the Deuteronomy curse would not be able to be applied to a single person, such as having your city besieged and having nationwide crop failures and foreign exile. So Jesus did not bear the entire “curse of the Law” but rather the parts of it that were possible for one person to carry. His body was made a shambles before He even went to the cross. If merely dying on a tree were enough to be cursed in our place, God could have been much more humane to His Son and let Him stay in perfect health until the nails went through Him. The bodily punishment Jesus took was not a waste of time! His body was broken and His blood was shed. His body was broken for our healing and His blood was shed for our redemption from sin. He did not merely shed His blood, but He bore OUR diseases (see Isaiah’s Prophecy of Redemption) – the ones that we deserved as lawbreakers according to the Law.

I believe that this bearing of things the Bible calls a curse is what Paul referred to when He said that Jesus BECAME a curse, as opposed to just BEING cursed because He hung on a cross.

There is more to say here, but I’d be repeating the same things I said in the discussion Why Jesus Was Beaten, so I encourage you to read that.

Objection: The Curse Was Corporate, Not Personal, So You Could Not Be Personally Redeemed from It

Objection: The Curse Was Corporate, Not Personal, So You Could Not Be Personally Redeemed from It

Many parts of the curse in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39 only make sense when applied to Israel as a whole as opposed to individuals. No sensible person would think that the “good” people would stay in Israel while only the “bad” ones would hauled off to foreign lands. Likewise, having cities besieged cannot be a personal thing; either your city is besieged with everyone in it, good and bad, or your city is not besieged. You can’t have just some people in the same city besieged because they broke the Law while others who keep the Law are not besieged.

So objectors could use this as another argument that “the curse of the Law” must refer to the Law itself and not to the curses contained within it when Paul says that Christ redeemed us from the “curse of the Law.” This particular interpretation is refuted elsewhere, so we don’t need to deal with it here. We know that Paul was not talking about the Law itself as being a curse – it was just, holy and good. So what DID he mean then? If we were not redeemed from the Law itself, the only other reasonable explanation left is that Christ redeemed us from the curse contained within the Law, as Galatians 3:10 makes clear anyway.

So now we have to wrestle with the issue that parts of that curse that Christ redeemed us from were corporate. How could we personally be redeemed from foreign invaders taking our children, sieges on our cities, famine in the land, being exiled, and so on? We know (and have discussed elsewhere) that Christ could not have personally taken the entire curse on Himself, though the Bible affirms that what He did redeemed us from the curse of the Law.

However, the context of the curse in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 is that an individual would be cursed for not keeping the entire Law. It would not just be a situation where a few kids in study hall blew spitballs around the room and the entire class got a “class detention.” Galatians 3:10, quoting the last verse in Deuteronomy 27, makes it clear that cursed is everyone who does not keep the whole Law. (This refers to Old Covenant people before Christ’s redemption was wrought for us.) That means plainly that an individual would be under the curse for not keeping the Law, not just the entire nation.

Galatians 3:10-13 makes it quite simple – you as an individual are cursed if you are relying on keeping the whole Law, but Christ became a curse for you and redeemed you from the curse for not keeping the whole Law. Regardless of what the curse is, you’re redeemed from it.

I went through the curse verses and found that we can classify the curse components into the following general categories:

- Sicknesses and plagues
- Misery and mental torment
- Premature physical death
- Crop failures and famine
- Losing your property and animals

- Hunger, thirst, nakedness, lack
- Military defeat and enslavement to enemies
- Losing your wife and children to enemies
- Curse on your children
- Curse on your animals
- Being cursed in general (unspecified)

The first three can be categorized as a whole as:

- Sickness

The next three can be categorized as a whole as:

- Poverty

The others, except for being cursed in general, could not have applied personally to Jesus, who had no wife, children or animals.

What we see from Scripture is that Jesus took the parts of the curse that it would be possible for a single person to take – sickness and poverty. He was made sick and weak, and He lost everything He had. He didn't get to leave His clothing to the person of His choosing – the Romans took it away and kept it themselves, leaving Him with literally nothing.

I believe this is why Scripture is specific about two aspects of His substitution being cursed for us – He was made sick (Isaiah 53:10), and by His stripes we are healed (1 Peter 2:24), and He was made poor so that we through His poverty might become rich (2 Corinthians 8:9). Substitution is the only sense in which anyone's poverty could enrich anyone else. A man living under a bridge near you could not possibly make you rich; he doesn't have the means to do it "through his poverty." But Jesus bore the curse of poverty so that you don't have to be poor.

Looking at the Passover, which symbolized Christ who was to come, we see that before they ate the body of a spotless lamb and shed its blood, they were slaves. But immediately after the Passover, the biggest mass healing in history took place and "there was none feeble among their tribes" (Psalm 105:37), and they "plundered the Egyptians" and instantly became rich! If people could be healed and prosperous after partaking of the mere symbol of Christ, how much more should they be healed and prosperous after knowing Christ Himself?

We see throughout Scripture that sickness and poverty are associated with sin, while health and prosperity are associated with righteousness. Jesus took what was associated with unrighteousness so that we could have what is associated with righteousness.

Obviously God credited Jesus with redeeming us from the curse when He was cursed for us, despite the fact that there were parts of the curse He could not have borne personally. Similarly, one could nitpick that He could not have borne ovarian cancer in His own body, and thus did not bear every possible illness, but as the response to the objection along those lines says, bearing cancer would be enough, regardless of where it might manifest in male or female bodies.

Similarly, while someone could nitpick that He did not bear every aspect of the curse, He bore the parts that He could, and that was enough to satisfy God as payment for us so that we would not have to pay for our sins by being cursed.

He bore personally the parts of the curse that it is possible to bear personally so that you do not have to bear any part of the curse that you could bear personally.

It was obviously enough to satisfy God, so it's enough to satisfy me.

Objection: The Law's Curse Referred Only to Israel's Corporate Exile

Israel had already gone into exile long before Paul ever wrote to the Galatians. Paul told the Galatians that Christ redeemed them ("us") from the curse of the Law, having been made a curse for us. It would be senseless to say that we were redeemed from something that had already happened to other people and thus had been completed in the past.

But that's okay, because the fact of the matter is that there is plenty else in the Law's curse other than corporate exile! Poverty and sickness are included as well. These are things that could happen to us, so it makes sense that they are things from which Christ redeemed us.

Simply read Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and Leviticus 26:14-39 for yourself, and you can verify that there is plenty in there other than just being exiled out of your country.

The objector goes on to say that the Old Testament emphasis was on "the land" and what would happen to it, while we don't see that carried forward into the New Testament. But there is a good reason that we don't see curses on the land in the Church Age. We live in a different period where God's wrath has been poured out upon Jesus for our sins, and the good news is that God purchased everyone's reconciliation. People don't have to earn it; they just have to receive it. God is not interested in cursing land because Jesus was already cursed so that we don't have to be cursed. By redeeming us from the curse – the whole thing, not just part of it – Christ redeemed us from having to have horrible judgments on the land. These will not resume until the book of Revelation's events come to pass, where God's wrath will be poured out on those who shunned His free offer of eternal life and redemption from sin. But that is why we don't have Old Testament-style doom-and-gloom prophets during the Church Age. We live in the age of grace.

Objection: The Curse Was Corporate, Not Personal, So You Could Not Be Personally Redeemed from It

Objection: It Makes No Sense to Say that Jesus Bore Our Sins but Only ONE of Their Consequences (Sickness)

As demonstrated elsewhere, Jesus actually bore both sickness and poverty for us in our place, so sickness is not the only consequence of sin that He bore.

He bore the parts of the curse that it was possible for Him to bear, given that He had no wife, children or animals who could have partaken of other parts of the curse.

Sin and sickness are always closely intertwined in Scripture. Jesus made it clear that forgiven people can be healed when He forgave and healed the paralytic who was let down through the roof (Luke 5:17-26). David urged himself to bless the Lord who “forgives all your sins and heals all your diseases” (Psalm 103:3). When atonement was made for sins, healing followed. (See Healing and Atonement for a thorough discussion of that.) How much more should healing follow Christ’s atonement for sins!

Some curses would only come upon Israel if it sinned as a nation, but sickness is an individual curse (like poverty) that can befall an individual regardless of what happens to other people around him.

To some extent, saying that it makes no sense that Jesus bore sickness is the clay telling the potter that he made a mistake. Isaiah makes it clear that He “bore our sicknesses and carried our pains” (Isaiah 53:4) when He was “a man of pains and acquainted with sickness” (Isaiah 53:3) when God “made Him sick” (Isaiah 53:10) in our place. He certainly bore our sicknesses, which no reader of the literal Hebrew in Isaiah 53 should be able to deny. The punishment that brought us shalom (well-being, including prosperity) was upon Him (Isaiah 53:5).

My question back at the objector would be, “Given that Jesus bore disease and poverty in our place as a curse for sin, what else exactly would you expect Him to bear when He was our substitute?” It seems to me that sickness and poverty were the two expressions of the “curse of the Law” that He could take upon Himself. The sickness part would include all mental illness, anguish, torment and confusion, which were spelled out as part of the curse. After that, what else is there that He could have borne as an individual other than the general cursedness of sin? He certainly bore that, too, as He was “made a curse” (Galatians 3:13) for us when He “became sin” (2 Corinthians 5:21).

Regardless of how you feel about how God actually did it, the fact remains the “Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us” (Galatians 3:13). What Jesus bore was obviously sufficient payment in God’s eyes to redeem us from the curse, and if it’s good enough for God, it’s good enough for me.

Objection: Lawbreakers Are under “A” Curse (Damnation), not “THE” Curse in Deuteronomy 28

The issue is the understanding of the whole passage Galatians 3:10-13, which the objector says is “clear” that those who sin are under “a” curse, which he holds to mean damnation, as opposed to being under “the” curse for breaking the Law specified in Deuteronomy 28. After all, the law was never given to the Gentiles anyway, so “the” curse supposedly could not refer to a curse that never belonged to the Gentiles. (This last point is dealt with separately elsewhere.)

Let’s look at the passage in question.

Galatians 3:10-13:

For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith.

And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them.

Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree:

First, this is a phantom objection because the Greek only says “under curse” (hypo katara) without an article at all! So some translations say “the” curse (including the King James Version and NKJV) and more say “a” curse. There is certainly no special grammatical point being made in the original Greek about “a” curse or “the” curse.

Second, the curse in Deuteronomy 28 has nothing to do with anyone’s eternal destiny. Read Deuteronomy 28:15-68 for yourself and see! The curses listed are ALL temporal curses having to do with this lifetime. It is notable that absolutely NOTHING is said about the transgressors’ eternal destiny! The Law threatened sickness and poverty, but not spiritual death, and with good reason – the hearers were already spiritually dead and nothing in the Law could remedy that. So the idea that this curse could have anything to do with eternal damnation is laughable.

Third, the curse that those “under the Law” are under must be the one in Deuteronomy 28:15-68, which the text makes absolutely clear, as it says that those under the Law are under the curse FOR (because) the Law says cursed are those who don’t continue in it – Paul quotes the verse immediately before Deuteronomy 28! So this whole passage must refer to the same curse.

Fourth, the context contrasts those who walk by faith (as believers should do) and those who, like the Galatians, were trying to justify themselves under the law. Let's look at the verse BEFORE this passage. Galatians 3:9 says, "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." THEN Paul talks about those who are of the works of the law in verse 10. Now let's look at the verse AFTER this passage. Galatians 3:14 says, "That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." So the passage in question is sandwiched between statements that the believer is blessed with Abraham. Was the blessing of Abraham eternal life? NO, that was not available back then! The blessing of Abraham was all about temporal things in this lifetime! So this whole section is talking about temporal blessings and curses that we have in this lifetime, not eternal salvation or damnation!

Thank God, Jesus redeemed us from the curse by being cursed in our place for our sins. Therefore, we are redeemed for everything included in this curse in this lifetime, which includes "every sickness and every plague" (Deuteronomy 28:61)!

Objection: The Curse of the Law Was Not Curses (Plural) – It Was Simply that No One Could Keep the Whole Law

The objector takes issue with the idea that we are redeemed from everything contained in “the curse of the Law” (including sickness, poverty and mental torment). So he tries to redefine the curse in his own terms – not being able to keep the whole Law.

But this objection falls apart at once when you consider that the very verse the objector has in mind (Galatians 3:13) tells us that Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the Law, having been made a curse for us. If Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law, and the curse of the Law was inability to keep the whole Law, then Christ redeemed us from inability to keep the whole Law, which means that we can now keep the entire Law of Moses today. I don't think that we can accept that interpretation, especially because Gentiles were never commanded to keep the Law of Moses in the first place, so what good would that do? We can't be justified by keeping the whole Law anyway; we have a much better means of justification by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Objection: God Called Deuteronomy 28:15-68 CURSES in the Plural, So Galatians 3:13, Which Says that Christ Redeemed Us from THE Curse, Can't Refer to Those

This objection splits hairs more finely than the Bible itself does. Paul says in Galatians 3:10 that those who are under the works of the law are under “the” curse because it is written, “Cursed is everyone who doesn’t continue in all the things in the book of the Law to do them.” That quotes the last verse of Deuteronomy 27 (Deuteronomy 27:26) – the verse right before the list of blessings and curses in Deuteronomy 28. So Paul makes it clear that failure to keep the law brings “the curse,” which is the collection of individual curses in Deuteronomy 28:15-68. Three verses later he declares that Christ HAS redeemed us from “the” curse of the Law – the curse for not continuing in all the things in the book of the Law to do them that Paul had just mentioned. Once you read Galatians 3:13 in the context of Galatians 3:10, this is a very clear statement; it is not a contradiction at all.

Objection: There Was Only One Curse (Singular) in Galatians 3:13, So Not Every Sickness Could Be a Curse

At least the objector realizes that Christ has redeemed us from the curse in Galatians 3:13, which is more than a lot of people know.

Paul quotes the end of Deuteronomy 27 (Deuteronomy 27:26) in Galatians 3:10, so we know that he refers to the “curse” in Deuteronomy 28 in this passage. The one “curse” in Deuteronomy 28:15-68 contains a number of distinct curses, but this is not a contradiction at all. These curses enumerate various sicknesses, and verse 61 of that passage states that any other sickness NOT specifically mentioned is also part of the curse for breaking the law. On the strength of verse 61, we can state confidently that EVERY sickness is a curse, because it is in a long list of things that the Lord refers to as curses in that chapter.

These were all things that would happen to you if you broke the Law, which is why Jesus had to be “made sick” (Isaiah 53:10) so that He could bear the parts of the curse that were possibly to bear personally. As is pointed out in this book, there is no question that Isaiah, Matthew and Peter agree that Jesus took our sicknesses (part of the punishment for sin) in His own body to free us from having to bear them. That is what Paul means when he said that Jesus redeemed us from the curse, having been made a curse for us.

Even a quick reading of Deuteronomy 28 should make plain to you that the MANY curses in this chapter collectively fall under “the curse” for not keeping the law. (If you haven’t kept the whole Law, join the club! That’s why Jesus had to be cursed in your place for YOUR breaking of the law – to legally pay off your “curse debt” for sinning.)

Objection: Jesus Could Not Literally BECOME SIN because Sin Is a Thing, Not a Person

2 Corinthians 5:21 says that Jesus BECAME SIN. So this is a head-on argument against Scripture itself in almost any translation you can find! You can look, and just about all of them say that Jesus BECAME sin. The fact that a Scripture is difficult does not mean that it is, well, unscriptural!

The symbol of Christ on the cross was a snake (Numbers 21:5-9). Thus, God was showing the Israelites that One would come who would BECOME sin and not just take sin upon Himself. I realize that many battles are fought in theological circles about the implications of Jesus becoming sin, but you can't deny what God says about it. (See the extensive discussion elsewhere in this book about Jesus dying spiritually.)

If we follow this objector's logic, once we cut 2 Corinthians 5:21 out of our Bibles, the next verse bound for the dumpster will have to be 1 John 4:8. To be consistent, the objector would have to say that God is love, and love is a thing, not a person, so God cannot be love.

If we can accept that God can be love, we should be able to accept that Jesus became sin, even though such concepts stretch our human minds.

Objection: Jesus Was Not Really PUNISHED for Our Sins; He Just Shed Blood to Atone for Them

There is actually a fairly popular body of Christian doctrine out there that teaches that Jesus' atonement did not involve God punishing Him. The main ideas backing this seem to be (1) Jesus was innocent, and therefore God could not justly punish Him, so He had to just shed blood to make atonement for us, and (2) The punishment for a sinner is eternal, so to truly be punished in our place, Jesus would have to have to suffer in hell eternally without ever rising from the dead.

One particular non-punishment theory, known as the "satisfaction theory," holds that Jesus honored God on the cross in a way that we did not honor Him, and that God was satisfied with that, so no punishment for Him or for us was then necessary because God was satisfied with what He did.

On the other hand, the doctrine of "penal substitution" – that Jesus was punished in our place for our sins, dates back even past its famous promoters John Calvin and John Wesley. In fact, someone had already put it into print a long time before Calvin ever did. In fact, He lived a long time before JESUS! His name was Isaiah. Here's what he said (Isaiah 53:4-6):

"Surely he hath borne our griefs [literally sicknesses], and carried our sorrows [literally pains]: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."

This perhaps isn't as clear-cut as we'd like it to be at first, because the Hebrew word for chastisement (muwcar) is actually translated instruction a lot more often than discipline, correction or chastisement in the Old Testament. The other meanings don't fit the context as well as chastisement, but it still makes it hard to convince someone making an argument based on this word alone. If it always meant punishment, this would be a slam-dunk. One phrase, the "punishment of their iniquity" (Leviticus 26:41) is particularly problematic because the word found Isaiah 53:5 for chastisement is the word for iniquity in that verse and not the word for punishment. So if we want to make an airtight case, we should look elsewhere.

Fortunately (for us), the punishment theme continues. Isaiah 53:8: "...for the transgression of my people was he stricken." Isaiah 53:11: "...for he shall bear their iniquities." Isaiah 53:12: "...and he bare the sin of many..." I think these are quite clear. He bore, and was punished for, our sins.

It was clear that the onlookers would deem Jesus to be punished by God – "we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted" (Isaiah 53:4). They just wouldn't realize that He was being punished for OUR sins, not His own, because He had never sinned.

Isaiah makes it clear that Jesus was vicariously bearing things that we deserved on our behalf. He did not just make an atonement that relieved us from having to bear sicknesses and pains. He did not just honor God so that sicknesses and pains could be relieved. He actually BORE them Himself. This only fits the “penal substitution” theory. (Isaiah’s Prophecy of Redemption expounds on this idea.)

How did Jesus atone for our sins? He was wounded. He was bruised. He was smitten. He was afflicted. He bore our sins in His own BODY (1 Peter 2:24). We are healed because He was made sick. Why did all these things have to happen to Him? If God still saw Him as sinless, He could not have punished sin that He didn’t see. Yet He did see sin when He saw Jesus. He saw OUR sin. God literally laid on Jesus the sins of us all, as Isaiah said that He would do.

This explains how God COULD justly punish Jesus even though He had no sins of His own. He “took away the sins of the world” (John 1:29) by taking them upon Himself. It was OUR sins that God punished Jesus for. So it WAS a just thing to punish Jesus. In fact, He would have been unjust NOT to punish the sins that were on Him. Jesus bore OUR sicknesses and pains, not His own. In other words, He took the physical abuse that WE had coming for OUR sins.

The idea of Jesus just making an atonement without being “made sin” turns an Old Testament symbol of Jesus into a lie. That was the serpent that Moses raised on a pole (Numbers 21:5-9). Jesus made an explicit tie between that serpent and Himself (John 3:14). If Jesus had still been in sinless perfection on the cross, a spotless lamb on a pole would symbolize Him. A serpent symbolized sin. The Passover DID symbolize Him as a spotless lamb, which emphasizes His spotless blood that was shed for us. (I believe that the point at which He BECAME sin was when He cried out to God about being forsaken when He was about to die. Until then, He BORE our sins and was punished as if He had committed them Himself. However, God was punishing Him, which means that God had not yet forsaken Him.)

Of course, if Jesus had still been in His sinless perfection on the cross until He died, 2 Corinthians 5:21’s bold statement that He was made sin would be meaningless. He couldn’t be made sin and keep His legal sinless perfection at the same time.

This takes care of the first argument in the first paragraph of this response. Now what about the second argument that Jesus would have had to suffer eternally in hell, never to rise from the dead, if He truly took the FULL punishment for our sins? We know that eternal punishment is ahead for the unrepentant sinner. Modern “annihilationists” who teach that God in His love just burns the wicked up so that they cease to exist or suffer are just plain wrong. There will be everlasting destruction (2 Thessalonians 1:8-9) and everlasting punishment for the wicked (Matthew 25:46) where the fire never goes out and the worm never dies (Mark 9:44 and elsewhere). So how could He get out of everlasting destruction that if He had to be FULLY punished for our sins?

First, God HAD to raise Jesus from the dead because without the resurrection, we would still be in our sins (1 Corinthians 15:17). So the plan of salvation obviously could not end with Jesus being in hell forever. But that still leaves us with the question: How could God LEGALLY get Jesus out of hell when He was there paying for our sins?

The first answer is that Jesus was done paying the legal PRICE for our sins before He said, “It is finished” (John 19:30) just before He died. The Bible never says that Jesus PAID for our sins in hell. However, He had to go there because He was spiritually dead when He died on the cross. He died a sinner’s death to identify with our spiritual death so that He could be raised and we could identify with His spiritual resurrection. (We were not PHYSICALLY resurrected with immortal bodies the way Jesus was; our immortal bodies will not be ours to enjoy in this lifetime.) This whole theme is covered in much more detail elsewhere.

The second answer is that while Jesus was in hell, the Spirit of God raised Him from being spiritually dead. He was no longer sin. He was righteousness again, so He did not belong in hell anymore. Our sins were no longer upon Him. Our sins would have to have been upon Him when He died spiritually, then physically and He went to hell. Without OUR sins still on Him, He could not have died spiritually because He had no sins of His own.

So what happened to our sins, then? The Bible never directly addresses this, but it seems to me that legally, they had to stay in hell. They couldn’t have left hell with Jesus because Jesus didn’t have our sin on Him anymore when He was raised. Our sins stayed in the place of punishment where they rightfully belonged. Thus, they were buried in the ground and had no further claims on Jesus. And because we are “in Christ,” they have no further claims on us, either! Baptism is a symbol where WE rise but our SINS stay in the water and don’t come out of the water with us.

When we are born again, we are identified with Christ. Our sins are buried and we have been raised to life without the claims of sin on us. This is why Paul could say that we were buried with Christ and raised with Christ. We share in what happened to Him – we are legally considered to be buried with Him and then raised with Him:

Romans 6:4:

Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

This “newness of life” must refer to spiritual life, as your body is still spiritually “dead.” It has not yet received eternal life. For more on this issue, see the answer to the related objection about Jesus dying spiritually.

So I hope that you can see from all this that Jesus was indeed PUNISHED for our sins. He did NOT merely shed blood for them.

Objection: Christ Gave Himself for Our Sins, Not Our Sicknesses (Galatians 1:4)

Jesus did not have to “give Himself” for our sicknesses, as they were the punishment that went along with the sins that He gave Himself for.

When He gave Himself for our sins, He submitted Himself to the punishment for our sins, which included sickness.

We are not morally accountable for getting some sickness that happens to be on the earth. Thus, Jesus did not “atone” for our sicknesses. However, when He atoned for our SINS, He redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Galatians 3:13), which includes ALL sicknesses (Deuteronomy 28:61).

Objection: Greats of Faith Were Stoned, Sawn Asunder, Slain, Destitute, Afflicted and Tormented. Therefore, We Can Be Too, Even if We Have Great Faith Like Theirs.

This objection is based on Hebrews 11:35-38, which in context appears below with my notes in brackets (as usual) in the passage Hebrews 11:32-40:

And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gedeon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets:

Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,

Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection:

[Okay, stop here. Tradition seizes upon the people who were killed and ignores the people who did something with their faith. However, note that these people did not accept deliverance. It seems that deliverance as in the first part of this passage was available to them and they knew it, but they chose to die, anticipating a better resurrection. This is another case of people choosing to die.]

And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment:

[Consider Paul, who had all of the above. We are redeemed from sickness but not from persecution for the gospel's sake. Of course, the writer of Hebrews spoke of Old Testament people, not Paul.]

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented;

(Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.

And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

This set of verses has also been used to preach that poverty is godly. But consider why they were poor. They were refugees, persecuted for the sake of the Word of God. This has absolutely nothing to do with a believer in a civilized country where the gospel can be preached publicly. It cannot be used as an excuse for a believer not currently undergoing persecution and exile to be poor and sick.

By the way, please notice that sickness is not mentioned once in this list of sufferings for the sake of the Word of God. Healing is mentioned here, though – the dead who were raised to life again had to be healed or they would have dropped dead again immediately.

Therefore, you simply can't use this passage to claim that faith for healing doesn't work. Well, a couple of people have tried to use it for that, but they're wrong. One person wrote that the fact that they were "afflicted" proves that they were sick. But the Greek word translated afflicted means to crowd (literally or figuratively), and it is translated afflict, narrow, throng, suffer tribulation and trouble. It has nothing to do with sickness. (It amazes me that people make statements like this without even bothering to look up the word in a concordance or a lexicon. That's part of the problem right there.)

You CAN have great faith and be persecuted and even martyred, as were all the original 12 Apostles of the Lamb except John according to church history. But that doesn't stop you from receiving healing, which is an entirely different matter.

The people who had "great faith" in the New Testament were those who believed that Jesus would heal the sick. He expressed exasperation when His disciples did not exercise faith in their authority over sickness and Satan. He told people that their faith had made them well. If you can have great faith and still stay oppressed, Jesus surely didn't know that! Where people stayed sick (Nazareth), Jesus marveled at their unbelief, not their faith!

Jesus in His teaching clearly puts the responsibility on us to receive what God has promised. It is already provided. It is up to us to believe that we receive it when we pray.

Objection: Hebrews 11:39 Proves that You Can Have Faith and NOT Receive the Promises

Hebrews 11:39:

And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

Also, Hebrews 11:13 could also be quoted as part of this objection: “These all died in faith, not having received the promises....”

These verses talk about the greats of faith not being able to partake of the New Covenant. They have nothing to do with having faith for something that God had promised. Also, the greats of faith did receive promises – just not the promises in the New Covenant, which was impossible in their day because Jesus had not yet risen from the dead. After reading Hebrews 11:39, check out verses 40 and 33!

Hebrews 11:40:

God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

Hebrews 11:33:

Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,

“The promise” in verse 39 is clearly our New Covenant, because it involves US (verse 40). The greats of faith obtained the promises through faith that were theirs to obtain under the Old Covenant. They could not partake of the promise of a covenant that had not yet been ratified by blood!

The promise they did not receive in Hebrews 11:13 had to do with their eternal dwelling place. We too will die without having yet lived in this promise. This is borne out by the text which follows the part quoted: “But having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city.” The context is clearly not earthly promises of the kind we can receive here in this life by faith. We cannot receive our heavenly dwelling place in this life. So there are promises that even we see afar off but cannot obtain in this lifetime. But healing isn’t one of them!

By the way, the objection as it stands is actually a true statement. You can be in faith and not receive the promises. The writer of Hebrews stated that we inherit the promises through faith and patience (Hebrews 6:12). He surely did not contradict himself in Chapter 11. You can also be in faith but walk in unforgiveness or strife with your spouse and not have your prayers answered. The Bible teaches that there are hindrances to faith and that faith is supposed to work by love (Galatians 5:6). You can have faith, but if you don't walk in love, you'll have trouble eventually and wonder why things aren't working well for you. You do reap what you sow, whether you sow good things or bad things.

Also, Scripture supports the idea that you can believe something in your heart and not receive it. You must not only believe it but also say it! If you're unwilling to tell someone else what you've received from the Lord by faith, you really don't have anything – you're just kidding yourself. Faith without corresponding action is dead (James 2:14-26). The main corresponding action of faith is words that agree with what you believe in your heart. Jesus said that the mountain or the tree would move when you speak to it, not when you simply believe that it will move. The crippled man whom Paul commanded to stand upright on his feet had faith to be healed but he was not healed until he did the corresponding action of standing up (Acts 14:7-10).

So yes, you can have faith (“dead” faith without works) and not receive the promises! But that's not the intended main point of the objection. The idea of the objection is that you can have faith and still be unable to receive the promises, and that is ridiculous and not at all what the context of the passage is about. To say that you can have faith that cannot work is the opposite of what Jesus taught. When people failed to receive something, He attributed it to unbelief. If He did, why can't we? Sure, it might make some people mad, but Jesus wasn't afraid to make people mad when He preached the truth. Better to admit that we need to grow in faith than to water down the Bible to match our substandard experience.

Objection: Faith Does Not Always Overcome – God Can Give Both OVERCOMING and ENDURING Faith

The objector is convinced that SOMETIMES God gives you faith to overcome a trial, but at other times He gives you faith to ENDURE a trial. He uses Hebrews 11:32-37 as his proof text; you can click on that passage to see some comments related to a similar objection.

Before we come down too hard on this objector, we do have to admit that he is right to a degree based on Scripture – the issues are the proper application of the passage and his understanding of faith being “given.”

Some greats of faith wrought mighty victories and performed miracles through faith. However, Paul’s thorn in the flesh, which was NOT a sickness but rather persecution by mean religious people who seemed to be always out to do him bodily harm, was a case where God did NOT deliver Paul from the situation but granted him “grace sufficient for him” to endure it (2 Corinthians 12:7-10).

So this proves that the objector’s argument at face value is not too bad, though the idea that there are two kinds of faith itself (overcoming and enduring) is not something I can see spelled out in Scripture. If you’ll notice carefully, God did NOT give Paul faith to endure persecutions and beatings for the sake of the gospel. He gave Paul GRACE, not FAITH, which is actually a different matter. Faith overcomes things that you can change, but grace lets you endure things that you can’t change. You have authority over sickness in Jesus’ name, so you can change it. You do not have the authority to stop being persecuted for the sake of the gospel. If you did, and you used it, we’d all be seriously worried about you, because EVERYONE who wants to live godly in Christ Jesus WILL suffer persecution (2 Timothy 3:12) – so what would that say about you?

Our faith is the victory that overcomes the world (1 John 5:4), not something that lets us stay in defeat and put up with the problems that we face in this world. For problems that you can’t avoid, God gives grace. For anything the devil tries to do that is inconsistent with your covenant (such as making you sick), the shield of FAITH quenches all the fiery darts of the wicked one (Ephesians 6:16). The shield of faith does not give you “faith” to endure being struck with fiery darts!

The main problem here is that the objector is attempting to use this statement, even if you substitute grace for faith in the second part, as a rationale that when you get SICK, sometimes God gives you the faith to overcome the sickness and sometimes He gives you the faith (or grace) to endure it. But this flunks the SAVED test – does God give some people the new birth and victory over sin, the flesh, the world and the devil, but give other people the grace to deal with being lost and hell-bound? NO! It also flunks the SAME test – did Jesus EVER tell anyone, “In YOUR case, I will only give you faith to ENDURE your illness – I won’t heal you?” NO!

So we cannot believe that TODAY Jesus would ever leave anyone stuck with a disease but with the “enduring faith” to keep suffering from it. So you can file this objection in the “Religious Hogwash” folder along with many other similar objections!

Objection: God Manifests Himself as Healer to Some and as Comforter to Others

The premise is that God has a “higher purpose” for letting some people stay sick, so He just “comforts” them as one of the devil’s diseases makes them miserable and kills them. But for His own sovereign reasons, He supposedly is willing to heal others. This is typical of something you might read in a book on the “Inspirational” book rack at a big-box store where you can often find “God Isn’t Always Willing to Heal” books. (That’s actually where I read this one!)

This objection flunks The SAVED Test. What would you think if I wrote a book claiming that Jesus manifests Himself as Savior to some and frees them from their sins, but He manifests Himself as Comforter to others, making them feel better emotionally while they’re still on their way to an eternity of agony? The idea that God or Jesus would play favorites like that is completely the opposite of what Scripture teaches.

This objection also flunks The SAME Test. To justify this objection, you need to find cases where Jesus comforted the sick rather than healing them in the Bible (as opposed to those aforementioned “Pop Christianity” books). For example, you would expect to see these verses:

Luke 26:23-26:

And Jesus said, “The thief comes to steal, to kill, and to destroy, but I have come to comfort you while he does it.”

And behold, a leper interrupted Him and said, “Please, Lord, I want to be made clean!” And Jesus answered, “I won’t do it. Sometimes God manifests Himself as Healer and sometimes He manifests Himself as Comforter.” And the leper pleaded, “But you healed another leper who came to You just as I did, and the priests testified that You just healed ten other guys of leprosy not long ago!” And Jesus said unto him, “It was My will to manifest Myself as Healer to them, but I’m only willing to manifest Myself as Comforter to you. Stay unclean and be comforted.”

And He turned to His disciples and said, “Behold, I give you power to tread on SOME snakes and SOME scorpions and over SOME of the power of the enemy, when it’s My will. The rest of the time I’ll just comfort the devil’s victims. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy SOME of the works of the devil – when He chooses to manifest Himself as Healer rather than Comforter.”

And truly there were many other cases where Jesus was Comforter instead of Healer, and if we were to compile them all into books, I suppose that all the Pop Christianity bookshelves in all the big-box stores in the world would be unable to contain them all.

Given that NO ONE can produce verses like the above, and that Jesus is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), we cannot believe this objection. Thus, the big-box store shopper should find a better book to read, such as the Bible.

Objection: Faith Does Not Always Overcome – God Can Give Both OVERCOMING and ENDURING Faith

Objection: We Know that God Did Not Heal Paul, Because He Said that He Bore Marks in His Body (Galatians 6:17)

The idea here is that God had completely healed Paul, he would no longer be bearing marks in his body. After all, if he were completely healed, the marks would be gone, and his skin would be like that of the models on the lotion ads on TV, right?

Galatians 6:17:

From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

Where did Paul get his marks? Plenty of them probably came from Galatia itself, where he was stoned and left for dead. Paul wrote to believers in this same general area. This adds additional insight into the infirmities of the flesh that he discussed earlier in Galatians (Galatians 4:13). They were inflicted by men who persecuted him for preaching the gospel. Even then, God kept healing Paul so that he could preach in other places.

So why didn't God heal Paul and give him perfect skin with no marks left in it? I don't know; ask God when you get to heaven if you want. Whatever these marks were, they surely didn't stop Paul from preaching the gospel as a serious illness would have done. Of course, you can't even tie this in to colds and flus because these marks were from persecution, not from diseases. Chicken pox scars are definitely NOT the marks of the Lord Jesus. Cold sores are NOT the marks of the Lord Jesus. Acne pimples are NOT the marks of the Lord Jesus.

If it weren't for God's healing power working in Paul's life, he wouldn't have had marks at all – he would have been dead at Galatia and that would have been it. Paul may have had some scars left, but nothing serious enough to stop his preaching. I personally have a scar from an operation in the third grade, and I don't plan to pray that God will remove it – I have better things to do (like writing this). Paul's physical infirmity at Galatia was stated to be "at the first," implying that it did not continue. He spoke of a trial that was in his flesh, not one that he still had when he wrote Galatians. Paul's healing says a lot more about what is available to us than the scars that may have been left by his beatings and stonings. Besides, there is reason to think that Paul considered bearing these external marks to be an honor, just as the other apostles considered it an honor to be beaten and mistreated for the sake of the Lord Jesus. Because Jesus and Paul were both flogged, Paul may have considered it an honor to bear marks like those of his Lord.

We should consider one other fact. Galatians is by far the earliest letter that Paul wrote in the Bible according to church historians. So even if he had the marks of the Lord Jesus then, Paul never indicated in any of his later letters that he still had those marks, so it's a little presumptuous to assert that God never healed him when the rest of the Bible is silent on the matter.

Objection: God Heals in His Own Way in His Own Time

I can tell you EXACTLY when God's perfect time is for your healing! It is NOW. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Corinthians 6:2). This age is the "day that the LORD has made," as found in Psalm 118:22-24: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the LORD'S doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. This is the day which the LORD hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." This does not refer to this chronological 24-hour day, although that is the traditional misinterpretation of this verse. (A similar often-misinterpreted verse concerns God being worthy to be praised from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same. This is an idiom for "from the east to the west," so this verse is not a statement that God's worthiness to be praised decreases at night.) No, THIS is the day – the day of the New Covenant, the day of salvation, which includes salvation from sickness.

Since this entire age is the "day" of salvation, you can receive salvation at any time during this "day." Anyone who wants to be born again can be saved right now because of the finished work of Jesus. There is no need to wait for a special "day" because this entire age is that special day. Likewise, anyone who wants healing can have it at any time, precisely because now is the day of salvation. (The Greek words for salvation and saved as used in the New Testament encompass deliverance, health, help, safety, rescue, victory, and other things, and they are so translated in various places. See the discussion, Saved!)

There are many ways to receive healing (as documented elsewhere in this book), but it is not true that sometimes God's way has to be a doctor. It may work out that way in practice because we are not at a point of being able to believe for a complete recovery on our own. That does not mean that such a method is unavailable to us. "It was God's will that he be healed by medicine" is at best a half-truth. God's preferred way of healing is clear throughout the Bible. You don't once see Jesus saying, "I won't heal you because I want you to use man's medicine. Go to a certain village where you will meet a doctor named Luke who will write you a prescription." If He didn't say that then, He'll never say it today. If you need a doctor, by all means go, but don't insist that the rest of us receive healing the same way that you did.

Objection: Jesus Literally Said to “Keep On Asking.” Therefore, We Should Bug God Like the Widow in Jesus’ Parable.

This is based on a misunderstanding of passages in Matthew 7:7-11 and Luke 11:9-13. It is usually based upon a study of the Greek verb tenses used. The conclusion is that Jesus said to “Keep on asking,” “Keep on seeking,” and “Keep on knocking.” Actually, I’ve looked into this and I have no problem with the statement that these verbs can denote ongoing action. However, Jesus contradicted Himself in the same sermon if He meant that you should keep asking for the SAME THING over and over! Earlier in His discourse, Jesus had already told His disciples not to use vain repetitions as the heathen do (Matthew 6:7)! (He then offered an example of an unpretentious prayer without vain repetitions, so what do religious people do with that prayer today? They repeat it over and over verbatim! Obviously people are missing His point.)

So although Jesus said to keep on asking, He did not say to keep on asking about the same thing over and over! He said not to do that. You should keep asking for different things and keep receiving different things. You should seek more things and knock on more doors so that they will be opened to you. After all, Jesus said that it would be given to you when you asked. If you have to pray again for the same thing, Jesus lied. You would only have to pray again for the same thing if God were not willing to give you what you asked for the first time. Jesus said that God is willing to give you good things (in Matthew 7:11) and the Holy Spirit (in Luke 11:13). That was the point. Just as you wouldn’t give your children something bad when they ask for something good, your heavenly Father gives you something good when you ask for something good. Ask and you shall receive. Then ask for something else. Don’t treat God as if He’s deaf – His ears are OPEN to the cries of the righteous (Psalm 34:15, 1 Peter 3:12).

In Luke 11:9-13, the statements about asking, seeking and knocking are preceded by an example of a friend going to another at midnight brashly and getting what he wants. This is about boldness in prayer, not about God withholding anything from you. God doesn’t spend any “down time” in bed anyway, so you can’t relate the friend in the house to God. The point is that you should be bold when you ask God for things. We are to come boldly to His throne of grace to receive help when we need it (Hebrews 4:16).

Now let’s talk about that parable of the widow in Luke 18:1-8. A widow goes to an unjust judge who fears not God nor regards man. He is called unjust a second time. Why is he unjust? He won’t do what he should for the widow. That is not a picture of God, who is never unjust. You cannot say that God is the unjust judge in this parable. The unjust judge had to be badgered into doing something and he moved slowly. Jesus said that God would avenge His elect speedily. So, this says that God is speedy, not slow, when it comes to answering prayers. He doesn’t have to be nagged into things as an unjust judge might.

Furthermore, this is not talking about the prayer of faith to receive something that meets a personal need. There are many different kinds of prayer in the Bible, and the prayer of faith is only one of them. That isn't the subject here. In the cases of the widow and the believers who are praying here, they are not out to receive something already offered by God. They are looking for justice against an adversary. You shouldn't take things into your own hands against an adversary – "Vengeance is mine," saith the Lord (Romans 12:19). If you take vengeance, you're stealing something that is God's! That is a completely different situation than someone looking to receive something from God. God is not giving anything to the believers here. He is avenging them. This is most likely a reference to the prayers of persecuted believers. You cannot just "believe-and-receive away" persecution or bad government. That is why Paul could not pray away his "thorn in the flesh," which was a demonic entity that kept stirring people to beat him up.

Paul said that anyone who wants to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution. If you are not being persecuted, you are not living godly in Christ Jesus, because all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution (2 Timothy 3:12). That's sobering! Maybe you need to be bolder about your faith if this is the case. A persecuted believer may pray for justice from God. No doubt, this was happening in many countries that used to outlaw Christianity but now embrace it more than many "Christian" countries do. Prayer does make a difference, and that's why God commands us to pray for those in authority (1 Timothy 2:1-2). The point, according to Luke, is that men should always pray and not lose heart. However, Jesus did NOT teach that you should "always pray" about the same thing over and over in the same way.

Don't stop praying because of persecution, and don't stop praying that your country will see change for the better. Expect God to avenge His elect speedily. Prayer for your country is ongoing, but you still should not use vain repetitions. When it comes to the prayer of faith, that's only prayed once for a given matter. That's different from praying for the leaders of your nation. With the "prayer of faith," you believe that you receive when you pray. Every prayer after that is a prayer of praise and thanksgiving. You KNOW that you have the petition that you desired because you prayed according to God's will as revealed in His Word (1 John 5:14-15).

If you slug a ball out of the premises by fifty feet, are you a great athlete? It depends. I've done it many times myself – playing GOLF. There is a penalty for doing that at golf. But if I were on a baseball field, I could be a hero if I hit the ball out of the park. The rules are different for different sports; it's not "one size fits all." The rules are different for different kinds of prayer, too. The type of prayer that's a "winner" in one situation can be a "loser" in another. Trying to believe that you receive turnaround ONCE for your country "in faith" is like playing golf by baseball rules. So is petitioning God on and on about the same healing need in your body. We need to understand the right way to pray in these different situations rather than thinking that one kind of prayer fits every situation.

Objection: Sometimes God Bears Long before He Answers His People's Prayers, Though They Cry Day and Night (Luke 18:7)

Let's look at this entire passage to see the context of Luke 18:7:

Luke 18:1-8:

And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint; Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man: And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary. And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man; Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me. And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith. And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?

Some points should stick out.

The first is that in the very next verse after the one referred to in the objection, God said that He would avenge His elect speedily. So using the preceding verse to claim that God will NOT take action on your behalf speedily falls apart speedily.

The second is that the judge who wanted to get the woman out of his "input queue" was an unjust judge. He cannot represent God, because God is a just judge. The unjust judge might push her away for a while but then finally cave in just to get rid of her, but God is not like that! In fact, the contrast is that God, a just judge, will act speedily, and not push people away and base things on his own selfish convenience the way that an unjust judge would.

The third is that this is not a case of someone coming to receive healing or any other pre-purchased benefit. She was seeking just action against her adversary. Many Christians today are crying out day and night for justice in countries where justice for Christians is not to be found. God promises that He will avenge His elect speedily. A prayer to be avenged (and change the societal situation) is not a one-and-done believe-and-receive matter like receiving your healing when you pray.

God (and Jesus) never acted like the unjust judge when it came to sick people. We see that a blind man cried out for a short while, that Jesus stood still, summoned him and healed him. We do NOT read that the blind man cried out to Jesus for mercy day and night, but Jesus “bore long” with him and did not grant his petition until a later time. You cannot find a single New Testament example of God dragging out a healing like that, forcing the sufferer to keep begging and begging. So you can be sure that He will never do it in your case, either. Besides, healing is already yours as far as God is concerned. You can just receive it. You do not have to change God’s mind about your healing the way you might have to plead with and convince an earthly judge. God has already pronounced His judgment in the case of disease in your body – it is legally healed because of the physical affliction Jesus bore for your sins.

Romans 8:22:

For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

So based on this, do WE have to groan in pain until Jesus returns?

NO! For starters, Romans 8:22 does NOT refer to believers because the very next verse says, “And not only they, but ourselves also...”:

Romans 8:23

Some people like to cite this verse to claim that healing is in the future because we are still waiting for the redemption of our bodies. However, that isn't what Paul taught, as he also told the Corinthians that our bodies as well as our spirits have been bought at a price and belong to God (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). We see Paul talk about the same thing in 2 Corinthians 5:2 and 2 Corinthians 5:4: “For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven...For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.” This groaning is a desire for something better, but it is not talking about groaning with pancreatic cancer or ulcerative colitis or any other painful disease.

We already saw that “travailing in pain” does NOT refer to us. We can see that Paul does not refer to groaning as meaning agonizing in pain in the context 4 verses after the subject verse above:

Romans 8:26:

Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

This kind of groaning denotes intensity in intercession, but you would be hard-pressed to make a case that the Holy Spirit is groaning in actual physical pain within us!

So we must conclude that Romans 8:22 has been misapplied by the objector.

Objection: The Context of I SHALL NOT DIE, BUT LIVE (Psalm 118:17) Is Military Protection, Not Healing of Disease

Some of the verses a few verses before Psalm 118:17 do indeed speak of a military enemy arrayed against David. However, in the verse AFTER the verse in question, David writes:

Psalm 118:18:

The LORD hath chastened me sore: but he hath not given me over unto death.

We don't know for sure what this "chastening" was for, but we have precedent to believe that David believed that he had health issues that were the chastening of the Lord:

Psalm 39:11:

When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth: surely every man is vanity. Selah.

This does not sound militarily-related.

Besides, if you just don't like using Psalm 118:17 as a healing vs. death Scripture, you can select from many others. God says that He satisfies you with long life (Psalm 91:16). There are many Scriptures in Proverbs about things you can do that will lengthen your life. See the answer to the question, Is There an Appointed Time for Each Person to Die? for these verses.

Objection: We Cannot Say that We Can Do the Acts that the Apostles Did, Because We Cannot Write Scripture, and They Did

Some apostles in the Bible did indeed do certain things that we cannot do today. We should not even try to do them. There are no more apostles who lay the foundation of Christian doctrine through their writings. No apostle today can add or subtract from the words written in the Bible. There has been no opening in the ranks of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb since Matthias was chosen to replace Judas.

Let's examine this objection in detail. Only a few of the apostles wrote Scripture. Most did not. (There are people called apostles in Scripture who were not among the twelve original Apostles of the Lamb. Even Paul is not one of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb. Paul mentions Andronicus and Junia [who was most likely female, by the way] as being noteworthy apostles in Romans 16:7, and Scripture never tells us what they did. There are no "epistles of Andronicus" or "letters of Junia" in Scripture.) Mark and Luke did not call themselves apostles and they did write Scripture. No one claims that we should write Scripture today. We claim only that we can do the works that Jesus did in healing the sick. When we talk about the acts of the apostles, we do not refer to writing Scripture, because not all of them wrote Scripture!

So this objection is partially true because there are no apostles today in these categories: (1) Apostles of the Lamb (2) Scripture-writing apostles. However, there certainly ARE apostles in the category of Andronicus and Junia, who were neither in the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb group or the Scripture-writing apostles group, yet were still apostles according to Scripture.

Ephesians 4:11-16 makes it clear that there will still be apostles until "we come to a perfect man," which will not happen until Jesus returns. While being with Jesus on earth and writing Scripture are not prerequisites for being an apostle, there are "signs of an apostle:"

2 Corinthians 12:12:

Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

Anyone who claims to be an apostle but does NOT have "signs, wonders and mighty deeds" in his ministry is a fake apostle who should be avoided! Simply handing out business cards that say that you are an apostle does not make you an apostle any more than handing out business cards that say that you are a nuclear physicist makes you a nuclear physicist.

So now we can see that (1) there are still apostles today and (2) there are signs of an apostle. Put together, this proves that there will still be apostles today who flow in signs, wonders and mighty deeds.

Will everyone flow in the signs of an apostle? Of course not. Only real apostles will. In fact, if everyone flowed in the signs of an apostle, they would cease by definition to be the signs of an apostle! So we have to be careful how we parse this objection. If you don't stand in the office of apostle, you won't do what apostles do. However, we can see that ANY believer can do plenty of things without being an apostle.

Jesus said that we (not just apostles) would do the works He that did (John 14:12). His works were primarily preaching, teaching and healing. Jesus did not say that those who believed in Him would write Scripture, but He did say that those who believed would lay hands on the sick and they would recover. He did not say that only apostles would do that. Philip was not an apostle but got many paralyzed people healed in Samaria. Stephen was not an apostle but did great signs and wonders among the people and saw an open vision of heaven. Ananias was not an apostle but he laid hands on Paul and spoke prophetically to him. You don't have to be an apostle to do these works.

We have the same Holy Spirit that Philip, Stephen and Ananias had. We have the same Holy Spirit that Paul, Peter, James and John had. We have the same Holy Spirit that Jesus of Nazareth had! We can do the works that they did because we have the same Spirit they had. The Holy Spirit has not changed or lost His power. We don't have some wimpy, weak, watered-down version of the Holy Spirit! We don't have "Holy Spirit Trial Version" or "Holy Spirit Lite!" We have the same Spirit by whom Jesus and His followers did all their mighty works. So let's start expecting to do what they did!

Objection: God Works in Mysterious Ways, His Wonders to Perform. We'll Never Know Why God Lets Some People Stay Sick.

Proverbs 32:1-6:

For God worketh in mysterious ways, his wonders to perform, and surely cleanliness is next to godliness. God sometimes saith Yea, sometimes Nay, and sometimes, Wait. Verily, thou never knowest what God will do.

For into every life a little rain must fall, but this too shall pass.

Truly the dark is darkest before the dawn.

Our God is never late, but He is seldom early.

But verily, God helpeth those who help themselves.

A quick look at your Bible will confirm that these verses are all fabricated. There is no Proverbs 32 and these verses are not in the Bible anywhere. Yet people quote these phrases as if they were Bible verses because they haven't actually bothered to read the Bible and see what it really says.

God's ways are not mysterious. If He wanted them to be mysterious, He wouldn't have given you 66 books in the Bible to explain them to us! His ways are higher than our ways, but He tells us what they are!

If you have been exposed to this religious "mysterious ways" junk, you will have to renew your mind with God's thoughts on the matter. Otherwise, you will not be able to pray in faith for your healing, because you'll still be thinking how Aunt Sally told you that God works in mysterious ways, and that you can never figure Him out.

God is not mysterious, and His ways are no secret. Anyone can find out what they are through the Word and cooperate with them. God's way of healing is to give you His Word on the matter and for you to believe it. The fact that God wants His people healthy is one of the most clearly documented facts in the Bible for those who take the time to study it.

In Psalm 103:1-5, one of God's benefits is that he heals all your diseases. How hard is that to understand? In Exodus 15:26, he says that he is the Lord who heals you (or The Lord Your Physician). How mysterious is that? James made it clear that "any sick" among us is supposed to be healed (James 5:14-16). You don't have to be a nuclear physicist to understand that, do you? Jesus said that we could lay hands on the sick and that they would recover (Mark 16:18). You would have to try hard to misinterpret that statement.

It is not God, but religious men, who make the will of God difficult to understand. Some men have taken the simple gospel and made it seem like you need as many degrees as they have to completely understand it. How did the common people in the New Testament get healed without any such education? Nothing is wrong with education – get all you want! Just don't "educate" yourself with doctrines of men that contradict the Bible.

God explains for you why some people stay sick. Some are under judgment because they do not judge themselves (1 Corinthians 11:27-32). (There is a whole discussion of judgment in this book.) Some are in unbelief. The people at Nazareth did not receive miracles because of their unbelief. The disciples failed to deliver a demon-possessed boy because of their unbelief. Other hindrances, such as unforgiveness, are discussed both in the Bible and in this book. Most people don't know that healing is their covenant right, so they can't act on God's Word in faith.

You should not be quick to try to judge why someone else stays sick. Only God really knows the person's heart. You can deal with the hindrances in your own life. The reasons that people stay sick are not mysteries, but the reason that a certain person stays sick can be a mystery to you. You can't be sure which reason applies. Therefore, it is true that we'll never know why some people stay sick. However, it is definitely not because God is "letting" them stay sick for no reason, and it is definitely not because God is just being mysterious.

Saying that God "lets" people stay sick is no more intelligent than saying that God "lets" people stay unsaved in His mysterious ways. God "lets" you stay certain ways because He will not violate your will. The fact that God allows you to be sick (or unsaved for that matter) does not make it part of His mysterious will for your life. God "lets" a lot of things happen in this world that are contrary to His will (wars, abortions, terrorist attacks, anti-healing books, etc.). You cannot assume that just because something happens, it is the will of God.

People do not stay sick because God "lets" them stay sick. People stay sick because they do not receive the healing that God has already provided for them in Christ.

Jesus never told anyone to stay sick because it was part of God's mysterious will for his life. If He never told anyone that he had to stay sick then, He will never tell anyone that he has to stay sick now. Jesus did not "let" anyone stay sick who came to Him in faith.

Read through the list of Scriptures in both Testaments in this book. You will discover that God's will for your healing is no mystery at all. He wants you to be in health!

Objection: You Never Know What God Will Do

This is a pseudoscripture that gets quoted as if it were in the real Bible. See Proverbs 32:1-6 for some other such pseudoscriptures.

Maybe you don't know what God will do, but I do! He will keep His Word. He has exalted His Word above His name (Psalm 138:2). It is forever settled in heaven (Psalm 119:89). God cannot lie (Numbers 23:19), so whatever He said He will do is what He will do!

You'd better know what God will do, because if you don't, you can't possibly pray the prayer of faith! How can you have the assurance of anything if you never know what God will do? Faith takes God at His Word, knowing that He will perform what He promised.

I know that God will back His Word with signs and wonders when I preach it. It's not just because I've seen Him do it, it's because that's the Bible pattern in Mark 16:20. I rely on Scripture, not experience, whether it's my experience or anyone else's, to know what God will do.

What good would it be for God to make ANY of the precious promises in the Bible if He could sovereignly violate even one of them? Either His Word is good or it isn't. If you can't be sure of a particular Scripture, you can't be sure of John 3:16 either.

God gave us 66 books so that we CAN know what He will do! His ways may be mysterious to the world, but they shouldn't be mysterious to Christians. If YOU want to know what God will do, read what He said He will do.

Objection: Everything Happens for a Reason

God isn't the only one who has reasons for doing things. The devil has reasons for doing things, too – his objective is to steal, kill and destroy (John 10:10). That is the REASON why he invented diseases. He wants to kill you. If he can't do that, he at least wants to make you miserable by stealing your health. So just because there is a reason behind something doesn't mean that GOD is behind that reason!

I'm sure that there are "reasons" why suicide bombings, mass shootings and such occur, but none of them have anything to do with God. God is never the one who is out to steal, kill and destroy. The fact that something happened does NOT prove that God had some "reason" for "allowing" it to happen. God gave the earth to MAN (Psalm 115:16). MAN has the ability to mess things up, and God will "allow" man to do it. He HAS to, because He has never taken the earth back from man's control.

If you get duped into believing the silly idea that sickness happened to you for a REASON, you will probably waste all kinds of time trying to figure out God's reason for it. You'll never get an answer because God didn't have any reason for it. He didn't give the sickness to you! Nor did he "allow" it for some reason involving your personal growth, either! He allowed it because Satan has the legal right to be on the earth and to roam around trying to devour people. However, God provided authority for us in Christ so that we can get rid of the diseases that the devil invented. God didn't leave us defenseless! We tread on snakes and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt us (Luke 10:19). In case you're wondering why God hasn't "done something" about your disease, the truth is that He already HAS done something about it. He already paid for your healing by sending Jesus to take stripes on His back in your place. He has given YOU the authority to get rid of it. Now it is up to YOU, not GOD, whether you will stay sick, just as it is up to YOU, not GOD, whether you will live on the new earth forever or suffer in the lake of fire forever. God did what He needed to do about both sickness and sin when He sent Jesus.

Another spin on this "reason" thing is that people go on needless witch hunts for "secret sins" in their lives, assuming that the sickness came for a REASON that involved their sin. In other words, they see sickness as the just punishment for their sins. And they're RIGHT! But they forget that Jesus bore your sicknesses – the just punishment for your sins – in your place so that you don't have to bear that punishment in your own body! That's the REASON that Jesus had to be made sick – so that you could be healed!

Objection: Many Are the Afflictions of the Righteous

Psalm 34:19:

Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all.

This verse says the exact opposite of what some people use it to say – as long as you finish it! This is even clearer when you read the surrounding verses: Psalm 34:17-20. To use this as an argument to stay sick proves only that you like to yank phrases out of their context.

This is actually a healing Scripture, not a sickening Scripture. God promises to deliver the righteous out of all their troubles. He did not add a little footnote to indicate that all somehow excludes physical diseases. (He has another Psalm that proves that all does include diseases – see Psalm 103:1-5.)

Because sickness is a trouble, and God has promised to deliver you from all your troubles, you may thank whoever quotes this for pointing you to another proof that God wants you to be healed!

Objection: Just As We Will Never Have Victory over Sin in This Life, We Will Never Have Victory over Sickness

We will not have final victory over sin in the sense that we will never sin in this life. We will not have final victory over sickness in the sense that we cannot get sick in this life. However, we can enjoy victory over both sin and sickness in this life. It is up to us. If your definition of victory is the impossibility of sinning or getting sick, then no, you will not have that kind of “victory” in this life. However, Paul thanked God who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Corinthians 15:57), and Paul was talking about this life, not the hereafter. So Biblically, we can walk victoriously over sin as well as sickness.

Victory over sin is totally available to you now. If you don't walk in it, it's not God's fault. God says that you are freed from sin. If you want to see quite a few references to this, look in Who You Are and What You Have for some Scriptures that prove beyond a doubt that you have victory over sin now. Sin is to have no dominion over you (Romans 6:14)!

Therefore, this objection has a flawed premise, namely, that it is impossible to have victory over sin on an everyday basis in this life. God's Word disagrees.

There is a good parallel between sins and sicknesses. God always makes sure there is a way of escape so that you don't have to sin (1 Corinthians 10:13). Likewise, God has provided healing for your body. Both freedom from sin and freedom from sickness are absolute in God's eyes. The problem is that we do not appropriate these benefits as fully as we should. 1 Peter 2:24 says that you are both DEAD TO SINS and HEALED. Does the fact that you still sin mean that you are not legally dead to sins? NO! You still are, as far as God is concerned. Does the fact that you still get sick prove that you are not legally healed? NO! You still are, as far as God is concerned. God has already given you His victory over sickness, and you have the privilege of appropriating it.

Final victory over both sin and sickness, meaning that neither will be possible for you, is not yours in this life. However, victory is available to you now over both, despite the fact that sin and sickness are both rampant in this world.

Objection: We Are Promised Tribulation in This World

John 16:33:

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

If we are going to throw around verse fragments to fight the message of healing, we should at least be scholarly enough to (1) finish the verse and (2) look up the word on which we build a castle in a concordance.

A partial answer to this objection is found by simply completing the verse. Jesus has overcome the tribulation that you will face in this world.

So are you supposed to lie in your sickbed, rejoicing that Jesus has overcome the world, while having to suffer your tribulation of sickness?

No! The tribulation Jesus spoke of refers to persecution for the gospel's sake, not sickness. The Greek word used here for tribulation is translated tribulation or tribulations in 20 other verses, and in none of these is the context physical sickness. Jesus' prophecy concerning tribulations in the form of persecution was obviously fulfilled. The word used refers to literal and figurative pressure, not sickness.

The word is also translated anguish in one verse (John 16:21) describing a woman giving birth. This still does not refer to sickness. Pregnancy and childbirth are not illnesses, despite the way your medical insurance company might treat them!

It is translated burdened in 2 Corinthians 8:13: "For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened." This is obviously not speaking of disease.

It is translated persecution in Acts 11:19: "Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen..." Be assured that no plague broke out because of Stephen.

It is translated trouble in 1 Corinthians 7:28 (married couples will have trouble in the flesh), 2 Corinthians 1:4 ("Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble...") and 2 Corinthians 1:8 ("For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia..."). In none of these cases does this word refer to disease.

Jesus promised you persecution. He promised it in other verses, too, and so did other New Testament writers. But neither Jesus nor any other New Testament writer ever promised that you would have sickness in this world.

James gives instructions on what to do IF (not when) any among you is sick. James gives instructions so that the sick will be healed. See James 5:14-16.

Objection: It Is Unbalanced to Teach that Life's Problems Are Due to a Lack of Faith

This is mostly an objection to some phantom teaching that if you ever have a problem, it's because of your lack of faith. I don't know of anyone who actually teaches that you are promised a problem-free life. I don't teach that. Jesus certainly didn't teach that (John 16:33). Paul didn't teach that, and he would be an abject failure if having problems meant there was something wrong with his faith. Paul went through all kinds of trials and he exhorted the disciples that we must through many tribulations enter the kingdom of God (Acts 14:22). So if the idea is teaching that having problems come on you is due to a lack of faith, I'm as against that as the objector is.

However, the objector would probably disagree with my next statement, which is that STAYING in many of life's problems often IS due to a lack of faith on our part! You can't stop Satan from shooting fiery darts at you, but you can quench them with the shield of faith. The "good news" is NOT teaching that God loves you during your trials and says, "Dude, I feel for you. I know it's tough." He has more than sympathy for you; He has compassion. Sympathy is a feeling. Compassion involves action. Compassion moves you. Compassion MOVED Jesus to heal the sick. He did not just sympathize with the sick; He healed them. He hasn't changed. He is just as compassionate today. He is not withholding healing from anyone, including you.

Some problems CAN be overcome through faith. Lack and sickness are two such cases. Having a close relative give you a hard time about serving Jesus is NOT something that you can overcome through faith because someone else's will is involved. The person MAY see the light and apologize, or the person may keep ridiculing you until his dying day. Paul could not stop people from persecuting him by using his faith; that was the context in which God said that His grace was sufficient for him (2 Corinthians 12:7-10).

The folks in Capernaum came to Jesus in faith and got healed. The folks in Nazareth did not come to Jesus in faith and they did not get healed. Was it a matter of Jesus being willing to heal the people in Capernaum but not the people in Nazareth? Of course not; He was always willing to heal everyone and He still is to this day. He was the same Anointed One in both cities. The ONLY difference was the faith (or unbelief) in the different places. So I repeat my point that SOME of life's problems CAN be overcome by faith, or they can just continue if you don't exercise any faith. Keeping these problems IS due to either ignorance (you don't know what God really says) or unbelief (you know what God really says but you won't act accordingly). If God says you're healed and you won't agree with Him and instead you go around saying, "Man, I'm sick as a dog!" you are perpetuating your problem rather than solving it.

If the people in the Bible could be healed as a result of their faith or stay sick because of their unbelief, the same options are available to us today. This is the victory that overcomes the world – our faith (1 John 5:4)!

Objection: We Are Supposed to Glory in Tribulations and Count Them All Joy (Romans 5:3, James 1:2-4)

“And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope.” – Romans 5:3-4.

“My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.” – James 1:2-4.

First, tribulation refers to persecution, not sickness. See the reply to We Are Promised Tribulation in this World for proof.

This objection reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of the place that trials play in the life of the believer. God does not send trials to us. Living in the world with a bunch of sinners and the devil guarantees us trials. These trials are temporary. They will not exist in heaven, where only the will of God is done. Therefore, they are not from God.

Be careful how you read these verses. Paul did not say that we glory because of our tribulations. He said that we glory in them. You can be in a test and still give glory to God. In fact, you should give glory to God in a test because He is the one who will bring you out of it!

Notice that James calls trials “the trying of your faith.” It is your faith that is on trial. Your faith is the victory that overcomes the world (1 John 5:4). You win, as long as you persevere. Notice that the perfect work of patience is that you become perfect and entire, wanting (lacking) nothing. In other words, if you stay in faith, you will lack nothing. This is a far cry from the idea that you should be robbed by the devil and take it “patiently,” since then you would end up imperfect and un-entire, wanting something, namely, your healing!

Besides, James could not have been talking about being sick here. James made his position clear on what people should do if they are sick (James 5:14-16). He was surely not contradicting himself in the same book!

Being in a trial does not produce joy. James did not tell you to be joyful because you’re in a trial. You won’t have joy unless you know something. That something to know is that you are developing patience, which along with faith lets you inherit the promises of God (Hebrews 6:12). You can rejoice because you will inherit the promises of God! You don’t rejoice because the devil is stealing from you and you aren’t receiving the promises. Patience is a tool used to receive the promises, not a tool used to endure never receiving the promises!

The reason Paul why could glory in his tribulations was that he knew that God would deliver him out of all of them. He was trusting in God, not in himself. Paul was delivered from everything that happened to him. He was not saying that you should rejoice simply because you're having tribulations. You rejoice because you know that God is getting you out of them! You develop experience watching God deliver you. Then, if you encounter a similar test in the future, you have a prior experience under your belt of being in the same mess and having God deliver you. That gives you hope.

Objection: My Trials Only Come to Make Me Strong

Trials are designed by the devil to steal from you, kill you and destroy you, not strengthen you. God's role in your life is to give you life more abundantly (John 10:10). The devil is the one who wants to ruin you. Some Christians have times when they don't know right from wrong, so they blame God for sending trials that the devil actually sends. They think God explicitly sends trials (or at least "allows" them) to serve a higher purpose in their lives, so they "thank God for the valleys" and go "through it all" when they should be taking authority over sicknesses, pains and financial lack in the name of Jesus.

Jesus said that in this world we will have tribulation (John 16:33), but many people stop there instead of finishing the verse, where Jesus says He has overcome the world. And you've overcome the world, too (1 John 5:4-5). So regardless of the tribulation that comes, Jesus has given you the power to be an overcomer. That's doesn't mean that life will always be easy, and it doesn't mean that you will cruise through life unopposed by the devil and his children. In fact, some trials are specific to Christians because people who aren't in "the faith" are not persecuted for their faith!

There are trials that you cannot "believe away." If your trial involves other people, you have no authority over other people's wills. We are not redeemed from persecution; instead we are promised that all those who want to live godly will suffer persecution (2 Timothy 3:12). So if everyone thinks you're wonderful, you should be very concerned about your level of boldness in the things of God! However, we are redeemed from sickness, so if you're dealing with sicknesses and pains, you need to make them stop in the name of Jesus rather than thanking God for them when He didn't send them in the first place.

Do trials come to make you strong? Satan is the author of your trials, and he has no desire to make you strong. God does not "send" Satan to you to strengthen you. God wants you to be strengthened with might by the Holy Spirit's power (Ephesians 3:16, Colossians 1:11), not by the devil's trials.

Satan successfully tempted Judas Iscariot to betray Jesus. Did this trial come to make Judas strong? Was the result a stronger Judas? NO! The result was a RUINED Judas who ended up taking his own life.

How often does someone die prematurely from some horrible disease? Did the "trial" of that disease make the person "strong" and serve some higher purpose? NO! The trial only came to make the person WEAK and ultimately DEAD. That is never God's good plan, especially since one of His names is The Lord Who Heals You (Exodus 15:26).

Did God deliberately put certain apostles in jail because it would be good for them? How good was it that most of them ended up martyred, at which point their ministries were over? Whose agenda was that? Jesus cleared up that matter for you in Revelation 2:10 – it was the DEVIL who was going to put some of them into prison. In other words, the devil whipped up that trial. We see no cases where God went around locking up His saints, but we do see cases where God supernaturally got His saints OUT of jail (Acts 5:18-20, Acts 12:3-10)!

Get out your Bible –you’ll never see a case where Jesus indicated that a sickness had come to strengthen its victim. Read all the passages where Jesus healed them ALL. If trials such as cancer, back pain and arthritis were good for those people and made them strong, why did Jesus take away their opportunity to be made stronger by the trial that God so lovingly “allowed?” If God had any stake in any of those diseases, then instead of coming to DO the will of His Father, Jesus came to UNDO the will of His Father.

Because Jesus was willing to heal everyone, and He only did the will of His Father, it must be God’s desire for everyone to be healthy. It would make no sense for God to want everyone to be healthy and then send or “allow” a sickness that robs someone of his health.

Learning to overcome trials will work patience, endurance and other positive character traits in you. However, simply enduring them doesn’t do anything for you except make you miserable. If you think that God is behind a trial so that you will be stronger, you won’t face the issue and you won’t use your faith to run it off. Why would you want to fight God if He “allowed” the trial to strengthen you? If that were the case, you would want to stay in the trial as long as possible to get as strong as possible!

If trials are such a great strengthening tool, why won’t there be trials in heaven? Simple – the devil and his minions won’t be there to create trials.

Jesus gave you authority over ALL the power of the enemy so that nothing (including the devil’s sicknesses) should hurt you (Luke 10:17-20). If your trial is a sickness, take authority over it in the name of Jesus! The devil sent it, and Jesus came to DESTROY the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), not USE the works of the devil to make you strong!

Objection: The Crosses in Life Must Precede the Crowns

Instead of getting discouraged when the pressures of life start weighing us down, we should rise up in faith and quench every fiery dart of the wicked one. We don't have to accept living defeated lives for a single second. Prior defeat is not a prerequisite for walking in victory.

There is biblically no such thing as "the crosses in life" anyway! There is only ONE cross you must take up. (An entire objection reply is devoted to this; click here for the cross-reference.) Jesus never referred to crosses in the plural. And as you can see in the aforementioned objection reply, your "cross" is NEVER sickness. (I don't think that the lyrics of the song with the objection phrase in it even meant it that way, but a certain anti-faith website decided to pick up on the crosses-before-crowns idea and run with it. This is yet one more example of the danger of getting your theology from popular Christian songs rather than from the Bible.)

You do not have to suffer before you can enjoy victory. God GIVES you the victory; you don't qualify for it by suffering first. You reign in life through the Lord Jesus Christ, not by "earning your stripes" by suffering. You WILL face trials, but you overcome them by faith rather than by staying in them and thinking that somehow if you suffer enough, you'll see victory later when God decides that your suffering should end and now you can have a crown. That is a horrible misrepresentation of how our loving Heavenly Father operates.

Jesus never told people to stay sick until they had enough "crosses in life" to precede crowns. He healed people right away!

While we all will have to bear the cross of persecution for Jesus' sake, we do NOT have to bear sicknesses, which are a completely different matter. You have not been redeemed from persecution, but you HAVE been redeemed from sickness!

If sickness is some kind of cross that you must bear before you get a crown, what about all the people who just DIE from their illnesses? They never get a "crown" in this life in the form of victory. Sickness is NOT a setup for a later crown; it is a tool of the devil to steal from you, kill you and destroy you. You should resist it just as aggressively as you would resist sin, which is another of the devil's works.

Objection: If God ALLOWS Sickness, He Must Have a Purpose for It

God ALLOWS people to go to hell. Does that mean that it must be for those people's good, because He ALLOWED it?

God ALLOWS people to commit murder. Does that mean that He has some purpose in these murders because He ALLOWED them?

God ALLOWS wars. Does that mean that wars are part of His loving plan for humanity because He ALLOWS them?

God ALLOWS people to walk out of love. Does that mean that God has a hidden purpose behind their unloving actions because He ALLOWED them?

God ALLOWS you to sin. Does that mean that God has a higher purpose for your sin because He ALLOWED you to do it?

If God has a purpose for murder, wars, walking out of love and sin in general, why won't there be any of those in heaven where His will is always done?

If God ALLOWS sicknesses for a purpose, why didn't Jesus turn at least some of the people away who wanted healing and tell them that God ALLOWED their sicknesses for a higher purpose? He rarely even asked anyone a question. Anyone who wanted to touch Him and be healed could do so. Jesus never taught this nonsense that "God ALLOWS things for a reason."

I hope you can see how ridiculous it is to think that if God ALLOWS something, that means He has a purpose for it. If something steals, kills and destroys, the devil has a purpose for it. If it gives life more abundantly, God has a purpose for it. Jesus was quite plain about that in John 10:10.

Objection: God ALLOWS Sickness, But Never More than He Gives You Grace to Endure

This objection can vary slightly, but it all comes down to the idea that God allows sickness to come your way, but He lovingly gives you grace to endure it. People try to cheer up the sick, in person and through ignorant literature, by assuring them, “God never gives (or allows) more than He knows you can handle with His help.”

One would think from this argument that God is a master torturer who will take you to the limit of your ability to endure things without killing you. That is certainly NOT the character of God revealed in the Bible. It is not a picture of Jesus, who said that if you’ve seen Him, you’ve seen the Father (John 14:9). Jesus emphatically did NOT visit multitudes of sick people and bless them with the “grace to endure” their afflictions. He REMOVED their afflictions! If God was lovingly “allowing” these sicknesses and granting the grace to deal with them, Jesus should have said, “If you have seen Me, you have seen someone nicer than the Father. The Father was willing to ALLOW you to suffer this illness, but I’m not.” How crazy is that?

Abundant life does not consist of God seeing how much misery you can take. The devil, not God, is the one out to make people miserable. It is hard to see how any sane person could describe wasting away in a hospice facility, in unspeakable distress, as abundant life.

What about the millions of people who have died HORRIBLE, PAINFUL deaths from illnesses? Where was the “grace” to deal with them? Have you ever ministered in a nursing home where there are seriously ill people? I have. You will encounter various previously normal, nice people who SCREAM all the time. They’re MISERABLE. Where is the “grace” to endure their conditions?

The “grace” in Scripture is the free offer of healing for their conditions, not the ability to endure horrific conditions. Unfortunately, those who agree with this objection buy into a lie that saps their faith for real relief. Rather than look to the Lord for healing, they look to Him for grace to endure their illness, because that is what this teaching trained them to do. If that’s the extent of your faith, you’ll never enjoy the blessing of divine healing that Jesus paid for. I, for one, would NEVER allow someone to “minister” to me in a hospital by praying for me to tap into the “grace” to endure an ailment. If you’re wise, you won’t allow it either. You’ll obey James 5:14-15 instead! The elders will pray the prayer of faith to RAISE YOU UP, not give you GRACE TO ENDURE the condition and leave you sick!

“Yes, but Paul wanted to be free from discomfort, and God told him that His grace was sufficient for him. So God’s answer to us sometimes is that His grace is sufficient for us rather than that He will heal us.” This variant of the objection in this topic is covered in the section about Paul’s Thorn, where it is proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that Paul did NOT have a sickness that God wouldn’t heal (but supposedly told him instead that His grace was sufficient to endure the sickness).

Objection: God Gives Us More than We Can Handle to Make Us, like Paul, Rely on Him, Not on Ourselves (2 Corinthians 1:8-10)

This exhibit from the Museum of Misapplied Scripture supposes that God gives us diseases that are more than we can handle so that we have to rely on Him, supposing that the following passage proves that He does such things:

2 Corinthians 1:8-10:

For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life:

But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead:

Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us;

So Paul did indeed get “in over his head” in the natural even though he was in God’s will. This, however, referred to persecutions and apparent death threats, NOT to illness. If we look at Paul’s own list of sufferings, which would surely include what happened to him in Asia, sickness is notably absent! (See the response to the Paul’s Thorn objection for more specifics about this.) So there is NO indication from this passage that God ever dished out SICKNESS to overwhelm someone to make that person rely on Him.

The fact is, in the ministry as well as Spirit-led business, you will often be led to things that are beyond your natural ability to handle and that will be God’s will. You will have to learn to trust Him. In my programming business (my version of tent-making), I’ve had cases where potential clients had “impossible” programming requests that no one could solve. I didn’t know how to solve them either, but the Lord told me to tell them that I would do it and guarantee that if I didn’t get their project done, they would owe me nothing. So I signed up to do such projects without knowing how to do them myself! Then in the car on the way home I had to ask God how to pull off these “impossible” requests. And He showed me! I built a successful business doing that. Also, I was “over my head” because I’ve never had much of an idea how to market myself. But for well over 3 decades, I have never advertised that business, and the phone has kept ringing with work when I want it. But traveling in the ministry, especially out-of-country mission trips, posed a special problem. I couldn’t do the assignments when on mission trips. But when I was supposed to be preaching overseas, there was no work. No one had anything that went undone because I was gone. But as soon as I got back, the work would start up again until the next time I hopped on a plane and left the country. You just can’t do this stuff in the natural, but I DID do it because of God’s supernatural leading and provision. I started the business with NO WORK lined up at God’s instruction, but I went and gave 2 weeks’ notice at my job in obedience to Him. THAT AFTERNOON I got a call asking for programming work, and I went from there and made a lot of money. If it weren’t for God, I would never have even started the business. I had to trust Him the whole way. That is typical when you live by faith!

It's often said – and true, I believe – that if the vision “God gives you” is something that you could accomplish without His help, the vision really isn't from God in the first place.

But that is entirely different from turning God into a physical torturer who deliberately inflicts intolerable pain to get you to trust Him! If a human being made it his custom to torture people beyond their physical endurance limits, he would be tried and convicted for war crimes or crimes against humanity. How dare we assign a character trait to God that makes Him worse than the most despicable kind of human being!

Besides, many people who get to the point of “intolerable” sickness end up in hospice care doped up with morphine and die shortly thereafter. Where was the great spiritual fruit? How could God be working in you to get you to trust Him more when you're gone from the planet and no longer even need to walk by faith instead of by sight? That is completely senseless, and even a rank sinner should be able to see through such religious nonsense!

Objection: God Gives and Takes Away

The words of Job are truly recorded, but they are not true:

Job 1:21:

And said, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither: the LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD.

It is clear from the book of Job that Satan, not God, was responsible for taking away what Job had (Job 2:4-7). For a lengthy discussion of many things pertaining to Job, see Objection: Job Was a Godly Man, But God Let Him Get Sick; I won't repeat that whole write-up here.

The fact that words are recorded in the Bible does not make them the truth. I suppose you could write a song with a nice rocking beat about how David's flesh would be fed to the birds and beasts, because Goliath did speak those words, so they are in Scripture. However, those words are not the truth even though they were truly recorded in Scripture, as Goliath is the one who died in that encounter, not David. Peter said that Jesus would not die and be raised again the third day, and those words are truly recorded, but they were not the truth either. I doubt that a song based on Peter's words would be popular no matter how catchy the tune; don't look for "This Shall Not Be Done" on a list of Christian top 40 singles anytime soon. Israel's enemies talked about how they would demolish Jerusalem, but those words were also proved false. One said that if even a fox went up on the wall that Nehemiah's people were building, the wall would break, but there was never such a fox news event, so no one should want to write a Christian tune "No More Bricks in the Wall" about Israel's enemies who wanted to tear down the wall. If we wouldn't do that in these other cases, we shouldn't do it in Job's case either. The Bible does truly record some untrue words that were uttered by men, but that doesn't mean we should repeat or sing those untrue words as if they were so.

Job walked uprightly, but his knowledge of spiritual matters was next to nothing. Then again, he lived before the Old Covenant let alone the New Covenant, so it would be unfair to expect him to be the Wizard of Oz in spiritual matters. God did not charge him with sin at that time, because he had not (yet) started railing on God. Later, he "multiplied words without knowledge" and God had to set him straight. If his other statements were "words without knowledge," why would we think that this particular statement was correct? Obviously it wasn't, because at no time did Job return naked to his mother's womb.

Some argue, "The fact that God ALLOWED Satan to take things away makes God complicit in what happened. Therefore, the LORD took away what Job had." (This whole "God allowed it" argument is handled under Objection: If God ALLOWS Sickness, He Must Have a Purpose for It.) If that is true, God is complicit in EVERYTHING that the devil does on the earth today – because He ALLOWS the devil to do it. He ALLOWS the devil to steal, kill and destroy. So based on the "God gives and takes away" logic, God is going around stealing, killing and destroying everywhere today using the devil as His intermediary.

Fortunately, God made a way out for us through Jesus so that we can be turned from the power of Satan to God (Acts 26:18). We can dominate the works of the devil in our lives (Luke 10:17-20) rather than putting up with them. We have a much better covenant than anyone in the Old Testament ever had!

Scripture is clear that every good and perfect gift, not calamity, comes from God (James 1:17) to His children. God's plans are for your good, not for evil (Jeremiah 29:11). God's reason for "allowing" the devil to do things is NOT because He wants those things done in your life. He allows the devil to do things for legal reasons. God gave Adam dominion over the earth, and man is still in charge of the earth, not God (Psalm 115:16). Man gave Satan an "in" to the earth in the Garden of Eden, and God has had to legally permit Satan access to the earth ever since then. Satan is allowed to go around seeking whom he may devour (1 Peter 5:8-9). As a Christian, you have the privilege of learning your rights in Christ so that you will be one of the ones whom Satan can't devour. And finally, thank God, there is coming a new earth in which righteousness dwells (2 Peter 3:13) to which Satan will have no access because he will be occupied with being tormented day and night in the lake of fire forever.

Objection: Sometimes God Wants You to Be Afflicted so that You Can Empathize, Not Just Sympathize, with Others Who Are Afflicted

Jesus, who is the same yesterday, today and forever, never refused to heal anyone. He never told anyone that God wanted him to be afflicted so that he could empathize with other afflicted people. If He would not do it then, He would not do it today. So this objection flunks The SAME Test.

If you have overcome an affliction, God can use you to encourage others who have that same affliction that there is hope and healing in the Lord. This is an example of a bad situation being used for good, sort of like witnessing to someone else at the hospital if you're a patient. God can bring good out of the situation, but when He does, that is certainly not proof that He authored the situation. Good gifts come from God, while afflictions, which steal, kill and destroy, come from Satan.

You can allow the Lord to move you with compassion, and you can minister successfully to people afflicted by illness even if you've never been sick a day in your life and you have no experience of what it even feels like to be sick! There is absolutely no need for empathy when it comes to ministering to the sick! I can prove that easily. JESUS was never sick a day in His life until He had our sicknesses laid on Him when He was cursed for our sins. Until He atoned for our sins, He had no experience of what it even felt like to be sick. Yet He was moved with compassion and He ministered successfully to sick people without any empathy whatsoever.

Do you have to be an alcoholic before you can minister life to an alcoholic? Of course not. If you used to be an alcoholic, sharing your testimony can be helpful. Does that mean that it was the will of God for you to be an alcoholic for a season so that you could relate to other alcoholics? Impossible – God's will never is and never was for you to be "drunk with wine" because He commands you not to be (Ephesians 5:18)! Do you have to be a prostitute before you can witness to a prostitute so that you can "empathize" with her? NO! Do you have to be a wife-beater before you can witness to a wife-beater so that you can "empathize" with him? NO! You do not need to be afflicted to share the good news with the afflicted, either.

The most important thing for a sick person is not that you "know how he feels;" it's that Jesus bore that person's sicknesses as punishment for his sin so that he could receive healing.

Objection: You Should Not Try to Hurry out of Trials (Like Sickness), Because They Are More Precious than Gold (1 Peter 1:7)

1 Peter 1:7 does not say that trials are more precious than gold, despite old traditions arising from a less-than-careful reading of the verse. Let's consider that verse along with the one right before it:

1 Peter 1:6-7:

Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:

It is your FAITH, not the TRIAL, that is more precious than gold! The verse talks about the trying of your faith that is much more precious than gold.

There is no way that this verse can possibly state that a TRIAL is more precious than gold! If so, this verse says that a trial can be tried with fire! "That the trial of your faith...though it be tried with fire..." That makes no sense. It's your faith that is on trial.

It should also be clear that "being much more precious than gold" cannot refer to the trial because the use of the phrase "though it be tried" would make no sense if the trial is the subject. How can a trial be tried?

Neither is gold "tried" by fire – gold is purified by fire but not tested by it, and the verse just said that gold perishes. If the gold perishes, it isn't tried by fire – it's wiped out. That won't happen until the elements melt with fervent heat before the new earth arrives. And we know that heaven's streets are gold. No one will be praising or honoring gold! So again, it's not the gold being found unto praise and honor and glory. It is your faith that you exercised during the trial that brings the honor.

Therefore, the only proper understanding of 1 Peter 1:7 is:

"That the trial of your faith, your faith being more precious than gold that perishes, though your faith be tried with fire, will be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ because you exercised faith and overcame the trial."

Thus, Peter said that your faith is more precious than perishing gold and that your faith will be tried with fire. The only sense that the trial will be found to praise and honor is that you overcame it with your faith! It is your faith that will be honored, not the trial. Why would God ever honor something the devil did? Besides, you'll still have your faith at that point, but the trial will be long over with.

If anything, this exhortation should encourage you to use your faith to get out of the trial, not sit there passively thinking that your trial is more precious than gold, hoping that the trial will go away on its own soon or that God will sovereignly remove it without your involvement.

People have been wrongly taught that God sends trials to teach them something. But God does not use bad things to try your faith. First, He already knows where your faith stands. Second, the way He proves your faith is through your obedience to Him. Abraham proved his faith when he obeyed God and offered Isaac. It is the devil who tries your faith with bad things. You are not a threat to Satan apart from your faith in God's Word. He wants you to stop trusting God's Word so that you fail.

Trials are a good chance for you to locate your faith. But they don't come from God! Want proof? There won't be any trials in heaven where God is and the devil isn't! That should show you where your many trials come from in this life. If trials were more precious than gold, heaven would have more trials than streets!

Objection: God Sometimes Withholds Healing to Test Your Faith

This is one of a slew of objections that fails the “show me where Jesus did it” test. (See The SAME Test.)

Jesus only did the will of God. If God sometimes withholds healing to test your faith, you should find at least one passage where it says, “Jesus healed them all except for Billy Bob. He let Billy Bob stay sick, because verily, instead of manifesting His compassion to Billy Bob, He wanted Billy Bob to be miserable for a while just to see if Billy Bob would stay in faith.” You’ll find nothing like that in the Bible.

This objection also fails the “does it apply to salvation” test. (See The SAVED Test.) If God really acts this way, then we should find evidence that He saves SOME of those who call on the name of the Lord, but others He refuses to save from their sins for the time being – just to see if these sinners are really sincere and tenacious enough to keep believing for salvation even when God doesn’t save.

Given that salvation and healing are both part of the same package, it is ridiculous to think that God would withhold healing when healing is already offered on a 100% grace basis to EVERYONE just as the new birth is. Healing, the new birth, the Holy Spirit baptism, and every other spiritual blessing have already been given (Ephesians 1:3). It is not a question of whether God’s grace has provided it; it depends upon man’s faith to receive it (Romans 5:2).

God NEVER withholds healing from anyone just as He never withholds the new birth from anyone. However, we can get in our own way in various ways and fail to receive what He offers.

God would be completely unjust to withhold healing from you for a single nanosecond when Jesus has already paid for you to have it. How ridiculous that God would pay for you to have something and then withhold it from you. It would be like a man buying a new luxury car and registering it in your name, then telling you, “Oh, but you can’t have it now.” It just doesn’t make sense. It would be like a credit card company telling you, “A rich benefactor already paid off your full balance, but we are going to keep charging you our horrifically high interest rates just to test you and see whether you believe it or not.”

If you really think that God withholds things from you, you need to let the Holy Spirit teach you a thing or two! God sent the Holy Spirit to let you know about the things that have already been freely given to you by God (1 Corinthians 2:12)! If God didn’t spare His own Son, how could you think that He wouldn’t freely give you everything else (Romans 8:32)? The Bible teaches that God is not holding back anything from you. It is healing objectors who teach that, not Scriptures. Jesus already purchased your healing and it is already legally yours. It is TOO LATE for God to decide to yank back that pre-paid blessing and tell you that you can’t have it.

Objection: It Rains on the Just as Well as the Unjust (Matthew 5:45)

If bad Scripture interpretation is a crime, this objection should be a felony. The idea is that rain falls on the just and the unjust, therefore everyone has to suffer. I suppose this gives rise to the popular, but unscriptural, saying, "Into every life a little rain must fall." This completely ignores the context of Matthew 5:44-45 and makes it say the opposite of what it actually says.

To farmers back then, rain was a blessing. They were more concerned about their crops than whether they would get drenched and have to dry off.

Jesus spoke of God's goodness: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matthew 5:44-45).

You can't possibly read this whole passage and think that it means that God sends you sickness even though you are just. The sun rising on the evil and the good is a poetic parallel to the rain falling on the just and on the unjust. It shows God's goodness to men whether they are good or not. When you read about God's goodness, you should realize all the more that He does not want you to suffer with sickness. Jesus did not say that rain must fall into your life; He said that God sends rain to you, and if God sends something, it is good, not evil.

As with many objections, this one is a subtle misquotation of Scripture, although it's a popular saying among Christians. Some have even extended the saying to: "It rains on the just and the unjust, but the just have an umbrella," which does just as much violence to the verse as using it as a healing objection. The verse does not tell you that it rains but that God sends rain, which is completely different! When God sends you something, you won't want an umbrella to avoid it.

Objection: We Should Never Teach that Jesus Was Cursed because No One Speaking by The Holy Spirit Can Call Jesus Cursed (1 Corinthians 12:3)

1 Corinthians 12:3 says “Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.”

Believe it or not, this verse has been used to “prove” that Jesus was not cursed (literally made a curse) in our place, and that anyone teaching so is not speaking by the Holy Spirit. It should be obvious to the reader that the person “not speaking by the Holy Spirit” in this verse is calling Jesus accursed NOW, not saying that He was cursed in the past.

The Bible is emphatic that Jesus WAS made a curse for us in Galatians 3:13. Jesus did hang on a tree, and this verse quotes Deuteronomy 21:23 (part of the Law of Moses under which Jesus lived) as saying that anyone hung on a tree is cursed. When the symbol of Christ was raised in Numbers 21:5-9, it was a serpent (the symbol of Satan!) on the pole. That is because when Jesus died on the cross, He wasn't spotless. He was carrying our sins and He had “become sin” Himself (2 Corinthians 5:21). The Law specified a curse on everyone who broke it (Deuteronomy 28:15-68). When Jesus carried our sins, He therefore had to be cursed because that is what our sins deserved. If He were not cursed Himself, He would not have paid the penalty for our sins and settled our accounts with God. If He had not taken ALL sicknesses on Himself, He would not have legally redeemed us from ALL sicknesses. Thank God, the Bible is clear that He did that for us (Isaiah 53:4-5).

The Bible cannot contradict itself. Therefore 1 Corinthians 12:3's true meaning cannot contradict these other Scriptures. Jesus bore the curse we deserved for our sins, so 1 Corinthians 12:3 must refer to a present-day cursing of Jesus that would of course be out of order because He rose from the dead without that curse and He lives forever without it today.

Objection: God Creates Dumb, Deaf and Blind People (Exodus 4:11)

Exodus 4:10-12:

And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

This verse is taken by some to mean that God intentionally creates some people dumb, deaf or blind, in an argument similar to the one raised about the man blind from birth in John 9:1-7. It is curious that if this conclusion is true, Jesus undid the works of God by healing the dumb, deaf and the blind throughout His ministry. If God created these people that way on purpose, Jesus was undoing, not doing, the works of God. Therefore, these things cannot possibly be the works of God.

Examine the verse in its context and you'll find that God was saying that he would help Moses overcome his slowness of tongue. He did not just say, "That's right, Moses, I created you to be a lousy speaker on purpose, but I still called you to deliver Israel. Ha ha. Deal with it."

God said the opposite of what most people think He said in this passage. He did NOT say, "Some people just have certain problems, and they'll just have to live with them because that's how I made them." Moses complained about being a poor speaker. God did NOT say, "Well, Moses, I just made you that way because it was just My will for you to have problems with public speaking. So you're right, you're just the wrong guy for the job. What was I thinking? Duh!" Instead, He encouraged Moses that he could GO anyway and God would help him by teaching him what to say. He did NOT have to continue to be constrained by an ongoing problem that he was living with.

So if you're dumb, deaf or blind, take heart! You don't have to stay that way either, any more than the man born blind in John 9:1-7 had to stay blind once Jesus appeared on the scene.

Yes, but doesn't it explicitly say that God makes people dumb, deaf and blind? No, it doesn't. This verse does not say that God creates some people with birth defects on purpose! There are two plausible takes on what He is actually saying.

First take: God simply said that He was everyone's Creator, including the dumb, deaf, blind, and those with any birth defects. All such conditions are possible because sin and Satan are on the earth, but God is still the Creator of everyone, including those who are disfigured or disabled. God's point was that with Him, all things are possible. Since He is the Creator of man's mouth, he can make the poor speaker eloquent.

Second take: Because God said that He HAS made man's mouth, and that He MAKES people blind, deaf, dumb, etc., the point at which He makes people blind, deaf or dumb does not have to be birth! He smote the Sodomites with blindness (Genesis 19:10-11). He smote people who came after Elisha with blindness (2 Kings 6:18-20). He smote Zechariah, father of John the Baptist, with dumbness for a season – God hit his “mute” button (Acts 1:18-20)! Paul went blind for three days after he met Jesus (Acts 9:8-9). Bar-Jesus the sorcerer was struck blind for a season (Acts 13:6-12). So this verse is not necessarily talking about birth defects. I would be more likely to side with this second take because the context shows that whatever condition you might have is subject to change, which is the very point of the passage anyway!

I admit that this is a difficult passage for some people, but it surely does not set aside the healing covenant that God made later with Moses. The people as of the time of Exodus 4 did not yet have a healing covenant with God. The dumb, deaf and blind had no guarantee of healing from God yet. This did not come until Exodus 15:25-26. God at that point made clear to Moses how he would deal with the dumb, deaf and blind if they would keep His covenant – He would heal them! God is definitely the healer of the dumb, deaf and blind today. Jesus healed all those conditions and He is the same today as He was then (Hebrews 13:8).

Objection: The LORD Stopped Sarah from Having Children (Genesis 16:2)

This “unbearable” objection (actually quoted to me by an anti-healing person) blames God for leaving Sarah (named Sarai at the time) childless. Consider the situation and the immediate context:

Genesis 15:4:

And behold, the word of the LORD came to him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

Genesis 16:2: (This is the verse in question)

And Sarai [later renamed Sarah] said unto Abram [later renamed Abraham], Behold now, the LORD hath restrained me from bearing: I pray thee, go in unto my maid; it may be that I may obtain children by her. And Abram hearkened unto the voice of Sarai.

I don't know how anyone could take Sarai's advice as proof that God keeps people childless on purpose. There is no indication that this is even a true statement. Yes, it is true that Sarai said it, but what Sarai said was not true, although it is truly quoted in the Bible! Listen to the rest of her advice – it ran totally counter to the promise of God, and it created problems that last to this day! Abram and Sarai were in unbelief at the time. Abram had believed God, but then he and Sarah conspired to help God fulfill His plan because of impatience and doubt. Sarai joins Eve and Job's wife among the list of wives in the Bible who gave their husbands bad advice.

The only sense in which Sarai could claim that “the Lord had restrained her” was that He had not yet performed the miracle that would enable her to conceive. However, that did not prove that it was God's will for her to remain childless – His will was exactly the opposite!

Sarai should have understood what is obvious to any reader of Genesis. The Lord was not her problem; He was her solution. The Lord made her able to have a child in her old age. Sarai just didn't believe it yet. Taking her unbelief as doctrine is a mistake similar to the one made by taking certain of Job's statements as doctrine, an issue that is covered elsewhere.

Objection: God Afflicted Jacob with a Hip Problem (Genesis 32:25, 31)

Genesis 32:24-31:

And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day.

And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him.

And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, I will not let you go, except thou bless me.

And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.

And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.

And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

And as he passed over Penuel the sun rose upon him, and he halted [limped] upon his thigh.

Unless you have had an experience of wrestling with God as Jacob did, you can't blame your hip problem on God. There is no indication that this was a permanent condition that afflicted Jacob (Israel) for the rest of his life. He was only limping that morning as far as we know. He was able to go to Egypt much later in his life, so he was not a permanent invalid.

This situation was a special test for Jacob. Jacob proved that he was determined to have the blessing of God on his life at any cost. This was a special case and not one that you can use to prove that God sends hip problems to people today. If you think that you're another Jacob, please describe exactly what blessings you have wrestled God for. Then cringe at how silly you seem given that under the New Covenant, all blessings have already been given to you (Ephesians 1:3), so there is no need to wrestle God for ANY blessing. Then get hip to the fact that God didn't cause your problem.

This is similar to the testing of Abraham, Jacob's grandfather. God told Abraham to sacrifice His son Isaac on an altar. Does this mean that you should attempt to slay your child unless an angel stops you? I hope that you don't think so. Jacob's hip situation was a special, one-time case. Jesus' healings were ongoing events throughout His earthly ministry. Do you want to extrapolate your theology from a one-time case or from the norm?

Jesus healed EVERY form of sickness, which must include hip trouble. You can expect Him to do the same today.

So don't blame osteoporosis on God! If you haven't been wrestling with God lately, you may safely assume that your hip problem is just another physical problem that Jesus bore for you as your substitute.

Objection: You Can't Say that God Never Puts Sickness on the Righteous. He Killed David's Child.

David's child was conceived out of wedlock in an unrighteous manner. The child was in no position to do anything righteous or unrighteous. The blessing or curse on younger children depends on the parents. Sin WAS the issue, as is made clear in the passage (2 Samuel 12:13-18). (See Notes on 2 Samuel 12:13-18 for some additional thoughts.) Therefore, this passage cannot be used to prove that sickness comes on the righteous for some unrelated, "sovereign" reason.

For proof that YOUR righteousness blesses your children, see God's Blessing on your Kids.

The fact that an infant died because of his father's unrighteousness does not constitute proof that God will afflict a righteous person with sickness. David partook of the law of sowing and reaping. He sowed death when he ordered Uriah the Hittite to be set up to be killed in battle. He then reaped death in his own family more than once (consider Absalom later on).

Even in the New Testament, Jesus threatened to kill the children of a woman who was messing with His church. Whether or not you think this is fair, obviously God does. However, if you aren't going around seducing the local church members, you have no reason to fear such things happening to your family.

Objection: Rather Than Claiming Healing, We Should Just Have “the Faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego”

This line of reasoning has been published by at least one well-known minister and it is widely quoted. This stems from a misreading of the text in Daniel 3, as we will see shortly. The argument goes like this: “The three Hebrew boys did not know whether or not God would deliver them. They were just consecrated to God whether He delivered them or not. They didn’t care if they got delivered; they just wanted to please God. Therefore, we should have the faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego for our healing. If God delivers us, fine. If not, we’ll just accept it.”

This religious foolishness is ironic because in the story in question, God miraculously delivered the boys! He did not leave them to die. But that’s not the main problem. The boys never did question God’s ability or willingness to deliver them! In fact, they explicitly said that He would! Read the passage more carefully than most people do:

Daniel 3:14-18:

Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, ye fall down and worship the image which I have made; well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.

If it be so [Stop right here – this is where people misinterpret it. If what be so? Religious tradition says that this means, “If it be so that God shall deliver us out of your hands.” But that is not what they meant. They meant if it be so that they were going to be thrown into the fiery furnace. That is obvious from the rest of the sentence.], our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. [There you have the real faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego. They said that God would deliver them, and He did.]

But if not [This goes along with “If it be so” above and still refers to whether or not the king would really throw them into the fiery furnace. They did not allow for the possibility that God would not deliver them. They just said that He is able and He will. They were definite about that.], be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

So let’s summarize what they said. They said, “If you throw us into the furnace, God will deliver us. If you don’t, we still won’t serve your gods.” They got thrown into the furnace, and what happened was exactly what they said would happen. God delivered them. Their faith got them through it. Therefore, I agree that we should have the faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego! We should believe for our deliverance, we should be willing to say so before men, and we should act on our faith without wavering.

I imagine that those who promote this objection would be mad that I said that their faith did it as opposed to the sovereignty of God. Well, this will probably make them madder, but in Hebrews 11 – in the “hall of faith”—we see those who “through faith...quenched the violence of fire” among the greats of faith (Hebrews 11:32-40). This could refer to Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego, and if so, it is another proof that they were in faith. The feat right before it was “stopping the mouths of lions,” which was also in the book of Daniel. I am aware that Moses also quenched the violence of fire in Numbers 11:1-2. However, Moses was mentioned separately among the greats of faith, and this feat was not mentioned in the part specifically pertaining to Moses. It would seem most likely, although I would not die at the stake to defend this, that Hebrews is referring to the three Hebrew boys. They obviously were in faith (you can tell by their words!) and did a great thing, and it would be no surprise to have them mentioned in Hebrews 11.

Objection: We Should, Like Paul, Learn to Be Content in Every Situation

Agreed. You can be content while sick, knowing that you believe that you have received your healing. Then you have no reason to worry, because you know that you will not stay sick.

However, this is usually meant by objectors to mean, “We should just lie down and accept whatever comes and be content with whatever happens to us.” If that is your idea of contentment, you and the apostle Paul have some very different idea of what contentment is. If Paul wanted Timothy to be content with his frequent illnesses, he would not have given him advice to try to prevent them. If Paul were content to just stay in jail, he would not have implored believers to pray for this release so that he could preach the gospel again (Colossians 4:3). He could be content while in jail, but not content with the idea of staying in jail. There is a difference.

Paul went around healing people and doing signs and wonders. He did not tell the sick to be content in their situation; he healed them! If there was anyone whom God wanted to stay contentedly sick on the island of Melita, Paul got him out of the will of God by healing him! Paul did not tell the crippled man in Acts 14:7-10 to be content with his lameness; he told him to get up! Why, when no one in the New Testament was ever told to be content with sickness, do we preach this to people today? (If you think that Paul was sick, read the objection about his “thorn in the flesh” and learn the truth.)

How ridiculous it is, with the Great Commission still in force, to think that God wants us out of commission and that we should be content with that! How can you be content being sick, knowing the work that needs to be done on the earth today? We are needed on this earth to preach the gospel to the lost. We must be against anything that could hinder us from this divine mandate. Sickness interferes with our ability to fulfill the Great Commission, so we must not be content to stay sick. If you’re content to be sick and unable to share the gospel, you’re either a selfish pig or deceived by bad teaching. (Maybe both.) People who are headed for hell need you. You can be content as far as having the peace of God goes while you’re sick, but you must not be content to stay in that condition indefinitely.

Do not think for a moment that your endurance of sickness pleases God. Faith pleases God – if you don’t have faith, you aren’t pleasing God (Hebrews 11:6). This doesn’t mean that you’re good for nothing if you’re sick; it just means that you would please God more by exercising faith to be healed. And make no mistake – the faith talked about in Hebrews 11 is faith that changed things and moved people to action, not just some vague worship of God.

You can have joy and peace while sick, because these things come out of your spirit, not your body. Your spirit is not sick. Only your body gets diseases. However, to sit and assume that sickness is the will of God is to ignore practically the entire ministry of Jesus Christ. Jesus told no one, “Be content with your sickness.” He is surely not saying that today. It would help the sick immensely if others would not say things like that to them to rob them of whatever faith they may have had for their healing.

Objection: We Are Supposed to Thank God for Everything, Which Would Include Sickness (1 Thessalonians 5:18)

“In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.” – 1 Thessalonians 5:18.

“Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;” – Ephesians 5:20

You cannot thank God for everything because not everything comes from God! Sickness comes from the devil. You can't thank God for something that comes from the devil! But you can thank God in everything. Why can you thank God in sickness? Because you know that by Jesus' stripes, you were healed (1 Peter 2:24)! You know that God is your Physician (Exodus 15:25-26). You know that Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8). You know that you always have the victory in Christ (1 Corinthians 15:57, 2 Corinthians 2:14). So thank God for these things!

God didn't just say to give thanks for all things – He said to give thanks to the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. It should be obvious from that statement that “all things” means “all things that your Father gave you.” If your brother gives you a present for Christmas, do you thank your uncle for giving it to you? It is just as illogical to thank God for giving you something that the devil gave you.

Books have been written suggesting that you thank God for everything, but they are out of balance. Thank God for the victory, not for something that He didn't send your way in the first place. Don't even thank God for the “privilege” of enduring sickness! Thank God that you don't have to endure it. Rather than asking for grace to live with it, thank God that you can live without it because of the grace that He has already given you! Thank God that you always have the victory in Christ! Keep thanking God for all that He gives you, but never thank God for something that comes from the devil. That is just bad manners. Would you like it if someone thanked you for giving him a cold when you didn't give him the cold? Why should God like that any better than you would?

You never see a verse where Jesus told a sick person to THANK GOD for the oppression of the devil that was going on in that person's body. Jesus thanked God for His food, but He never thanked God that the devil had made someone sick. Everything the devil does is anti-God, so it makes NO SENSE to thank God for the actions of someone who does nothing but oppose God.

God will not be THANKING the devil for sending sickness on anyone – He will be PUNISHING the devil for doing it. If God isn't grateful for sickness, you shouldn't be grateful for it either. Instead, be grateful that Jesus has provided healing for it!

Objection: Lazarus Was Sick for the Glory of God (John 11:4)

In John 11:4, Jesus said, “This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.” You should be able to stop reading right there and figure out what Jesus meant when He said this. Did anyone at Bethany look at Lazarus’ sick condition and start glorifying God before Jesus showed up? No! Did God get any glory out of Lazarus being sick? No! Actually, if you read this carefully, Lazarus had already been dead two days when Jesus made this statement. Jesus stayed where he was two days before going to Bethany, where Lazarus had been dead four days when he got there. So when Jesus made this statement about Lazarus’ sickness, he wasn’t even sick anymore – he was dead! So Jesus never said that anyone’s current illness was “for the glory of God.”

Are we to assume that God made Lazarus sick just so that Jesus could put on a circus sideshow and raise him up to prove something? We can’t assume that, because Jesus was manifested to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), not the works of God! If God makes you sick so that He can show off your healing, he is truly a zero-sum God, because He has only left you back where He found you. You are no better off than where you started. This is a horrible and unbiblical picture of your heavenly Father!

When was the glory of God manifested? When Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead! Jesus told Martha that if she would believe, she would see the glory of God. So watching Lazarus be sick and die, she could not have been seeing the glory of God, because she hadn’t seen His glory yet! Therefore, his sick condition and death did not bring God any glory at all. Then Jesus raised Lazarus and God was glorified!

The only sickness that was “for the glory of God” was completely healed. Lazarus lived quite a while after he was raised from the dead. You are not sick for the glory of God and neither is anyone else. God did not make you sick to show off your healing later. God gets no glory from your sickness; He gets glory from your healing. Why not cooperate with Him for your healing and bring Him some glory right now?

Objection: Lazarus's Faith Could Not Have Raised Him from the Dead

This is obvious, and anyone would have to agree with the statement in and of itself.

The issue is where the objector is trying to go with this argument. This is used as "proof" that it was Jesus' faith, not the people's faith, that mattered when people were getting healed. There usually follows some worn-out statement about everything being based on God's sovereignty.

When certain manifestations of the spirit occur, especially the "gift of faith," the faith of the person isn't the issue. A person who is not in faith (including a dead person) can receive through such a manifestation. This also can be said of "gifts of healings" and "working of miracles." I have seen people healed who I knew weren't in faith, but a special move of the Holy Spirit got them healed anyway. This is not the norm, but God does move this way sometimes.

So as far as Lazarus goes, it was definitely Jesus' faith, not Lazarus's faith, in play here.

The problem is when people try to extrapolate such cases to ALL healings and miracles. The Word is very clear that our faith (which is itself, of course, a gift from God – Ephesians 2:8) can heal us; Jesus told many people, According to YOUR Faith Be It Done unto You (see that article for proof). It was not a matter of God's will in these cases (healing is always His will); it depended on the belief of the person who wanted healing. So although there are some special manifestations that bypass individual faith, the norm is for people to use their own faith to believe that they receive when they pray. You may not be healed every time if you just go to a healing service where the Holy Spirit is manifesting Himself, but you can be healed every time if you believe that you receive the healing that Jesus paid for when you pray.

Objection: God Does Not Heal All Because He Didn't Heal Isaac or Jacob of Bad Eyesight

This objects to a statement that no one with a brain should make anyway: "God heals all." God doesn't heal all, and He doesn't save all, either, if you go by the results of some people's failure to receive what grace has provided. Those who come to Him in faith to receive forgiveness of sins get saved. Those who come to Him in faith to receive healing get healed. Others stay unsaved and unhealed.

Isaac and Jacob did not ask God to heal their eyesight, nor would they have had a real basis for faith. God's covenant of healing was not explicitly stated until Exodus 15:25-26, where God made His covenant through Moses, a man who kept good eyesight throughout his life (Deuteronomy 34:7)! Why not major on Moses's eyesight instead of Isaac's or Jacob's? Isaac and Jacob had no promise of healing, but Moses did. Why not major on someone who lived AFTER God made His first healing covenant than on two people who lived BEFORE God made His first healing covenant?

Isaac's eyes and Jacob's eyes do not contradict the statement that God will heal ALL those who come to Him in faith for healing. No one, including you, can produce a statement from the Bible where Jesus turned away a blind person, or even a person with bad eyesight, who came to Him in faith for healing.

You could name some other people in Scripture who were not healed, too, but you cannot prove in any of these cases that it was the will of God for them to stay sick. Would you base your conduct on that of Ananias, Sapphira, Judas or Jezebel? Their conduct is written in the Bible, but that doesn't mean that their conduct was God's will. You cannot make doctrine out of verses that simply state historical facts. You make doctrine out of verses that are intended as doctrine, such as the verses in Exodus cited above. From that verse, God's intention regarding healing is clear. Anyone's failure to appropriate it does not change the will of God in the matter.

Objection: Throughout Scripture God Heals Those Whom He CHOOSES to Heal

This objection makes me wonder what new version of the Bible the objector is using, as the ones I have clearly show the opposite! I know that some paraphrases can get really “out there,” but they rarely contradict the original Scriptures.

Consider the case of the brass serpent that symbolized the crucified Jesus in Numbers 21:5-9. Anyone who looked intently at the serpent lived instead of dying of a fatal snakebite. Who decided who got healed? Not God, because ANYONE could look at the serpent and live. Conversely, anyone could choose not to gaze at the snake and die. God didn't decide which fate befell each individual, man did.

When the multitudes came to Jesus and ALL were healed, Jesus did not make any case-by-case decisions about who would get healed. The PEOPLE decided. If they came to Jesus, or allowed someone to carry them to Jesus, they got healed. If they didn't, they stayed sick. Jesus didn't choose who got healed – man did. Jesus was willing to heal them all.

On the streets of Jerusalem, they brought the sick to see if they could at least get Peter's shadow to fall on them – and everyone who came got healed (Acts 5:12-16). God didn't choose between individuals. If you went there, you got healed, and if you didn't, you missed out. It was man's choice, not God's, as God was perfectly willing to heal everyone.

There is no record of God “choosing” the woman with the issue of blood. Jesus certainly did not make a specific determination in her case because He didn't even know who had touched Him! The woman obviously believed that He was the Messiah (the Christ, the Anointed One) and she acted accordingly. Meanwhile, others who were around Jesus and brushed up against Him did not receive healing. This was not by Jesus' choice.

All the sick people on the island of Melita who were brought to Paul were healed (Acts 28:8-9). God did not make any case-by-case choices – anyone who came got healed. It was up to man to show up or not show up – God made His healing power available. (In this case, they all showed up.)

The book of James shows the right of “any” person who is seriously ill to call for the elders (James 5:14-15). The prayer of faith WILL heal such a person and an unbeliever will even be forgiven for any sins that might have been an issue. (A believer's sins are already forgiven.) GOD does not decide who calls on the elders – man does. You can follow Scripture if you get seriously ill and be healed, or you can ignore Scripture and miss out. The choice is yours, not God's.

Even in the unusual case of the Pool of Bethesda, God did not run a lottery and heal one person arbitrarily. Whoever got to the pool first after the angel troubled the water was healed. Man made that choice, not God.

Jesus said to believe that you receive (take) when you pray (Mark 11:24). If God were not offering His benefits freely to every person, no one could be sure that he would be one of those who could take His benefits when they pray.

It is no more sensible to say that God heals those whom He chooses than to say that He saves those whom He chooses. (I realize that the Calvinists out there believe that second part, too.) You did not receive salvation until YOU chose to receive Jesus. The work was already done but you had to receive what God already offered you. You made a choice that only YOU could make. God did not violate your free will and FORCE you to be saved. God wants everyone to be saved and to come to a knowledge of the truth (1 Timothy 2:3-4), including the fact that healing belongs to them thanks to Jesus' stripes.

In fact, the thing conspicuously ABSENT from Scripture is God making person-by-person choices regarding whom He is willing to heal. If we don't see Jesus picking only favored people from a crowd, we should not expect Him to operate like that today. He is the same yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8). If He did not choose who could be healed on a case-by-case basis back then, He surely does not do it today.

The main fact about healing is that Jesus paid for it on behalf of everyone who will ever live, is alive, or ever will live. WHOSOEVER wants to receive it, can.

Objection: God Has Mercy upon Whom HE Wills (Romans 9:15)

Romans 9:15:

For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

While this is a statement from God Himself, and thus obviously true, it misses the point that God now offers His healing mercy to EVERYONE. EVERYONE is now whom He wills to receive it! He has chosen to have compassion on EVERYONE under the New Covenant!

On whom did Jesus have compassion in the New Testament? The multitudes, not just specific people within the multitudes. He didn't refuse healing to anyone who approached Him. He didn't multiply food for some of them and send the others away hungry.

This is a very similar objection to Throughout Scripture God Heals Those Whom He CHOOSES to Heal, so you should review that response; this avoids having to re-state those arguments under this objection.

However, some things need to be said that fall under this particular objection. A study of Romans 9 through Romans 11 (the context of the verse at the head of this topic) shows that Paul's main topic is Jews and Gentiles and the temporary blindness of the Jews and availability of all blessings to the Gentiles as well as Jews. We see that Israel is temporarily blinded, but the day will come when all Israel will be saved. (They will call on Jesus of course, as there is no other way to be saved.) This master plan is God's design, and Paul addresses people who think that God is unfair.

It is critical that you realize that there is not one single verse in the whole stretch from Romans 9 through Romans 11 in which Paul talks about God being willing to have compassion and mercy on one particular Gentile but not another particular Gentile, or on one particular Jew but not another particular Jew. (Yes, particular people are mentioned in Romans 9 who did not receive mercy – Pharaoh and Esau – but they were not Jews under the Law.) The objector is not trying to make a case between Jews and Gentiles in different time periods anyway – his ill-conceived point is that God will choose to have mercy (including healing) on one particular Jew or Gentile but not another particular Jew or Gentile because that's just what He feels like doing, and that is not Paul's point at all.

As far as the rest of the matter goes, the answer to the similar objection mentioned above should settle things for you.

Objection: God Creates Both the Day of Prosperity and the Day of Adversity (Ecclesiastes 7:14)

Ecclesiastes 7:14:

In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

Consider the context of the book of Ecclesiastes before using this verse as a proof-text that God gave you lung cancer. The entire book's theme is the vanity of life apart from God. Time and chance happen to everyone; good and bad things happen to everyone. God allows things to happen without intervening when someone is not walking in covenant with Him. God has no obligation to send only days of prosperity to those who do not walk with Him. God leaves you on your own in life if that's what you choose.

This does not invalidate Deuteronomy 28, which promises prosperity to those who serve God and poverty to those who don't serve God. God did not promise days of prosperity and days of adversity to good and bad alike in that chapter.

Under the Old Covenant, God sent days of prosperity to His obedient people and He sent days of adversity to His enemies and even to His people when they were in mass disobedience. It appears that Solomon recognized that people who read his book would live to see both kinds of days.

Besides, this verse isn't even talking about sickness. It could be used as an objection to prosperity teaching (and be refuted), but it is definitely off the subject of healing.

Objection: Jesus Bore Our Sorrows and Grievs, Not Our Sicknesses and Pains, on the Cross

Good grief! Someone hasn't spent any time with a concordance.

Many Bibles published today have a margin note that the literal translations of the Hebrew words used for sorrows and grievs in Isaiah 53:4 are sicknesses and pains. Therefore, the correct literal translation of that verse is, "Surely he hath borne our sicknesses, and carried our pains."

This is an obvious conclusion to anyone who takes the time to study it out. It is not a way of trying to make this verse say something it does not say or rewrite the Bible.

You don't even need a concordance to figure out that Isaiah 53:4 should be translated as shown above. Simply read Matthew 8:16-17! Do you suppose the Holy Spirit could interpret His own prophecy correctly? Matthew plainly says that Isaiah said that Jesus "took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." The fulfillment of this prophecy is cited at an event where Jesus healed all that were sick! So there is absolutely no question that Isaiah was talking about illnesses here. "Healing" people of sorrows and grievv as we normally define them would not have been fulfilled by the healing of the sick.

In the case of grievs, it is utterly ridiculous to maintain that Jesus redeemed us from all forms of grief, because the Holy Spirit Himself can be grieved, as shown by Ephesians 4:30: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Peter tells us that we will have to endure grief, even after Jesus' atonement, in 1 Peter 2:19: "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully." Peter says a few verses later that you were healed, but he makes it clear that Jesus did not relieve you of all grievs in this life! Therefore, the word grievs in Isaiah 53:4 cannot refer to this kind of grief.

If you're convinced already that this objection is corny, you can stop reading here. If you think you need more proof, here are some facts to save you some study time:

Grievs Defined

Let's look at the other places where the same Hebrew word translated grievs in Isaiah 53:4 is used in the Old Testament (the underlying word in each case in the same Hebrew word):

"And the LORD will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee." – Deuteronomy 7:15.

"Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed." – Deuteronomy 28:61.

Want more? Good! The Hebrew word translated griefs in Isaiah 53:4 is derived from another Hebrew word that is translated sick in 34 verses in the Old Testament! Feel free to buy a concordance or go online and look up these verses for yourself, as I think I have listed enough verses here to rest my case.

This is no attempt to rewrite the Bible, but simply an attempt to point out where the King James translators should have used clearer words to express what the Hebrew words were saying. My Reina-Valera Spanish Bible (RVR 1960, a standard among Spanish-speakers), which was translated directly from the Hebrew and the Greek, states explicitly in Isaiah 53:4 that he bore our sicknesses (enfermedades) and pains (dolores). This underscores the point that no one is attempting to rewrite the original Hebrew.

Based on the other places in the Old Testament that the word is used, it is indisputable that Jesus bore our sicknesses at Calvary.

Many different words are translated grief outside of Isaiah 53. The word grief appears 22 times in the Old Testament outside of Isaiah 53. In only two of these cases is the same Hebrew word that Isaiah used in Isaiah 53:4 used to express the word grief:

“As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.” – Jeremiah 6:7

“Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.” – Jeremiah 10:13

Even in these cases, a physical hurt seems to be indicated.

Other Hebrew words are used to express emotional grief. The one in Isaiah 53:4 is the one used above to describe physical grief. It is never used to describe purely emotional grief.

Sorrows Defined

Now let's look at the other word, the one used for sorrows in Isaiah 53:4. This is the same word that is also used in the verses below. In the interest of fairness, I have listed it everywhere I could find it, not just the places that might seem to help my case:

“If there be dearth in the land, if there be pestilence, if there be blasting, or mildew, locusts, or caterpillars; if their enemies besiege them in the cities of their land; whatsoever sore or whatsoever sickness there be: Then what prayer or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, when every one shall know his own sore and his own grief...”—2 Chronicles 6:28-29.

“He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain” – Job 33:19. (The second "pain" is actually implicit from the first and was added by the translators.)

“For I am ready to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me” – Psalm 38:17.

“For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of those whom thou hast wounded” – Psalm 69:26.

“For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow” – Ecclesiastes 1:18.

“All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not; for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased. Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity...” – Jeremiah 30:14-15.

“Thou didst say, Woe is me now! for the LORD hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest.” – Jeremiah 45:3.

“Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed.” – Jeremiah 51:8.

“Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger” – Lamentations 1:12.

“The LORD is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity” – Lamentations 1:18.

Like the English word pain, this particular Hebrew word appears to be used to refer to both physical and emotional pain, as is clear from both uses in the verses shown above. This word is not as clear-cut as the word for griefs, which always means physical sickness in Scripture. I am not saying that the word used for sorrows always means physical pain; I am simply proving that the word is in fact used to describe physical pain in some places and emotional pain in others. But that’s a GOOD thing, because otherwise only PHYSICAL issues would be healed based on what Jesus did. This shows us that EMOTIONAL problems as well as PHYSICAL problems are covered by His atonement.

Matthew 8:17 shows us that the Holy Spirit (through Isaiah) meant that SICKNESSES (which could be physical or emotional) were healed because Jesus took them. This covers more than just the boo-hoo-hoo kind of “sorrows.”

See the discussion Isaiah’s Prophecy of Redemption for even more discussion of this topic.

Objection: The Healing Part of Isaiah 53 Does Not Refer to the Atonement

One objector wrote that only the part of Isaiah 53 dealing with salvation from sin refers to the Atonement. In his opinion, the healing part of Isaiah 53 does not refer to the Atonement. His alleged proofs were that the prophecy about healing was fulfilled in Jesus' ministry, not His atonement, and that we still experience sorrow today. Therefore (supposedly), because we experience sorrows, we have not yet entered into the full redemption that Isaiah promised us.

Even a casual reading of the complete chapter (Isaiah 53) should prove to you that the subject of the entire chapter is what the Messiah would do for us when He atoned for our sins. I don't know any scholar who would deny that there are multiple references throughout the chapter that refer to how the Messiah would die and what that would accomplish. It is bad Bible scholarship to cut out the phrase about healing and claim that it must be talking about something completely different from what the rest of Isaiah 53 discusses.

There is a separate reply to the objection about Isaiah's prophecy of healing being fulfilled in Jesus' ministry before His crucifixion. There is a related objection about Jesus bearing our sorrows instead of our sicknesses. The reply to that objection conclusively proves that Isaiah was talking about sicknesses, not only emotional sorrows as we think of them. Yes, we experience sorrow, but that wasn't what Isaiah was talking about, as Matthew proves by his quote of the verse in question. (Those who like to delve into the Hebrew will find even more conclusive proof in the aforementioned objection reply.)

Once you see this, there is another point that disproves this particular objection. The Hebrew word for borne in Isaiah 53:4, referring to what Jesus did with sickness, is the same Hebrew word nasa used for bare in Isaiah 53:12. An easy way to remember this word is that NASA in the U.S. sends up rockets that take things away from the earth. That is not how this Hebrew word was derived, of course, but there is a similarity in meaning. In both cases, Jesus Christ bore something to take it away from us. In Isaiah 53:4, He has surely borne our sicknesses. In Isaiah 53:12, he bare the sin of many. It's the same Hebrew word. How can anyone claim that it means one thing in verse 4 and another thing in verse 12? Did Jesus bare our sins to redeem us from them? Yes! Did he bare our sicknesses to redeem us from them? Yes! We cannot make the same word mean one thing in verse 4 and another thing in verse 12 just because we don't want to believe that healing was provided in the Atonement.

It is through His "bearing of the sin of many" that we are made righteous and holy before God. (We are not sinners saved by grace. We are righteous and holy new creations in Christ. The old sin nature has passed away completely. You have only your unregenerate flesh to deal with, not a dead spirit.) It is through His stripes that we are healed. Note that stripes refers to the physical damage done to Christ's body, NOT to the actual whipping itself. We are not healed by His whipping any more than we are saved by the wood on the cross where He hung. We are saved by His bearing of our sins in His own body on the tree, and healed by His bearing of our physical torments. Both of these blessed thoughts are conveyed in 1 Peter 2:24. By His stripes (bruising), you were healed.

It makes no sense to try to compartmentalize the great Atonement chapter of the Bible and say that only part of it applies to us. The very people who fuss about us taking things supposedly out of context are the very ones ripping apart this chapter into at least two pieces. The wounds and the sin-bearing are tied together. Surely He has borne our sicknesses, and carried our pains, yet we esteemed Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the punishment that brought us peace was on Him, and with His stripes, we are healed. It pleased the Lord to bruise Him.

Note the use of the word yet, which ties together Isaiah 53:4. He bore our sicknesses and carried our pains, yet we considered Him smitten of God. In other words, we saw His physical suffering, but He was bearing our sicknesses and pains – the ones that we deserved to endure as part of the penalty for our sins.

So, we see that Jesus was bruised for our iniquities, and by His bruise we are healed. If that doesn't prove that healing was part of the atonement that Jesus made for our iniquities, I don't know what does. (In an effort to continue to be scholarly, let me point out that the two Hebrew words for bruised and bruise are not the same word; one refers to the breaking or bruising; the other to the physical bruise mark. The word used for bruised implies more than the simple giving of a black-and-blue, but a more general breaking of something that causes it to crumble. This is consistent with Jesus' statement that His body was broken for you.) Either you can believe both or you can believe neither, but I can't see how any unbiased person could conclude that the bruise for our iniquities is distinct from the bruise that healed us.

Objection: If Healing Is in Christ's Atonement, Sick People Must Be Unsaved

The argument here is that if healing and forgiveness were really purchased together at Calvary as one package, you would have to be healed the moment you are born again. Therefore, supposedly, anyone who is sick must be unsaved, because he has not received God's package deal of salvation.

This ignores the fact that Paul said in Philippians 2:12 to "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." This does not mean that you are saved by works or that you work for salvation. It is a gift. Paul did not say to "work for" your salvation; he said to "work out" your salvation! However, if you instantly walked in the reality of all of it, Paul would not have told you to "work out" your salvation. Everything you need is provided, but you have to work it out. The blessings of God do not manifest automatically just because you are born again. You will have to put some work into studying the Bible and discovering what is yours in Christ. If you want a quick overview, check out the discussion about Who You Are and What You Have in this book.

The punishment that purchased your peace was laid upon Jesus. Isaiah mentions this fact just before he says that we are healed by Jesus' stripes. You have a right to constant peace because of what Jesus did on the cross for you. Do you conclude that if anyone isn't at peace, he must be unsaved? Of course not. Yet that is the same argument made by this objection concerning healing. By this logic, you would have to walk in constant peace if peace and forgiveness are part of the same package.

Peace and healing were both purchased for you by the same atonement that bought your forgiveness. As you grow in God, you should walk in more and more peace and healing.

You also had the love of God shed abroad in your heart by the Holy Spirit when you were born again, but it does not manifest itself automatically. You have to renew your mind to what you have inside you before you will act on it consistently. If you make a mean comment about your boss, does that mean you are unsaved? No, it just means that you did not take advantage of your covenant right to walk in God's kind of love.

Jesus Christ has already provided everything you need in this life through His sacrifice for you. Throughout your life, you will learn to walk in more and more of His provision. It is a process, not an instant thing that happens the minute you are born again. The more you renew your mind to what you have in Christ, the more of your inheritance you will walk in. You get it all instantly the moment you receive Jesus, but you'll spend your lifetime finding out what you got and walking it out.

Objection: We Don't Have to Keep Getting Saved the Way We Have to Keep Getting Healed, So Healing Can't Be in the Atonement

There are two problems with this objection. The first is that you can lose your salvation, though you would have to knowingly reject Jesus to do it. If you can't, James 5:19-20 means nothing: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." (This would be the case with someone who has not walked in the deeper things of God; Hebrews 6:4-6 speaks of people who have "tasted" the powers of the world to come and says that they cannot be renewed to repentance again.) Also, 1 Timothy 4:1 says, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils...." You can't depart from something that you have never been in. I cannot depart from a city until I am first IN that city before I depart. Paul talked about young widows who would "[have] damnation, because they have cast off their first faith" (1 Timothy 5:12) and exhorted the Corinthians to "examine themselves" to see if they be in the faith (2 Corinthians 13:5)! I could quote many other passages here, particularly 2 Timothy 2:12, Hebrews 10:29, Hebrews 2:1-3, Hebrews 3:12-14 and 2 Peter 2:20-21, which you should read if you're still not convinced. Because it is possible to lose your salvation, this entire argument is based on a faulty foundation, and it is therefore invalid. (Please note that you cannot "lose" your salvation by accident the way you might "lose" your cell phone. In that sense of the word "lose", you cannot lose your salvation. You would have to exercise the free will you still have and knowingly and deliberately reject Jesus. As long as you don't do that, your salvation is secure and unrelated to your works or how much you sin or don't sin.) If you want a lot MORE proof that salvation CAN be lost, see Objection: Healing Cannot Be in the Atonement because Healing Can Be Lost, but Salvation Cannot Be Lost.

The second problem is that while the new birth happens in an instant, appropriating the benefits that became legally yours through the new birth will take you a lifetime. Just because you are born again does mean that you walk in constant peace all day. But why shouldn't you? That's just as much part of the Atonement as forgiveness and healing, because the chastisement of your peace was laid upon Jesus Christ. Can any serious Bible student argue that peace was not provided in the Atonement because we do not always walk in it? If we cannot use this logic with peace, we cannot use it with healing, either. The fact that you don't walk in health all the time doesn't mean that it wasn't provided for you in the Atonement.

In one sense, salvation is instant, but in another sense, you must "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Philippians 2:12).

Objection: Old Testament Animal Sacrifices Were Never Made Sick

This is true, which is why no one in the Old Testament had the right to receive healing on the basis of any Old Testament sacrifice. Jesus' sacrifice, which ratified the New Covenant, was far greater than any Old Testament sacrifice. Under the Old Covenant, you could be healed, but you had to keep the Law, and if you didn't, a sacrifice had to be made for you to be forgiven. Under the New Testament, the sacrifice that bought us forgiveness has already been made and no new sacrifice will ever be necessary. Thus, healing is available to everyone at all times, though not everyone receives it. Jesus, our New Testament sacrifice, clearly WAS made sick (see Isaiah 53:4, Isaiah 53:10 and the discussion Isaiah's Prophecy of Redemption). The purpose of this was clear, to "bear away" our sicknesses to redeem us from having to suffer from them.

Old Testament sacrifices were never flogged, either, but the New Testament is absolutely clear that Jesus was flogged, resulting in massive bruising on His back and a loss of good health to the point where He could not carry His own cross. The fact that Old Testament sacrifices did not have a particular thing done to them does not prove that Jesus didn't have it done to Him. What Jesus did is infinitely better than any Old Testament animal sacrifice.

Objection: ALL Who Come to Christ for the New Birth Receive It, but Not All Who Come for Healing Receive It

I would turn this around and say that ALL who come to Christ in faith for the new birth receive it, and all who come to Christ in faith for healing receive it.

We should be glad that in our day, the doctrine of the new birth is preached far and wide. It has become normal and accepted teaching. We are used to the idea that you can answer an altar call, or even call on Jesus in your bathroom, and be saved on the spot. We recognize that you don't have to beg for God to save you when you call on Jesus. On the other hand, our right to divine healing is seldom preached anywhere. Many churches that "believe in divine healing" or state that "divine healing is active today" do not really preach a message that anyone could act on and be healed. Most of the time, the matter is left up to the "sovereignty of God" and when it is, nothing happens. (God, in His sovereignty, has provided healing for everyone but requires that those who come for it must do so in unwavering faith.) I am convinced that if we presented divine healing as well as we present the new birth, people would receive healing as a matter of course as they did in Jesus' day. It would be as easy for people to receive healing as it would be for them to receive the new birth.

We've done a little better with the baptism with the Holy Spirit. All four gospels affirm that Jesus baptizes with the Holy Spirit. More people today are coming to realize that receiving the Holy Spirit is a faith transaction that is no more complicated than the new birth and that they can receive this invaluable gift instantly when they come in faith. But it wasn't always that way. Many churches taught that you had to "tarry" for the Holy Spirit as they did in Acts. (If so, follow the whole instruction and do it in Jerusalem!) Once He was given, there was no longer a need to tarry. Some still teach "tarrying." But the truth is that the Holy Spirit was GIVEN in Acts 2 and now He only has to be RECEIVED. You don't need to tarry in Jerusalem or tarry in Tarrytown or anywhere else. When people understand this, it's easy for them to be baptized with the Holy Spirit. But if you're convinced that you're going to have to wait and beg and struggle and twist God's arm or get your life to some man-determined holiness standard before you can receive, it's going to be very hard for you. What I want you to see is that GOD did not make it hard – MAN and his traditions have made it hard. Likewise, GOD did not make receiving healing hard – MAN and his traditions have made it hard.

In Jesus' earthly ministry, it was IMPOSSIBLE to receive the new birth or the Holy Spirit yet, but the multitudes received healing without a big struggle. The irony today is that healing objectors complain about how much harder it is to receive healing than the new birth, yet it is their very objections that poison people's minds and make it almost impossible for many of them to receive healing by faith. If there were so many objections to the new birth, I wonder how many people would come to Jesus in faith to be saved.

Not ALL who appeal to Jesus for relief from bad habits get free. Does that mean that Jesus has NOT redeemed us out of Satan's kingdom and that He did NOT come to destroy the devil's works? Not ALL who appeal to Jesus for financial relief receive it. Does that mean that we cannot receive our needs met based on God's riches in glory by Christ Jesus? Not all are enlightened to what the Word says about these matters. There can be no faith without this enlightenment.

It is not that healing isn't AVAILABLE – it is. But you must come in faith to receive it. You will not receive healing if you pray in unbelief any more than you would receive the new birth if you were not really convinced that God raised Jesus from the dead. I am doing what I can to help people realize that it actually IS easy to receive healing when you know what God says about it.

Objection: Healing Is a Secondary Benefit of the Atonement, Not a Primary One

Would you tell your employer that you don't want the less important fringe benefits at your job because you only want the main ones? I doubt it. Why be silly with God's benefits when you would never think of doing that with man's benefits?

This primary/secondary distinction is modern theological language that is absent from the Bible. It's also an absurd objection, because even if healing is only a secondary benefit, why not take advantage of the secondary benefit as well as the primary one? Why not obey Psalm 103:2-3 and "Forget not all his benefits: Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases?" The only way a "secondary" benefit could not be for you would be if it were not for everyone.

No class of benefit from an atonement in Scripture was limited to only certain people under the covenant. The Passover, which symbolized Christ, produced universal healing in Israel so that there was not one feeble person among their tribes (Psalm 105:37). Anyone could look at the bronze serpent, which symbolized Christ, and be forgiven and healed (Numbers 21:5-9). On many occasions in the Old Testament, the people sinned and a plague broke out, but when atonement was made, the plague was stopped. Everyone was then free from getting it, not just some of the people. When Hezekiah kept the Passover (the symbol of Christ), God healed the people, not just "some of" the people (2 Chronicles 30:18-20).

Matthew 8:16-17 makes it clear that Jesus healed all the sick people because of His coming atonement, which was for all. (This is borne out elsewhere in this book.) Therefore, He could not leave anyone out of a blessing that He was about to secure for all mankind.

This objection is either a dismissal of healing as not important or a lame way to say that healing is not really for everyone.

If you were sick from some painful, incurable illness, you would definitely think that healing was important! It was important enough to Jesus so that He took stripes on His back to relieve you of having to suffer physical pain. If it was important to Him, it should not be of "secondary" importance to you.

If healing isn't for everyone, it can't be part of Christ's atonement at all because what Christ secured was for all. It was either in His atonement or it wasn't, but it couldn't "sort of" be in His atonement and "sort of" not be in His atonement. If it were "sort of" in His atonement, no one would have a basis for faith because no one would know if he could get this "secondary" benefit or not. If you want to be healed, you must realize that healing was purchased for you by the same atonement that made the new birth available to you.

EVERY benefit provided at the cross cost Jesus something and matters to Him. Therefore, it should matter to you as well. God does not belittle any of His blessings by labeling them secondary or unimportant. Neither should you. Whether you think that healing is a PRIMARY or a SECONDARY benefit of the atonement, either way you agree that it IS in the atonement, so why not take advantage of it?

If Jesus didn't want you to have this benefit, He wouldn't have paid for you to have it! It's false humility to say that you don't want ANY particular benefit that Christ provided, whether "primary" or "secondary."

Objection: Atonement Means Cancellation of Guilt, So by Definition Healing Cannot Be “in” the Atonement

By this logic, because atonement means cancellation of guilt, going to heaven cannot be “in” the atonement. Because atonement means cancellation of guilt, the new birth cannot be “in” the atonement.

I suppose by some narrow definition of the atonement, someone could nit-pick and say that healing, going to heaven and the new birth are technically not “in” the atonement, but they certainly are the RESULTS of the atonement, which is what just about everyone other than extreme theological nitpickers would consider being “in” the atonement. They were PROVIDED BY the atonement.

The atonement forced Jesus to bear the punishment for sin in His BODY. He had to be sick and hurt so that we would not have to be sick and hurt as punishment for our sins. The atonement had as its most conspicuous feature the physical abuse that Jesus bore on our behalf. He was wounded, bruised, cursed, smitten of God, afflicted, sick and in pain. He HAD to do this to pay the penalty for our sins so that we would not need to be wounded, bruised, cursed, smitten of God, afflicted, sick and in pain. The punishment that brought us shalom (total well-being) was upon Him. Whether you want to say that all this was “in” the atonement or the results of the atonement, we have all this because of Jesus’ atonement.

Objection: Christ's Sin-Bearing Is Repeated throughout the New Testament, But Healing Is Almost Never Mentioned with It. If Healing Were in the Atonement, It Would Be Mentioned Consistently.

Take a look at all the passages in the New Testament where people were healed! You can go to the New Testament Scriptures about Healing section and see a rather extensive list, actually. If you go through it, you will see that the New Testament has a LOT to say about the healing that is ours because of Jesus! The only reason healing is available to all and so many could receive it was because of Christ's sin-bearing. Some people before Calvary got healed on credit just as people in Numbers 21:5-9 were healed on credit when they looked at the symbol of Christ dying on the cross (the serpent that Moses lifted up). Then Christ's disciples went all over the place doing the works of Jesus, seeing healings and miracles, signs and wonders. A LOT of space in the New Testament is devoted to miracles. Actually, you can verify for yourself (if you wish) that the number of New Testament passages about healings and miracles FAR EXCEEDS the number of passages about Jesus paying for our sins!

Some aspects of heaven are mentioned only ONCE in the New Testament at the very end. They are just as much part of the Word as Jesus' bearing of our sins, which is mentioned far more. Something doesn't have to be mentioned more than ONCE to be true, and if you get two or three Bible witnesses to something, that should really settle things for you. There are a lot more than two or three New Testament passages about healing! How often do you think something must be mentioned in the Bible before you believe that it's true?

Some "healing" verses are statements of our redemption from Satan's power. It is clear that Satan is the sickener and that Jesus came to undo Satan's works and bring people out of Satan's power into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Because Satan is under our feet, so are his works, which notably include disease as well as temptations to sin.

The fact is, there are A LOT MORE verses in the New Testament that testify of healing miracles that changed people's bodies than there are verses that describe the just-as-miraculous changes in people's hearts after they were born again. But don't worry; I won't come up with an objection that the new birth must not be in the atonement because personal testimonies of moral improvement in the Bible are so much rarer than testimonies of healings that are ours courtesy of Christ's atonement.

Objection: If Healing Were in the Atonement, Anyone Who Got Saved Would Be Healed Instantly

I understand where the objector is coming from, but I wonder what awful conclusions we would reach if we applied his logic to any other area.

Rather than expecting people to learn their dominion over sin so that they would stop being alcoholics, we would state, "If deliverance from the power of sin were in the atonement, anyone who got saved would instantly cease being an alcoholic." Does anyone expect that to happen, even though freedom from sin WAS purchased for that person? (It can happen that way, but it doesn't always happen that way.) In fact, why stop with the sin of alcoholism? Why not go the whole way? "If power over sin were in the atonement, anyone who got saved would never sin again."

It is a correct statement that a born-again believer was created in God's image, and God is love. So we could now object: "If having a reborn love nature were provided by the atonement, anyone who got saved would always walk in love from that moment on."

Then we could continue: "If this supposedly great inheritance in Christ were provided by the atonement, then the instant anyone gets saved, he will instantly walk in the full manifestation of every aspect of that inheritance."

In fact, if you just instantly walked in your inheritance, Paul wasted his time when he told us to renew our minds so that we would not be conformed to this world. Paul did not believe that the instant we are saved, we are instantly not conformed to this world. That's why he had to tell us the necessity of renewing our minds so that we would not walk as the world does.

If you just instantly walk in everything that Christ's atonement bought you, why would Paul have to pray for the Ephesians to have revelation so that they would understand the riches of the glory of their inheritance that they already received? They would just instantly walk in it all if this objector's logic is true.

No reasonable person expects that a newborn Christian will instantly walk in everything that the atonement provided, so it is unfair to single out healing and claim that if healing were in the atonement, everyone would instantly walk in it, with no need to renew his mind or get revelation of what Christ gave him for an inheritance.

Objection: Healing Is in the Atonement, But It Is up to God How to Dispense It

The objector has at least realized the plain fact that Isaiah DID refer to physical healing, but he is trying to reconcile that with the fact the not all receive healing in this life. So he has invented a cute saying that makes everything up to God's case-by-case sovereign will. Such a statement is a convenient cop-out for churches whose written doctrine is that healing is in the atonement but whose leaders want to backpedal on that without seeming to deny it. This gives them a way to not offend people who would be very upset if they were told that healing depended on their faith because God made it available to everyone through Christ's atonement. However, being saved from hell is available to people based on their faith because God made it available to everyone through Christ's atonement, and no one seems to be upset that God put that on a faith basis.

If you just think about this for a few seconds, the idea that God controls on a case-by-case basis what Jesus died to give humanity is ridiculous. Salvation was definitely paid for in the atonement. So shall we conclude that when people want to be saved from hellfire, they must appeal to God, who will then decide to whom He is actually willing to dispense what Jesus provided? If something is in the atonement, it is available to all!

This very point is underscored by Matthew when he spoke of Jesus healing the sick. Jesus healed ALL who came to him in Matthew 8:16-17 based on His future atonement. (This point is adequately proved elsewhere in this book.) If Jesus healed ALL then based on His atonement, it would be senseless to assume that today, His atonement has NOT made healing available to all. Either it has or it hasn't!

How did JESUS decide how to dispense healing when He walked the earth? ANYONE could get it. He did not make case-by-case decisions about who would be able to get it and who wouldn't. Because He is the same, yesterday, today and forever (Hebrews 13:8), we must conclude that He is not restricting healing to certain individuals today either.

I think we've dispensed with this objection.

Objection: Faith Teachers Teach a Potential Atonement, Not One Christians Already Enjoy

There is nothing “potential” about the atonement; it’s all past tense. The blessings purchased by Jesus’ atonement are potentially ours and will be ours in practice when we receive them by faith. They are all legally yours right now, but they won’t be yours in experience until you believe and act on what Jesus did for you.

By the objector’s logic, we could just as much say that salvation from hell is a potential atonement, not one sinners already enjoy. The atonement is forever finished, but the sinner will never enjoy the benefit of it until he calls upon Jesus to be his Lord. The sinner’s faith is involved. Likewise, healing belongs to the Christian, but he must receive that healing before he can enjoy it.

Everything to do with the atonement must be received by faith. Take, for example, joy unspeakable and full of glory. I am startled by how many Christians are on antidepressants. So is “joy” a potential atonement? No, joy is a fruit of the spirit and is part of our New Covenant. It is part of the wonderful inheritance that Christ paid for. However, many Christians aren’t aware of how to receive what Christ has paid for (by faith), so they resort to natural means for help. There’s no condemnation if you’re one of those people, but God has much better for you. Christ has redeemed us from depression and all other mental (and physical) illness.

I don’t question that many Christians aren’t enjoying some of their covenant privileges, and I daresay that NO Christians are enjoying ALL their covenant privileges 100% of the time. But they are there for the taking anyway.

Objection: Jeremiah 17:9 Literally Means That the Heart Is SICK, So Jesus Came to Heal the Sickness in Our Hearts, Not in Our Bodies

Frankly, I think that this objection is completely ridiculous, but it's out there so I covered it.

The Hebrew word translated wicked in Jeremiah 17:9 (anash) does indeed mean sick, very sick or incurable.

Jeremiah 17:9:

The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

Thank God that Jesus came so that our hearts would not have to be sick, very sick or incurable! But our hearts today as Christians did not get to the "well" condition they're in by being healed. Jesus did not HEAL your SICK heart; He REPLACED your DEAD heart with a LIVE one! You didn't get a spirit fix-up job; you got a spirit transplant! The old "you" is gone and the new "you" has replaced the old "you." So this objection, which caters to the same people who like to claim erroneously by Jesus' stripes we were spiritually healed, refers to something that Jesus did not actually come to do at all!

Anyone who has read even one of the gospels should be impressed by the physical healing miracles that Jesus did. In fact, you don't even read explicitly about one single case where Jesus healed a person's heart or emotions when the crowds pressed on Him to touch His garment to be healed. Because Jesus was anointed to heal the brokenhearted, you know that people with broken hearts may well have been healed; the Bible does NOT list all the miracles Jesus did (John 21:25). The ones that were selected were the notable ones to build faith in the reader that Jesus is indeed the Messiah, the Christ (literally the Anointed [One]). These types of miracles were physically verifiable, unlike having a broken heart mended.

When Jesus commissioned His disciples, He didn't say that they would lay hands on the brokenhearted and they would be soothed; He said that they would lay hands on the sick and they would recover, which they went on to prove. We DO have His anointing to minister to the downcast, but that is certainly not the whole story or even the main story in the New Testament.

If it were not His will to heal the sick, we should expect heaven to be full of sickness. But it isn't; there's no sorrow or pain there. The very numerous bodily healing testimonies in the New Testament should settle forever His will to heal sick bodies! Because He came to destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8), and the devil is the source of things that steal, kill and destroy (John 10:10), including sickness, we know that Jesus came to destroy sickness, not just deal with "heart" issues.

Objection: Jesus Could Not Have Borne Both Hypoglycemia and Hyperglycemia on the Cross

Since these are two mutually exclusive physical conditions, the idea of this smart-aleck objection is that Jesus could not have borne both at the same time. (You can have too little blood sugar or too much blood sugar at any given moment, but not both conditions at once.) Therefore (supposedly) Jesus could not have borne all of “our” diseases on the cross. This is somewhere up there with debating how many angels can dance on the head of a pin, because He could have experienced both conditions at different times while on the cross.

This objection is no more intelligent than stating, “Jesus could not have borne both fever and chills while bearing a flu-like illness for you, because being too hot and being too cold are mutually exclusive conditions.” Most of us know that you can experience opposite conditions not far apart from each other, though not simultaneously, due to a single illness. If your temperature can spike around, your blood sugar can, too. I wouldn’t be surprised to find people whose blood sugar levels also spike around due to a disease.

If you’re going to make objections like this, why stop there? Ask yourself how Jesus could have borne the sins and sicknesses of all the billions of people in the world at the same time. I can’t reason out how He carried all our sins and all our sicknesses even before we were born, but God that says He did. Fortunately, He does not ask you to understand it; He simply asks you to believe it.

Yes, your head may give you fits when you start trying to “understand” the Trinity, the new birth, Christ’s substitution, and other matters that we accept as articles of faith. The important thing is that God has made declarations about these matters, and we should believe Him.

To say that you do not really believe that Jesus bore our sicknesses is to say that you do not believe the literal translation of Isaiah 53:4 (discussed elsewhere).

If you have hypoglycemia, Jesus bore it for you. If you have hyperglycemia, Jesus bore it for you. You don’t have to understand how this could be possible to be healed. All you have to do is believe it. Surely He bore YOUR diseases and carried YOUR pains. That would include your hypoglycemia or hyperglycemia if you have either. You can believe that because God says so.

Objection: Jesus Could Not Have Borne Female-Specific Illnesses in His Own Body on the Cross

Jesus may not have literally borne cancer of the ovaries, but that is nit-picking. He most certainly bore cancer, and His bearing of cancer redeems you from it wherever it might manifest in your body, including your female-specific parts if you're a woman. Cancer is still cancer regardless of where in your body it manifests itself. If it spreads, it just gets named something else (lung cancer, throat cancer, and so on). If there is cancer anywhere in your body, Jesus bore that cancer in your place.

This is an objection to the idea that Jesus carried our diseases. How could He have carried a woman's diseases? Well, for that matter, how could He have borne your illnesses when you weren't even born yet? You don't have to understand how He did it; you just have to believe that He did it. He was made sick in your place, as your substitute, so that you do not have to be sick today. You could raise a similar objection that the Trinity is logically impossible, yet it is still real despite any logical objection.

This kind of objection would never be raised by a woman needing healing, anyway. It's only a tool for smart-alecks who ask questions like, "If God can do anything, can He make a stone so big that He can't move it?" (No, He can't do anything that negates the fact that He is God Almighty and thus omnipotent.)

You may be thinking, "Okay, but what about monthly female-related problems? Jesus could not have had that specific issue in His male body!" But Scripture states that Christ has redeemed us from the "curse of the law" (Galatians 3:10-14). The "curse of the law" includes female-specific illnesses. (According to Deuteronomy 28:61, all illnesses, which would include female problems, were part of the curse for breaking the Law.) So Jesus REDEEMED you from ALL female-specific problems because the Bible says that He did!

Scripture is clear that Jesus' physical suffering was intended to relieve our physical suffering. If you have a female-specific problem, be assured that Jesus has provided healing for you because He is just as willing for you to be healed as he was willing to heal the woman with the issue of blood in Mark 5:22-43. Because His healing (as well as forgiveness) was based on His future atonement, His healing of that woman must have been based on His future atonement as well, proving that His atonement DID cover female-specific illnesses as far as God is concerned! I rest my case.

Objection: Jesus Could Not Have Borne All Birth Defects; His Body Would Have Lost Limbs and He Would Have Fallen off the Cross

Well for starters, if you want to get technical, we were healed by Jesus' stripes, referring to the whipping post, not by His blood that was shed on the cross. That is why the Lord's Supper celebrates His body that was broken for you as well as His blood that was shed for you. But there is certainly no evidence that Jesus lost limbs at the whipping post and got them back in time to die on the cross. So what of this? Did Jesus bear every malady except those associated with birth defects? After all, He could not go back and be born with a birth defect, so how could He truly bear birth defects anyway? Gee, maybe what first appeared to be a really smart-alecky objection carries some weight after all and we'd better dig into this a bit.

We know that some people are born with damaged chromosomes that cause a variety of appearance and functional issues, including being born without certain body parts and being born with abnormal body parts. I would maintain that Jesus could have briefly borne chromosomal abnormalities in some of His cells without having the full results of them manifest. If that seems far-fetched, well, how do you explain that He bore what were probably trillions of sins, past, present and future the day He was whipped? A lot of what He did is just as hard to comprehend mentally as the Trinity, yet we aren't commanded to repent and intellectually understand the gospel! Fortunately, we're only commanded to repent and believe it! If the Bible, which has the last word in all matters of doctrine and conduct, says that Jesus bore our sicknesses and carried our pains (Isaiah 53:4), we are duty-bound to believe it, no matter how hard that may seem or what mental difficulties that might impose. There is absolutely no evidence that Jesus left birth defects or chromosomal irregularities out of His atonement, while there is ample evidence that He didn't leave them out, given that people with bad conditions from birth were healed in the New Testament, and given that people today have testimonies of being healed of them and seeing others healed of them.

Your mind might fight you as far as believing for healing from a birth defect – “Do you realize that all the strands of DNA in 37 TRILLION CELLS would all have to be repaired supernaturally?” I don't see how that is a problem for the same God who created billions of galaxies with billions of stars each in a single day. Cannot the Creator of your body be its Repairer as well? The question is not what God Almighty can do; the only question is what we can believe (Mark 9:23) – ALL things are possible to him who believes. With God, ALL things are possible (Matthew 19:26), including the healing of genetic diseases. We are redeemed from EVERY sickness and EVERY plague, no matter what its medical name, because Jesus was cursed in our place.

Objection: Jesus Could Not Have Borne Broken Bones on the Cross because Not One of His Bones Was Broken (John 19:36)

It is certain that none of Jesus' bones was broken. This was necessary to fulfill this prophecy:

Psalm 34:20:

He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.

Here we see the fulfillment:

John 19:36:

For these things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

So has this objector actually uncovered an obscure case that will blow up the whole idea that Jesus bore our sicknesses and pains?

No. First, it is nowhere stated that Jesus bore OUR disfigurements and injuries in a literal sense, so this argument is attacking a nonexistent target. Injuries from accidents (including broken bones) were never mentioned in the "curse of the Law" as punishments for sin, so it was unnecessary for Him to bear them. Every SICKNESS was part of the curse, but not every INJURY. Read Deuteronomy 28:15-68 and see for yourself that broken bones (and other injuries besides being "smitten" in a general sense) were not a required punishment for sin.

However, Jesus did bear our PAINS. Broken bones are painful! Even if He didn't have a broken bone, if you have one, He still had to carry PAIN in your place.

Jesus certainly WAS disfigured – "marred more than any man" (Isaiah 52:14) as part of the punishment for our sins even if He did not display every individual disfigurement that has ever happened.

You still have the right to receive healing from Jesus for any injuries because Jesus is the same today as He was in the Bible, and He healed injuries then. So you know that He is equally willing to heal your injuries now. God has declared Himself to be your Physician (Exodus 15:26). Treating broken bones is part of a physician's job. Besides, as a righteous person, Psalm 34:20 applies to you and you can claim it as a promise.

Objection: Old Testament Sacrifices Were Not Made Sick Before They Died, but They Still Covered Sins

Jesus' permanent sacrifice was far better than any temporary Old Testament sacrifice for a number of reasons. One reason is that He took our sicknesses in His own body. He allowed God to "make him sick" (see Isaiah 53) so that we would be judicially free from the punishment of sickness. This put healing on a grace basis rather than on the basis of, "If you keep my commandments, I'll heal you." We don't have to be "good enough" to get healed today; we just have to place our faith in Jesus, who was "good enough" and handed us His righteousness. He was made sick with the sicknesses that we deserved so that we could receive healing.

No Old Testament sacrifices did that. The shedding of innocent blood covered sins (as opposed to washing them away, which is what the blood of Jesus did), but it did not result in healing being available.

So this objection is a true statement – the Old Testament sacrifices were not made sick, and they covered sins. It is the implication that is wrong – namely that Jesus had to be an example of an Old Testament sacrifice, so therefore He needed to shed blood but not be made sick. Jesus' sacrifice was FAR superior to any Old Testament animal sacrifice. The blood of bulls and goats could not take away sin and the perpetual shame in one's conscience for having committed it, but Jesus' blood DID take away our sin and provide for the cleansing of our guilty consciences (Hebrews 10:22).

If we took this objection to its logical conclusion, we would next say, "Old Testament sacrifices never made you a new person or gave you power over sin, therefore we should not believe that Jesus' sacrifice would do these things." Do you see the problem now? Jesus' sacrifice was in a totally different class from the Old Testament animal sacrifices. Though some Old Testament sacrifices symbolized Jesus, His actual sacrifice bought us far more than animal sacrifices ever could. To see how much more, see Who You Are and What You Have!

Objection: We Cannot Expect to Heal As Jesus Did Because We Are Not the Son of God

This objection assumes that Jesus healed people because He was God. That is utterly false. Jesus was, is, and always will be God, but He was required to walk the earth as a man anointed by the Holy Spirit, subject to every human limitation. I will prove this to you from Scripture.

Jesus did no miracle before the Holy Spirit came upon Him in the river Jordan. He was just as much God for the first three decades of His life, when he surely encountered a variety of human needs. Yet he never did any miracle or healed anyone during that time. His first miracle was at Cana of Galilee after he was anointed in the Jordan River (John 2:11).

Was it that He had no compassion until He was thirty years old? No! He was not able to do miracles until He was anointed with the Holy Spirit.

If Jesus healed as God, He could have healed anyone at any time. But He could not heal the sick at Nazareth. The Bible does not say that He would not, meaning that He chose not to. It says that he could not, meaning that He was not able to! Jesus was unable to heal more than a few sick folks at Nazareth. Read Matthew 13:54-58, and Mark 6:1-6. Unbelief and hostility toward His ministry were so rampant at Nazareth that the crowd tried to kill Him the first time He preached there!

It was not a power issue; it was a congregation issue. In Luke 5:17-26, the power of the Lord was present to heal the religious leaders who were there. Yet only a man let down through the roof received healing, even though the power was there to heal them all. If Jesus ministered as God, He could have waved a wand (figuratively speaking) and made them get healed. But He was limited to the same limitations that the rest of us have. If the people reject the gospel message, they reject the power that goes with it. People who could have been healed can miss out, and there is nothing we can do. The servant is not above his master. If Jesus couldn't do anything about it, neither can we.

If Jesus healed as God, there were certain works He did during His ministry that no one else could ever do. Yet He said plainly that we would do the same works He did (John 14:12-14), and even greater works! Since we are not God, you must not have to be a member of the Trinity to do those works! Therefore, Jesus did not have to do them as deity.

Ephesians 1:23 states that the Church is Jesus' body, "the fulness of him that filleth all in all." If we cannot do the works that Jesus did in person, we are not His fullness. We can only function in the fullness of Christ if we can do what He did. Remember that Christ's works on earth were only the beginning of "all that Jesus began both to do and teach" (Acts 1:1). He continues to do and teach through His Church today, and we should be doing and teaching what He did and taught. If we cannot heal the sick, we are the partiality of Him that filleth all in all, not the fulness.

Many who were healed in Jesus' ministry were healed by their faith. Given that faith has not passed away (you would not be born again without it), people can be healed today. It is not an issue of who is doing the preaching. God's Word works the same no matter who preaches it.

Bear in mind that although Jesus walked on water, so did Peter, and Peter was not the Son of God! He simply believed the words of the Son of God, as you can.

Proof that Jesus Ministered as a Man, not as God

Jesus became strong in spirit (Luke 2:40). Jesus grew in wisdom (Luke 2:52). If He walked the earth as God, He would have been omniscient, and it would have been impossible for Him to "grow in wisdom," and He would not have "become" strong in spirit. God is already sufficiently strong in spirit.

This is consistent with Isaiah 7:14-16, where Immanuel, born of a virgin, would learn to refuse the evil and choose the good. ("Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good. For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.") This would be impossible if He had been born omniscient. He would not have needed the Spirit's anointing if He ministered as an omnipotent God. Yet in Luke 4:18-19, quoting Isaiah 61:1-2, Jesus said that the Spirit anointed Him. This fulfilled Isaiah's statement in Isaiah 11:2: "And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him [the Branch], the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD."

We know that Jesus was not omniscient as a man because He had to ask who touched His clothes in Mark 5:30 and He did not know when He was coming back in Mark 13:32.
